On Oct. 13, 1849 he suffered a severe accident when his horse ran away. Because of this and doubtless because of his continuing antipathy to the Ryersons, he returned in 1850 to the eastern districts and was stationed at Halifax. He served a number of congregations in the three Atlantic provinces until he became superannuated in 1870. During those twenty years he is reported to have overcome his former prejudices and to have worked faithfully and harmoniously with the Canadian preachers. From 1856 to 1860 and again in 1867 he was President of the Eastern British America Conference.

Matthew Richey died in Halifax at the home of his son, then lieutenant-governor of Nova Scotia, Oct. 31, 1883. He had spent sixty-three of his eighty years in the ministry.

To his contemporaries Matthew Richey was an elegant, proud, gifted, but tactless man. Until his later years he was an uncompromising supporter of the traditions of British Methodism in America. An eloquent and dignified orator, he added a new note to Canadian Methodism.

J. Carroll, Case and His Contemporaries. 1867-77.

D. W. Johnson, Eastern British America. 1924.

J. E. Sanderson, First Century in Canada. 1908, 1910.

T. W. Smith, Eastern British America. 1877-90.

ARTHUR E. KEWLEY

RICHMOND, JOHN P. (1811-1895), American preacher and publicist, was born in Middletown, Frederick Co., Md., Aug. 7, 1811. He graduated in medicine, in 1833. While practicing his profession in his home town, he was licensed to exhort. In 1835 he moved to MISSISSIPPI, where he was united in marriage (Oct. 14, 1831) to Mrs.

America Talley, widow of Alexander Talley, of MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE. That year he was licensed to preach.

Richmond moved to Rushville, Ill., April 1836, supplied the Rushville Circuit until fall when received into the ILLINOIS CONFERENCE and appointed to Pulaski Circuit. In 1837 he served Macomb station and in 1838, Jacksonville. On invitation of JASON LEE, in 1839, he went to OREGON, became superintendent of the Indian Mission, Nisqually, on Puget Sound, the first Methodist work in the present state of WASHINGTON.

On Aug. 10, 1840 Richmond officiated at the marriage of his carpenter, WILLIAM HOLDEN WILLSON, and mission teacher, Miss Chloe Aurelia Clark, the first American marriage in what is now the state of Washington. On Feb. 28, 1842, his son, Francis, became the first American child born on Puget Sound. An elder son, Oregon, was born on shipboard before sailing for Oregon.

Richmond and his family left Oregon Sept. 4, 1842, for ILLINOIS. There he served churches at Petersburg, Springfield, Rushville, Quincy, and Mount Sterling. He located in 1848, having been elected to the State Senate. In 1852 he returned to Mississippi and served the Madison Circuit. His wife, America, died it is thought at Madison, Miss., in 1853. Richmond, on Oct. 18, 1859, married Kitty Grisby at Mount Sterling, Ill. Two years later he was back in Illinois where successively he served in the House of Representatives, as Presidential Elector, in the State Senate, in the Constitutional Convention, and superintendent of schools in Brown County. He went to Dakota in 1874, where he was in charge of the Bon Homme Mission for one year. He became postmaster at Tyndall, S. D., in 1884. He died at Oakdale, Neb., Aug. 28, 1895 (according to the Pacific Christian Advocate of Oct. 30, 1895).

A. Atwood, Glimpses on Puget Sound. 1903.

C. J. Brosnan, Jason Lee. 1932.

H. K. Hines, Pacific Northwest. 1899.

Ezra Meeker, Pioneer Reminiscences of Puget Sound. 1905.

ERLE HOWELL

RICHMOND, Natal, South Africa, Indaleni Institution, was originally founded by JAMES ALLISON who removed thither from Swaziland in 1847. He immediately started a small Industrial School for young men and women, but this venture did not long survive his resignation from the ministry in 1852. The present Institution was established by C. E. Dent (1899-1903), who erected a girls' dormitory and opened a girls' school. Under the governorship of A. W. Cragg (1913-1933) the Institution expanded considerably: a Spinning and Weaving School was equipped in 1920, a three-year course of industrial training in needlework, laundry, cookery, etc., was introduced, and the academic standard was gradually advanced from Standard IV to Standard VIII. Matriculation was offered and male students admitted during the term of S. le Grove Smith (1934-1941).

During 1946 the Nuttall Training College, which had been established at Allison's Edendale Mission, was amalgamated with the Indaleni Institution. A programme of expansion was carried out under the direction of J. Wesley Hunt (1942-1960) and included the erection of a Teacher Training College and a Men's Hostel.

The schools, which include the only Government Art School for Africans in SOUTH AFRICA, passed under the control of the government in 1956. The Methodist Church still controls the hostels which had an enrollment of 410 in 1966.

D. C. L. CRAGG

RICHMOND, VIRGINIA, U.S.A., (metropolitan population, 450,000) is the capital of the commonwealth of VIRGINIA and one of the historic cities of America. It was founded in 1742, but not until 1780 did it become the seat of the state government. Richmond is first mentioned in the annals of the M.E. Church for 1788 when Matthew Harris was preacher in charge and Richard Ivey was presiding elder.

Central Church, the first Methodist church in the Richmond area, formerly Manchester, was organized as a Methodist Society in 1786 at a private home located on Seventh Street between Perry and Porter Streets. The ninth session of the VIRGINIA ANNUAL CONFERENCE was held by Bishop FRANCIS ASBURY in Central Church in 1792. In the early days of the church (1797), the members constructed a frame chapel with the outside boards fastened up and down and this suggested the name "Old Plank Church." Later it was known as the Manchester Church, and finally as Central Church. It is now located at the corner of Porter and Thirteenth Streets (since 1900). Its Sunday school has been continuous since 1847. The 1970 membership was 697.

Trinity Church. This church had its beginnings in 1790 when a group of men and women formed a Sunday school. From 1790 to 1799 this group met in various places. Around 1799, a family named Parrott opened their home, located on Main Street, to the Sunday school workers. Their home was on Main Street near the old Market in the seventeen hundred block, East. In the rear of this home was a stable or warehouse which Mr. Parrott developed into a church. This building became known as the "Stable Church." When the congregation outgrew this, they were granted permission to meet in the Henrico County Court House. A church was built at the corner of Nineteenth and Franklin Streets in the year 1800 and this became known as the "First Church." Thomas Lyell was then appointed its pastor. Bishop Asbury preached the last sermon of his life in Trinity Church in 1816. In 1828 the congregation moved to Franklin Street between Fourteenth and Fifteenth Streets and the name was changed from "First Church" to "Trinity Church."

The congregation split in 1859 and built two churches on Broad Street—one at Tenth and Broad, which became known as "Broad Street Methodist Church," and one at Twentieth and Broad, which kept the name, Trinity. Trinity's congregation began to think about moving in the 1930's because of the shift in population, and finally moved to 903 Forest Avenue, Richmond, in the Fall of 1944. It had 1,928 members in 1970 and is one of the largest congregations of the Methodist churches of Richmond at the present time.

Centenary Church. This church was formed in 1810 in what was then the western section of Richmond—on Shockoe Hill. The congregation named their church "Shockoe Hill Methodist Church." It was located on Marshall Street between Fourth and Fifth Streets until 1841. The congregation then moved to Grace Street between Fourth and Fifth Streets and began a building, now standing as the oldest Methodist church structure in Richmond (1966). The suitable land for the church structure was difficult to purchase, since the property owners in the area said they did not want "shouting Methodists" in their neighborhood. Finally, through the offices of an intermediary, the congregation was able to purchase the present site for $3,926.50. The COKEBURY Book Store is located next to this church. At least two bishops have been elected from the pastors who served this church: Bishop JOHN C. GRANBERY and Bishop WALTER C. GUN. Present membership stands at 1,250.

River Road Church. Known from 1859 to 1960 as Broad Street Methodist Church, the congregation here was formed from Trinity Methodist Church in 1859. The cornerstone of the first church was laid at Tenth and Broad Streets on June 30, 1859. The church has been very prominent in the life of the city and state, and was located at Tenth and Broad only one block from the state capitol. When the "Merrimac" destroyed the "Congress" in the Civil War, DAVID SETH DOGGETT, who was the minister, opened in the church a meeting of the Ladies Defense Association for the purpose of raising funds to build "Ironclads." In 1888, the Woman's Missionary Union, Auxiliary to the Southern Baptist Convention, was organized in this church by delegates from ten states. In 1961, the congregation moved into the new church on River Road and changed the name from Broad Street to River Road Methodist Church. Its membership in 1970 was 632.

REVEILLE CHURCH, RICHMOND, VIRGINIA

Reveille Church. This great church, the largest in membership in Richmond (1970—2,008), is a merger of the former Monument Church and Union Station Church. On Nov. 26, 1950, Monument Church burned at 1800 Park Avenue, and Union Station had the need to move nearer to its membership. Selected leaders of the two churches met on March 28, 1951 at Union Station Church to consider the possibility of a union. A uniting service was held on June 21, 1951 at Thomas Jefferson High School, and the congregation continued to meet there until the present church was built at 4200 West Cary Street. The new church, with the most adequate facilities of any Methodist Church in Richmond, opened on Oct. 31, 1954. One of the former pastors of this church was Bishop COSTEN J. HARRELL.

General Minutes.

A. PURNELL BAILEY

RICHMOND COLLEGE, Richmond, Surrey, England, one of the THEOLOGICAL COLLEGES of the Wesleyan Methodist Church, was opened in September 1843. In 1868 the college passed into the care of the WESLEYAN METHODIST MISSIONARY SOCIETY, and was used only for the training of prospective missionaries. This segregated system was given up in 1885, since which time students for both home and overseas work have been trained in each of the colleges. Nevertheless, among Richmond's proudest possessions are the Rolls of Honor, which record the high number of its sons who ended their lives in the foreign field. The library houses the major known part of the libraries of JOHN and CHARLES WESLEY and JOHN FLETCHER. Richmond College is a divinity school within the University of London, and the tutors serve as members of the theological faculty: the students take either the university internal degree in divinity or the diploma in theology.

Frank H. Cumbers, Richmond College, 1843-1943. London, The Epworth Press, 1943.

NORMAN P. GOLDBAWK

RICKETTS, ROBERT SCOTT (1843-1918), American educator, was born March 5, 1843, at Vicksburg, Miss., where his father, R. B. Ricketts, honored minister, was living. He graduated from CENTENARY COLLEGE at the beginning of the Civil War. The year before his death he received the degree of Doctor of Letters from MILLSAPS COLLEGE, the first honorary degree ever conferred by that institution. After service in the Confederate Army he began teaching school, the work to which he devoted his long and useful life. After a teaching association with the Collegiate Institute of BATON ROUGE, La., he taught at Port Gibson Female College, Port Gibson, Miss. In 1875, he went to Brookhaven, Miss., as a member of the faculty of Whitworth College. Appreciation of the charm of his personal character and admiration for his talents as a teacher led to his election as Head Master of the Preparatory Department of Millsaps College in 1894. In that position he served God and his fellow man with renowned success until two months before he died.

In 1877 he married Bertha Burnley. To them were born four sons and a daughter. The daughter, Cid Ricketts Sumner, became a novelist of distinction.

For fifty-two years Professor Ricketts taught with a gentle spirit and with peculiar success, with a great love of learning and a fine literary taste, exerting an indelible Christian influence upon the thousands of young men and women who loved and respected him. From his youth he occupied many official positions in the church and was a constant and regular attendant at its services.

He died on Feb. 25, 1918, in JACKSON, Miss., and was buried in Cedar Lawn Cemetery there.

Journal of the Mississippi Conference, 1918.

New Orleans Christian Advocate, 1918.

J. A. LINDSEY

RIDDELL, JOHN HENRY (1863-1952), Canadian and United Church of Canada minister and educator, was born near Bolton, Ontario, on Nov. 1, 1863, son of James and Anne Jane Riddell. He was educated at VICTORIA COLLEGE (B.A., 1890; B.D., 1892), and in 1898 was ordained in the Methodist Church. He married Florence Armstrong on June 12, 1894. There were two sons—Harold, killed in action in 1916, and Robert Gerald, a distinguished Canadian diplomat.

Riddell was posted to Manitoba in 1890, and in 1896 became professor of classics at WESLEY COLLEGE, WINNIPEG. Seven years later he moved to Edmonton where he founded ALBERTA COLLEGE (North) and became its first principal. In 1911 he founded Alberta College (South), later to become St. Stephen's College.

In 1917 Riddell returned to Winnipeg as principal of Wesley College. During these critical years his administrative skills and sound scholarship were of great value. He encouraged collaboration with Manitoba College and thus prepared for the ultimate union of the two institutions. Through his efforts, the college was placed on a much sounder financial footing.

Riddell was keenly interested in welfare legislation and in the history of religion in the West. In his latter years he wrote Methodism in the Middle West, a pioneering study. For his great services to church and society he was awarded honorary degrees by Victoria, Alberta, and Manitoba universities. He died at Carlton Place, Ontario, Nov. 9, 1952.

A. S. Cummings, "A History of Wesley College." Ms. 1938. W. Kirkconnell, The Golden Jubilee of Wesley College, 1888-1938. Winnipeg: Columbia Press, 1938

F. W. ARMSTRONG

RIDGWAY, JOHN (1786-1860), British Methodist, was born in Hanley, Staffordshire, the son of Job Ridgway, one of the founders of the METHODIST NEW CONNEXION, and followed the family trade as a potter. He was by appointment "Potter to Her Majesty," the first mayor of Hanley, a county magistrate and deputy lieutenant; he refused a knighthood. He published an Apology for the New Connexion's principles, and helped to secure the legal settlement of the New Connexion. He died on Dec. 3, 1860.

OLIVER A. BECKERLEGGE

RIDPATH, JOHN CLARK (1840-1900), American educator and writer of popular historical works, the son of Abraham and Sally (Matthews) Ridpath, was born April 26, 1840, in Putnam County, Indiana. He graduated from Indiana Asbury University in 1863. He became a teacher; then principal of Thorntown Academy, a Methodist school, and in 1869 returned to Indiana Asbury as professor. In 1879 he became vice-president. He persuaded WASHINGTON C. DEPAUW, then one of the wealthiest citizens of INDIANA, to become a patron of Indiana Asbury. In 1884 he secured the change of name from Indiana Asbury to DEPAUW UNIVERSITY. He retired from teaching and was one of the most popular writers of historical works of his time.

Ridpath's Cyclopedia of Universal History was published in three large volumes at the time he was a professor in DePauw. It proved immensely popular and while historians mark it down for its inaccuracies and its sweeping treatment of men and events, its style was compelling and the writer knew how to emphasize the important and play down the less so. The writer was a genius at apt phraseology and description.

He married Hannah B. Smythe of Greencastle, Dec. 1, 1862. Five children blessed their home. For his publishing he moved to NEW YORK CITY. There he died July 31, 1900.

Dictionary of American Biography.

Who's Who in America.

W. D. ARCHIBALD

RIEMENSCHNEIDER, CARL (1844-1925), born May 14, 1844, was the son of Engelhardt Riemenschneider and served for fifty years as professor and president of German Wallace College (now BALDWIN-WALLACE COLLEGE) in Berea, Ohio. When his father was sent as missionary for Methodist work in GERMANY in 1850, young Carl received his education in German and Swiss institutions, notably Tübingen University, where he studied under conservative Tobias Beck. His university career was broken in the middle by two years service as instructor at the Martin Mission Institute, a Methodist ministerial training school in BREMEN.

In 1868 he came to Berea to teach classical languages, in which he excelled. Later he was professor of philosophy and theology. Elected vice-president in 1880 and president in 1893, he continued to teach regularly, even after his resignation of the presidency in 1908, until his retirement in 1917.

In 1870 he married Emily Smith, who bore him ten children, one of whom, Albert Riemenschneider, became director of the Baldwin-Wallace Conservatory of Music. He was long remembered for his leadership of student class meetings held Saturday nights. His deep speaking voice brought fame as public speaker and orator. Although he was not interested in church politics, he served as a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1900. He died in Berea, Nov. 8, 1925.

Der Christliche Apogete, Nov. 25, 1925.

Minutes of Central German Conference, 1926.

FREDERICK A. NORWOOD

RIEMENSCHNEIDER, ENGELHARDT (1815-1899), born April 9, 1815 in Eubach, Kurhessen, GERMANY, was one of the leading figures in the development of German Methodism in the Ohio valley of the United States and in his native country. He arrived in the United States in 1835 and proceeded to WHEELING, W. Va., and PITTSBURGH, Pa., where he was converted under the preaching of WILHELM NAST. He was received in full membership in the OHIO CONFERENCE in 1842.

In 1841 he was appointed to found the North Ohio Mission, a circuit of 400-500 miles in which he preached ten to twelve times per week. After two years in LOUISVILLE and a year in Pittsburgh he was appointed presiding elder of the North Ohio District in 1847. He married Katherine Nuhfer in 1843.

A new phase of his life began in 1850, when he was appointed to missionary work in Germany, where he spent the next twenty years, fostering missions already established and founding new ones. His work centered in FRANKFURT am Main, BREMEN, Bremerhaven, ZÜRICH, Ludwigsburg, and Basel. His wife died in Ludwigsburg. Frequently he encountered opposition from the authorities of the state churches.

After his return to the United States in 1870 he spent a year in Berea, Ohio, and another two in Allegheny, Pa., then four as presiding elder of the North Ohio District.

He retired in 1877, lived in Berea and Cleveland, and died Sept. 22, 1899, leaving two sons and four daughters.

Der Christliche Apologete.

Verhandlungen und Berichte of the Central Deutsche Konferenz, 1900.

FREDERICK A. NORWOOD

JAMES H. RIGG

RIGG, JAMES HARRISON (1821-1909), British minister, was born at Newcastle upon Tyne on Jan. 16, 1821. The son of a Wesleyan minister, he entered the Wesleyan Methodist ministry in 1845. As a circuit minister he was deeply interested in the ecclesiastical questions of the day; he published Modern Anglican Theology (1857) and Essays of the Times (1866). In 1868 he became principal of the Wesleyan Westminster Teachers' Training College, remaining there until retirement in 1903. In 1878 he was chosen president of the Wesleyan Conference; his name was associated with the admission of laymen into the Conference in that year, and with the Thanksgiving Fund, which raised £300,000 for Methodist work. He was one of the original members of the London School Board, and in 1886-88 was a member of the Royal Commission on Elementary Education. He founded the London Quarterly Review in 1853 and was closely associated with it until 1898, when it passed into the hands of the connection. Rigg was a life-long exponent of the side of the Wesleyan tradition which looked for inspiration to the Established Church, rather than to Nonconformity. Among his later writings were: National Education (1873); The Churchmanship of John Wesley (1878); The Character and Life Work of Dr. Pusey (1883); A Comparative View of Church Organisation (1887); Oxford High Anglicanism (1895); Wesleyan Methodist Reminiscences (1904); and a valuable short life of Jabez Bunting (1905). He lacked just the touch of creative ability which would have made him a great man.

JOHN KENT

RIGGIN, FRANCIS ASBURY (1848-1924), American minister, was born Sept. 7, 1848, in BALTIMORE, Md., the son of Israel and Emily Lee Rigg. He finished with honors at DICKINSON COLLEGE, Carlisle, Pa., with the A.B. and A.M. degrees. He joined the Methodist Church at age fifteen, was licensed to preach in his sophomore year in college, entered the PHILADELPHIA CONFERENCE in 1870, transferred to MINNESOTA CONFERENCE in 1871 and to ROCKY MOUNTAIN CONFERENCE in 1872, being stationed at Evanston, Wyo. In 1873 he was appointed to Beaverhead and Jefferson Circuit in MONTANA, with WILLIAM WESLEY VAN ORSDAL as junior preacher. Their charge extended from the Three Forks of the Missouri to Pocatello, Ida. Their headquarters were at Sheridan (Montana) where Hugh Duncan had built a church. At district conference in Helena, January 1874, they reported that each had traveled 4,000 miles on horseback and had together received nearly 100 new members. The next year they headquartered at Virginia City where they built a stone church and held revival services, assisted by T. C. LUFF of Bozeman. Other appointments were: Beaverhead and Fish Creek 1875, presiding elder of Helena District 1876, presiding elder of Butte District 1877-80, superintendent of Montana Mission 1880-87, pastor at Fort Benton and Great Falls with Brother Van 1887-89, at Whitehall and Hope Circuit 1889-91. In November 1891, Rigg became superintendent of the Navajo Indian Mission; in 1893, presiding elder of Bozeman District; 1894, pastor at Great Falls; 1895, presiding elder of Great Falls District; 1896, pastor at Kalispell; 1897-99, superintendent of North Montana Mission; 1899-1912 superintendent of Epworth Piegan Indian Mission. He retired in 1912 and made his home on his son's farm at Barr, Mont., where he served surrounding rural appointments until his death April 16, 1924. Burial was at Glasgow, Mont., beside his wife, Ida Isabelle Jordan Rigg, who died June 21, 1919.

F. A. RIGGIN

Mrs. Rigg was born Nov. 19, 1860, and was the sister of Walter Jordan, minister in the Christian Church. She was converted in a Rigg-Van Orsdal revival at Fish Creek in 1873, and married F. A. Rigg in 1876. They had three sons, Harrison Van Orsdal, Guy Asbury, and Kent Orville.

Francis Rigg's appeals in the New York Christian Advocate for ministers for Montana in the 1880's brought able men to the state, among them JACOB MILLS. In 1892 Rigg was delegate to GENERAL CONFERENCE and brought about the formation of North Montana Mission. He was an able administrator. Rigg and Van Orsdal were sometimes likened to Moody and Sanky, Van Ors-del the more famous for his singing, Riggin for his preaching. Both men largely shaped Montana Methodism.

E. L. Mills, Plains, Peaks and Pioneers. 1947.

Montana Christian Advocate.

ROBERTA BAUR WEST

RIGGIN, JOHN H. (1834-1913), an American minister, scholar, soldier and administrator, was born at Pittsville, Md., Oct. 7, 1834. Admitted to what is now the LITTLE ROCK CONFERENCE in 1865, for forty years rendered almost every type of service including twenty-one years as presiding elder, member of three GENERAL CONFERENCES and one of the founders of HENDRIX COLLEGE, of which he was a trustee for twenty years and from which he received the D.D. degree.

Considered remarkable in mental power, he had read the New Testament through before he was five years of age. He was self-educated, mastering higher mathematics and gaining a working knowledge of Latin, Greek and Hebrew. Eventually he became known as one of the scholarly and profound students of his day.

Licensed to preach at Glasgow, Mo., in June 1860, he intended to enter the itineracy the next year, but with the outbreak of the Civil War, he joined the Confederate Army, serving two years as a private and the remainder of the war as CHAPLAIN of an ARKANSAS regiment. This surrendered at Marshall, Texas at war's end, and a remnant of the soldiers accompanied their beloved chaplain back to Arkansas.

Abundant in many services, he was best known and remembered as a preacher. With his unusually retentive memory, his logical mind, his skilled use of the Scriptures, his chaste and expressive vocabulary, he was one of the most widely known preachers in that area of Methodism. He retired in 1909, making his home at Arkadelphia, Ark., until his death May 30, 1913. He had been given to Arkansas by the fortunes of war, and was one of the heroic men who gathered and reorganized and revitalized broken Methodism in this Conference (Little Rock) after the war.

ROY E. FAWCETT

RIGGLEMAN, LEONARD (1894-), American college president, was born at Blue Spring, W. Va., April 16, 1894, the son of Samuel C. and Harriet (Hamrick) Riggleman. He won the A.B. degree at MORRIS HARVEY COLLEGE in 1922, and the A.M. at SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIVERSITY in 1924. He did graduate study at Michigan and NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITIES. The honorary degrees of D.D. and LL.D. were awarded in 1933 and 1944 by KENTUCKY WESLEYAN COLLEGE and Davis and Elkins College, respectively. He married Alice Pauline Steele, Aug. 16, 1922, and they have one daughter. Admitted on trial in 1918 in the WESTERN VIRGINIA CONFERENCE (MECS), Riggleman's appointments were: Omar, 1921-22; Milton, 1924-28; Rural Specialist at West Virginia University, 1928-30; professor of religion at Morris Harvey College, 1930-31; and president of the college, 1931-64. He was a delegate to the 1934, '38, '44, and '56 GENERAL CONFERENCES, and was a member of the General Board of EDUCATION (MECS), 1934-38. Retiring in 1964, he made his home at Huntington, W. Va.

Clark and Stafford, Who's Who in Methodism. 1952.

C. T. Howell, Prominent Personalities. 1945.

Minutes of the Western Virginia and West Virginia Conferences.

JESSE A. EARL

ALBEA GOBOLD

RIGOR, G. W. MILES (1831-1906), American United Brethren preacher, educator, writer and editor, crusader, and conference leader, was born Sept. 22, 1831, on a farm near Mount Pleasant in Westmoreland County, Pa. He joined the CHURCH OF THE UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST after a moving religious experience in 1850. Two years later he was licensed by the Mount Pleasant congregation and he entered Mount Pleasant College, Mount Pleasant, Pa. (no longer in existence) with the intention of entering the ministry. Before completing his education, he left college; but he continued his path to the ministry, being licensed by Allegheny Conference in 1854, ordained in 1860, and serving churches in the Allegheny Conference until 1862, when he transferred to the East Pennsylvania Conference.

He immediately threw himself into the work of his new conference relationships with great abandon. In 1863 he was elected English Secretary, a position he held for six years. In 1871 when there were no longer English and German secretaries, he was elected conference secretary and served through 1889. During nine of these years he also served as one of the presiding elders of the conference.

Regretting the fact that he had never completed his education at Mount Pleasant College, Rigor began to speak for establishing an educational institution under the auspices of the denomination in eastern PENNSYLVANIA. The opening of LEBANON VALLEY COLLEGE in 1866 was in large measure due to Rigor's labors. He and Thomas Rees Vickroy, a neighbor and a local preacher in the M.E. Church, held the lease for the operation of the college in the name of the conference from 1866 to 1871.

While serving as business manager and field representative for the college, Rigor involved himself in another project that engaged his interest—the founding of English-speaking congregations. He was the first pastor of the Trinity Church, Lebanon, Pa., when it was organized in 1866. Simultaneously, he was a participant in the preparation of articles of incorporation for the annual conference.

Rigor's interest in Christian education extended to the local church as he urged congregations to establish Sunday schools and expended his energies toward the establishing of a conference-wide Sunday school movement.

As a delegate to GENERAL CONFERENCE in 1873 and 1877, he was an outspoken critic on such issues as unequal representation and the secrecy law, both of which liberals in the church opposed. For the next twelve years, beginning in 1873, he expressed these liberal views. He became editor of two papers which arose in Pennsylvania to counter the conservative position of the Religious Telescope which was under the editorship of MILTON WRIGHT. These publications were the United Brethren Tribune and The Monthly Itinerant. During his editorship of the latter publication (1877-1885), Rigor continued to promote other causes with which he had become associated: Lebanon Valley College, the Sunday school movement, higher salaries for pastors, stronger denominational attachment, and campmeetings.

In the July 1876 issue of The Monthly Itinerant, Rigor described in glowing terms the observance of the Centennial of Independence at Philadelphia. In his diaries, he tells of his trip to Harrisburg to view the body of the slain President Lincoln. In his conference, he became a gadfly in the interest of the preservation of local church and pastoral records; and in 1866 and 1867, respectively, he presented for publication in the conference journal charts dealing with the bishops of the denomination and the time, place of meeting, and leadership of the annual sessions of the conference. In 1878 he challenged the Lancaster, Pa., New Era on its statement that MARTIN BOEHM had gone "over to the Methodists" after his United Brethren friends had "disowned him."

C. W. Miles Rigor died July 9, 1906 and is buried at the Stoverdale Church Cemetery, near Hummelstown, Pa., with his wife who followed him in death by a few days.

BRUCE C. SOUDERS

RIO GRANDE CONFERENCE, a conference for Spanish-speaking Americans, goes back to the work of the M.E. Church, South among Mexican-Americans in the last half of the nineteenth century. The Rio Grande Mission Conference (WEST TEXAS CONFERENCE after 1866), an English-speaking conference, was created by the 1858 GENERAL CONFERENCE. Its territory included west and southwest TEXAS. At its first session in 1859 the conference appointed Robert P. Thompson as a missionary to the Mexicans in the Rio Grande Valley. In time the work grew to two Mexican districts and there was a demand for a separate conference for the Mexican work.

In 1885 the Mexican work of the West Texas Conference, along with some churches in MEXICO, was organized as the Mexican Border Mission Conference. In 1891 the Northwest Mexican Mission Conference was formed to include Mexican work in west Texas and northwest Mexico. In 1914 some changes were made, and the Texas Mexican Mission was formed to include the Spanish-speaking work in Texas east of the Pecos River, while the Mexican Border Conference took in the work west of the Pecos, along with some churches in Mexico. In 1918 the Mexican Border Conference was merged with the Pacific Mexican Mission to form the Western Mexican Mission. In 1930 the Texas Mexican and the Western Mexican Missions became conferences and so continued until unification when they were merged to form the Southwest Mexican Conference of The Methodist Church. In 1948 the name of the latter body was changed to the Rio Grande Conference because though it was still a Spanish language conference and printed its minutes in Spanish, as time passed few of the ministers or church members had any direct ties with Mexico.

The Southwest Mexican Conference was organized at Dallas on Nov. 2, 1939 with Bishop A. FRANK SMITH presiding. It began with three districts—El Paso, Northern, and Southern—fifty-five pastoral charges, eighty-one societies, 6,364 members, forty-one women's societies with 814 members, property valued at $302,165, and $29,724 raised for all purposes during the year.

The Rio Grande Conference was organized at Corpus Christi on July 1, 1948 with Bishop Smith in the chair. It began with three districts—Northern, Southern, and Western—sixty-five pastoral charges, fifty-two ministers, 8,884 members including inactive ones, and property valued at $899,398.

Courage, evangelistic fervor, and devotion have characterized the Mexican-American work from the beginning. Alejo Hernandez, scion of a wealthy Mexican family who had been educated for the priesthood but who had become disillusioned with the Roman Catholic Church of that day, came to Corpus Christi, was converted, and in 1871 was admitted on trial in the West Texas Conference.

Hernandez had a brief but spectacular career as an evangelist among his people in both Mexico and Texas. He died in 1875 after accompanying Bishop JOHN C. KEENER on a trip to Mexico City to promote Methodism there. A. H. Sutherland and FRANK S. ONDERDONK stand high among the Anglo ministers who made a lasting contribution to the work. Sutherland was presiding elder of one of the Mexican districts in the West Texas Conference before the organization of the Mexican Border Mission Conference, and with his wife he established HOLDING INSTITUTE at Laredo. Onderdonk was superintendent of the Texas Mexican Mission from 1914 to 1929 and died in 1936 during his sixth year as a presiding elder in the Texas Mexican Conference. From 1938 to his retirement in 1960, Bishop A. Frank Smith was the guiding spirit of the Spanish-speaking work of The Methodist Church in the southwest. Clarence W. Lokey was effective as director of the Spanish language work of the Division of National Missions from 1948 to 1965.

Today there are active congregations of the Rio Grande Conference in all of the major cities and many of the smaller ones in Texas and New Mexico. El Paso and San Antonio have seven churches each, and there are four in Dallas. The conference has three schools: Harwood Girls' School at ALBUQUERQUE, Holding Institute at Laredo, and LYDIA PATTERSON INSTITUTE at El Paso. Lydia Patterson Institute has furnished a large proportion of the ministers for the conference, and for Spanish language work in other parts of the United States. Many of the ministers now in places of leadership in the conference are graduates of PERKINS SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY.

The record of the Rio Grande Conference is appreciated in The United Methodist Church. Church membership has nearly trebled since 1939. In 1946 the conference led American Methodism in proportionate giving to the Crusade for Christ. On a quota of $15,075 the conference paid $16,026. Between 1953 and 1956 the conference had a twenty-nine percent gain in membership, the largest increase for any conference in the church in the same period.

In 1968 the Rio Grande Conference reported four districts, 101 pastoral charges, seventy ministers, 17,488 members, and property valued at $5,532,120. The total amount raised for all purposes that year was $568,968.

General Minutes, MECS and MC.

Minutes of the Rio Grande Conference.

O. W. Nail, Southwest Texas Conference. 1958.

WILLIAM C. MARTIN

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil. The first steps to establish Methodism in BRAZIL were taken in 1835, when Bishop JAMES O. ANDREW sent FOUNTAIN E. PITTS of the TENNESSEE CONFERENCE to survey the possibilities of work in South America. Pitts sailed in July 1835, and shortly after arrival in Rio de Janeiro on August 19, organized a small Society of English-speaking Methodists in that city, promising to send them a missionary.

In 1836, upon his return to the United States, Pitts recommended entering the field and JUSTIN R. SPAULDING of the NEW ENGLAND CONFERENCE was sent to Brazil in March of that same year. In June he organized a Sunday school with thirty pupils, several of whom were Brazilians and were taught in Portuguese. He also organized a congregation of forty among the English-speaking persons.

In November 1837, other missionaries arrived—DANIEL

PARRISH KIDDER and his wife, Cynthia Harriet; a teacher, R. M. McMurdy, and a Miss Marcella Russell whom he soon married. Various severe illnesses, including yellow fever, soon struck at the little band. Cynthia Kidder died and was buried in the British (Protestant) Cemetery of Camboa, Rio, where a tombstone marks her grave. Left with two infant children, Kidder returned to the United States at the end of 1840. Mr. and Mrs. McMurdy had first opened a little school, but discouraged and ill returned to the United States. Spaulding stayed on until the end of 1841, when he too left Brazil and the mission was closed by the home Board. Yet despite all, this early work in Rio had been effective enough to arouse the Roman Catholic hierarchy to rebuttal and strong opposition. Meanwhile, the home church was becoming bitterly involved in the dispute over slavery. No other missionaries were sent out, and thus Methodism's first efforts in Brazil closed without the establishment of any permanent work.

About twenty-five years later, in 1867, after the close of the Civil War, JUNIUS E. NEWMAN of ALABAMA went to Brazil as a Confederate emigrant, not as a missionary but properly accredited by Bishop W. M. WIGHTMAN to open Methodist work in the Empire. Deeply impressed with Brazil's need for the Gospel, Newman pled insistently with the Southern Methodist Church for missionaries.

The first to go was J. J. RANSOM of Tennessee, who arrived in Rio de Janeiro on Feb. 2, 1876. After some time studying the language and surveying the field, he held the first Methodist service in that city in a rented house on Jan. 13, 1878. With a congregation of around forty, none Brazilians, Ransom initiated permanent Methodist work in Rio de Janeiro, then capital of the Empire.

It was in March 1879 that the first Brazilians were received into the church—an ex-priest, Antonio Teixeira de Albuquerque, and a young lady, Francisca de Albuquerque. Four months later four other Brazilians joined the church.

Little notice was taken of the so-called "new religion" until the Catholic clergy began opposing it through its official organ, O Apostolo. Ransom invited them to attend his services but they did not accept. After a voyage to the United States, Ransom returned in May 1881 with two new missionaries—JAMES L. KENNEDY and J. W. KOGER—and MARTHA WATTS, a missionary teacher for a school in Piracicaba. Koger was sent to the latter place, and Kennedy stayed in Rio to assist Ransom.

That year a lot was bought for a church, and in 1881 they began building a pretty little chapel on what was then called Largo do Cattete, but is now the Praca Jose d'Alencar. This chapel still stands and adjoins the church which was built in 1886. Two other preaching points were established in the city, and by 1881 the Methodist Church in Rio had sixty foreign and six Brazilian members. One year later there were over thirty Brazilian members.

The construction of the temple itself had an interesting history. Under the Empire Catholicism was official and no other religion was allowed a structure that had the outward appearance of a church. Ransom and Kennedy began construction, but in March 1882 Ransom left for the United States on urgent matters, leaving the younger, inexperienced man with a tremendous responsibility. Catholic clergy and city councilmen under their pressure did everything to block the work. At one time Januzzi, the constructor, worked men all night in order to finish the task before fanatical clergy could induce the authorities to rescind approval of a blueprint which they had approved and which included a more churchly facade and spirelets topping the side walls. Cattete Church was completed, however, and was ready for inauguration on Sept. 8, 1886, when Bishop J. C. GRANBERY arrived in Brazil for the first time. Here on Sept. 16, 1886, Bishop Granbery organized the smallest conference ever organized in Methodism. Its members were James L. Kennedy, J. W. TARBOUX, and HUGH C. TUCKER, who had just arrived with the Bishop. These men have been called the "Golden Trio of Brazilian Methodism."

The proclamation of the Republic supplanting the Empire in November 1889, brought official church-state separation, and from then on the work in the Federal District and surrounding area expanded constantly and solidly, not only along evangelical but along educational and social lines. Since the recent removal of the nation's capital to BRASILIA, the city of Rio de Janeiro and what was known as the Federal District is now called Guanabara State. There is also a state of Rio de Janeiro, and together they make up the First Ecclesiastical Region of the Methodist Church of Brazil. In 1966 it included thirty-five churches, fifteen parsonages, 6,173 members, two parochial schools, and three other outstanding institutions—COLEGIO BENNETT, INSTITUTO ANNA GONZAGA (Home for Children), and the INSTITUTO CENTRAL DO POVO (People's Central Institute for Social Service). A home for the aged, O Lar dos Anciaos, has been started on the property of the Anna Gonzaga Home.

J. L. Kennedy, Metodismo no Brasil. 1928.

Expositor Cristão, July 21, 1894.

World Outlook, May 1943.

EULA K. LONG

RIPLEY, DOROTHY (1769-1831), daughter of WILLIAM RIPLEY of Whitby, was born in Yorkshire. Deeply impressed in early years by Methodist preachers, she also came under Quaker influence, and in 1801 felt the call to cross the Atlantic to labor among Negro slaves. She went "without money in her purse putting her trust in the bank of faith." Securing an interview with President Thomas Jefferson, she received his approbation for her work, and for two years passed from city to city pleading the cause of the Negroes. Returning to England in 1805, she afterward returned to America and preached to the Indians. Emulating John Howard, the prison reformer, she visited American prisons. In 1806 by permission of the president she preached from the speaker's chair in Congress, with Jefferson and the senators present. From her center at Charleston, the stronghold of slavery, she preached the gospel of pity to slave owners and of patience to slaves. In an evangelistic tour in England she accompanied LORENZO DOW and in September, 1818, in Nottinghamshire met HUGH BOURNE. For thirty years she traveled on such errands of mercy, crossing the Atlantic eight or nine times. She would not permit any collection on her behalf. She published several tracts: An Account of the Extraordinary Conversion and Religious Experience of Dorothy Ripley (1817) and The Bank of Faith (1822). She died in Virginia, Dec. 23, 1831.

JOHN T. WILKINSON

RITCHIE, ELIZABETH, later Mrs. Mortimer, (1754- ?), British Methodist, born on Feb. 2, 1754, was the daughter of John Ritchie, a naval surgeon. JOHN WESLEY was a frequent visitor to her home in Otley; and, contrary to his rule of writing only in reply to letters he received, he sent her many letters of spiritual advice. She was a close friend of SARAH CROSBY. In 1790 Elizabeth went to live with the Rogers at City Road Chapel and left a detailed account of Wesley's last days.

JOHN A. VICKERS

RITSON, JOHN HOLLAND (1868-1953), English Methodist, was born at Bolton in 1868 and educated at Manchester Grammar School and Balliol College, Oxford, where he graduated with First Class Honors in Natural Science. He trained for the Wesleyan Methodist ministry at Wesley College, Headingley, and served as Assistant Tutor at Didsbury College 1891-94. After travelling in the Eccles and Blackheath circuits, he was appointed in 1900 one of the two general secretaries of the BRITISH AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY, where he remained until retirement. He travelled extensively and was "principally responsible for the reorganization of the work of the Society in Canada and Australia." At the first INTERNATIONAL MISSIONARY COUNCIL held in Edinburgh (1910), he was elected joint Recording Secretary and Chairman of the Literature Committee of the Continuation Committee. Mission and unity were central to his thinking, and he pleaded at the Fifth ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE of 1921 for the twin priorities of "the growth of holiness in individual life" and for Christian cooperation and unity. His writings include Christian Literature and the Mission Field (1915). He also made a notable contribution to Ministerial Training, serving on its Committee from 1906. He helped raise £250,000 for this work, had a large part in the foundation of Wesley House, CAMBRIDGE (1925), and in the general re-equipment of the colleges after the First World War. He was president of the Wesleyan Conference in 1925, when Oxford conferred on him the degree of Doctor of Divinity. He retired in 1931, and died at Seaford in 1953.

Minutes of the Methodist Conference, 1954. JOHN NEWTON

RITUAL, THE, is a name given to the several forms or offices which in The United Methodist Church in America guide the minister and direct him in the conduct of the formal rites of the Church. These offices came to American Methodism in the SUNDAY SERVICE or abridged Prayer Book which JOHN WESLEY sent over to America, and which was adopted by the M.E. Church at its organization in 1784. However, when the Sunday Service fell into desuetude in a very few years, and early Methodism turned away from an ordered Prayer Book as such, certain particular forms, namely, the Lord's Supper or Holy Communion; Infant Baptism; Adult Baptism; Matrimony; Burial of the Dead; and three forms for Ordination (for deacons, elders and bishops) which were in the Sunday Service were retained in the first edition of the Discipline of 1792, and these became known in American Methodism as the Ritual.

Every edition of the Discipline until 1968 has carried these eight forms, and while from time to time they have been amended and revised by respective GENERAL CONFERENCES, there have been no very great nor appreciable changes in these offices from their original adoption in 1784 until the present. The Baptismal offices perhaps provide the exception here, as the forms directing the Rites of BAPTISM have, indeed, been greatly changed over what John Wesley originally sent. Also, many additional lessons or readings have been put into the BURIAL service, especially within recent years. However, the Sacrament of the LORD'S SUPPER, and the office for its celebration have been very little changed, and the forms for ORDINATION scarcely at all. Neither has the office for the Solemnization of Matrimony been altered appreciably since some rather sweeping deletions were made in this Service when it first went out of the Sunday Service into the 1792 Discipline. Ritualistic revision in the Methodist Churches in America has been greatly influenced by the revision of the like forms in the Prayer Book of the Protestant Episcopal Church in America, though not to an overwhelming extent.

The eight forms which were cited above as the original Ritual—Communion, the two Baptisms, Matrimony, Burial of the Dead, and the three forms of Ordination, remained with scarcely any revision and with no additions in American Methodism until 1864 in the M.E. Church, and in 1870 in the M.E. Church, South. At approximately that same time, both Churches added a service for the Reception of Members, largely following the office for Confirmation in the Protestant Episcopal Church. John Wesley did not send to American Methodism any office for Confirmation, and hence there was no formal rite whereby members were received into the M.E. Churches until the dates above mentioned, although thousands were meanwhile being received into Methodist churches everywhere due to the great growth of Methodism during the first half of the nineteenth century.

The 1864-1870 revisions of the two M.E. Churches also added a form for cornerstone laying, and one for the Dedication of Churches. In time quite a few other offices were added as the twentieth century progressed—for the dedication of a church, or of a memorial, or for commissioning church officers and the like. Other forms were added even after the unification of American Methodism. The Commission on WORSHIP of The Methodist Church, however, in revising the Book of Worship, and also the Ritual as directed by the 1960 General Conference, decided to keep in the Book of Discipline, itself, only the eight ancient forms sent over by Wesley, as they had been revised; together with two present and official formal orders of worship. The other offices of the Ritual may be found in the Book of Worship, but not in the present Discipline of the Church. However, in 1968 the Discipline appeared with no part of the Ritual, all of it being published in the Book of Worship.

THE METHODIST PUBLISHING HOUSE, which is empowered to publish all books and literature of an official nature for The Methodist Church, holds the copyright on the offices of the Ritual, and from time to time brings out various editions of it in different sizes, types and bindings. Ministers quite often provide themselves with a copy of the Ritual entirely apart from the Book of Discipline or Book of Worship.

General Conferences have always felt competent to revise the Ritual and do revise it from time to time, usually through a commission or a committee, especially when there is a broader revision in view than the mere alteration of a word here and there. All such revisions must be formally adopted by the General Conference before they are in effect in the church.

A disciplinary regulation which for many years remained in the Discipline ordered, "Let our Ritual be invariably used." However, ministers have always and do now feel free to vary in certain slight degrees the offices of the Ritual when such variations seem to be called for by the needs of an immediate situation. In the service of Holy Communion, a rubric indicates what parts of the service may be used if the ministers be "straightened for time" or if it is to be used for the sick or in a home. Should a change in the Ritual be proposed which patently would seriously affect one of the doctrinal positions of Methodism, it could be challenged as a violation of the first RESTRICTIVE RULE binding on the General Conference. Such a challenge has never been given during any proposed ritualistic revision and possibly may never be.

R. J. Cooke, History of the Ritual. 1900.

N. B. Harmon, Rites and Ritual. 1926.

T. O. Summers, Commentary on the Ritual. 1873. N. B. H.

RIVERSIDE, CALIFORNIA, U.S.A. First Church was formed by seven charter members Oct. 13, 1872. In November 1873 MARION M. BOYARD was appointed as the first pastor. He later became president of the UNIVERSITY OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA. In June 1876 a brick chapel was completed. A new frame church costing $6,000 was completed in June 1882. In 1893, thirteen members left to start the Arlington Church in Riverside. On Feb. 5, 1899 a $6,000 addition to the main building was dedicated. On Dec. 20, 1903 the Hicks Memorial Chapel costing $11,100 was dedicated. In 1907, 189 members withdrew in order to start the Grace Church in Riverside. In February 1945, the first $50,000 was realized toward building a new church. In November 1945 a thirteen-acre site on Brockton Avenue, the present location, was purchased. On Feb. 5, 1947 First Church was destroyed by fire. On Dec. 19, 1948 the first Sunday service was held in the new Fellowship Hall. In May 1949 the two-story educational building was completed and with Fellowship Hall was dedicated free of debt. On Sept. 11, 1955 the first Sunday service was held in the new sanctuary. In October 1957, a new organ was installed in the sanctuary and seventy-eight members left to start the Wesley Church in Riverside. First Church acted as sponsor by mortgaging its property for Wesley Church to obtain a loan to build. In May 1961, the memorial church tower was completed and the carillon installed. In October 1963 seventeen members withdrew to start the Rubidoux Church near Riverside. Again First Church sponsored the move by mortgaging its property for Rubidoux Church to obtain a loan to build.

Four of the church's former pastors became district superintendents and another a vice-president of the Southern California School of Theology. Three members have served as missionaries to INDIA and another in National Missions. The church has two full time ministers, with an assisting ministerial staff of six others. Church property was valued at approximately $1,250,000 and church membership was 2,312 in 1970.

General Minutes.

VIRGIL L. BATES

RIVINGTON, CHARLES (1688-1742), British publisher, was born at Chesterfield in 1688. Apprenticed to a LONDON bookseller, he soon set up on his own and became the best-known publisher of religious works in the early eighteenth century. He published GEORGE WHITEFIELD's The Nature and Necessity of a New Birth in Christ (1737), and JOHN WESLEY's version of Thomas à Kempis, in 1735. Rivington also shared in the publication of Samuel Richardson's Pamela (1741-42). He died in London, Feb. 22, 1742.

JOHN KENT

RIZZI, DINA (1910-), Brazilian Methodist educator and leader in women's work, was born in Sertãozinho, State of São Paulo, of Roman Catholic parents. At the age of ten she was sent to the Methodist school in Ribeirão Preto, where for the first time she heard about the Bible. Through the influence of three missionaries—Lucy Wade, Rosalie Brown, and Mary McSwain, Dina was converted, joined the church, and became the only Protestant member of her family.

For three years she studied at the Methodist Colegio PIRACICABANO (now INSTITUTO EDUCACIONAL), receiving her degree as teacher in 1929. Later, she studied elementary education and social work at SCARRITT COLLEGE for Christian Workers and at Peabody College, both in NASHVILLE, Tenn. From 1930-41, Dina Rizzi served the Methodist School in Ribeirão Preto in several capacities. In January 1950 the religious education department of this school was moved to SÃO PAULO to become a training school for women Christian workers, the Instituto Metodista. In 1960 she was appointed principal (Reitora) of the institute.

She has been a member of the Legislative Committee of the Methodist Church of BRAZIL, a delegate to the General Conference of the Methodist Church of Brazil in 1960, and in 1962 Brazilian delegate to the celebration in South RHODESIA, of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the World Day of Prayer. This same year she was named to the Evangelical Latin American Consultation, which met in BUENOS AIRES, and in 1963, was a delegate to the Asian Consultation Committee which met in Port Dickson, MALAYA. On her return from this, she visited several countries in Europe to study the DEACONESS schools in GERMANY, SWITZERLAND, and England.

Besides being Reitora of the Methodist Institute in São Paulo, Dina Rizzi was also for ten years editor of the Voz Missionaria, official magazine of the Methodist women in Brazil. She is presently one of the vice presidents of the World Federation of Methodist Women, as president of the Latin American Evangelical Women's Federation.

EULA K. LONG

ROADMAN, EARL ALAN (1885-1967), American minister, educator, and president of two mid-western Methodist colleges, was born at Dike, Ia., Nov. 14, 1885. He attended country school and in 1899 entered Iowa State Normal College at Cedar Falls. He taught school for several years and in 1907 entered Upper Iowa University at Fayette, from which he graduated in 1909.

After completing his ministerial training at BOSTON SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY, he spent a year at Halle-Wittenberg University in GERMANY. Meanwhile he had married Irma Keen of Chicago, Sept. 5, 1910. To them were born six children.

Roadman served several pastorates in Iowa, then taught Bible and Rural Sociology at Upper Iowa University from 1919 to 1925. Returning to the pastorate at Grace Church, Waterloo, Ia., he was called to the presidency of DAKOTA WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, Mitchell, S. D., in 1927.

President Roadman guided the destinies of the college during nine of the most difficult years of her existence. The hardships which followed the financial panic of 1929 were greatly increased in this agricultural area by dust storms and crop failures. The question of college survival was a very real one. Roadman devised plans to aid students to pay tuition and continue in college. In lieu of cash, livestock and produce were accepted at premium prices. Faculty salaries were paid in credit vouchers accepted by local merchants, and the college was kept open and solvent.

In 1936 Roadman accepted the presidency of MORNINGSTAR COLLEGE, Sioux City, Ia., where he directed the destinies of that growing institution for the next twenty years. An indebtedness of $450,000 was liquidated by 1944 under his administration. Extensive campus improvements were made including a dormitory for women, Jones Hall of Science, and Allen Gymnasium. An old gymnasium was transformed into a well equipped library. By 1951 the endowment had been increased to over $1,000,000, over 1,500 students were on the campus, and the faculty had been enlarged accordingly.

Perhaps Roadman's greatest contribution was his monumental faith in the Christian colleges and his unique ability in administration. Upon retirement in 1956, he returned to his boyhood home at Dike to spend the last years of his life there. He died July 20, 1967.

C. T. Howell, Prominent Personalities. 1945.

MATTHEW D. SMITH

ROANOKE, VIRGINIA, U.S.A., a city of 90,955, is in the foothills of the Blue Ridge Mountains in the Roanoke River Valley. Until 1882, the settlement was known as "Big Lick" because of the salt deposits. It became an incorporated town in 1874. Prior to the coming of the early settlers, this section was a favorite spot for both the Indians and the fur bearing animals. As early as 1742, according to records, there was a settlement of sufficient size to have a local militia. The coming of the railroad—with the opening of the coal and iron fields in southwest VIRGINIA—transformed the tranquil town to one of bustling activity, growth and prosperity. In 1884 Roanoke became a city.

Among the early settlers in The Lick were the Methodist circuit riders. The first two Methodist Societies in the vicinity of Big Lick were in nearby Salem and what is now Vinton. Records show that the Salem Society dates back to 1803, and the date of the Vinton Society at about that time. In 1815 the Thrasher Chapel at Vinton was built.

Until 1866 it is assumed that the churches in the vicinity of present day Roanoke were a part of the Salem Circuit. In that year the Old Lick Charge was formed, consisting of Thrasher's Chapel (now Vinton), Cave Spring, Bethany, Mount Pleasant and Old Lick (northeast Roanoke). This latter group had been gathered together in 1859 under the ministry of JAMES E. ARMSTRONG. That same year, 1866, under the leadership of Isaac Canter, the Old Lick Society found a new meeting place—a school house which stood directly across the street from the present Greene Memorial Church, and was organized into the first official Methodist Church in Big Lick (Roanoke). In this same year the circuit name was changed from Old Lick to Big Lick Circuit, which was composed of Big Lick, Hollins, Salem, Vinton, Cave Spring and Mount Pleasant.

In 1873 the name of the Big Lick Circuit was changed to Roanoke Circuit and ten years later, 1883, Roanoke became a station appointment. By the year 1891 there were two stations organized in Roanoke City—Greene Memorial and Trinity. In the district conference records of 1892 and 1893 respectively, St. James and Grace appear as organized churches. In 1896 Belmont was organized and bracketed with Roanoke Circuit.

From five churches in 1896, Methodism grew as did the city, so that by 1917 there were seven churches; in 1934 ten churches. The new churches were built in suburban areas. At the present time there are eighteen churches within the city and its adjoining suburbs.

Through the years Greene Memorial has been the leading church, growing in membership (now 1,712) and responsibility to The Methodist Church. Raleigh Court, with 1,611 members, is second in membership. Huntington Court with 1,497 members is the third largest church. Trinity, Belmont, West End and Melrose have been, and still are, citadels of Methodism in Roanoke. The newer churches are also taking their place in the city. St. Paul, the only church of the former Central Jurisdiction in the city, is a leader among the Negro churches.

Today with a total membership of 13,163, the nineteen churches of the Roanoke Community find a challenge to better churchmanship in ministering to the people in the downtown, residential and the suburban areas. The churches are working together for the best solutions to the problems peculiar to each and are looking forward to making a better witness in the city.

Greene Memorial Church was able to celebrate in 1959 100 years of service at its downtown location. The congregation's move to that site is narrated in the Roanoke account just above. Isaac W. Canter who in 1866 found a meeting place for the congregation within Roanoke proper is credited with founding the church. I. W. Canter was the father of three distinguished sons: Dr. Hall Canter, dean of Randolph-Macon College; Noland Canter, M.D., distinguished lay leader; and Dr. Harry M. Canter, leading minister and long time secretary of the Old BALTIMORE CONFERENCE.

James E. Armstrong (later to be the historian of the Baltimore Conference) was the first assigned pastor in 1859. Until he came the Methodist Society had met in a Presbyterian church.

The church has had nice locations and three names in the conference listing: Old Lick, Roanoke, and Greene Memorial. The present name memorializes Leonidas Rosser Greene who was pastor for twenty months and who by devoted leadership gave the church a period of tremendous expansion 1885-86. His ministry was terminated by death of typhoid in the thirty-third year of his life.

Bishop COLLINS DENNY (1891) and Bishop NOLAN B. HARMON (1933-1940) served as pastors of Greene Memorial; Dr. J. MANNING POTTS, executive director of the "Crusade for Christ" and editor of the Upper Room, was pastor 1940-1944. Mr. and Mrs. FRANK LONG and their daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Schisler, represented this church in South America. Mrs. EULA KENNEDY LONG is the editor for BRAZIL for this Encyclopedia, and Mr. Schisler is author and editor of church school literature and magazines for the South American Church. Going into the ministry from this church have been a number of prominent preachers.

The Fishburn family has meant much to the church. T. T. Fishburn was a merchant, banker, industrialist, civic leader, lay preacher, and evangelist. He was one of the founders of the city, public school system, hospital, and Sunday school. R. H. Fishburn gave the tower chimes to the church. Junius B. and Blair J. Fishburn contributed parks to the city: Mill Mountain, Norwich, South Roanoke, Lakewood, and Fishburn Park; and J. B. gave to the State, Fairystone Park. The small prayer chapel, open at all times and visited by dozens of persons each day, is a Fishburn Memorial.

Greene Memorial has aided in the formation of Trinity, St. James, Grace, Belmont and other Methodist churches. The tall clock tower of Greene Memorial "is as much a part of Roanoke as is Mill Mountain itself," The Roanoke Times once said.

GREENE MEMORIAL CHURCH, ROANOKE, VIRGINIA

Mildred R. Chapman, Through Years of Grace. Charlotte, N.C.: Observer Printing House, 1953.

J. W. Leggett, What Hath God Wrought. Progress Press, 1964.

GEORGE S. LIGHTNER

ROANOKE UNION SOCIETY, THE (1824-1828), organized in eastern NORTH CAROLINA, U.S.A., shared with the Baltimore Union Society, organized on May 21, 1824, a discussion as to need for reform in Methodist church government. The two societies were established following the meeting of the GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M.E. Church in BALTIMORE in 1828 when requests for the incorporation of democratic principles into the church government were refused. The Roanoke Union Society was organized at Sampson's Meeting House, Halifax County, N. C., on Nov. 6, 1824 with eleven members, seven local preachers and four laymen. Eli Benton Whitaker was chosen president of the society. Subsequent meetings of the society met at Bradford's Meeting House (see BRADFORD, HENRY) and at WHITAKER'S CHAPEL.

The Baltimore Union Society and the Roanoke Union Society became the models after which nearly all the reform societies in the United States were organized until the Conventional Articles of 1828 offered a set form. The members of the Roanoke Union Society did not originally intend to organize a new church; they merely sought reform within the established church government. In 1828 delegates from the various union societies assembled in Baltimore and adopted temporary "Articles of Association." At a call meeting of the members of the union societies in North Carolina, delegates gathered at Whitaker's Chapel on Dec. 19-20, 1828, and organized there the first annual conference of the M.P. CHURCH. Due to the short notice given, only the ministers, preachers and laymen from the Roanoke Union Society were present.

The twenty-six official members of this historic conference were: Ministers: JAMES HUNTER, WILLIAM BELL-AMY, Miles Nash, William W. Hill, William Price, Eli Benton Whitaker, Albritton Jones, Henry B. Bradford, Thomas Moore; Local Preachers: Asa Steely, Aquilla Norman, Ira Norman, Thomas Steely, Israel Hutchins; Laymen: Arthur Pittman, Exum Lewis, Absalom B. Whitaker, William E. Bellamy, L. H. B. Whitaker, John F. Bellamy, David Barrow, Eli B. Whitaker, Jr., James C. Whitaker, Richard Jones, Wilson C. Whitaker, Richard H. Whitaker. Four circuits were established by the conference: Roanoke, Liberty (in and around Williamston), Warrenton and Oxford. In 1829 the Hillsboro and Guilford Circuits were added. William W. Hill was chosen as the first president of the Conference.

J. E. Carroll, History of the North Carolina Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church. Greensboro, 1939.

J. Paris, History (MP). 1849. RALPH HARDEE RIVES

ROBB, WILLIAM NORMAN HADDEN (1894-), Irish layman, linen merchant, born in BELFAST, and holder of numerous lay offices in the Methodist Church in IRELAND. In particular he was the first, and so far the only person to hold both key offices of Connexional Lay Treasurer of Overseas Missions (1934-1946) and of Home Missions (1946-1964). He was also secretary of the WESLEY HIS-

W. N. H. ROBB

TORICAL SOCIETY (IRISH BRANCH) from 1942 to 1963, then vice-president, and, from 1965, president. He was a member of the WORLD METHODIST CONFERENCE, Oxford, 1951, and at LAKE JUNALUSKA, 1956.

F. JEFFERY

B. T. ROBERTS

ROBERTS, BENJAMIN TITUS (1823-1893), founder and first general superintendent of the FREE METHODIST CHURCH, was born at Cattaraugus, N. Y., in July, 1823. He had a remarkable conversion at the age of twenty-one and was a student at WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, 1845-48, where he received B.A. and M.A. degrees. He was greatly influenced by STEPHEN OLIN, then president, and a classmate, DANIEL STEEL, who later became a HOLINESS theologian. A campus revival movement, led by JOHN WESLEY REDFIELD, helped shape Roberts' view of the mission of the church.

He joined the slavery-divided GENESEE CONFERENCE of the M.E. Church in 1848. He married Ellen L. Stowe, niece of George Lane, Book Agent of the M.E. Church, May 3, 1849 and thereafter served churches until his expulsion from the conference in Perry, N. Y., in 1858.

The charges against him were "insubordination and contumacy," based on articles published and statements made in his crusade to call Methodism back to JOHN WESLEY's teaching on holiness of heart and life. Fifty years later the Genesee Conference restored Roberts' parchments with this statement by Ray Allen, conference historian: "This heroic treatment might have seemed necessary at the time, but looked at half a century later it seems unjust and therefore exceedingly unwise." Free Methodists no longer dwell on these injustices; they do take comfort in this action.

Roberts edited his own paper, The Earnest Christian, and for a time he was also editor of The Free Methodist. He served as president of the Missionary Board, founded the first school at North Chili, N. Y., organized conferences, labored as an evangelist and pioneer church builder. His financial and organizational ability were remarkable. He sponsored the ordination of women, gave an address at the World Missions Conference in LONDON, 1888, and was author of Fishers of Men, Holiness Teachings, First Lessons on Money, Why Another Sect, Ordaining Women. He died at Cattaraugus, N. Y., where he was to hold a quarterly meeting, Feb. 27, 1893. The membership of the church he had reluctantly founded almost tripled in number during the last sixteen years of his life.

Roberts was a missionary at heart, an apostle of the underprivileged and weak. His administrative ability was unusual, his business sense uncanny. His writings are models of direct speech. He avoided the superfluous. His sermons, for his day, were brief—twenty to twenty-five minutes—but said more than many hour-long discourses. There was a strong social note in his preaching and writing. Like Wesley, he stressed the expression of Christian faith in practical service. For him, holiness was "love in action."

BYRON S. LAMSON

ROBERTS, COLIN AUGUSTUS (1886-), British Methodist, was born at Dawley, Shropshire, in 1886. He entered the Wesleyan Methodist ministry in 1909, having trained at Didsbury College, Manchester. He served as assistant to F. L. WISEMAN at the Birmingham Mission; as an army chaplain through the First World War; and as chairman of the London North and of the East Anglia Districts. In 1939 he was appointed to the Home Mission Department of the Methodist Church, becoming general secretary in 1948. In 1952 he was elected president of the Methodist Conference. After the Second World War he was the organizer and leader of the Christian Commando Campaigns, a renewed Methodist effort at urban evangelism. He edited These Commando Campaigns and The Way We Have Been Led. He married Dorothy, daughter of Irving Armstrong, and has one son and one daughter.

JOHN KENT

ROBERTS, GEORGE (1765-1827), American minister and physician, was born of English parents, probably in Talbot

County, Md. He early had studious and spiritual leanings and embraced religion in 1783. After four years service in the local relation, he was assigned to Annapessex Circuit, 1789. Sent to New England to assist JESSE LEE the next year, he was presiding elder over CONNECTICUT circuits, 1793-95. He replied in print to Tolland Congregationalist pastor Nathan Williams' defense of the standing order in 1793.

ASBURY stationed him at NEW YORK CITY for an unusual three-year term, 1796-98, during which time he built Duane Street Church. Asbury often sought his counsel, but while stationed at PHILADELPHIA he studied medicine, and, despite Asbury's pleadings, located and established himself at BALTIMORE in 1806 to practice "physic." Children by his second wife, who was Susannah LePage of New York, included GEORGE C. M. ROBERTS and a daughter who married HENRY SLICER.

George C. M. Roberts, Centenary Pictorial Album. Baltimore: J. W. Woods, 1866.

Strictures on a Sermon delivered by Mr. Nathan Williams, A.M. in Tolland on the Public Fast Day, April 17, 1793. N.p., Tuckniss, 1794.

EDWIN SCHILL

ROBERTS, GEORGE C. M. (1806-1870), American physician and local preacher, was born to George and Susannah (LePage) Roberts about the time his father left the ministry to study medicine. George C. M. Roberts was granted an M.D. in 1826 by the University of Maryland and then after serving 1826-29 in the traveling ministry, practiced and taught obstetrics, all the while maintaining unabated usefulness in the local ministry. He was co-editor of a pioneering medical journal 1839-40, taught at Washington Medical University, was a founding member of the American Medical Association and headed the Medical and Chirurgial Faculty (of Maryland) 1859-70.

Besides Roberts' life-long leadership in Light Street Church, BALTIMORE (where his father's second pastorate had been concluded in his natal year), he was the principal founder of the American Methodist Historical Society in 1855. He also saw to erection of the Bishops' and STRAWBRIDGE monuments in Mount Olivet Cemetery, Baltimore, was a founder (1858) and president (1863) of the National Association of Local Preachers, besides giving impetus to the founding of the Home for the Aged of the M.E. Church, 1868. His attentions to bodies and souls did not go unnoticed. When he died after a long illness, 2,000 persons in deep respect passed the bier, while 2,000 more were denied admission.

Centennial Pictorial Album, 1866.

EDWIN SCHILL

ROBERTS, HAROLD (1896-), British Methodist scholar and statesman, was born at Ashley in Cheshire in 1896. He was educated at Hulme Grammar School, Manchester, and at University College, Bangor. He entered the Wesleyan Methodist ministry in 1919, and his theological college was Wesley House, CAMBRIDGE, to which he returned as assistant tutor in 1924-26. He then served on the Liverpool (Waterloo) circuit from 1926 to 1929, and from 1929 to 1934 was the CHAPLAIN to Methodist students at Oxford University, where he remained until 1940. In that year he was transferred to Richmond Theological College in LONDON, but the Second World War compelled the closure of the Methodist theological colleges, and so from 1941 to 1946 he served as the superintendent of the Ipswich (Museum Street) Circuit, in East Anglia.

He went back to teach theology at Richmond College in 1946, and in 1955 became the principal of the college, a post which he held until his retirement in 1968. He was elected president of the Nottingham Conference of the Methodist Church in 1957. In the course of his career he obtained an M.A. from the University of Wales, an honorary D.D. from Dublin, and a Ph.D. from the University of Cambridge. He took a large part in the ecumenical movement, in the fostering of closer relations between the British Methodist Church and the Church of England, and in the Methodist ecumenical movement. His publications include: Belief in God (1936), The Holy Spirit and the Trinity (1937), The Sanctions of Christian Healing (1950). He gave the Fernley-Hartley Lecture of 1954, and this was published in 1955 under the title Jesus and the Kingdom of God. A portrait of Roberts is in the World Methodist Building at LAKE JUNALUSKA, N. C., as he was an outstanding leader of the WORLD METHODIST COUNCIL for many years.

JOHN KENT

ROBERTS, JOHN CALVIN (1833-1909), prominent M.P. layman and benefactor of Kernersville, N. C. He was almost solely responsible for the impetus given to the efforts of J. F. McCULLOCH in the early twentieth century to establish a M.P. college in NORTH CAROLINA. At the NORTH CAROLINA ANNUAL CONFERENCE of 1901, Roberts offered $10,000 to be used for the establishment of a denominational college in the state and a special Ways and Means Committee of nine persons (including McCulloch, A. M. Rankin, J. Norman Wills, J. Allen Holt), was appointed. Due to the economic conditions surrounding the panic of 1907, efforts to establish the school were temporarily postponed. When Roberts died on Aug. 12, 1909, he left the $10,000 bequest in his will, stipulating that it be used by the Conference Board of Education in the building or support of a college provided it should be opened by 1920, meanwhile loaning the interest to men who needed aid in preparation for the ministry. The will stipulated that if the college were not built by 1920 the entire bequest would become a permanent fund for the aid of ministerial students. A total of forty-eight young men had received assistance from this "Roberts Fund" by 1938. The cornerstone of the administration building at HIGH POINT COLLEGE was laid on June 29, 1922, and the building was named "Roberts Hall" in memory of the man whose generosity began the movement which culminated in the establishment of the college.

Journal of the North Carolina Conference, MP, 1901, 1908, 1909.

Our Church Record, June 23, 1898. RALPH HARDEE RIVES

ROBERTS, JOHN WRIGHT (1812-1875), second missionary bishop in LIBERIA, was born of free parents in PETERSBURG Va., Sept. 8, 1812. His father died while he was a boy. It was claimed that his mother, a woman of great force of character, had escaped from slavery. A chapter of the American Colonization Society which encouraged free Negroes to emigrate to Liberia, was established at Petersburg in 1825. "Aunt Roberts," as John's mother was called, resolved to go with her three sons—the other two were JOSEPH J. and Henry J.—to Liberia, and they sailed in 1829. All three of the boys were converted and joined the M.E. Church before leaving the United States, and both Joseph and Henry served as local preachers in Liberia. Henry became a medical doctor. After entering business, Joseph became interested in politics, served as governor of Liberia, and in 1848 when the country became a republic, he was its first president and was re-elected to that office three times.

John Roberts joined the Liberia Mission Conference (ME) in 1838 and was elected to ELDER's orders in 1841. In 1851 he became presiding elder of the Monrovia District. The 1856 GENERAL CONFERENCE authorized the Liberia Mission Conference to elect a bishop to serve there, with the proviso that after his election he should present himself in the United States for consecration. Accordingly, FRANCIS BURNS, a fellow presiding elder with Roberts, was elected bishop in 1858, was duly consecrated, and served five years. Following Burns' death in 1863, Roberts became president of the conference. Then in 1864 the General Conference authorized the election of a successor to Burns, and in 1866 Roberts was elevated to the episcopacy. He came to New York and was consecrated by Bishops LEVI SCOTT and EDMUND JANES in St. Paul's M.E. Church, June 20, 1866.

Roberts was intelligent and somewhat reserved. As an administrator he was prudent and conciliatory, dignified and firm, treating his brethren with a degree of impartiality and kindness which won their respect and esteem. During his term as bishop, the mission in Liberia had unity and harmony and a fair degree of prosperity. By the time he was sixty years of age fever had weakened his body. He died at Monrovia, Liberia, Jan. 30, 1875.

Flood and Hamilton, Lives of Methodist Bishops. 1882.

Willis J. King, History of The Methodist Church Mission in Liberia. (Typescript). N.d.

F. D. Leete, Methodist Bishops. 1948.

National Cyclopaedia of American Biography.

The National Magazine, March, 1854.

M. Simpson, Cyclopaedia. 1878.

JESSE A. EARL
ALBEEA GODBOLD

ROBERTS, JOSEPH JENKINS (1809-1876), the first president of LIBERIA and loyal Methodist, as well as a leader of his people, was born of free parents in PETERSBURG, Va., U.S.A., on March 15, 1809. He migrated to Liberia in 1829 with his widowed mother and soon began to obtain leadership in that land. Having achieved importance in Liberia, after a time he came on a visit to the United States authorized to deal with matters of import duties and the like between his country and the United States. He was elected the first president of Liberia in 1849 and again in 1851 and 1853. Previous to his election white men had always served as presidents of the Liberian colony, but when the choice devolved upon the people, J. J. Roberts was elected for the terms as above stated.

Bishop Simpson states: "In 1844 a gentleman of Canandaigua sent a silver cup to the church in which Governor Roberts worshiped, and inquired if he was a member of any Christian denomination. The governor replied, 'I am happy to be able to inform you that I have long been a member of the M.E. Church—upwards of sixteen years—and have not failed to find support and consolation in the religion of Christ and the promises of the gospel.'"

His second wife was Jane Warren Roberts, whom he married in 1836, who was an educated woman and spoke excellent French. In Europe, which Roberts visited a number of times, he always received unusual attention. He signed a treaty with Great Britain in 1849 which recognized Liberia as an independent nation—a very important event for that colony in the time when the European nations were taking over large portions of Africa regardless of their claims to independence. Roberts visited Europe again in 1854 and 1862 and on his return from the latter visit became the Belgian consul in Liberia. In 1869 he again visited the United States. Then at the age of sixty-three, broken in health by his long service, he was again elected to the presidency of his country and was re-elected again, serving until January 1876, when he died in Monrovia in February.

Dictionary of American Biography.
M. Simpson, Cyclopaedia. 1878.

N. B. H.

ROBERTS, LELIA (1862-1950), American pioneer missionary to Mexico, was born on Oct. 2, 1862, in Bell Mina, Okla. She came to Bonham, Texas, in early childhood and was educated at Carlton College and Sam Houston Normal. After teaching school in Palo Pinto, Texas, she volunteered to go as a missionary to Mexico. She was appointed in 1887 to the city of Saltillo at $25 a month. She served for forty-three years, and built a school of such quality and prestige that the president of Mexico and the governor of Coahuila gave her support. Many Mexican church leaders across the years have received their training under her guidance. She retired in 1930 and then gave twenty years of service to her local church, district, and conference before her death in 1950 at Bonham, Texas.

MRS. CLAUDE M. SIMPSON

ROBERT R. ROBERTS

ROBERTS, ROBERT RICHFORD (1778-1843), frontier American bishop, was born in Frederick County, Md., on Aug. 2, 1778. His father, Robert Morgan Roberts, was an Episcopalian and a Revolutionary soldier of Welsh descent.

In 1785 the family moved to Ligonier Valley in Westmoreland County, Pa. Pioneer conditions prevailed there and young Roberts' schooling practically ended at the age of seven years.

In 1796 he made an exploratory trip to the Shenango area in what is now Mercer County, Pa., where he homesteaded some land and built a rude log cabin. Here he lived for five years as a frontiersman, clearing his land, planting crops, hunting, fishing, and selling furs. Here he married Miss Elizabeth Oldham of York County.

In 1802 he became a CLASS LEADER, was licensed to preach, and admitted on trial into the BALTIMORE CONFERENCE. He was ordained in 1804 and 1806 by Bishops ASBURY and COKE. His first years in the ministry were spent on the hard Montgomery, Frederick, Erie, Pittsburgh and West Wheeling Circuits in MARYLAND, PENNSYLVANIA and VIRGINIA.

He built a mill on his land in Shenango and operated it to supplement his meager income, as a result of which he was rebuked by his conference in 1808 for neglecting his preaching appointments. He went to the general conference at BALTIMORE that year with only one dollar in his pocket and some bread, cheese and oats in his saddle bags.

At the request of some persons who heard him preach he was stationed in Baltimore in 1809, although he protested that he knew nothing about city ways. The next year he was sent to Fell's Point, in 1811 he was at Alexandria, and in 1813 he was appointed to PHILADELPHIA. In 1815 he was presiding elder of the Schuylkill District, which included Philadelphia. When he was in Georgetown, Md., President James Madison asked Roberts to pray for him as president.

At the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1816 at Baltimore, owing to the death of Asbury and the illness of Bishop McKENDREE, he was elected president of the conference. This was followed by his election as bishop. He had wide support because the East knew him from his service there and the West regarded him as a frontiersman.

His first episcopal residence was his log cabin at Shenango, but in 1819 he moved to a farm in Lawrence County, Ind., where he lived in another rude cabin built largely by himself. His episcopal labors took him from MAINE to MISSISSIPPI and to the Indian missions west of ARKANSAS. He died in INDIANA on March 26, 1843 and was buried in a cornfield on his farm, but his body was later moved to the campus of Indiana Asbury University (now DEPAUW), at Greencastle.

Dictionary of American Biography.

C. Elliott, Robert R. Roberts. 1844.

Flood and Hamilton, Lives of Methodist Bishops. 1882.

M. Simpson, Cyclopaedia. 1878.

W. B. Sprague, Annals of the Pulpit. 1861.

W. M. Tippy, Robert Richford Roberts. 1958.

ELMER T. CLARK

ROBERTS, WALTER N. (1898-1966), American E.U.B. minister, son of Alvadore and Hannah Roberts, Lewisburg, Ohio, was born Aug. 17, 1898. He graduated in 1921 from OTTERBEIN COLLEGE (B.A.) and in 1924 from UNITED (then Bonebrake) THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY (B.D.). Special studies were taken at Yale Divinity School and Union Theological Seminary in New York City and he received a Ph.D. degree from the Hartford Seminary Foundation School of Missions. Honorary degrees were received from Moravian Theological Seminary, LEBANON VALLEY COLLEGE, and Otterbein College.

He was married to a college classmate, Marjorie Miller, Aug. 22, 1922. Licensed by Miami Conference, CHURCH

OF THE UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST, in 1922, he was ordained by the same conference in 1924. He and his wife served a five-year term in the PHILIPPINE Islands, 1925-30, two years of which he also taught in UNION THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, Manila. Upon their return to America, Roberts completed his graduate studies. Subsequently his dissertation was published under the title, The Filipino Church, a history of the Protestant Church in the Philippines.

Returning to his annual conference, he served a pastorate in DAYTON (Fort McKinley Church), where he also spent six years as an instructor in practical theology in the denomination's seminary. In 1938 he became president of that institution, now known as United Theological Seminary, and continued in that post until his retirement in 1965. He represented his denomination at the organizing session of the WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES (Amsterdam, 1948) and the four subsequent sessions. In theological services he was a member of the Executive Committee of the American Association of Theological Schools for sixteen years and its accrediting commission for fourteen, visiting 122 theological schools in this capacity. He served a term as Executive Secretary of the Association, followed by a term as its president.

Death came suddenly to Walter Roberts, Feb. 20, 1966, a few hours following his return to Dayton from a four and a half month tour of AFRICA studying theological schools for the church's mission board in cooperation with British missionary societies. His wife took up residence at Otterbein Home in 1970 and died in October 1971.

Daily News, Dayton, Ohio, Feb. 21, 1966.

Minutes of the Ohio Miami Conference, EUB, 1966.

United News, quarterly bulletin, United Theological Seminary, March 1966, Vol. 65, No. 2. JOHN H. NESS, JR.

WILLIAM ROBERTS

ROBERTS, WILLIAM (1812-1888), pioneer American clergyman in CALIFORNIA and OREGON, was born at Burlington, N. J., March 28, 1812. After admission to the PHILADELPHIA CONFERENCE in 1834, he filled various appointments before being selected in 1846 by the Board of Bishops of the M. E. Church to be superintendent of the OREGON MISSION which had been founded by JASON LEE in 1834. William Roberts and J. H. WILBUR, and families, left New York on the bark Whiton, celebrated in western Methodism because its skipper was Captain Gelston, a devout Methodist who gave generous aid to missionaries. The Whiton took 148 days to reach the Golden Gate—a datum to be compared with the eighty-nine days and eight hours record of the clipper Flying Cloud, or the 130 days or more usually required by prairie schooners for their trip from Independence, Mo.

Roberts preached at Brown's Hotel, April 25, 1847, the day after he arrived in SAN FRANCISCO, the first Protestant services there since Sir Francis Drake's services at an unknown place nearby. "The bar was closed and the billiard room locked up until the service was over," Roberts reported, adding that he found his "very attentive congregation" to be composed mostly of homesick Americans. "The tearful eye and cheerful smile . . . made us feel like staying among them until others should be sent to furnish them with the gospel of peace." Aided by Wilbur, he organized a class meeting and a Sunday school in San Francisco and inspected Methodist prospects at San Jose, Monterey, and other settlements. But Oregon beckoned. Arriving there in June 1847, Roberts paid out $1,500 for lumber to send back and build San Francisco's first Methodist church, but was appalled to learn shipping would cost $1,100 more. Captain Gelston came to his rescue, not only carrying it to the Bay without cost, but contributing $1,000 to the project.

Roberts replaced GEORGE GARY as superintendent of the Oregon Mission. In 1849 he was directed by Bishop WAUGH to organize the Oregon and California Mission Conference which was under his superintendency until 1853 when the OREGON CONFERENCE was set up by Bishop AMES. In 1856 William Roberts was a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE at INDIANAPOLIS, and had three years of service as agent of the AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY for Oregon and Washington. He was then stationed at PORTLAND and served as presiding elder of the Portland District. He died at Dayton, Ore., on Aug. 22, 1888.

Bishop WILLIAM TAYLOR, with whom he was associated in California, called him "a capable, noble brother, and a faithful minister of the gospel, one of God's noblemen."

L. L. Loofbourow, In Search of God's Gold. 1950.

M. Simpson, Cyclopaedia. 1881.

LELAND D. CASE

ROBERTS CHAPEL, Fayette County, western Pennsylvania, is said by some to have been the first Methodist meeting house to be built west of the mountains. This was in 1784 or 1785. It was located four and one-half miles south of Brownsville on the east side of the Monongahela River in Luzerne Township. Roger Roberts had settled there on a farm about 1770. ROBERT AYRES preached his first sermon on the REDSTONE CIRCUIT, which then embraced Roberts Chapel, in Roberts Chapel on Sunday, June 18, 1786, and preached there regularly each round of the circuit. Bishop ASBURY made a round of the Redstone Circuit in 1786 and said that he spoke to 300 or 400 persons at Roberts Chapel (on Luke 4:18) on Thursday, June 29. James Roberts, a son of Roger Roberts, became a Methodist preacher. It may be said that Roger Roberts' daughter, Cassandra, married William Hawkins who built Hawkins Chapel, another church on Redstone Circuit; and another daughter married a son of Edward Death who lived on an adjoining farm to the north, and at whose home Robert Ayres usually stopped when he made his rounds.

W. G. Smeltzer, Headwaters of the Ohio. 1951.

N. B. H.

ROBERTS WESLEYAN COLLEGE, North Chile, N. Y., a FREE METHODIST institution, was founded by Bishop BENJAMIN T. ROBERTS in 1866. It was first operated as a high school under the names of Chili and Chesbrough Seminary; then Roberts Junior College in 1921, and a senior college renamed Roberts Wesleyan College in 1949. Roberts is regionally accredited.

The college serves 600 students from twenty-two states and five foreign countries. Eighteen conferences of the church are represented in the student body. Primarily a liberal arts college, Roberts also offers programs in music, degree nursing, teaching education, religion and pre-professions. The forty-five full-time faculty are dedicated to teaching students and to giving individual counsel. An enrollment of 1,000 is presently looked for.

BYRON S. LAMSON

ROBERTSON, EDWARD PETER (1860-1941), American minister and educator, was born on Feb. 24, 1860, in a farm home near Cooksville, Wis., where his parents who had been married in Edinburgh, SCOTLAND, had for a time settled. They moved when young Edward was four years old to MINNESOTA, where his father died. His mother was left a widow with five children.

Edward Robertson attended country school until he was fifteen years of age, then worked for a time and in 1885 graduated from HAMLINE UNIVERSITY. That fall he was admitted into the MINNESTA CONFERENCE, ordained DEACON and began his active pastorate. Shortly thereafter he was married to Florence E. Jackson, a fellow student at Hamline.

In 1899, while serving as a presiding elder in Minnesota, he was elected as president of the Red River Valley University, a Methodist liberal arts college in Wahpeton, N. D.

Under President Robertson's leadership, the Red River Valley University was moved from Wahpeton to Grand Forks, N. D. in 1906 and operated as Wesley College, offering courses in religion, music and speech in affiliation with the University of North Dakota. Dormitories for men and women were built as well as a music conservatory, and in 1929 an administrative building was completed, being named Robertson Hall in honor of the president. Robertson (having received the honorary LL.D. degree in 1925 from the University of North Dakota) retired from his post in 1931.

During his long career Robertson became a leader in Methodist educational circles. He was a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M.E. Church five times. He died on Sept. 2, 1941 and was buried in Memorial Park Cemetery, Grand Forks.

WESLEY SHEFFIELD

ROBERTSON, LUCY HENDERSON OWEN (1850-1930), president of GREENSBORO COLLEGE, 1902-1913, was born at Warrenton, N. C., Sept. 15, 1850. She was married to D. A. Robertson on Nov. 1, 1869 and widowed by his death in January 1883. She taught in Greensboro Female College (now Greensboro College), 1878-1893. From 1893-1900 she taught history in the North Carolina State Normal and Industrial Institute (now University of North Carolina at Greensboro). Returning as teacher of Bible to Greensboro College in 1900, she was made president in 1902, a post she held until 1913.

Her influence spread far beyond the college. She was vitally interested in the causes of Temperance and Missions. She served as president of the Woman's Missionary Society of the WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE for more than thirty years.

Five years before her death the alumnae of the college began soliciting funds for the establishment of the Lucy H. Robertson Chair of Religious Education in her honor. Mrs. Robertson died at Greensboro, May 28, 1930 and was buried in Green Hill Cemetery there. Few citizens of the state have had so profound an influence for good upon so many. Her successor, President S. B. TURRENTINE said of her that she held "before the vision of young womanhood ideals that promote not only the power to know, but the power to do."

Bulletin, Greensboro College, July 1930.

RAYMOND ALEXANDER SMITH

ROBINSON, ELLEN DOWNS (1824-1910), American lay woman, was born in 1824 in Hemmingford, CANADA. She moved with her family to Champlain, N. Y. as a child. She taught school for eight years and then was invited in 1856 to teach Indian girls in Bloomfield Academy in Indian Territory. She taught there until the fall of 1866 when the war impoverished the school, and she moved to Paris, Texas. There she taught school again until 1872 when she married the Rev. J. C. Robinson. In 1882 she became president of the WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY of the NORTH TEXAS CONFERENCE, in which office she served seven years.

MRS. CLAUDE M. SIMPSON

ROBINSON, FLORA LOIS (1884-1926), was the fourth principal of ISABELLA THOBURN COLLEGE. She was born in INDIA in a missionary home, daughter of JOHN EDWARD and Rhett Terry ROBINSON. For higher education she went to GOUCHER COLLEGE where she established a reputation for brilliance, Christian leadership and winsomeness. Her roommate at Goucher, Jessie Wilson, daughter of Woodrow Wilson, in a memorial tribute, wrote of her blue-eyed, golden-haired loveliness, her humor, understanding smile and keen intelligence. This roommate who became Mrs. Francis B. Sayres paid her salary through the WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY throughout her missionary service.

Later in 1909 she arrived at LUCKNOW to teach in the high school from which the Isabella Thoburn College had developed. Her sister, RUTH ROBINSON, was then principal of the college and her father a missionary bishop since 1904. Flora Robinson soon felt completely at home in India and quickly acquired recognition as an educator of great promise.

When her sister, Ruth, resigned on account of health difficulties, the board of governors asked the younger sister to accept the responsibilities of the principalship. The government of the United Provinces undertook to reorganize university education and to develop in Lucknow a teaching university, in contrast to the examining university which until then had dominated higher education in the province. After considerable discussion and plans that proved unpopular the government invited Isabella Thoburn College to become a special women's section of the university and a very choice site of thirty-two acres was obtained adjoining another department of the university.

Flora Robinson had acquired great influence with government officials and with the interested public. But after only eighteen months in office she resigned to marry Thomas J. Howells, an American businessman. In PITTSBURGH, where she and her husband lived after their marriage, she spoke often in behalf of India. But after a very few years she died of pernicious anemia.

M. A. Dimmitt, Isabella Thoburn College. 1963.

J. WASKOM PICKETT

ROBINSON, HUBERT N. (1912-), American bishop of the A.M.E. CHURCH, was born in Urbana, Ohio on April 28, 1912. He was educated at Ohio State University where he received his A.B. degree. He attended also the Hamma Divinity School in Ohio. He also holds the honorary D.D. degree. Following ordination as deacon and elder, he was pastor of churches in Ohio and PENNSYLVANIA. He was elected to the episcopacy in 1964 from the pastorate of the Ebenezer Church in DETROIT, Mich. He resides in Detroit and supervises the work of the Eighteenth Episcopal Area District comprising four annual conferences in South Central Africa.

GRANT S. SHOCKLEY

JOHN E. ROBINSON

ROBINSON, JOHN EDWARD (1849-1922), missionary bishop for Southern Asia, elected by the M.E. GENERAL CONFERENCE in 1904, was born at Gort, County Galway, IRELAND, Feb. 12, 1849, of English parents. Left fatherless at six, he migrated to America in 1865 and was converted in NEW YORK. He married Rhett Terry, joined the CENTRAL ILLINOIS CONFERENCE in 1874, and was assigned to INDIA "in the self-supporting work of WILLIAM TAYLOR." He was appointed to Rangoon as pastor, and thereby became the founder of the M.E. Church in BURMA, then administered as a province of British India. His appointments included several pastorates, the presiding eldership of several districts, and the editorship of The Indian Witness. His episcopal assignments were CALCUTTA, 1904; BOMBAY, 1908-1912; Bangalore, 1912-20.

Bishop Robinson was a handsome man, neat and poised, fluent and eloquent, but precise in speech. His only son became a distinguished surgeon. His five daughters all became missionaries in India. Two, RUTH and FLORA, served as principals of the ISABELLA THOBURN COLLEGE. Helen Robinson drowned when the ship on which she was returning to India was sunk by a submarine attack off the East Coast of Africa.

Bishop Robinson retired in 1920 and died in Bangalore, Feb. 15, 1922. He is buried there. It should be noted that there were two Robinson missionary bishops in India, John Edward and John Wesley, who for eight years served together as bishops in Southern Asia.

F. D. Leete, Methodist Bishops. 1948.

Mrs. J. E. Robinson and daughter, In Memoriam. 1923.

J. WASKOM PICKETT

ROBINSON, JOHN WESLEY (1866-1947), elected by the M.E. GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1912 as missionary bishop for Southern Asia, with residence in BOMBAY, supervising Bombay, Gujerat and Central Province Conferences. In 1916 after the accidental death of Bishop W. P. EVELAND, MALAYA, SARAWAK, Dutch East Indies and the PHILIPPINES were added to the Bombay Area. In 1920 the General Conference elected Bishop Robinson a general superintendent and continued his assignment to Bombay. In 1924 he was shifted to the newly established Delhi Area.

He was born at Moulton, Ia., Jan. 6, 1866. His mother and one of his daughters had the same birthday anniversary. He worked as a printer before deciding to enter the ministry. He studied at GARRETT BIBLICAL INSTITUTE and was graduated in 1892. He had married Elizabeth Fisher of Harlan, Ia. in 1891.

J. W. Robinson was ordained DEACON and ELDER in the DES MOINES CONFERENCE and, after two years, was transferred to the NORTH INDIA CONFERENCE and appointed pastor of the Lal Bagh Methodist Church in LUCKNOW. His subsequent appointments were: superintendent, Lucknow District; agent, LUCKNOW PUBLISHING HOUSE; editor Kaukab-i-Hind (official Roman Urdu Weekly); secretary-treasurer, Famine Relief Fund; secretary, Bishop Thoburn Special Gift Fund; secretary, the Executive Board; secretary, Jubilee Movement; and superintendent, Allahabad District. Usually he held three or more such appointments simultaneously. Of him a colleague said, "He does everything better than any one else does. The secret is that he works in high gear sixteen hours a day and with absolute dedication."

From 1912 when the National Missionary Council was organized in India, until 1936 when he retired, he participated prominently in inter-church activities.

Bishop Robinson translated many popular hymns into Urdu. He was chairman of the governing boards of many educational and medical institutions. When there were no architects or construction engineers among missionaries he drew plans for buildings and personally supervised their construction. His skill in administration won the praise of churchmen, government officials and professional men, Christian and non-Christian alike.

After retiring he made his home in CALIFORNIA briefly, then returned to India and became the editor of The Indian Witness. On the death of Bishop JASHWANT R. CHITAMBAR in 1940, Bishop Robinson was asked by the COUNCIL OF BISHOPS of The Methodist Church to return to active service and administer the Lucknow and Hyderabad conferences. When two new bishops were elected in 1941 and Bishop Robinson retired the second time, he returned to American but within a year departed again for India, where he served as superintendent of the Delhi District. Retiring a third time he made his home with his daughter and son-in-law in the episcopal residence in Delhi, which had been built under his direction twenty-five years earlier. Until the morning of the day of his death, May 30, 1947, in Naini Tal, India, he had never been a patient in a hospital or consulted a doctor except for a physical examination. His grave is in the Kaladungi Cemetery near Naini Tal, near the graves of his dear friend and predecessor, Bishop EDWIN W. PARKER and those of other early leaders of Indian Methodism.

J. WASKOM PICKETT

ROBINSON, MARK (?-c. 1840), British layman, who led a party of "Church Methodists" in Beverley, Hull, Yorkshire. He was a class leader and local preacher who was led in 1823 to examine the power of CONFERENCE when an action of Conference affected the Hull Circuit. He wanted to limit the powers of the preachers and to make the connexion into a sort of minor order in the Church of England, recognized by the episcopate, and subject to the local clergy. He persuaded an Irish Primitive Wesleyan minister to speak in Beverley in favor of his scheme and opened a chapel in a neighboring village, but the movement quickly dissipated. Several pamphlets by Robinson exist, including Observations on the System of Wesleyan Methodism (London 1825), and The General Principles of the Church Methodist Constitution (London 1826). He died between 1831 and 1840.

OLIVER A. BECKERLEGGE

ROBINSON, REUBEN D. (1815-1887), American physician and minister, was born Aug. 10, 1815, in Clark County, Ohio but moved with his parents to near LaFayette, Ind. at an early age. He graduated from Indiana Asbury University in 1843. After a brief medical practice he joined the NORTH INDIANA CONFERENCE in 1845. He married Mary K. Mahurin on Sept. 1, 1847. For a time he served as president of Fort Wayne College and was elected to lead his delegation to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1864. He died Aug. 18, 1887, in INDIANAPOLIS.

HAROLD THRASHER

ROBINSON, ROSWELL RAYMOND (1835-1923), American layman, businessman, philanthropist, was born in Taunton, Mass., on March 8, 1835. His formal education was in Taunton public schools and Bristol Academy. At the age of seventeen he started to work in a large store, first as clerk, then as cashier and bookkeeper, and then as one of the buyers. For two years he was treasurer of the Bay Screw Company of Taunton. At twenty-six he and his brother became interested in the manufacture of toilet soap. They established a plant and offices in Malden, Mass. The business prospered, first under the name "Robinson Brothers," and later as the "Potter Drug and Chemical Co." Roswell became connected with other very important financial and commercial enterprises.

His primary interest was in religion. He was a consecrated Christian, a loyal member of Center M.E. Church, Malden; treasurer, Royal Arcanum; treasurer, Boston City Missionary and Church Extension Society; director, Y.M.C.A.

Robinson's chief philanthropy was BOSTON UNIVERSITY, of which he was a trustee for the last twenty-one years of his life. He was a tither, and his church and Boston University—especially its School of Theology—got the larger share of it. His gifts to Boston University were so great that the Trustees constituted him an Associate Founder eleven years before his death.

DANIEL L. MARSH

ROBINSON, RUTH EVELYN (1878-1954), was the third principal of the ISABELLA THOBURN COLLEGE (1908-18) and a Methodist missionary in India from 1900 to her retirement in 1950. She was born in Bangalore, South India, June 15, 1878, the eldest child of JOHN EDWARD and Rhett Terry ROBINSON. Her parents were Methodist missionaries and during her childhood they held appointments in Rangoon, BURMA, Simla (then India's summer capital), and Poona. Her father was elected missionary bishop for Southern Asia in 1904.

She graduated from GOUCHER COLLEGE in 1899 and a year later was appointed to India. She worked as an evangelist in BOMBAY for a year and was then appointed to LUCKNOW to assist ISABELLA THOBURN in her struggling woman's college. Except for a year of furlough in America, Miss Robinson remained there as a teacher until she was appointed principal in 1908. She was renowned for sympathy with and understanding of her girls and of the national longing for independence. The students regarded her as totally unselfish.

In 1918 following a break in her health, she resigned the college principalship and was appointed to Pauri, Garhwal, as principal of a junior high school for girls. In 1920 with health troubles continuing, she went to America. Two years later she returned to India and began a second career as an editor and author. She founded a monthly magazine, The Treasure Chest, in English for young Indians. She remained a Methodist missionary, but the magazine was sponsored and financed in part by an interdenominational woman's committee in America. The paper quickly won popular acclaim, and a demand for Indian language editions arose and several such editions were started. Eventually all editions were placed under Indian editors.

In 1938 she joined forces with E. STANLEY JONES in his Ashram at Lucknow and shortly thereafter established a rural center at Nigohan, Lucknow District, organizing and operating adult literacy classes with volunteer help.

At retirement age in 1943 she went to Bangalore, but almost immediately in an emergency she was asked to resume active work and return to the editorship of The Treasure Chest. She continued full time work until 1950.

Miss Robinson also edited The Indian Temperance News for two years, and was the author of five series of readers, extensively used in the teaching of English in India. She also wrote An Introduction to English Prose and Verse. She was the first woman member appointed to serve on the Bangalore Municipal Council, and was for six years president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Madras. She died in Bangalore in 1954.

M. A. Dimmitt, Isabella Thoburn College. 1963.

J. N. Hollister, Southern Asia. 1956. J. WASKOM PICKETT

ROBSON, EBENEZER (1835-1911), Canadian missionary, was born in Perth, Ontario, on Jan. 17, 1835 and died in Vancouver, B.C., on May 4, 1911.

He was educated at Victoria College, Cobourg, and was ordained in 1858. At this point the discovery of gold in the Fraser River brought to British Columbia a rush of adventurers from the United States and eastern CANADA. Among the newcomers were many Methodists. This situation led ENOCH WOOD, superintendent of Wesleyan Missions in Canada, to issue a call for volunteers for this new mission field. Four were selected, of whom one was Robson. The party left Toronto on Dec. 31, 1858, and, traveling via NEW YORK, the Isthmus of PANAMA, and by boat up the Pacific Coast, reached Victoria on Feb. 10, 1859. Soon four missionary charges were organized, one of which was Hope and Yale—some 100 miles up the Fraser—and to this new field Mr. and Mrs. Robson were sent.

While ministering to the spiritual needs of thousands of settlers, prospectors and miners, Robson observed (to quote his own words), "with grief and distress the ignorance and degradation of the Indians in the area." As a beginning, in 1859, he opened a school for Indian children in his own house; this was the start of Canadian Methodist missions among the Indians of British Columbia.

From Hope the Robsons went to Nanaimo on Vancouver Island in 1860 to work among the coal miners from England. Here Robson found many Flathead Indians living amid conditions similar to those at Hope. He began a school and preached to the Indians each Sunday. Within a year a chapel was built close to the Indian quarters, the first Indian church in British Columbia Methodism.

Mrs. Robson's failing health led them to return to Ontario in 1865, but fifteen years later they returned to British Columbia and were stationed at New Westminster. When the conference was organized in 1887 Robson was chosen as its first president. At that time he was pastor of Homer Street Church in Vancouver. Robson served a number of other fields in the province until, in 1900, after forty-two years in the ministry, he was superannuated. Even in retirement he continued to serve until 1910. He was known and loved in all parts of British Columbia.

Diary of Rev. Ebenezer Robson, Union College.
Mrs. F. C. Stephenson, Canadian Methodist Missions. 1925.
W. P. BUNT

ROCHA, ISNARD (1908-), Brazilian preacher, was born in Jahu, state of São Paulo, on Dec. 18, 1908. When he was three his parents moved to Santo Amaro, near SÃO PAULO. His parents were second-generation Presbyterians, but there was no evangelical church in the neighborhood.

When Isnard was five, a neighbor "stole" him from his parents to get him baptized in the Roman Catholic church, for they were scandalized that he had never received baptism. She first bought him a little sailor suit, white shoes and a hat; then, on a Sunday morning, invited him to visit her, saying that his mother had consented. She took him to her house, changed him into the new clothes and then—in a carriage pulled by two horses—took him to church. How his mother discovered what had happened is not told; but she followed them to the church, and, just as they were entering the sacristy, she struggled to get the boy back. The neighbor and her son, holding Isnard tightly by his hands, would not give him up. The priest, angry at such a scene, excommunicated Isnard's mother then and there, and baptized the boy.

Isnard Rocha's own father became manager of a factory employing about 100 persons; and when the lad finished third grade, he began working there, but also attending school. In the meantime a Methodist church had been started in Santo Amaro. Isnard attended, and at sixteen made his profession of faith. At his side, among others, stood the godfather who had sponsored his baptism in the Catholic church.

Isnard continued studying, passed the preparatory examinations, and in 1928 entered GRANBERY INSTITUTO. There he spent eight years, completing both the course in the humanities and the theological course. He was planning to study for a doctorate in theology when the bishop urged him to postpone his studies and enter the ministry on trial. One year before graduation on Jan. 25, 1937, he married Esmeralda Barros, also a student at Granbery. Isnard was ordained DEACON in 1938, and ELDER in 1939, by Bishop DACORSO. Throughout the years since then he has served in many charges, both small and large, in the states of São Paulo and Minas Gerais, including six years as pastor of Central Church, São Paulo, the largest in Brazilian Methodism. He has been a district superintendent; director of youth work in São Paulo; regional secretary of Christian education for twelve years; editor of Cruz de Malta, the youth magazine, and of the Expositor Cristão, the official weekly. In February 1963, he was elected Reitor (dean) of the theological seminary in Rudge Ramos and served two years. Then he became pastor of Vila Mariana parish, which comprises three churches, in the suburb by that name in São Paulo.

During the past three years, the Methodist Press has published two historical books written by him in connection with the centennial of Brazilian Methodism. His wife, Esmeralda, has always been a leader in church work, and organist, choir director and president of the Methodist Women's Societies in that conference. She is presently secretary to an evangelical congressman in the state legislature of São Paulo.

They have three children, two sons, and a daughter, Isis, married to a young Methodist preacher, José Alaby, studying at Emory School of Theology. (1969)

EULA K. LONG

ROCHESTER, MINNESOTA, U.S.A., Christ Church (formerly First Church) is the modern church home of 3,402 Methodists. An outstanding feature of the church building is the great multicolored slab glass window portraying Christ, the Good Shepherd.

The birthplace of Methodism in Rochester was a log schoolhouse where in 1857, just two years after the first settlers arrived, seven persons met to organize a Methodist church. Later that year the first QUARTERLY CONFERENCE was held. Various buildings housed the church services until 1864, when the Methodists erected the first church in Rochester. The plot of land chosen was just one block from the world-renowned Mayo Clinic which was built some years later.

Subsequently two other frame buildings were erected on the original site, and in 1915 a fine brick structure was dedicated. In 1950 it became evident that due to the ever-increasing size of the congregation and the crowded conditions in the church school, a building program was again indicated. After much study a site six blocks south of the original plot was chosen, as it was still near enough to the Medical Center to allow the church to continue its ministry there.

Although a small city, Rochester, due to the Medical Center and a large manufacturing plant, probably has as many diverse elements in its populace as any city in the country. At Christ Church a large membership with a wide diversity of talented interests, education and training, has been merged so effectively that a vigorous and active congregation has emerged.

Due to several generous donors the church has an exceptionally fine organ, and the Minister of Music trains several Bell Choirs, as well as singing choirs. About 300 children, teenagers and adults actively participate in the music program.

Methodism in Rochester has had serving regular hospital chaplains and a parish visitor. The chaplain serving longest was John Mettam who took over the post in 1937. In 1937 Mrs. W. I. Kern became parish visitor and has continued in that capacity until the present time. She makes hundreds of family visits each year.

Among the ministers who have labored to make Christ Church a strong Christian force in the Rochester community have been: Frank Doran (1896), I. B. Wood (1914), H. G. Leonard (1920), R. J. Rice (1927), and Olin Jackson (1949).

Rochester Methodist Hospital is a 500-bed general hospital. The hospital is affiliated with the Mayo Clinic whose members compose its medical staff. This hospital as a Methodist related institution was started Jan. 1, 1954, when it was purchased from a private corporation. KARL P. MEISTER, former executive secretary of the Board of Hospitals and Homes of The Methodist Church; Ralph L. Jester of Des Moines, Ia., then a member of the Board; Judge H. A. Blackmun (now a Justice of the U. S. Supreme Court); and Bishop D. STANLEY COORS of the MINNESOTA CONFERENCE were the persons primarily responsible for the establishing of this organization as a non-profit eleemosynary institution. The Kresge Foundation of DETROIT made funds available to meet certain early financial obligations. The hospital is fully accredited by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals. In any given year patients are admitted to this hospital from almost every one of the United States and from many foreign countries.

In association with this hospital the Board of Directors also operates a fully accredited three-year diploma school of nursing, with a present enrollment of 215 students and graduating about seventy-five each year.

In October 1966 a new 571-bed hospital was opened. The hospital is so constructed that four future floors (about 450 beds) can be added vertically. Horizontal expansion of the lower four floors is also possible.

A new research department has been established and will be responsible for the investigation under controlled conditions of the design, arrangement, location, system and order of various hospital facilities, departments and methods which will improve care to the patient and help to more efficiently utilize personnel at all levels.

General Minutes.

A. H. Sanford, The Rochester Methodist. Published by the church, 1959,

ETHEL GIVENS
HAROLD C. MICKY

ROCHESTER, NEW YORK, U.S.A. (population 293,695 in 1970), was incorporated as a village in 1817 and as a city in 1834. The first Methodist class there was formed in 1817 and First Methodist Church was organized in 1820 with Orren Miller as pastor. A brick building, occupied in 1825, was destroyed by fire in 1835. A new church erected at once housed the congregation until 1855 when it was sold. Another edifice built at that time served until 1901 when the congregation once again constructed a new sanctuary.

New congregations organized prior to 1860 drew some members from First Church. Asbury was established on the east side of the Genesee River in 1836. At mid-century a layman offered $10,000 to any denomination that would build ten new churches in the growing parts of Rochester. The Methodists persuaded him to reduce the number to four and soon started Corn Hill, Frank Street, North Street, and Alexander Street churches. A German-language church was established in 1848. The denomination had six churches in the city in 1876 with a total of 1,725 members. In 1912 the Italian Methodists occupied the North Street Church. Lakeview Church was built in 1913, Trinity in 1916, and Seneca in 1930. Asbury and First Churches merged in 1934 to form Asbury-First.

The FREE METHODISTS had one church in Rochester in 1876 and two in 1971. Their ROBERTS WESLEYAN COLLEGE, located in the suburbs of Rochester, had 665 students in 1970.

The Rochester United Methodist Home for the aging opened in 1956 with four residents. In 1971 it had about 110 persons in residence and a nursing home for forty patients.

In 1970, The United Methodist Church reported fourteen churches in greater Rochester with a total of 8,000 members, property valued at $7,450,232, and $716,851 raised for all purposes during the year.

Asbury First Church was formed in 1934 by the merger of First Church and Asbury Church. Both were old congregations, the one having been established in 1820 and the other in 1836. The First Church building was destroyed by fire in 1933, and the situation prompted the members to accept Asbury's invitation to unite. At the time First Church had approximately 800 members to 1,275 for Asbury. Some ninety-five percent of the First Church members went into the merger. In 1934 the united congregation had 1,782 members.

ASBURY CHURCH, ROCHESTER, NEW YORK

Weldon F. Crossland, pastor 1932-58, led the congregation in a large building program, beginning in 1944. In June, 1955, the new sanctuary with a seating capacity of 1,000 was dedicated. An education building was added in 1961, and in November, 1964, the entire church plant, then valued at more than $2,000,000, became free of debt.

A memorial plaque from the former Asbury Church which now stands in the education wing of the new church shows that Clara Barton addressed a meeting in Asbury Church, Oct. 1, 1881, and that it led to the organization of the Rochester-Monroe County Chapter of the American National Red Cross, the second such chapter to be formed in America.

In 1970, Asbury First Church reported 2,316 members, property valued at $2,754,797, and $209,910 raised for all purposes during the year.

General Minutes, MEC, MC, and UMC.

E. W. Eanes, Methodism in Rochester. Rochester: University of Rochester, 1935.

M. Simpson, Cyclopaedia. 1878.

EDWARD W. EANES

RICHARD J. DAVEY

ALBEA GODBOLD

ROCK RIVER CONFERENCE, the historic name of what is today the NORTHERN ILLINOIS CONFERENCE.

ROCKEY, CLEMENT DANIEL (1889-), bishop of the Methodist Church of the Central Conference of Southern Asia, was born in Cawnpore, INDIA, Sept. 4, 1889, the son of Rev. and Mrs. NOBLE LEE ROCKEY. On Dec. 27, 1922 he married Helen Mary Cady, born in Chentu, CHINA, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. H. Olin Cady, missionaries in China. His degrees are: A.B., OHIO WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, 1909, and honorary D.D., 1948; B.D., DREW THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, 1912; M.A., NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY, 1921; Ph.D., Divinity School of University of Chicago, 1929.

He joined the NORTH INDIA CONFERENCE in January 1914. His appointments included: Bareilly Theological Seminary, professor of Bible, eight years, principal and professor, six years; district superintendent, BAREILLY, two years; Moradabad, four years; Kumaon, one year; Budaon, one year while principal of the Seminary; one year as pastor in Bareilly and Naini Tal for English services; services for non-conformists of the British troops stationed in Bareilly, over a ten-year period.

While living in Bareilly, Moradabad and Almora (Kumaon), he was manager of the local Methodist Boys' Middle or High School. During his first ten years of service he prepared Sunday school lesson notes in English, and in Urdu. He was one of the five-member committee for the Revision of the Urdu Old Testament, printed in 1930 in England, and now the translation in use. He was North India Conference delegate to GENERAL CONFERENCES of 1920, 1928, 1932, 1940.

He was elected bishop Jan. 1, 1941 by the Central Conference of the Methodist Church in Southern Asia, meeting in Delhi. He served the Lucknow Area, 1941-56; Burma Conference for 1941, after World War Two for 1940-50; and Indus River Conference, PAKISTAN, 1953-56.

He was retired by the Central Conference in session at Lucknow in November 1956, having come to the age of retirement. On the request of the Conference in West Pakistan he was appointed by the COUNCIL OF BISHOPS to serve as bishop of the Methodist Church in West Pakistan, December 1956 through September 1964. He moved from Lucknow, to Lahore, West Pakistan, in January 1957, and left for retirement in the United States on Oct. 1, 1964.

When The Upper Room could not get to India for three years, 1944-46, Bishop Rockey prepared devotional readings in English and in Urdu for use in India. In 1950 he prepared a translation of about twenty hymns in the Gīt ki Kitāb (Song Book) in Urdu. During the eight years spent in Pakistan he helped in perfecting the translation into Urdu of some books prepared by the India Sunday School Union. These were published in English for use in India and permission was given to Pakistan to translate and make available in Urdu. He always preferred to preach in Urdu. He and his wife arrived in the United States in January 1965, and have retired in Eugene, Ore.

Who's Who in The Methodist Church, 1966.

N. B. H.

ROCKEY, NOBLE LEE (1857-1924), was born in Columbus, Ohio, June 7, 1857. Inflammatory rheumatism kept him crippled from his tenth to his twentieth year, but he finished the local school, and then taught a country school for three years. He worked his way through OHIO WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY and graduated in 1884. He was admitted to the COLORADO CONFERENCE and at once transferred to the NORTH INDIA CONFERENCE. He arrived in BOMBAY in December 1884, with his bride of three months, Mary Hadsell.

He was stationed first at Bijnor and then at Kanpur Memorial School. After that came appointments as district superintendent in Shahjahanpur, Dwarahat, BAREILLY, and Gonda. He went to Gonda in 1907 and gave that district eight years of consecutive administration. He had had much experience in evangelistic work. He was a versatile man and a tireless worker, exacting more from himself than he did from anyone else. He looked well to the property interests, and made himself acquainted with every person with whom he worked. His teaching spirit found scope in his summer schools and district conferences. His special interest in gardening made the mission compound yield new fruits, especially papayas.

For twenty-eight years he edited the widely read Children's Friend in both Urdu and Hindi. In conferring upon him the D.D. degree, Bishop HERBERT WELCH made special mention of the quality and quantity of Rockey's literary output, as well as his scholarly attainments. He sent out a constant stream of tracts in Hindustani and English. With his love of music he was a popular leader of congregational singing, and as a preacher he grew throughout his ministry. He was a much loved friend, especially by children.

He died in Bareilly on June 19, 1924. It was a joy to the parents that their son, CLEMENT, and daughter, Lois, returned to INDIA as missionaries and served for many years.

B. T. Badley, Southern Asia. 1931.

Minutes of the North India Conference, 1924.

JOHN N. HOLLISTER

ROCKFORD, ILLINOIS, U.S.A. In 1834 the first settlers came into northern ILLINOIS from Galena, to find a site for farm land and a town which would lie approximately half way between Galena and CHICAGO. A spot on the Rock River was chosen which was later to become Rockford. In 1835 a few settlers came to establish this community.

The Methodist Church was the first to begin work in the territory. In July of 1836 William Royal preached in a home of one of the settlers. Royal made several visits to the community that summer, and on Sept. 2, 1836, preached at Samuel Gregory's log house. At the close of the service he organized the first Methodist class with five members.

Methodism grew as the settlement flourished. In 1838 the first quarterly meeting was held in Rockford. The ROCK RIVER CONFERENCE was organized on Aug. 26, 1840, at Mount Morris, Ill., with the meetings being held in tents in a grove. In 1841 the Methodists had their first church home in Rockford. At the conference in Dubuque, Ia., in 1843, Rockford was made a station.

In 1848 the church site was moved and a new First M.E. Church was built at a cost of $7,000. By 1850 the congregation had outgrown the building and the pastor suggested formation of a second church on the west side of the river. Rock River, from which Rockford and the Rock River Conference get their names, runs right through the middle of the city of Rockford. In 1851 the Methodists on the west side of the river began holding their services in the home of one of their members. On Jan. 1, 1852, the group which was known at first as the Second M.E. Church, held an organizational meeting in the First M.E. Church, and the following year began work on a new building on Court Street. They subsequently became known as the Court Street M.E. Church. In September of 1853 the Conference redistricted the work and then formed the Rockford District.

For a long time there had been much dissatisfaction in the First M.E. Church over the matter of PEW RENTALS. The best solution seemed to be to divide the congregation. Eighty of the members moved out and organized the Third Street Church on Jan. 9, 1858. This division, however, was not a happy one. So, eighteen years later on May 18, 1876, the two congregations reunited. At reunion it seemed appropriate and desirable for the reunited church to take a new name. The name "Centennial," in honor of the national centennial year of the nation which was then being celebrated, was selected. Centennial Church therefore is the mother church of Methodism not only in Rockford but for all northern Illinois.

There are presently fourteen Methodist churches in Rockford with a membership of 9,282. Rockford is an industrial city surrounded by rich farm land with a present population of 144,707.

Court Street Church is the historic downtown church of Rockford, and is the second oldest Methodist church in the city. It was organized in January 1852, and was then called the Second M.E. Church. The first structure in which the new church was housed was located on the west side of Court Street, a half block south of the present location, and was dedicated in November 1854.

The present site on the corner of Mulberry and Court Streets was purchased on Sept. 5, 1883. On Aug. 11, 1884, a new building was started and was finally completed in the Spring of 1887. In 1911 two lots adjoining the church property to the north were purchased, and a new unit known as the Institutional and Educational Building was begun. The new unit was dedicated on April 22, 1917. In 1927-29 the entire chancel was remodeled, and the church was dedicated by Bishop EDWIN HOLT HUGHES.

In 1960 plans were made for a new chapel to seat 300 and a three-story educational building. This new structure was in time consecrated by Bishop CHARLES WESLEY BRASILIARES.

The Court Street Church has 2,891 members. It supports two missionaries in foreign fields, one in Africa and one in INDIA. It has sent many young men into the ministry, two of whom now serve in the NORTHERN ILLINOIS CONFERENCE. One of the distinctive phases of the program of the Court Street Church has always been its musical program. Over 300 voices comprise the six choirs which normally sing for their various services.

On March 18, 1969 the church sanctuary was burned almost completely, a confessed arsonist being arrested later and sentenced for this criminal act. The congregation meeting in the burned out shell of their church on Easter Sunday about three weeks after the fire made plans to rebuild, and the new sanctuary was occupied late in 1970. All the carved ornamentation in the former building was duplicated and the new building is as close a reproduction of the old (including the stained glass windows) as is possible. The total cost of rebuilding was a million and a half dollars.

General Minutes.

HAROLD McELVANY

ROCKVILLE, MARYLAND, U.S.A., the county seat of Montgomery County in that state, nine miles north of the District of Columbia line and today practically a part of WASHINGTON city, is a growing area where Methodism has been entrenched for a long time. The Montgomery Circuit came into being back around 1788 and was one of the circuits in the original BALTIMORE CONFERENCE. Washington, the nation's capital, was then but a small village itself, and BALTIMORE up until well into the twentieth century was always the dominant metropolitan influence over most of MARYLAND and certainly in Montgomery County. Hungerford Tavern seems to have been the original stopping place at what is now Rockville.

In 1844 the Rockville Circuit was taken from the Montgomery Circuit and made an entity of its own, and at the epochal division of the M.E. Church which came that very year, the Rockville circuit adhered strongly to the South. Visitors today marvel at finding the statue of a Confederate soldier across from the court house nine miles north of Washington city itself.

Losing the church building in a lawsuit by which the M.E. Church was given title to the property, four southern men of prominence in Rockville, two of them being E. E. Stonestreet and Elijah Barrett Prettyman, built the church now there, its adherence being of course to the M.E. Church, South.

The church has grown through the years with recent modern enlargements and improvements, and in 1969 celebrated its 125 years of Christian service with Bishop NOLAN B. HARMON, a former pastor, back for the anniversary sermon. The church is in the Washington West District of the Baltimore Conference (UMC) and with 1,723 members continues to grow. Other churches in Rockville are Faith, St. Marks, and the Millian Memorial.

Millian Memorial, begun in March 1952, has experienced a phenomenal growth from forty-three charter members to 2,435 by 1970. Located in a rapidly developing suburb of Washington, D.C., with a rather transient population, more than 3,300 members were recorded in its first sixteen years, about 1,000 transferring memberships upon moving from the area.

Early in 1952, John Curry Millian, an alert, capable religious leader and then district superintendent in the Washington area, motored along Viers Mill Road between Wheaton and Rockville, Md. At the halfway point he passed Viers Mill Village, a new community with a small shopping center and movie theater. The only other occupied homes he could see for two miles on either side were those in the first section of neighboring Wheaton Woods. As he was, among other duties, responsible for the establishment of mission churches in new communities, he considered the details of forming a new church in this locality. He began one in a short time by scheduling services in the Viers Mill Theater. Harold Bell Wright, with over ten years experience as a parish minister and Army chaplain, had just returned from KOREA and was available for appointment, and he was made its pastor. The Methodist Union of Washington and the Baltimore Conference Board of Missions and Church Extension both pledged support.

On March 2, 1952, twenty persons responded to the handbill announcement and attended the first worship service held in the Viers Mill Theater. By May 18, 1952, forty-three persons were recorded as charter members. Through cooperation of neighboring Methodist churches, much necessary furniture and equipment was donated or loaned. As more and more families came, classes were dispersed throughout the theater building. Class areas became known as Alphabet Room (where marquee letters were kept), the Pit (way down front), the Terrazzo Room (outer lobby), the Alley (hall back of projection booth), and the Teen Club (manager's office). Nearby records were efficiently kept by the secretary in his "office" at the popcorn stand.

In June 1954 Merrill W. Drennan was appointed pastor. Under his leadership the growth of Millian Church kept pace with the rapid development of the suburban community. The church school moved to the new Wheaton Woods Elementary School in September 1954. On land donated by the developer of Wheaton Woods, the first unit of Millian Church, which was a chapel seating 250 and a social hall, was built in 1955 and consecrated on November 27 of that year by Bishop G. BROMLEY OXNAM. An educational building was completed in February 1959, to accommodate the church school with two complete sessions each Sunday morning.

Three crowded worship services in the chapel each Sunday made it apparent that a larger sanctuary was essential. This was completed in 1964 and consecrated on Dec. 9, 1964, by Bishop JOHN WESLEY LORD.

In June 1965, Carroll A. Doggett, Jr. succeeded Drennan as pastor, and soon an educational assistant was added to the professional staff to give better coordination to a more comprehensive educational program. With building completed for the foreseeable future the congregation has been able to shift increased emphasis to its ministry with persons. This entire section of Maryland just north of the Capital city continues to grow as does Millian Memorial itself.

General Minutes.

N.B.H.
CARROLL A. DOGGETT, JR.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN COLLEGE, Billings, MONTANA, is an interdenominational college under the sponsorship of the Methodist and Presbyterian churches and the United Church of Christ. The College of Montana (1878) and Montana Wesleyan (1889) merged in 1923 to form Inter-mountain Union College. After the partial destruction of its buildings in the earthquakes of 1935-36, this institution moved from Helena to the campus of Billings Polytechnic Institute, Billings, Montana, founded in 1903 with some connections to the Congregational Church. In 1947 these two institutions merged to form Rocky Mountain College.

Through its heritage it is the oldest institution of higher learning in the State of Montana, going back to the earliest movements for higher education in the Territory of Montana. It is the only Protestant senior college in the state. It offers the B.A. and B.S. degrees. The governing board of twenty-four members has six elected by the three supporting denominations (Methodist, Presbyterian, United Church of Christ), the balance at large by the board.

JOHN O. GROSS

ROCKY MOUNTAIN CONFERENCE was first organized on July 10, 1863 when eleven preachers, representing eight charges and 241 church members, gathered in DENVER City, COLORADO Territory, under the leadership of Bishop EDWARD R. AMES. At the time the conference boundaries included only Colorado.

After one year the name of the body was changed to the Colorado Conference, and it so continued until 1957 when it reverted to the original appellation. In the meanwhile, from 1872 to 1876, there was another Rocky Mountain Conference which had no relationship whatever to Colorado. It included the Territories of UTAH, IDAHO, MONTANA, and the western portion of WYOMING Territory. After its brief four-year existence, that Rocky Mountain Conference was divided to form the MONTANA and UTAH CONFERENCES.

On two occasions the territory of the Colorado Conference was enlarged. In 1948 the Utah Mission was dissolved and the Utah churches and those in White Pine County, NEVADA, became the Salt Lake District, later the Utah-Western Colorado District, of the Colorado Conference. The GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1956 authorized the Wyoming State Conference to merge with an adjacent conference. As a result the Wyoming work became the Wyoming District in the Colorado Conference. The new and enlarged body has since been called the Rocky Mountain Conference.

On two occasions the new Rocky Mountain Conference has taken in a few churches without enlarging its geographical boundaries. In 1963 the pastors and members of three CENTRAL WEST CONFERENCE churches, Central Jurisdiction, in Colorado were welcomed into the white conference. In 1964 the Simpson Methodist Church in Denver, a Japanese language congregation, with its two ministers, was incorporated in the Rocky Mountain Conference, because in that year the Japanese Provisional Conference was absorbed by the English-speaking Conferences of the Western Jurisdiction.

When first organized in 1863, the Rocky Mountain Conference though small proposed at once to start two institutions of higher learning, but only one, the Colorado Seminary which was the forerunner of the UNIVERSITY of DENVER, actually developed. Today Denver is one of the eight universities of The United Methodist Church.

In 1892, the LIFLIF SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY was established at Denver to serve Methodism in the Rocky Mountain region. It was made possible by a gift by WILLIAM SEWARD LIFLIF, a layman who was a leader in the political and economic development of the west.

In 1970, the Rocky Mountain Conference reported 405 ministers, 227 pastoral charges, 109,651 members, and churches, parsonages and other property valued at $50,-469,463.

E. S. Bucke, History of American Methodism. 1964.

Journals of the Colorado and Rocky Mountain Conferences.

K. E. Metcalf, Beginnings of Methodism in Colorado. 1948.

An unpublished Th.D. dissertation in Liff School of Theology Library.

WALTER J. BOIGECRAIN

ROCKY MOUNTAIN CONFERENCE (1872-1876). (See UTAH.)

ROCKY MOUNTAIN CONFERENCE (EUB) was founded in 1951 and included one congregation in WYOMING in addition to churches in COLORADO and NEW MEXICO. The conference goes back to Oct. 19, 1869, when St. Clair Ross and his wife arrived in DENVER, Colo., looking forward to the establishing of a preaching appointment for the Church of the UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST. From Denver, they journeyed north or "down the Platte" to a village then known as Island Station, later known as Henderson, Colo. Here, in 1871, the first United Brethren Church building was erected and was dedicated on Jan. 21, 1872.

Under the authorization of the Board of Missions of the United Brethren Church, the work in Colorado was organized into a mission conference, April 15, 1872, by Bishop JOHN DICKSON. Three men who had brought their credentials with them made up the membership of this first conference; they were St. Clair Ross, A. Hartzell, and W. H. McCormick. Shortly thereafter, the names of E. J. Lamb and L. S. Cornell were added to the list.

During this same period, the EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION was developing work in the states of KANSAS and NEBRASKA and establishing work in Colorado. In 1885, a local preacher of the Kansas Conference attempted to organize a mission among the English-speaking people of the area of South Pueblo, Colo.; but this ministry failed for lack of interest in English services. In the year 1902, the Kansas Conference again tried to take up work in Colorado which resulted in the establishing of two missions, one in Ordway and the other in Colorado Springs.

About the same time, the Nebraska Conference of the Evangelical Association looked toward Colorado as a mission field and in 1887 established a mission in the vicinity of Yuma and Northeastern Colorado. Later, congregations were organized in Sterling, Denver, and Loveland.

Encouraged by the opening of new lands for homesteaders, the United Brethren Church organized a North Texas Mission Conference on Nov. 5, 1908, with small groups in north TEXAS, the "Strip" in OKLAHOMA, and New Mexico. This Conference finally became the New Mexico Mission Conference on Sept. 5, 1914; but the churches in the "Strip" in Oklahoma were transferred to the Oklahoma Conference and the churches in Texas went out of existence. In the development of this Conference a special interest was being given to the Spanish-speaking population.

On June 2, 1920, the congregations organized by the Kansas and Nebraska Conferences of the Evangelical Association in Colorado were constituted as the churches of the newly organized Colorado Conference of the Evangelical Association (The EVANGELICAL CHURCH, following the merger of the Evangelical Association with the United Evangelical Church in 1922).

On Aug. 22, 1929, the Colorado Mission Conference and the New Mexico Mission Conference of the United Brethren Church were formally organized as the Colorado-New Mexico Conference of that church.

Following the merger of The Evangelical Church and the Church of the United Brethren in Christ in Johnstown, Pa., on Nov. 16, 1946, the Colorado Conference (Ev) and the Colorado-New Mexico Conference (UB), were merged in May 1951 as the Rocky Mountain Conference of The EVANGELICAL UNITED BRETHREN CHURCH. This conference united in 1969 with the conference of the same name in the former Methodist Church to form the Rocky Mountain Conference. At the same time the New Mexico congregations joined the New Mexico Conference in the SOUTH CENTRAL JURISDICTION of The United Methodist Church.

HAROLD H. MAXWELL

RODDA, MARTIN (dates unknown), British Methodist, eldest brother of RICHARD RODDA, was accepted as an itinerant preacher by JOHN WESLEY in 1763, but resigned in 1766 because of difficulties with a Welsh Methodist. He returned to the itinerancy in 1768, and in 1773 was stationed in East Cornwall under JAMES DEMPSTER, whom he accompanied to America in 1774. Rodda's strong loyalty to the British Crown caused trouble both for himself and for American Methodists in general, and he escaped with difficulty to England. After serving in three more English circuits (the last once more in his native Cornwall), in 1781 he retired permanently from the itinerancy.

E. S. Bucke, History of American Methodism. 1964.

T. Jackson, Lives of Early Methodist Preachers. 1871.

Minutes of the Methodist Conferences, 1862. FRANK BAKER

RODDA, RICHARD (1743-1815), British Methodist, was born at Sancreed, Cornwall, and converted at the age of thirteen. While working in the tin mines, he had several providential escapes. In 1769 he was appointed to the Glamorganshire Circuit and later was stationed several times in Wales and Cornwall. He was a pioneer of Sunday school work in CHESTER and one of the signatories of the HALIFAX CIRCULAR in 1791. In 1802 he settled in London.

JOHN A. VICKERS

RODRIGUEZ BORGES, ARMANDO ANDRES (1929-), bishop of the Methodist Church of CUBA, was born in Yaguaramas, Las Villas, Cuba, Nov. 30, 1929. His parents were Manuel Rodriguez and Elisa Borges. His early education was in his home town, but he later studied law and graduated from the University of Habana in 1954. He entered the Union Theological Seminary in Matanzas graduating in 1957. In 1956 he married Alida Barrios, and to them were born five children, Alida, Elisa, Dorcas, Armando, and Otoniel. His ministry in the pastorate covered five different pastoral charges. Twice he was district superintendent serving the Oriente and Habana Districts. After the death of ANGEL FUSTER he became the administrative assistant of Bishop JAMES W. HENLEY. When Cuba was granted the status of an indigenous church, he was elected the first active bishop (Angel Fuster having been elected posthumously). He was consecrated to the office by Bishop ALEJANDRO RUIZ of MEXICO, Feb. 11, 1968.

ARMANDO RODRIGUEZ

GARFIELD EVANS

RODEHEAVER, HOMER ALVAN (1880-1955), noted American gospel singer, was born in Union Furnace, Ohio, Oct. 4, 1880. He was the son of Thurman Hall and Fanny (Armstrong) Rodeheaver.

He was for awhile a student in OHIO WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY. Bob Jones College, in TENNESSEE, awarded him the honorary degree of Doctor of Sacred Music in 1942.

He became widely known as musical director with William A. ("Billy") Sunday in his evangelistic campaigns, 1901-31, directing choruses in most of the leading cities of the United States, and he made a tour of the world with Evangelist W. E. Beiderwolf, 1923-24. In 1936 he made a tour of mission posts in the Belgian Congo.

Rodeheaver was president of the Rodeheaver Hall-Mack Co., gospel music publishers, Winona Lake, Ind. He was founder of Rodeheaver's Boys Ranch, Inc., was trombone player with the Fourth Tennessee Regimental Band for four months in CUBA during the Spanish-American War in 1898, and was with the Y.M.C.A. in FRANCE, August-December, 1918.

He was founder and promoter of the Summer School of Sacred Music, Winona Lake, Ind.; platform manager for large assemblies; conducted community song programs on National Broadcasting Company and Columbia Broadcasting System networks, and produced religious transcriptions.

He was the author of: Song Stories of the Sawdust Trail, 1917; Twenty Years with Billy Sunday; Singing Black; also various gospel songs and compilations.

Homer Rodeheaver never married. He was a lifelong Methodist. His residence and office were at Winona Lake, Ind. He died Dec. 18, 1955, and his body rests in Oakwood Cemetery, Warsaw, Ind.

Who Was Who in America, Vol. 3.

J. MARVIN RAST

ROGERS, HENRY WADE (1853-1926), American jurist, educator, constitutional lawyer, and chairman of the powerful Committee on Judiciary of the GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M.E. Church for four quadrennia. He was born in Holland Patent, N. Y., on Oct. 10, 1853. At an early age he was adopted by an uncle for whom he was named. He received an A.B. degree from the University of Michigan in 1874, its A.M. in 1877. He took law at NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY, 1876-77. He was granted the LL.D. by WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY in CONNECTICUT in 1890 and by Northwestern University in 1915. He married Emma Ferdon Winner of Pennington, N. J., on June 22, 1876. Admitted to the bar in 1877, he came to be in great demand for his lectures upon law and jurisprudence, and was appointed U.S. Circuit Judge of the Second Judicial Circuit in September 1913.

Judge Rogers had served before that time as the chairman of the World Congress on Jurisprudence and Law Reform at the Chicago exposition in 1893.

The Dictionary of American Biography states that Rogers' greatest work was dean of the Yale School of Law at Yale University. The same account states that "besides the law, his chief interests were the Democratic Party and the Methodist Episcopal Church."

A strong Methodist, he was a lay representative from the M.E. Church to the M.E. Church, South, in 1894. Elected to his own GENERAL CONFERENCE and serving on the Committee of Judiciary in 1908, 1912, 1916, and 1920, he became chairman of that body, and the decisions of his committee were always adopted by the Conference in matters of ruling law. Judge Rogers also served on the committee to treat with the M.E. Church, South, regarding church union in the quadrennium between 1916 and 1920. He was chairman of the American Bar Association's Committee on Legal Education and Admission to the Bar from 1906 to 1917. He wrote Illinois Citations, 1881; Expert Testimony, 1883; and Introduction to Constitutional History as seen in American Law, 1889. For the Church he wrote the introduction to the reports of the Committee on Judiciary of the General Conference of the M.E. Church with rulings by the Board of Bishops, which publication was compiled under the authority of the General Conference. His introduction to these reports has been invaluable to students of Methodist Constitutional Law. (See Reports of the Committee on Judiciary of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, by Arthur Benton Sanford. Introduction by Henry Wade Rogers, the Methodist Book Concern, New York-Cincinnati, 1924.)

He died at his summer house at Pennington, N. J., on Aug. 16, 1926.

National Cyclopaedia of American Biography. New York: James T. White Co., 1896.

New York Times, August 17, 1926.

C. F. Price, Who's Who in American Methodism, 1916.

Who's Who in America. Vol. 14, 1926-27.

N. B. H.

ROGERS, HESTER ANN ROE (1756-1794), British Methodist, only daughter of the Rev. James Roe of Macclesfield, was born on Jan. 31, 1756. Her prejudices against

HESTER ANN ROGERS

Methodism were removed through the influence of DAVID SIMPSON, the Macclesfield curate after her father's death. She joined the society in spite of family opposition in 1774. The strain of nursing her mother in 1775 impaired her health, but her first meeting with WESLEY in 1776 encouraged her to become a devoted CLASS LEADER. Having nursed through final illness the first wife of JAMES ROGERS, one of Wesley's preachers, she married him on Aug. 19, 1784. She was with him during the DUBLIN revival and later at City Road, LONDON, where they witnessed Wesley's death. After prolonged suffering endured with cheerful piety, she died in BIRMINGHAM on Oct. 10, 1794, following the birth of her seventh child.

Besides keeping a diary from the time of her becoming a Methodist, Mrs. Rogers engaged in extensive correspondence about religious matters, contributed to the Arminian Magazine, and wrote some verse. Her Experience (1793), an autobiography including some selections from her diary, and her Spiritual Letters (1796) were combined with her Funeral Sermon by THOMAS COKE (1795) and an appendix by her husband, both quoting at length from her diary, to form a small volume which under several titles went through many reprintings on both sides of the Atlantic until early in the twentieth century. A further selection from her diary, under the title The Life of Faith Exemplified (1818), also gained considerable circulation.

The Experience and Spiritual Letters of Mrs. Hester Ann Rogers. London, 1833.

T. Jackson, Lives of Early Methodist Preachers. 1837-38.

JOHN A. VICKERS

ROGERS, JAMES (1749-1807), British Methodist itinerant, was born at Marsk, in Yorkshire, in 1749. He was justified in Whitby, Yorkshire, in February 1769, under the influence of William Ripley. He soon began to preach, and is reckoned as commencing his itinerancy in 1774. JOHN WESLEY had a high opinion of him, and in writing to Arthur Keene, July 23, 1784, described him as "an Israelite indeed" (Letters, vii, p. 226). He married Martha Knowlden in 1778. She died, however, in Macclesfield in 1782, and in 1784 he married Hester Anne Roe (see ROGERS, HESTER). They went to DUBLIN, where within a year Rogers saw 130 conversions and an increase of about 200 in the society. He was stationed at City Road Chapel after John Wesley's death. He retired from the itinerancy in 1806, and went to live in Guisborough, in North Yorkshire, not far from his native village, and there he died on Jan. 28, 1807.

T. Jackson. Lives of Early Methodist Preachers. 1846.

J. Wesley. Letters, references in vols. vi, vii, and viii.

W. L. DOUGHTY

ROGERS, ROBERT WILLIAM (1864-1930), American minister and scholar, was born in PHILADELPHIA, Pa., on Feb. 14, 1864, and was ordained by the PHILADELPHIA CONFERENCE in 1890. He received A.B. degrees from the University of Pennsylvania in 1886 and Johns Hopkins University in 1887. From 1887 to 1889, while working toward his doctorate from Haverford College, Rogers was an instructor in Greek and Hebrew. After receiving his doctorate in 1890, Rogers became professor of English Bible and Semitic History at DICKINSON COLLEGE. There he married Ida Virginia Ziegler on June 3, 1891.

In 1893, at the age of twenty-nine, Rogers was elected to the chair of Hebrew and Old Testament Exegesis at DREW THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY. Rogers remained at Drew for thirty-six years, specializing in the study of Semitic languages, the Old Testament, Greek, Hebrew, and the history of Babylon and Assyria. Rogers traveled to GERMANY and earned his doctorate at Leipzig in 1895. He also received the Doctor of Literature from the University of Dublin in 1914 and from Oxford in 1923. Rogers also lectured at Harvard, Columbia, and Princeton. He belonged to numerous learned societies, American and foreign, and was a life member of St. John's College, Oxford University. In 1929, he was forced to retire from his position at Drew because of illness, and died a year later at Chadds Ford, Pa., near Philadelphia in 1930.

Rogers was affectionately called the "Rabbi" while at Drew. His books, The History of Babylon and Assyria (1900) and The Religion of Babylon and Assyria (1909), attracted attention in America and abroad. Although he was an ordained minister, he never had a pastorate. It was said of Rogers that he made "the name of Drew known wherever pure learning was honored."

Christian Advocate (New York), Dec. 25, 1930.

Christian Century, Dec. 31, 1930.

J. R. Joy, Teachers of Drew. 1942.

W. P. Tolley, ed., Alumni Record of Drew Theological Seminary, 1867-1925. Madison, N. J.: Published by the Seminary, 1926.

WILLIAM H. GRAY

ROGERSON, J. J. (1820-1907), was born at Harbour Grace, Newfoundland. He was appointed to the Legislative Council of the colony in 1850, and to the Executive Council in 1858. He was elected a member of the House of Assembly in 1860, and was receiver-general from 1874 to 1882. An enthusiastic worker in the cause of temperance and moral reform, he was largely responsible for the establishment of the Fishermen and Seamen's Home in St. John's, and for the formation of the Protestant Industrial Society and the Native Society in that city. He was one of the founding trustees of George Street Methodist Church, St. John's, where with others he founded the Ragged Sunday School for poor children. For many years he was regarded as the leading Methodist layman in Newfoundland, and he gave generously to its support in many parts of the Island.

The Daily News, St. John's, Newfoundland, Oct. 18, 1907.
The Evening Telegram, St. John's, Newfoundland, Oct. 17, 1907. N. WINSON

ROMAINE, WILLIAM (1714-1795), Anglican Evangelical, was born at Hartlepool, England, Sept. 25, 1714. He was ordained an Anglican priest in 1738; and in 1748 he edited the Hebrew concordance of Marius de Calasso. At first attracted by JOHN WESLEY, Romaine went over to WHITEFIELD in 1755, and became the leading Anglican exponent of a rigid Calvinist theology. For the last thirty years of his life he was rector of St. Anne's, Blackfriars, London. His best known book was his Treatise upon the Life of Faith (1763). He died in London, July 26, 1795.

JOHN KENT

ROMAN CATHOLICISM AND JOHN WESLEY. The year 1745 brought the uprising under the Young Pretender, Bonnie Prince Charlie Stuart. The Pretender to the British throne was a Roman Catholic, and the fear engendered in Britain was part political, part religious. Catholicism was still associated with an atmosphere of intrigue such as it had possessed in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. It is against this background that JOHN WESLEY's reaction to Roman Catholicism must be understood. He, like other Methodists of his day, shared the fear of Roman Catholicism. In fact he was linked with it in the minds of many of his contemporaries. In 1739 he could write: "The report now current in Bristol was that I was a Papist, if not a Jesuit. Some added that I was born and bred in Rome, which many cordially believe!" (Journal, ii, 262.) In February 1744, a government order was issued "commanding all Papists and reputed Papists to depart from the cities of London and Westminster . . . by March 2." Wesley had intended to leave London on Monday, February 27, but "determined to stay another week, that I might cut off all occasion of reproach" (Journal, iii, 122).

In 1751 Wesley found it necessary to write a lengthy reply to Bishop GEORGE LAVINGTON of Exeter, who had charged the Methodists with popery (Letters, iii, 259); and misunderstanding of the Methodist position was not confined to educated circles. Wesley himself was prepared to allow Roman Catholics freedom in religious matters but not in political. In this he saw the Catholics as possible disturbers of the status quo. Wesley writes in January 1780: "Receiving more and more accounts of the increase of Popery, I believed it my duty to write a letter concerning it, which was afterwards inserted in the public papers. Many were grievously offended; but I cannot help it; I must follow my own conscience." He could insist that "with persecution I have nothing to do," but felt it necessary to go on: "No government . . . ought to tolerate men of the Roman Catholic persuasion . . . who cannot give any security to that government for their allegiance and peaceable behaviour" (Journal, vi, 267). It was incumbent on Wesley's conscience to denounce what he believed to be the infidelity of Rome to the Christian gospel. "The most destructive" of all Roman errors he took to be justification by works "compared to which Transubstantiation and a hundred more are 'trifles light as air'" (Journal ii, 262). He lists ten things which the Romans "do add to those things which are written in the Book of Life": (1) Seven Sacraments. (2) Transubstantiation. (3) Communion in one kind only. (4) Purgatory, and praying for the dead therein. (5) Praying to saints. (6) Veneration of relics. (7) Worship of images. (8) Indulgences. (9) The priority and universality of the Roman Church. (10) The supremacy of the Bishop of Rome. (Journal, ii, 264.)

He had, further, a suspicion of Roman mystics, who "perpetually are talking of self-emptiness, self-inanition, self-annihilation" (Letters, v, 313). John Wesley also disliked what he called the inconsistency of the Roman Catholics. He accused them of misquotation of the Fathers: "I am no stranger to their skill in mending those authors who did not at first speak home to their purpose, and also purging them from those passages which contradicted their emendations." (Journal, ii, 262) He believed it to be their maxim that "no faith is to be kept with heretics" (Letters, vi, 271). He was also aware of Catholic intolerance (Journal, ii, 9). There is a certain note of cynicism in his remarking in 1765: "What wonder is it, that we have so many converts to Popery and so few to Protestantism, when the former are sure to want nothing, and the latter almost sure to starve?" (Journal, v, 151), and a corresponding delight in being able to note instances of converts from Rome (Journal, i, 357; iii, 427, 464; v, 151).

But Wesley's hostile criticism of Catholicism did not spring from or lead to an attitude of bigotry. He could allow himself to accept hospitality from a Roman Catholic (Journal, vii, 492); and in his sermon, "A Caution against Bigotry" (based on Mark 9:38-39, the incident of the man casting out devils), Wesley proceeds, after a criticism of the Catholic position, to acknowledge that still God may be using Papists in his work: "In every instance of this kind, acknowledge the finger of God. And not only acknowledge, but rejoice in His work" (Sermon, xxxiii). He could not "rail at or despise any man, much less those who profess to believe in the same Maker" (Journal, ii, 263).

In 1780 there took place the Lord Gordon Riots in LONDON. In the previous year an Act of Parliament had been passed which gave some legal relief to British Roman Catholics. Lord George Gordon presented to Parliament on behalf of his Protestant association a petition signed by some fifty thousand people demanding the repeal of this act. Vigorous rioting followed, and CHARLES WESLEY was concerned for the "trembling, persecuted Catholics" (Letters, vii, 20-21). Gordon requested John Wesley two or three times to visit him in the Tower of London where he had been imprisoned, and after receiving permission from the Secretary of State, Wesley acceded to this request on Dec. 19, 1780. A fortnight later he wrote of this visit:

I had no great desire to see Lord George Gordon, fearing he wanted to talk to me about political matters. . . . In our whole conversation I did not observe that he had the least anger or resentment to any one . . . Our conversation turned first upon

Popery, and then upon experimental religion . . . The theory of religion he certainly has. May God give him the living experience of it. (Letters, vii, 46)

Wesley's attitude is summed up in this experience: he could have no part in persecution of Catholics, and he believed that anyone with a vital knowledge of God would have to adopt the same attitude. Thus Wesley's complaint was not against Catholics as such, but against the lack of experimental religion which he deemed to be the state that so many of them were in.

His Letter to a Roman Catholic was written in 1749. It acknowledges the bitterness that has characterized both sides of the argument and seeks to set out plainly the Protestant faith in the Trinity and the Church. As practical measures Wesley suggests that both Catholic and Protestant should resolve "not to hurt one another . . . to speak nothing harsh or unkind of each other . . . to harbour no unkind thought, no unfriendly temper, towards each other . . . (and) to help each other on in whatever we are agreed leads to the Kingdom." (Letters, iii, 7-14) It therefore grieved him to have to write that Roman missionaries ("very few excepted") neither knew nor taught "true, genuine religion" (Letters, v, 121); and when his nephew SAMUEL became a Catholic in 1784, that his main concern was Sammy's lack of the knowledge of "Christ in you the hope of glory: . . . I care not a rush for your being called 'Papist or Protestant.' But I am grieved at your being a heathen." (J. Wesley, Letters, Vol. viii, p. 218, April 29, 1790; Vol. vii, p. 230-1, Aug. 19, 1784.) It has often been claimed that Methodism comes close to Catholic spirituality in its traditional insistence on CHRISTIAN PERFECTION; but, however that may be, the nineteenth century Methodist saw Rome as the true enemy of Christianity. There has grown gradually on both sides that attitude which leads to the present increasing acceptance of each other in sharing a common Lord and a largely common faith. This rapprochement more nearly reflects Wesley's own attitude than did nineteenth century Methodism's. One interesting if somewhat bizarre feature in this new relationship (at any rate in Methodist eyes) is the claim of John Todd, whose book John Wesley and the Catholic Church (London, 1958), has received the imprimatur. John Todd finds great inspiration in the life and teaching of John Wesley, and states that he has prayed to God—privately, though not publicly—through him.

BRIAN GALLIERS

ROME, ITALY. (See ITALY.)

ROMLEY, JOHN (1711-1751), English curate who would not let Wesley preach in the Epworth Church, was born at Burton, Lincolnshire, in 1711, the son of William Romley. During the latter years of SAMUEL WESLEY, he taught at the Charity School at Wroot, and served as amanuensis to the rector in compiling his commentary on Job. He matriculated at Magdalen Hall, Oxford, in 1735, and became curate of Epworth. A bitter anti-Methodist, he would not allow JOHN WESLEY to preach in the parish church (June 1742), and six months later refused him the sacrament. His action resulted in Wesley's practice of preaching either in Epworth churchyard (from his father's tomb), or at the market cross in the center of the village. On June 17, 1744, Wesley heard Romley preach two "exquisitely bitter and totally false" sermons, and on April 21, 1745, commented: "Poor Mr. Romley's sermon . . . was another railing accusation." In October 1745, on the other hand, he heard Romley preach "an earnest affectionate sermon." Wesley's Journal for July 3, 1748 recorded: "I was quite surprised when I heard Mr. Romley preach. That soft, smooth, tuneful voice which he so often employed to blaspheme the work of God was lost, without hope of recovery." He did recover it in fact, shortly before his death in May 1751.

JOHN NEWTON

ROSARIO, Argentina, is the second largest city in ARGENTINA, with 761,300 people, and is in northern Argentina. It is connected with the capital by an excellent rail line and also air service.

First Church is the oldest Methodist church in Argentina outside of BUENOS AIRES. The church was founded in 1865, when Rosario was a city of 30,000, a promising river port just linked with the capital by rail.

A community of foreign business families—British, American, Swiss, and German—bought a cemetery and invited WILLIAM GOODFELLOW, Methodist mission superintendent, to come from Buenos Aires and dedicate it. From this contact it was decided to start a church for English-speaking Protestants. Thomas Carter was assigned and held his first service in a hotel in November of 1864. Within a year a building had been erected by subscription, without help from the Missionary Society in the United States. It was dedicated by Goodfellow in November of 1865. Carter founded the first Methodist paper in Latin America, the South American Monthly, published in English for two years.

THOMAS B. WOOD, noted missionary, was appointed to Rosario in 1870, and the following year began preaching in Spanish. A Spanish Sunday school was organized, its first pupils including four Indians and six criollos. The versatile Wood taught physics and astronomy in the National College, founded a Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, which outlawed bullfighting, and started a temperance movement. He also served as U. S. consul in Rosario. A school begun in connection with the church became the COLEGIO AMERICANO.

While the central congregation remained English-speaking, it was the mother church for Methodism in the entire region. The church building was used for many years by a German congregation as well as by the Spanish Sunday school and for evangelistic work in Spanish, up to the present. Second Church (now called Resurrection Church), was established as a Spanish-speaking congregation. The entire area now numbers sixteen Methodist churches.

By the 1960's First Church included many bilingual families, second and third generation descendants of the original English families. Also in Rosario was a new community of North American business and technical people, attracted by growing industrialization of what was now Argentina's second city. In 1965 the first pastor who was not a missionary was appointed: Marcelo Perez Rivas, an Argentine. He held services in English on Sunday mornings and in Spanish on Sunday evenings.

Bishop SANTE UBERTO BARBIERI preached to large crowds at English and Spanish services upon the occasion of First Church's centenary on Nov. 7, 1965.

"The First Methodist Church of Rosario," unpublished ms., at First Methodist Church, Salta 2219, Rosario, Santa Fe Province, Argentina. EDWIN H. MAYNARD

ROSEMONT, PENNSYLVANIA, U.S.A. Radnor Church is the oldest Methodist congregation meeting on the same site in Delaware County, Pa. The first Methodist preaching services were held at the home of Isaac Anderson and his wife, Lary Lane Anderson, and in 1778 meetings were held at the Mansion House owned by the James family. The Mansion House is still standing, although it has been greatly changed by alterations. Leader of these meetings was Adam Cloud. In 1780 a class was formed with George Gyger as the leader, a man who "hated rum, tobacco and the Devil." In the same year the first pastor was appointed: John Cooper with George Main as junior preacher. A meeting house was begun in 1783, being ready for occupancy in 1784. It was a log building twenty-five by thirty feet and was built on ground deeded to the congregation by Evan James. The ground had originally been part of the King's grant to William Penn. The first patent to the tract had been to David Meredith, a weaver of Radnorshire, England, from whom it had passed to the James family. When the Methodists were erecting their building, they were told the Methodists would soon be as "cold as cucumbers." Instead they became as "live coals from off the altar of God," and eventually became the mother church of the Bethesda Church, Merion Square and St. Luke's Church, Bryn Mawr. FRANCIS ASBURY visited the church July 2, 1787, when he "spoke to a few simple hearted souls," and again on July 7, 1792 when he stopped to dine on his way to PHILADELPHIA. On June 2, 1804 his mare, Jane, was lamed by a cow in Radnor, and on Wednesday, Aug. 7, 1805, he passed through the community, dining with Brother Gyger. On Tuesday, April 14, 1812, he preached again in the church. In 1833 the original church building was torn down, and a larger stone building was erected. A Sunday school was organized in 1843, and an educational building was added to the church in 1952.

F. Asbury, Journal and Letters. 1858.

G. M. Burlingame and W. A. MacLachlan, Old Radnor Methodist Episcopal Church, 1931. FREDERICK E. MASER

ROSENBERGER, SILAS W. (1873-1950), American preacher, was born in Tiffin, Ohio, the son of Jacob and Sophia Rosenberger. After graduating from Heidelberg College, Tiffin, Ohio, he entered WESTMINSTER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, Westminster, Md. In 1902 he was ordained and became a member of the OHIO CONFERENCE of the M.P. Church, and that same year he married Miss Eva M. Ball. His first pastorates were in OHIO, and after a short period of service in the MARYLAND CONFERENCE he returned to Ohio for the remainder of his ministry.

During this period he was elected president of the Ohio Conference three times; elected to the GENERAL CONFERENCE six times; and was a member of the Uniting Conference of The Methodist Church in 1939. His most conspicuous service to the Church came in 1927 when he was elected executive secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions, and later when he became secretary of the combined four missionary Boards of Missions. In the administration of his office he was greatly assisted by his wife who had been prominent in the Women's Boards of Missions and who now was also a member of the General Board. Rosenberger returned to the pastorate in 1928, remaining in that capacity until his retirement in 1948. He died in Columbus, Ohio.

JAMES H. STRAUGHN

ROSS, ISAAC NELSON (1856-1927), American bishop of the A.M.E. CHURCH, was born in Hawkins County, Tenn., on Jan. 22, 1856. His education was self acquired. He was admitted to the Ohio Annual Conference in 1880, ordained deacon in 1882 and elder in 1883. He held pastorates in OHIO, PENNSYLVANIA, GEORGIA, WASHINGTON, D.C., and MARYLAND. He was elected bishop in 1916 from the pastorate of historic Ebenezer Church, BALTIMORE, Md., and served in West Africa and the southwestern United States. He died in 1927.

Bishop Ross in his pastorates was noted for construction and promotional ability. In COLUMBUS, Ohio, at St. Paul's Church, and at Big Bethel in ATLANTA, he did eminently constructive work. "He was one of the most popular pastors of the A.M.E. Church," Bishop Wright said of him.

R. R. Wright, The Bishops. 1963.

GRANT S. SHOCKLEY

ROSS, JOHN (1790-1866), principal chief of the Cherokee Indians from 1827 until his death and a staunch Methodist during the same period, was born Oct. 3, 1790. He was the son of David Ross, a Scotsman, and Mary McDonald Ross, one-fourth Cherokee; he was thus one-eighth Indian. He was called by one writer "a Scotchman with a dash of Cherokee blood," but nevertheless was completely identified with and accepted by the Cherokees. In 1809 he visited the Cherokees who had moved to the ARKANSAS territory, and he served in 1812 in a Cherokee regiment in the army of Andrew Jackson. He helped draft the Cherokee constitution in 1827. He was converted in 1828 under the preaching of JOHN B. MCFERRIN and joined the M.E. Church. It was probably partly due to his influence over 1,000 fellow tribesmen enrolled in the Methodist societies among the Cherokees. His wife, Quatie (Elizabeth), was a very intelligent and devout Christian. His niece married Nicholas D. Scales, one of the Methodist missionaries to the Cherokees in east TENNESSEE.

The Ross home became a center of Methodist preaching and worship. Ross was strongly opposed to the removal of the Cherokees to the West and consistently refused to sign any treaty of removal. Other unauthorized Cherokees did sign such a treaty, however, and eventually (in 1838-39) Ross and his family had little choice but to move to what is now OKLAHOMA. On the way his wife, Quatie, died from exposure and was buried in LITTLE ROCK (the grave is now in Mount Holly Cemetery). In the Indian Territory he continued his loyal support of the church, being a close friend of JOHN HARRELL, one of the leaders in the INDIAN MISSION CONFERENCE. He married Mary Bryan Stapler, a Quaker, in WILMINGTON, Del. in 1845. Ross went to WASHINGTON, D.C. frequently to confer on Indian affairs, and was there when he died.

WALTER N. VERNON

ROSS, PETER (1821-1889), a superintendent of the A.M.E. ZION CHURCH, was born in November 1821, in Nova Scotia. He began his ministry in that part of the continent, joined the conference in June 1834, and was ordained a DEACON in December 1840, and an ELDER May 21, 1840. He was consecrated a Superintendent on May 24, 1856, and died April 10, 1889.

DAVID H. BRADLEY

ROSS, WILLIAM R. (1802-1885), pioneer physician and first Iowa class leader, was born Dec. 3, 1802, in Lexington, Ky., and began medical practice in INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., in September 1827. He migrated to Palmyra, Mo., in the spring of 1829 and from thence to Quincy, Ill. (1830), where his wife, Phebe, and two children died of cholera.

In August 1833 Ross removed to Flint Hills (now Burlington), Iowa, became the settlement's first doctor, druggist, storekeeper, postmaster, surveyor, and county clerk. He married Matilda Morgan on Dec. 3, 1833, recrossing the Mississippi River for the ceremony.

In 1833 Ross wrote PETER CARTWRIGHT, presiding elder at Quincy, asking for a preacher for Flint Hills. BARTON H. CARTWRIGHT was appointed and, in the Ross cabin, organized six people, with Ross as leader, into Iowa's first Methodist class on Sunday, April 27, 1834. Largely through his zeal as class leader, steward, and Sabbath school superintendent, Burlington became a station in 1837. After donating the two lots on which Old Zion was built (1838), Ross eventually sold his home to save the mortgaged church.

In later life, Ross lived at Eddyville, Albia, Hamilton, and Lovilia, where he was CLASS LEADER (1865-67). As class leader of Eddyville Mission (winter of 1844-45), he participated in Marion County's first QUARTERLY CONFERENCE, held near Attica, Ia. He died at Lovilia, Ia., on Oct. 12, 1885, and a boulder marks his Lovilia Cemetery grave.

A. W. Haines, Makers of Iowa Methodism. 1900.

Iowa Journal of History, April 1951.

E. H. Waring, Iowa Conference. 1910.

Yearbook of the Iowa Conference, 1866. MARTIN L. GREER

ROSSER, LEONIDAS (1815-1892), American presiding elder, evangelist, and author, was born July 31, 1815, in PETERSBURG, Va. Educated at WILBRAHAM ACADEMY and WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY (M.A., 1838), he was admitted on trial in the NEW YORK CONFERENCE in 1839. He transferred to the VIRGINIA CONFERENCE in 1840, and was ordained DEACON in 1841 and ELDER in 1843.

After three years at churches in RICHMOND, two years at Warrenton, and one in Bedford, Rosser, an intensely Southern partisan, was appointed to ALEXANDRIA (at that time it was still in the undivided BALTIMORE CONFERENCE, M.E. Church) where he helped to organize a Church South congregation. Two years later his conference appointed him to WASHINGTON, D.C. Beginning in 1852, he served the Fredericksburg District one year, the Norfolk District three years, and the Lynchburg District two years. Then he had two years as editor of the Richmond Christian Advocate, followed by one year as pastor of Union Church in the same city. Throughout the four years of the Civil War he served as chaplain or missionary to the Confederate forces in Virginia.

After four years on the Richmond District, 1865-69, Rosser had one year as conference missionary, three as Sunday school agent, one on the Randolph-Macon District, and then three more years as Sunday school agent. Beginning in 1877, he was appointed three years to the Randolph-Macon District and two to the Farmville District. The conference minutes say he was transferred to the DENVER CONFERENCE in 1882 and appointed to Denver, but apparently he did not go west. In 1883 he began a two-year pastorate at Central Church, PORTSMOUTH, followed by one year on the Pungoteague Circuit. Afterward he was supernumerary for three years and was superannuated in 1889.

Rosser was a trustee of RANDOLPH-MACON COLLEGE for thirty-six years, and since he was called "Doctor," presumably that school awarded him the D.D. degree. He was a delegate to four GENERAL CONFERENCES, 1850-66. In 1866 he strongly opposed lay representation in the General and annual conferences, and his vehement objection to permitting laymen to vote on ministerial qualifications resulted in the provision against such which remains in the Discipline to this day.

Throughout his ministry Rosser was known as an evangelistic preacher, and it is claimed that he won 20,000 converts. The last five years of his life were crowded with evangelistic work in his own and other states. He preached some 400 times in TEXAS the year before he died. Rosser's son, John C., followed him as a member of the Virginia Conference.

In addition to serving as editor of the conference paper, Rosser wrote reviews, pamphlets, and articles for the religious press. He wrote a book on Baptism which was in the conference course of study for a time. Other volumes from his pen were: Experimental Religion, Recognition in Heaven, Class Meetings, Open Communion, and Initial Life. He died in Ashland, Virginia, Jan. 24, 1892, and was buried there.

General Minutes, MEC and MECS.

Richmond Christian Advocate, Jan. 28, 1892.

Minutes of the Virginia Conference, 1892.

JESSE A. EARL

ALBEA GODBOLD

ROSWELL, NEW MEXICO, U.S.A. First Church, the first Protestant church in the Pecos Valley, had its beginnings in 1885 through the instigation of Mrs. Helen Johnson. She and her husband, Wiley, lived across the Pecos River some distance from Roswell. When one of the Johnson children died, Mrs. Johnson conducted the funeral services herself because there was no preacher in the vicinity. Feeling a great need for religious training for her remaining children and her friends, in 1885 Mrs. Johnson started a Sunday school on her land in a tent.

The Sunday school was moved to the schoolhouse located in the southeastern part of Roswell. Mother Johnson went from house to house in her light spring wagon carrying all her own children in it and inviting everyone to attend. As a "shouting Methodist," Mother Johnson could not rest until she could associate her group with the Methodist Church. The minutes of the QUARTERLY CONFERENCE, signed by secretary J. W. Sims, show that in 1887 the Roswell Mission was accepted as a Methodist church in the San Angelo District, WEST TEXAS CONFERENCE, Sims himself being appointed pastor in charge. There were eight charter members.

Permission was given the congregation to build a church by the Quarterly Conference of 1888 held at Seven Rivers, N. M. The adobe structure built at 311 North Pennsylvania Street was known as the M.E. Church, South. It was recently razed to make space for a parking lot. Members of other denominations cooperated in many ways: a friend, George Davis, gave the lot; the Board of Trustees included Capt. J. C. Lea, a Christian and leading Roswellite; also Steve Mendenhall, an Episcopalian; and William S. Prager, of the Jewish faith.

Before the building was completed, the mission acquired a new pastor in charge, William Gibbons. In February 1889, he reported that there were four teachers and thirty "scholars" in the Sunday school. Mrs. Mary Cobean was president of the LADIES' AID and also the first organist, using her own portable organ. By September 1889 the records show that membership had increased to twenty-six, Sunday school to fifty, and the pastor's salary to $150 per quarter (from original $27.50). The twenty-four by forty building, with walls nearly two feet thick, cost $408.85 (without roof).

When J. D. Bush became pastor in 1891, he was concerned with needed repairs for the church. Phelps White, Dave Howell, Bud Wilkerson and a friend were so touched when they saw women sitting on boards laid across beer kegs, and little children asleep on blankets on straw, they gave lumber for new benches. Bush constructed new seats and a pulpit.

The cowboys who came into town every Saturday night (sometimes from forty or fifty miles away) came largely for entertainment, but many of them found their way to church before they returned to their ranches. On one such occasion in 1895, a revival was being held in that adobe church. The church was crowded because a noted evangelist, Abe Mulkey, was the speaker. So impressed were the cowboys that they decided to make a contribution to the church. The bell they gave, now known as the "Cowboy Bell," was the first church bell to ring nearer than Las Cruces or EL PASO. The bell is now anchored on the corner of Pennsylvania and Second Streets.

The congregation rapidly outgrew the little church. John Stone gave two lots for a new building and a rock church was built where the present church now stands. It was dedicated on May 2, 1897 by the Rev. Mr. Eddington and Bishop JOSEPH S. KEY. During the period when the rock building was in use, the church was removed from the mission class and became self-supporting. The church also had the only lending library in town with about 1,000 books. At one period tubercular patients were cared for in the basement of the church.

After about twenty years the rock church became weakened and was torn down. The foundation of the present church was made of the rock from the old building, and its stained glass windows were carefully removed from the old to the new building. On May 17, 1936, Bishop H. A. Boaz dedicated the church. It served as the annual meeting place on Homecoming Day for all veterans of the community regardless of church affiliation.

In the winter of 1956-57, the congregation again worshipped in the schoolhouse while the church was being repaired as the ceiling under the balcony had collapsed during a morning church service. Several buildings, including the old parsonage, were removed to make way for a new educational building and chapel. M. Buren Stewart and Austin H. Dillon dedicated it on Nov. 25, 1962. That same day, the seventy-fifth anniversary of the First Methodist Church of Roswell was observed.

First Church is not only the first church organized in Roswell, but literally the Mother Church of practically every church there. Out of her ranks have gone Christian, Episcopalian, Baptist, Northern Presbyterian and Southern Presbyterian men and women. Its membership in 1970 was 2,712.

General Minutes,

MILDRED FITZGERALD

STEPHEN G. ROSZEL

ROSZELS, THE. Three American ministers, a father and two sons, each quite prominent, made their mark as leaders in the BALTIMORE CONFERENCE in the earlier half of the nineteenth century. Stephen George Roszel (1770-1841), the father, was born in Loudoun County, Va., on April 8, 1770, and was converted at the age of sixteen. Starting out from Loudoun County in 1789 under the immediate direction of Bishop ASBURY, he proved to be excellently endowed for the Methodist itinerancy, both physically and mentally. For the first five years he traveled "from the lowest point on the Chesapeake to the summit of the Alleghenies." (Armstrong, p. 450) Being the oldest son and the main dependence of a large family, he then felt impelled by duty to retire from the effective ranks for twelve years, but continued preaching in and near his native county. He turned out to be an ardent controversialist, and defender of Methodist doctrines and usages. He went back into the traveling connection again in 1807, and was stationed at various times in BALTIMORE, GEORGETOWN, Frederick, ALEXANDRIA and PHILADELPHIA, and was presiding elder over the Baltimore and Potomac districts. One year he served as an agent for DICKINSON COLLEGE. He was a strong preacher and ready debater, and had great influence on the floor of the GENERAL CONFERENCE. He was a member of the first delegated General Conference and every succeeding one until his death. He died in LEESBURG, Va., May 14, 1841.

Stephen Asbury Roszel (1811-1852), the son of S. G. Roszel, was born in Georgetown, D.C., Feb. 18, 1811. He was converted when he was sixteen years of age in Middleburg, Va., and for a time tried law, but soon closed his law office. Then while teaching in Dickinson College, he felt a strong call to preach. He entered the regular work of the ministry in 1838, and for fourteen years "gave full proof of his calling." He was elected reporter for the General Conference of 1840, and his published synopsis of the debates there showed his fitness for that type of work. He was himself elected a delegate to the 1848 General Conference which met at PITTSBURGH. It is said that he was greatly gifted in the pulpit, "Reason, imagination and eloquence pouring forth with a force of a rapid torrent." He died at an untimely age, having preached to a densely crowded audience at Fairfax Courthouse in northern VIRGINIA on Feb. 8, 1852, and then drove or tried to drive sixteen miles for an evening appointment. The day was cold and he was in an open buggy and his biographer tersely observes: "Pneumonia did its work."

S. Samuel Roszel (1812-1882), another son of S. G. Roszel, was born in Philadelphia, on Oct. 20, 1812. He graduated at AUGUSTA COLLEGE, then Methodism's strong college in what was considered the West. When Dickinson College was placed under the joint supervision of the Baltimore and PHILADELPHIA CONFERENCES, Samuel Roszel was elected as one of the instructors, but shortly yielded to the call of the ministry. Admitted to the Baltimore Conference in 1838, he was thereafter appointed to important and responsible fields on circuits and stations. He was presiding elder of the East Baltimore District for a time. He is said to have resembled his distinguished father, not only in the vigor of his intellect and powerful preaching, but in a commanding figure. "His tall, well-knit frame, his majestic head and handsome features, his well-modulated voice, engaging manner and felicity of expression, attracted multitudes in city churches and on camp-grounds." (Armstrong, p. 448.)

At the crucial session of the Conference at Staunton, Va., in 1861, when war had broken out and Virginia was invaded, the up-until-then-undivided Baltimore Conference faced its most critical moment. Roszel stood by the action of the Southern majority in the division that then came. After the Civil War was over, when the "Old Baltimore," as the Southern members proudly called themselves, petitioned to join the M.E. Church, South, Roszel was one of the men who went to NEW ORLEANS in 1866 and with Eldridge R. Veitch, LEONIDAS ROSSER, Samuel Regester, JOHN S. MARTIN, NORVAL WILSON, William G. Eggleston and John Poisal proudly took their Conference into the M.E. Church, South.

RANDOLPH-MACON COLLEGE and other institutions conferred upon S. Samuel Roszel the D.D. degree, and he was five times elected to his General Conference. He died in Fauquier County, Va., on April 27, 1882.

J. E. Armstrong, Old Baltimore Conference. 1907.

M. Simpson, Cyclopaedia. 1878.

N. B. H.

ROUND. JOHN WESLEY divided the country into extensive areas called "rounds," into each of which he sent his preachers to preach and to supervise Methodist activities generally. Their work entailed long journeys, sometimes extending to hundreds of miles and also long absences from home. As Methodism flourished, more preachers were needed, and the rounds were reduced in extent. Gradually the word "circuit" came to be substituted for "round."

W. L. DOUGHTY

ROUND CHURCH. (See ALBERT'S CHAPEL.)

ROUQUET, JAMES (1730-1776), British Anglican, converted as a schoolboy under WHITEFIELD, came up to OXFORD in 1748 and was introduced to CHARLES WESLEY. Rouquet was headmaster of KINGSWOOD SCHOOL for a period, probably from 1751 to 1754. As curate of St.

Werburgh's, BRISTOL, he was instrumental, along with his rector Richard Symes, in establishing Evangelicalism in that city. It was he who introduced Captain THOMAS WEBB to the Methodists. In his will of 1768 (later superseded) JOHN WESLEY appointed Rouquet as a trustee for his manuscripts.

A. SKEVINGTON WOOD

ROWE, GEORGE EDWARDS (1858-1926), Australian church leader and executive, was born in England, received his theological training at Richmond College there, and then left for South AUSTRALIA, where he served in four circuits.

In 1893 he was appointed to Wesley Church, PERTH, Western Australia District, where he assumed the responsibilities of a district which covered the whole of the vast state. It was a crucial time for the church. Substantial gold discoveries had been made in distant desert areas and miners were pouring into the country from the other states of Australia and from overseas. The church was ill-prepared to meet this crisis, but in Rowe it had a man who could match the hour. He managed to secure ministers, missionaries and agents and stationed them in strategic positions throughout the goldfields. When epidemics swept through the railway camps and mining fields, he organized the Order of "the Sisters of the People" and sent out trained nurses to share the hardships of the miners and to minister to them in temporary hospitals of hessian and canvas.

In 1896 he established a mission to the Chinese in Perth and brought the Rev. Paul Soon Quong to Australia to take charge of it. He directed the pioneering work of the church for three years as superintendent of Home Missions, and served for one year as superintendent minister of the great mining town of Kalgoorlie.

Rowe administered the church so successfully during this period of growth that it emerged strong enough to govern its own affairs and it was fitting that in 1900 he should be elected as president of the first WESTERN AUSTRALIA CONFERENCE. He visited England and America in 1902, and returned to Perth until 1906, when he was transferred to the QUEENSLAND CONFERENCE as minister of the famous Albert Street Church, BRISBANE. While minister of Wesley Church, Perth, he built for the Wesley Church Trust "Queen's Building," an impressive suite of buildings in the heart of the city. He died suddenly in Brisbane in 1926, some years after the honorary D.D. degree had been conferred upon him.

AUSTRALIAN EDITORIAL COMMITTEE

ROWE, GILBERT THEODORE (1875-1960), American minister, editor, and seminary professor, was born in Rowan County, N. C., Sept. 10, 1875. He was educated at Trinity College (DUKE UNIVERSITY), A.B., 1895; and Temple University, S.T.D., 1905. Honorary degrees were conferred upon him by Duke—D.D. in 1914, Litt.D. in 1925. Rowe joined the WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE in 1896, and continued as a member of that conference all his life. For twenty years he was a distinguished pastor, holding the largest churches in his conference—Central, ASHEVILLE; Tryon Street (First), CHARLOTTE; Wesley Memorial, HIGH POINT; and Centenary, WINSTON-SALEM. His brethren elected him a delegate to the 1914 GENERAL CONFERENCE, and aside from

GILBERT T. ROWE

1918, sent him to every General Conference thereafter for the next thirty years, including the 1939 Uniting Conference. Usually he led his delegation, including 1944, the last time he was elected. In the 1930 General Conference at DALLAS, Rowe received ninety votes for bishop.

He was a delegate to the ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE in 1921 and 1931. He served as fraternal delegate from his denomination to the 1928 General Conference of the M.P. Church. He was a prominent editor, having charge of the North Carolina Christian Advocate for two years, and serving as Book Editor of the M.E. Church, South and editor of the Methodist Quarterly Review in NASHVILLE for seven years.

He was a revered teacher, first as professor of Greek for one year at HENDRIX COLLEGE in ARKANSAS when a young man, next as an exchange professor at DREW UNIVERSITY for a year in his sixties, and finally he filled with distinction the chair of Christian Doctrine in DUKE DIVINITY SCHOOL from 1928 until his retirement in 1946.

Rowe was the author of two books, The Meaning of Methodism and Reality in Religion. Always interested in education, he was a member of his annual conference board of education for forty years, and served for a long period on the General Board of EDUCATION of the M.E. Church, South, and on the board of trustees of GREENSBORO COLLEGE. A diligent student, a clear thinker, a theological liberal when many contemporaries were conservatives, a popular preacher, a beloved teacher, a forceful personality combined with a tolerant and friendly spirit, Rowe was one of the ablest and most respected leaders of his time in NORTH CAROLINA and Southern Methodism. He died Feb. 10, 1960 and was buried at DURHAM, N. C.

ALBEA GODBOLD

ROWE, PHOEBE (c. 1855-1898), an Anglo-Indian lady of great influence in Indian Methodism, was born at Allahabad, United Province, INDIA, of an Indian mother and a Scots father. Her mother died before Phoebe was two years old. She and her father were dedicated church members. A Baptist minister visiting the home led her to "a conscious experience of sins forgiven." Three years later her father died. DENNIS OSBORNE recommended her to ISABELLA THOBURN, who employed her and guided her further education.

Bishop THOBURN paid her high tribute, calling her "the founder of our village evangelism, . . . the most peerless saint I have ever known, . . . destined to live in our history." In 1882 she was recognized as a missionary of the WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY. When in 1887 it became necessary for one of the American missionaries, Miss Nickerson, to return to America, Miss Rowe was asked to accompany her. Miss Nickerson died en route.

Miss Rowe completed the voyage, addressed the annual meeting of the CINCINNATI Branch in a memorial service, and asked for someone to dedicate herself to take Miss Nickerson's place. Her appeal was answered by LUCY W. SULLIVAN, who became one of the great missionaries of her generation in India.

Miss Rowe was the first Indian woman elected to the Executive Board and was a charter member of the North West India Woman's Conference. She died of diphtheria in Naini Tal, on April 19, 1898.

B. T. Badley, Southern Asia. 1931.

J. N. Hollister, Southern Asia. 1956.

J. E. Scott, Southern Asia. 1906.

J. WASKOM PICKETT

ROWELL MINUTES. Jacob Rowell was one of JOHN WESLEY's preachers from 1749-84. In 1751, Wesley appointed him to IRELAND, where he remained for two years. Rowell was present at the first Irish Conference, held in Limerick on August 14 and 15, 1752, and took minutes of the proceedings. He did the same at the first Conference held in Leeds in May, 1753. These are known as the Rowell Minutes and are printed in the Appendix to Volume I of the Minutes of Conference published in 1862.

W. L. DOUGHTY

ROWLAND, JOSEPH MEDLEY (1880-1938), American pastor and ninth editor of what is now the Virginia Methodist Advocate, was a most versatile man. His talents brought him wide recognition as a strong preacher, a humorous lecturer, an author, a world-traveler, and an authority on the ways of life of mountain people. All this was in addition to his appreciated contributions during the seventeen years he edited the Advocate. So effective was he in so many directions, that it would be difficult to say in what specific area he made his greatest contribution. Unfortunately, his effective ministry came to a premature end on Aug. 17, 1938, when he was killed in an automobile accident while returning home from LAKE JUNALUSKA.

Rowland wrote three books, all widely read: Travels in the Old World provided helpful information about the Holy Land; and the other two volumes dealt with mountain people: Blue Ridge Breezes and The Hill Billies.

Journal of the Virginia Conference, 1939.

Richmond Christian Advocate, May 26, 1932.

GEORGE S. REAMEY

ROWLAND, THOMAS (c. 1790-1858), British Methodist, one of the leading WESLEYAN REFORMERS, became a Wes-layan itinerant in 1813. He was the only member of CONFERENCE to vote against the expulsion of SAMUEL WARREN in 1835, and himself ceased to be recognized as a Wesleyan minister in 1852. He later joined the ministry of the UNITED METHODIST FREE CHURCHES.

C. ERNEST LONG

ROWLANDS, DANIEL (1713-1790), Welsh Methodist, second son of the rector of Llangetho, Cardiganshire, WALES, where he became curate to his brother John, who had succeeded to the living on their father's death in 1731. Rowlands was ordained deacon in 1733, priest in 1735. About 1735 a sermon by GRIFFITH JONES of Llanddowror made a deep impression upon him, and he became an eloquent evangelical preacher. In 1737 HOWELL HARRIS, who had himself begun preaching (as a layman) in 1735, heard him and sought his acquaintance. The clergyman Rowlands then followed the example of the layman Harris in founding religious societies, the beginning of the WELSH CALVINISTIC METHODISTS. At the first general assembly or "association" of these societies in 1743, Rowlands was appointed deputy-moderator to act in the absence of GEORGE WHITEFIELD. This in effect meant that he became the leader of the movement. Tension with Harris followed, and an incompletely healed rupture in 1751. Because of his Methodist activities Rowlands was suspended by his bishop in 1763 from the exercise of his functions as a clergyman of the Church of England. He continued to minister in a new building erected for him at Llangetho, where he died Oct. 16, 1790.

Dictionary of National Biography.

Journal of the Calvinistic Methodist Historical Society, Vol. XII, pp. 41-64, June 1927.

W. Williams, Welsh Calvinistic Methodism. 1884.

FRANK BAKER

ROWSE, WILLIAM (1835-1899), NEW ZEALAND minister, was born in Cornwall, England. When twenty-three, he was accepted as a minister on probation, and at the end of the same year came to New Zealand.

After serving as a probationer in Canterbury and AUCKLAND he was appointed in 1863 to the Maori Mission. For fifteen years he served at Waima in North Auckland. By boat and by horseback he covered a wide circuit. During that time village schools were opened; teachers trained; churches built; young men sent out as local preachers; and a people sunk in the depths of degradation through liquor were won from its cruel bondage.

For the sake of his family, Rowse returned to circuit work in 1878 and died in Greytown on July 15, 1899. His was a devoted life, free from all self-advertisement, and many were the people he won to faith in goodness and in God.

W. Morley, New Zealand. 1900. WILLIAM T. BLIGHT

ROYAL OAK, MICHIGAN, U.S.A. First Church, begun as a "preaching place in a six-point circuit," is the parent of seven adjacent Methodist churches in the expanding suburbs of metropolitan DETROIT.

This church was organized in 1838, the town's first permanent church organization, although itinerant Methodist ministers had preached under the trees or in a vacant store room before that date. J. M. ARNOLD was one of the early ministers.

The first church building, of white frame with an attractive cupola, was completed in 1843 on the present site at a cost of $1,500. A parsonage was erected forty years later at a cost of $1,250, when Eugene Yager was the pastor.

In 1890 the first church was replaced by a brick structure at a cost of $5,000, plus much donated labor. The brick was donated by Edwin Starr, one of the members, from his own kiln. This served until the first unit of the present structure was built in 1918 at a cost of $90,000, under the pastorate of OSCAR THOMAS OLSON.

In 1928 the present church building was completed under the pastorate of Eugene Miles Moore, at a cost of $155,000. Since then, reconstruction and renovation have produced a plant valued at $1,346,090, with a sanctuary seating 875 and a four-level educational complex. The church presently underwrites a benevolence budget of $42,000.

The seven churches which First Church has sponsored are: St. John's and Campbell Memorial in Royal Oak; Berkeley Church; Hazel Park Church; Ferndale Church; Faith Church in Oak Park; and Madison in Madison Heights.

The membership includes many prominent citizens, among whom are several professors at Wayne State University, a member of Congress, three judges, numerous industrialists and public school personnel. In 1970 the church reported a membership of 2,811.

General Minutes.

MARSHALL A. WHEATLEY

RUBLE, JOHN H. (1811-1836), pioneer American circuit rider, was born in Washington County, Tenn. Converted under CAMP MEETING influences, he became a CLASS LEADER of the M.E. Church. Migrating to ILLINOIS, he received a preaching license Nov. 25, 1832, from Jacksonville Circuit, Sangamon District. Removing again to MISSOURI, Ruble was employed by William Ketron, Cape Girardeau District presiding elder, to travel Bellevue Circuit with Nathaniel Talbott. After three months he was sent to White River Circuit in ARKANSAS. He joined the MISSOURI CONFERENCE on trial, Sept. 4, 1833, and was sent back to the White River country. His next work was at Lexington, Mo. In 1835 he was admitted into full connection, ordained a deacon, and appointed to Burlington Circuit, St. LOUIS District.

Ruble, the first Methodist preacher to be married in Iowa, took as his wife Diana Bowen in Burlington, in February 1836, and they began living in Mt. Pleasant, a hamlet of three houses, where he preached the first sermon. He was authorized to perform marriage rites by William R. Ross, Des Moines County Clerk, Michigan Territory, on Oct. 31, 1835.

Taken with a fever at Sullivan Ross's home in Burlington, Ia., Ruble died there April 14, 1836, the first Methodist itinerant to die in Iowa. The place of his burial at Mt. Pleasant is marked by a stone monument, erected about 1860 and restored in 1934.

Annals of Iowa, April 1936.

A. W. Haines, Makers of Iowa Methodism. 1900.

MARTIN L. GREER

RIDDLE, THOMAS (1839-1909), British educator, was born at Trowbridge, Wiltshire, Nov. 15, 1839. The son of a factory worker, he trained as a teacher, and in 1864 was appointed headmaster of the BIBLE CHRISTIAN School, SHEBBEAR COLLEGE, then very small. He had greatly raised the academic standing of the school by the time of his retirement in 1909. He died on Oct. 17, 1909.

JOHN KENT

RUDISILL, ABRAHAM WEHRLEY (1846-1889), was born in Hanover, Pa. He joined the BALTIMORE CONFERENCE in 1870 and held various appointments in MARYLAND, including presiding elder of the West Baltimore District. In 1884 he arrived in INDIA as a missionary of the M.E. Church.

As a layman, Rudisill had been a practical printer. As presiding elder of the Madras District, he felt the need of reading material for church members and for the unconverted. He obtained a boy's press which would print a leaflet four by six inches, and a small font of Tamil type. With this meager equipment, he began printing in a small room near the parsonage.

Mrs. Rudisill started a Tamil edition of The Woman's Friend, and her husband published it. In a few years Rudisill was superintendent of a publishing house which he then named for his wife, the Mary M. Rudisill Publishing House. Soon known as the Methodist Publishing House, it produced literature for the blind in Kanarese, Tamil, Telugu, and English. When publishing houses multiplied and competition became severe, the property was sold; and after accumulated debts had been paid, the remaining resources and responsibilities were transferred to the Methodist Publishing House of LUCKNOW.

Mrs. Rudisill died in 1889 and Rudisill went back to America in poor health. He died there a few months later.

J. WASKOM PICKETT

RUGG, EARLE MELVIN (1888-1952), American missionary to INDIA, was born at Farmington, N. Y., on April 15, 1888. He was educated at Rochester University (A.B., 1913); BOSTON UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY (S.T.B., 1916); SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY (M.Sc., in Education, 1940); and received an honorary D.D. from SOUTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY in 1948. He married Ellen Martha Foote on Sept. 7, 1915. She was born in Naini Tal, India, of missionary parents, and had graduated from Rochester University in 1913 with a B.A. in mathematics. Their children were Melvin, Jean, Grace (died, 1959, following an automobile accident), and Harold.

In 1916 Earle and Ellen Rugg arrived in India under appointment to Ajmere, Rajputana, for general mission work. Later he became principal of Boys High School, Ajmere. In 1926 he was principal of the Boys' School, Raiwind, Punjab. He faced difficulties of the depression with a restricted budget and necessary retrenchments. He also gave notable service as the director of Raiwind Christian Institute where he combined skill as a churchman and evangelist; also as educator with results recognized as valuable by the government officials, by church officers, and by humble neglected victims of an impoverished economy.

Rugg's methods of teaching trades and improving farm procedures were adopted as a model by many private and governmental schools. He assisted the Technical Services Association in devising better spinning wheels and pumps, and helped organize more remunerative employment for women. Both Earle and Ellen Rugg served as teachers.

High standards of scholarship and efficiency were developed.

His other services were as editor of the magazine Christian Education for several years; Methodist representative of the Round Table Conference Committee for Church Union; valued member of the Punjab Christian Council, which became the West Pakistan Christian Council after 1947 when PAKISTAN was formed. As chairman of the Committee on High Schools, he helped the schools through the difficulties of the first years of Pakistan independence. Rugg was a delegate to the M.E. GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1932; and to the CENTRAL CONFERENCE in 1928 and 1936.

He was elected president of the Christian Council in 1952, a short time before his tragic death in Lahore Hospital following a refrigerator explosion accident in Raiwind. The Ruggs served continuously in Raiwind except for their several furloughs from 1926 to 1952.

CLEMENT D. ROCKEY

ALEJANDRO RUIZ

RUIZ MUNOZ, ALEJANDRO (1921-), bishop of The Methodist Church of Mexico, was born in San Luis Potosi, June 31, 1921. His early preparation was in the field of commerce. He graduated from the Union Theological Seminary in Mexico City and did postgraduate work for one year at SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIVERSITY School of Theology in Dallas, Tex. He married Ruth Guerra, the daughter of Bishop ELEAZAR GUERRA, and they are the parents of five children.

As a member of the intermediate department of the Gante Street Church in Mexico City, Alejandro Ruiz was sent by his pastor, Epigmenio Velasco, to help lead a small mission in a rural congregation. There he felt the call to the ministry, an experience which was strengthened later as he witnessed the faith and joy of his dying pastor in the hospital.

He entered the conference in 1943, was ordained DEACON in 1945, and ELDER in 1948 by Bishop Guerra. He held charges at Balderas, 1943-44, Peralvillo, 1945-46, Xalostoc, 1948-49, Aztecas, 1949-50, and Balderas, 1951-54. He was elected executive secretary of Christian Education, 1955-62.

He was first elected bishop (Iglesia Metodista de Mexico) for the period 1963-66; and subsequently at the General Conference held in Monterrey, September 1966, he was re-elected and again at the Mexico City General Conference, July 19-26, 1970 re-elected for the quadrennium beginning then.

Bishop Ruiz is a young, energetic and understanding leader. He is an excellent speaker, a good organizer, and a most efficient worker with young people. His aim is to help the church become self-supporting and to find the place in which each member of the conference can render the best service to the cause.

GUSTAVO A. VELASCO G.

RULE, WILLIAM HARRIS (1802-1890), British Methodist, born at Penrhyn, Cornwall, Nov. 15, 1802. After early experiments as a portrait painter and a school teacher, in 1826 he entered the Wesleyan Methodist ministry, and became an ardent student. He served the Wesleyan METHODIST MISSIONARY SOCIETY in Malta (1827), St. Vincent (1827-31), and GIBRALTAR (1832-1841), which latter place he used as a stepping-stone for enthusiastic and partially successful attempts at missionary work among Roman Catholics in Spain. The following twenty-six years of a vigorous active ministry in England included five years as CONNEXIONAL EDITOR (1851-57) and eight years in pioneer chaplaincy work among Wesleyan soldiers at Aldershot (1857-65). Rule is said to have mastered ten languages, and was a prolific writer, his chief work being a monumental History of the Inquisition (1868). His writings on Methodism included A Memoir of a Mission to Gibraltar and Spain (1844), An Account of the Establishment of Wesleyan Methodism in the British Army (1883), and Recollections of my life and work at home and abroad in connection with the Wesleyan Methodist Conference (1886). In 1854 he was awarded the D.D. by DICKINSON COLLEGE. He died Sept. 25, 1890.

Dictionary of National Biography.

Findlay and Holdsworth, Wesleyan Meth. Miss. Soc., iv, 1922.

FRANK BAKER

RULES OF THE METHODISTS, in eighteenth-century England. On the founding of the early Methodist societies, JOHN WESLEY drew up his Nature, Design and General Rules of the United Societies in London, Bristol, Kingswood and Newcastle upon Tyne (first edition, John Gooding on the Side, Newcastle upon Tyne, 1743). He subsequently issued rules which are to be found as follows in Wesley's Works (T. Jackson's third edition): BANDS (viii, 272); CLASS LEADERS (viii, 301); HELPERS (viii, 309); STEWARDS (viii, 262); preachers and Preachers' Fund (viii, 326, 317); congregational singing (viii, 318; xiv, 346). For Rules of the FETTER LANE society (May 1, 1738), see Wesley's Journal (i, 458). (See also GENERAL RULES.)

JOHN BOWMER

RUNDLE, ROBERT TERRILL (1811-1896), English missionary to the Indians of the Hudson's Bay Territory, was born in Nylor, Cornwall, England, June 18, 1811, the third son of Robert and Grace Rundle, and grandson of the prominent Methodist lay evangelist, WILLIAM CARVOSO.

In 1839, the Hudson's Bay Company reached an agreement with the WESLEYAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY in England to send the first party of missionaries into the area west of the Red River settlement of British North America. JAMES EVANS, an experienced missionary in Upper Canada, was chosen as the superintendent; and three young men, Rundle, Mason and Barnley, were recruited in England to serve with him.

After sailing to New York in April 1840, they journeyed to Montreal and were carried by the company canoes to their destinations, Barnley to Moose Factory, Mason to Lac la Pluie, and Rundle to Fort Edmonton. Since Evans failed to meet the brigade at Sault Ste. Marie, Rundle remained at Norway House, at the north end of Lake Winnipeg, until Evans' arrival. His first and highly successful missionary activity was among the Cree Indians of the Norway House region. It required from September 7 to October 17 for the company canoes to fight their way up the current of the North Saskatchewan to Fort Edmonton, the scene of eight years' arduous and often unrewarding labor.

While Rundle's room at the fort was constantly available, he travelled regularly to the forts at Rocky Mountain House in the south, Lesser Slave Lake to the north, Fort Pitt to the east, and to countless encampments of Indians—thousands of miles by horseback, cariole, canoe, and on foot. Perhaps the most impressive single experience began at Rocky Mountain House Fort in 1841. Having long dreaded an encounter with the famed Blackfoot tribe, he met them unexpectedly and was received with great warmth and affection. He went alone with them to their camps and was escorted back to Fort Edmonton by a Blackfoot warrior.

He introduced the Cree Syllabic recently invented by James Evans, taught singing, and conducted classes wherever he went. While evangelism was his primary purpose, he soon became oppressed by the recurrent starvation of the Indian peoples and their entire lack of agriculture. After repeated experiments with small gardens, he obtained the assistance of Benjamin Sinclair, a native Swamp Cree from Norway House, to assist in the formation of an agricultural settlement on the shore of Pigeon Lake in 1847, the first such attempt in the western region. Unfortunately his wrist was broken in a fall before Sinclair arrived, and in the summer of 1848 he was forced to return to England for medical care.

Rundle did not return, nor was he replaced from England. He married, served a succession of circuits until his superannuation in 1887; and died in 1896.

The importance of Rundle's work was obscured for many by the arrival of Roman Catholic missionaries in 1842 with consequent rivalry and confusion, by the disturbance surrounding the work of James Evans and Evans' death in 1846, by Rundle's misfortune and return to England in 1848, and by the transfer from English to Canadian control in 1854.

Recognition and honor were accorded to him as his work came to be seen in longer perspective. In the same year that David Livingstone was making his first African journey, Rundle was making the first missionary approach to the western tribes. He was accepted warmly by the Blackfoot and Stoney, Assiniboine and Cree, and they remembered him. Early travelers such as artist Paul Kane and the Earl of Southesk, saw the effects of his work and eulogized him in their writings. J. Hector of the Palliser Expedition was successful in having a mountain named in his honor. All succeeding missionaries found a door opened and a path prepared toward Christian understanding and a successful agriculture because Robert Terrill Rundle had been there before them.

Records of the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society.
United Church of Canada, Rundle in Alberta (Toronto: U.C.P.H., 1940).
C. M. HUTCHINSON

RUPERT, HOOVER. (See JUDICIAL COUNCIL.)

E. GORDON RUPP

RUPP, E. GORDON (1910-), British church historian, was born in London Jan. 7, 1910; he entered the ministry of the Methodist Church in 1934 and studied at Wesley House, CAMBRIDGE. After a period of circuit work at Chislehurst in Kent (1938-46), he returned to Wesley House as assistant to R. NEWTON FLEW, who was president in 1946-47. Rupp was appointed church history tutor at Richmond Theological College in 1947, and stayed there until 1952, when he went to Cambridge to lecture on Reformation history. In 1956 he was appointed the first professor in church history at Manchester University, where he remained until 1967, when he returned once more to Wesley House, Cambridge, this time as principal. He was president of the Methodist CONFERENCE in 1968.

Rupp holds a Doctorate of Divinity from Cambridge University, and an honorary D.D. from Aberdeen University. He is a Reformation scholar, having specialized in the life and writings of Martin Luther. He has taken a prominent part in the ecumenical movement, and has been one of the principal Methodist advocates of union between the Methodist Church in Britain and the Church of England.

Rupp's publications include Martin Luther, Hitler's Cause or Cure? (1945), a book written in reply to the assertion that Luther was Hitler's spiritual ancestor; Studies in the Making of the English Protestant Tradition: Mainly in the Reign of Henry VIII (1947); Luther's Progress to the Diet of Worms (1951); Principalities and Powers (1952); The Righteousness of God (1953), originally the Birkbeck lectures; Thomas Jackson, Meth- odist Patriarch, the annual lecture of the WESLEYAN HISTORICAL SOCIETY for 1954; Consideration Reconsidered (1964), a contribution to the Anglican-Methodist debate. He has been the editor (with RUPERT E. DAVIS) of A History of the Methodist Church in Great Britain, the first volume of which was published in 1965, and for which he wrote a valuable introductory essay. An earlier work on the same subject, "Methodism in Relation to the Protestant Tradition," was delivered at the ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE of 1951.

PETER STEPHENS

RUSBY, HELEN B., missionary to BOLIVIA, worked in the country from 1919 to 1956, returning for six months a few years later. She taught at the American Institute (now COLEGIO EVANGELICO METODISTA) in La Paz and was housemother to the smaller boys. Among them were a future president and vice-president of Bolivia and other prominent citizens. Among her dormitory boys were an ambassador to London, several prominent businessmen, a professor of Spanish, and some boys whom she indirectly influenced to go into the ministry. When Miss Rusby retired in 1956 the Bolivian government gave her the "Condor" award for her influence upon Bolivian boys. She is one of six or seven Methodist missionaries to receive this prize.

The Methodist Church in Bolivia, published in English and Spanish by the Historical Committee of The Methodist Church in Bolivia, 1961.
NATALIE BARBER

RUSH, CHRISTOPHER (1777-1873), the second superintendent of the A.M.E. ZION CHURCH, was born in Craven County, N. C., Feb. 4, 1777. He was converted at the age of sixteen. While it is not known whether he was "manumitted or purchased" through his own industry or the benevolence of friends, he himself states that he came to NEW YORK in 1798, joining the A.M.E. Zion Church in 1803. In 1815 he was licensed to preach. He was ordained DEACON and ELDER on the same day in 1822. In 1828 he was elected superintendent and is supposed to have served four years "with Varick in this position." It appears that he served the church twenty years following the death of Superintendent JAMES VARICK. There is a discrepancy here in that Varick is listed as the first superintendent from 1822-27. Bishop Singleton T. Jones gives the information listed above in which Rush is said to have served four years with Varick. This, too, is a little amiss for Rush is said to have lost his sight in 1852, which would mean that he served twenty-six years or twenty-eight in all. Bishop J. W. HOOD states that he served twenty-four years. Whether Varick failed of re-election in 1828 or died prior to the General Conference of that date is a moot question. Hood states that he died shortly before that Conference while Flood carried the account that Varick and Rush shared the superintendent's honors for four years.

Again there is a difference of opinion on the death of Superintendent Rush. Flood states that he died July 6, 1873 in his ninety-sixth year while the Official Directory issued by J. Harvey Anderson puts his death a year earlier. Supposing that he lost his eyesight in 1852, according to Flood the grand old man lived twenty-one years in darkness, part of the time confined to his room. He maintained a keen mind to the last. He is buried in Cypress Hill Cemetery in Brooklyn, N. Y.

One aspect of Father Rush's life which is mainly overlooked is his effort to further education. It was he who secured the property for the planned school in Essex County, N. Y. While this effort failed it early showed the interest of the church leaders in higher education.

D. H. Bradley, A.M.E. Zion Church. 1956.

J. W. Hood, One Hundred Years. 1985.

J. J. Moore, History (AMEZ). 1884.

C. Rush, Short Account. 1843.

DAVID H. BRADLEY

RUSLING, JOSEPH (1788-1839), American minister noted for his pulpit oratory and executive ability, was born near Epworth, England, May 12, 1788. He came to the United States with his parents in 1791, and joined the M.E. Church in 1808. In 1814 he joined the PHILADELPHIA CONFERENCE on trial, and leaping into almost immediate prominence, filled important appointments in TRENTON, PHILADELPHIA and WILMINGTON. He suffered from a pulmonary disorder, however, and leaving the pastorate, founded the first Methodist Book Store in Philadelphia in 1829, employing as a clerk ABEL STEVENS who later became the outstanding Methodist historian of the nineteenth century. Rusling wrote several small volumes of poetry, hymns and sermons. He died July 6, 1839.

Minutes of the Annual Conferences, Vol. III.

M. Simpson, Cyclopaedia. 1878. FREDERICK E. MASER

RUSSEL, JOHN (1799-1870), American United Brethren circuit rider, pastor, administrator and bishop, was born March 18, 1799 in the Pipe Creek region of western MARYLAND. His parents were Jacob and Amelia (Smith) Russel. His paternal grandfather arrived in America from GERMANY on the ship Patience, Sept. 17, 1738.

PHILIP W. OTTERBEIN made occasional visits to the Pipe Creek settlement and rendered limited pastoral service. Through him the Russells became identified with the revival movement of the late 1700's and early 1800's. In 1818 John Russel was licensed as an exhorter in the Church of the UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST and traveled a Virginia circuit; in 1819 he was formally licensed and was sent to OHIO where he traveled a circuit spread over six counties. To prevent being lost in the forests he carried a hatchet in his saddlebags for the purpose of blazing trails. He was ordained in 1822 and in 1833, with Jonathan and George Dresbach, established the first printing plant of the United Brethren, and launched the Religious Telescope, the official organ of the denomination. When financial troubles beset the institution he loaned large sums of money at little or no interest to keep it from bankruptcy.

In 1838 John Russel was called to the pastorate of the OTTERBEIN CHURCH in BALTIMORE, serving 1838-41, and again 1851-54. In the interim between pastorates and afterward he served as presiding elder, publishing agent, and bishop. He was elected to serve in eight sessions of the GENERAL CONFERENCE. The General Conference of 1845 elected him bishop for four years. Not being re-elected in 1849, he returned to his conference. Then in 1857 he was re-elected for an additional four years.

Largely self-educated, Russel became an editor of German literature and the compiler of a German hymnal. As a pulpit orator and in public debate he had few equals.

In the days when his denomination had no theological seminary, after his retirement to his farm near Keedysville, Md., he conducted seminars for ministerial students. The student body, at one time numbering fourteen, worked on the farm in the mornings for room and board, and were taught by Russel in the afternoons. His spacious home was used as a hospital during the Civil War following the battle of Antietam.

Mrs. Russel, who was a Miss Harmon, entered fully into the life and labors of her minister husband. In addition to her family and church duties, she made the bishop's clothing. Russel himself made his own shoes. At his death Dec. 21, 1870, near Keedysville, it was found that he had willed large sums of money for the education of young ministers.

Paul E. Holdcraft, History of the Pennsylvania Conference. Fayetteville, Pa.: Craft Press, 1938.

Koontz and Roush, The Bishops. 1950. PAUL E. HOLDCRAFT

RUSSELL, CHARLES LEE (1886-1948), twenty-first bishop of the C.M.E. CHURCH, was born on Sept. 22, 1886, in Campbell, Clark County, Ala. He received an A.B. degree from Frelinghusen College, the Bachelor of Hebrew and S.T.B. degrees from Veshiva College, and an M.A. degree from Dropsie University for Hebrew and Cognate Learnings in PHILADELPHIA. He served as parish minister and presiding elder in ALABAMA, FLORIDA, GEORGIA, KENTUCKY, and WASHINGTON, D.C. He was the author of several periodicals, books, and pamphlets, especially Light From the Talmud. At the General Conference in 1938, he was elected to the office of bishop. As a bishop he made a significant contribution in beginning a rehabilitation and expansion campaign in his episcopal area. He died on Feb. 8, 1948, and was buried in Washington, D.C.

Harris and Patterson, C.M.E. Church. 1965. RALPH G. GAY

RUSSELL, ELIZABETH HENRY (1749-1825), or "Madam Russell," pioneer American Methodist in the Holston area of TENNESSEE and VIRGINIA, was born in Hanover County, Va., July 10, 1749. In 1776 she married Colonel William Campbell, a hero of the battle of King's Mountain, who died in 1781. In 1783 she married General William Russell of Aspenvale, Va., and soon thereafter they settled at Saltville, or "the Salt Lick," where he engaged in the manufacture of salt.

In 1788 Asbury held the first conference west of the Alleghenies at the home of Stephen Keywood near Saltville. During that conference both General and Mrs. Russell were converted, and she became "probably more eminent in the Methodist pioneer history of America than any other woman." The General died in 1793 and Madam Russell moved to a spacious log house near Abingdon, Va. There she had a "prophet's chamber" where preachers were entertained, and she kept in the house a movable pulpit for preaching services.

When James Madison was a candidate for president of the United States he visited General Francis Preston, son-in-law of Mrs. Russell, at Saltville. Madison called on Madam Russell and she prayed for him as the prospective head of the nation. He is reported to have said, "I have heard all the first orators of America, but I never heard any eloquence as great as that prayer of Mrs. Russell."

Madam Russell was a friend of ASBURY and entertained him in her home on several occasions. She died March 18, 1825, and was buried at Aspenvale at her own request. The church at Saltville is called the Madam Russell Memorial Church.

Clyde E. Lundy, Holston Horizons. Bristol, Tenn.: Holston Conference Inter-Board Council, 1947.

I. P. Martin, Holston. 1945.

R. N. Price, Holston. 1903-13.

ELMER T. CLARK

RUSSELLVILLE, KENTUCKY, U.S.A. The Methodist Temple is one of the oldest and most revered churches of KENTUCKY, the sanctuary being widely known for its beautiful stained glass windows. REDFORD lists only nine cities in Kentucky in 1811 in which Methodist churches had then been organized and Russellville was one of them. The first society was organized there in 1808 with ten charter members. They met in a frame house on the corner of Spring and Fourth Streets for about ten years, and the Methodists were the first organized church in this city. In 1818 they erected a church building on the corner of Eighth and Summer Streets.

The congregation grew slowly, but under the spiritual leadership of John Johnson, one of the more forceful early preachers, it grew to twenty-one members. His successor was Edward Stevenson, later president of Logan College. Under his ministry Russellville was detached from a circuit and became a station.

In 1854 the present building was erected under the pastorate of Thomas Bottomly. Of red brick, this building was remodeled in 1917. In 1962 the Inez Carr Crawford Educational Building was erected under the pastorate of Robert G. Shaver.

One of the noted windows of the church is "The Good Shepherd," given by the General Board of Church Extension of the M.E. Church, South in loving memory of DAVID MORTON, a native of Russellville and the founder and first secretary of the Church Extension Program of that denomination. Two of the Temples' former pastors, H. H. KAVANAUGH and HENRY C. MORRISON were elected to the episcopacy.

On Aug. 3, 1958, the Temple observed its Sesquicentennial with Bishop W. T. WATKINS as the speaker. On Oct. 31, 1965, another special celebration took place commemorating the life of JOHN LITTLE JOHN, pioneer preacher in VIRGINIA and Kentucky, who lies buried in a little cemetery on Second Street in Russellville. Bishop Roy H. SHORT unveiled a marker to Littlejohn in the town square.

The 1970 church membership was 577 and the total value of the church property was approximately $400,000.

General Minutes, UMC, 1970.

A. H. Redford, Kentucky. 1868-70.

ROBERT G. SHAVER

RUSSIA. When men from FINLAND let their Macedonian cry be heard in the Swedish Conference in session in STOCKHOLM in 1874, the presiding bishop, WILLIAM L. HARRIS, said that he "saw the finger of God point towards Finland and Russia." Ten years later B. A. CARLSON was appointed to HELSINKI, the capital of Finland. As soon as possible he also visited St. Petersburg, then the capital of the Russian Empire, of which Finland was a part. After the annual conference in 1889 Bishop C. H. FOWLER and Carlson visited the Russian capital and rented a house at Vasilii Ostroff. In November of that year the first Methodist congregation in St. Petersburg was organized with seven members. The work was carried on by preachers and laymen from Finland—one of them, Hjalmar Salmi, mastered three languages: Finnish, Russian, and Swedish. He became the best helper GEORGE A. SIMONS could get. Simons was sent from the United States by Bishop WILLIAM BURT and appointed superintendent for Finland and Russia, with special direction to carry on and develop the work among the Russians and throughout the whole of that vast empire, which at that time numbered 116,000,000 inhabitants. These were "widening horizons" indeed.

During the following ten years, however, the Methodist work in Russia was concentrated in St. Petersburg, the district of Ingria (Ingermanland) west of that city, where the people were Finnish-speaking, and the BALTIC STATES—besides two congregations in far-off Siberia. When the work in Finland was organized as an annual conference in 1911, Russia became a "mission," and so was the work in the Baltic States until the Baltic and Slavic Missions Conference was organized in 1924.

In 1911 there were nineteen places mentioned in the appointments, eight however "to be supplied." In 1920 there were only six pastors in the Russia Mission. The First World War had claimed its victims, and so did the Russian Revolution, which began in 1917.

In the beginning the Russian Revolution was hailed as the dawn of liberty, but soon it changed its face. In October 1918, Simons was compelled to leave Russia. ANNA EKLUND, "Sister Anna of Petrograd," a Finnish DEACONESS, stayed as long as possible. She watched over the church property and the pastors' home. She was all to the little fighting congregation until she herself had to leave and take her refuge in ESTONIA and then in Finland. She had come to St. Petersburg in 1907 and organized a deaconess institution, instructed a group of young women to be nurses, and was the leader of a very great and important help work during the First World War and the hard years following.

In 1922 and 1923 Bishop JOHN L. NUELSEN paid short visits to Russia. His presence caused some sensation and great expectations, reflected in the volume of World Service of the M.E. Church, published in 1923. As a consequence some of the bishops and leading men were invited to Moscow by a reform movement within the Russian Orthodox Church, asking them to help in organizing a democratic living church. Out of it however came nothing.

After many difficulties RAYMOND J. WADE, in 1928 had been assigned as Bishop of Northern Europe, got a visa to Russia, and there held what appeared to be the last annual conference of the Russian Mission. This was in 1939 Bishop Wade writes, "It lasted all night. I baptized four children and married two couples. No one dared act as Secretary," states the bishop in a letter. The situation was such that the bishop advised the few remaining Methodists to join the Baptists or other evangelical group, "which they did. So Methodism as such went out of existence in Russia."

R. E. Diffendorfer, World Service. 1923.

B. A. Carlson, "The Rising and Extension of the M.E. Church in Finland." Ms., Stockholm, 1909.

K. J. Hurtig, Metodismen i Finland. 1925.

Journal of the European Central Conference, ME, 1922.

L. A. Marshall, American Pioneer in Russia. 1928.

Minutes of the Central Conference of Europe, ME, 1911.

Minutes of Finland Conference, 1908-23.

Minutes of the Finland and St. Petersburg Mission Conference, 1908.

MANSFIELD HURTIG

RUST COLLEGE, Holly Springs, Mississippi, was founded in 1866 by the FREEDMAN'S AID SOCIETY of the M. E. Church. From its founding until the late 1930's, work was offered in elementary, secondary, and higher education. Then elementary and secondary education was discontinued in order to obtain provisional approval by the regional accrediting association. Chartered in 1870 as Shaw University, the college changed its name in 1890 to honor Richard S. Rust, secretary of the Freedman's Aid Society.

The education of Negro teachers for the public schools of MISSISSIPPI has received continuing special attention at Rust College. Its alumni include some of the church's ablest leaders. The institution is accredited by the Mississippi State Department of Education. Degrees offered are the B.A. and B.S. The governing board has twenty-one members elected by the board, and three ex officio. The ownership of the college is vested with the Board of Education of The United Methodist Church.

JOHN O. GROSS

RUSTIN, JOHN WALLACE (1899-), American preacher and city pastor, was born at Glenville, Ga., on Sept. 3, 1899. His father was James Miller Rustin and his mother Tallulah Augusta (Sasser) Rustin. He was educated at EMORY UNIVERSITY, receiving his A.M. at Columbia in 1932, an honorary D.D. degree from Emory in 1940 and LL.D. from Norfolk College in 1936. His wife was Jessie Colt Watts and they have a son and two daughters.

He was ordained in the Methodist ministry at the VIRGINIA CONFERENCE of 1922, and after serving in Danville, 1922-27; Trinity Church, Salisbury, 1928-31; and Ghent Church, NORFOLK, 1931-36, he was stationed at Mount Vernon Place, WASHINGTON, D.C., where he served from 1936-50. He transferred to the TENNESSEE CONFERENCE and was stationed at Belmont Church, NASHVILLE, 1950-59, and then at Broad Street, Kingsport, 1959-64. He was a member of the Board of Directors of the Chinese Community Church in Washington, the Department of Social Relations, president of the Washington Federation of Churches, vice-president of the Committee of the Religious Life of the Nation's Capital, and served on the National Christian Mission, on the Department of Church and Economic Life of the FEDERAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES, and is a trustee of SCARRITT COLLEGE, Nashville, Tenn. He retired in 1964 and is a visiting professor at the CANDLER SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY, Emory University, Atlanta, Ga.

Clark and Stafford, Who's Who in Methodism. 1952. N. B. H.

RUTER, CALVIN (1794-1859), American preacher, was born in Bradford, Orange Co., Vt., on March 15, 1794. He emigrated with his parents to OHIO. In 1817 he was received into the OHIO CONFERENCE of the M.E. Church. In 1820 he transferred to the MISSOURI CONFERENCE, which then embraced nearly all of INDIANA and the states of ILLINOIS and MISSOURI. In 1832 the INDIANA CONFERENCE was organized and Calvin Ruter was elected secretary. He was re-elected to this office for six consecutive years. At this conference he was appointed with

ALLEN WILEY and James Armstrong to a committee to consider the building of a conference seminary. He was a founder of Indiana Asbury (later to be DEPAUW UNIVERSITY) and served as a trustee for many years. He was elected five times as a delegate to GENERAL CONFERENCE. He died at Patriot, Ind., on June 11, 1859.

F. C. Holliday, Indiana. 1873.

ROBERT S. CHAFEE

MARTIN RUTER

RUTER, MARTIN (1785-1838), versatile and active American educator and pioneer missionary to Texas, was born at Charlton, Mass., on April 3, 1785. From boyhood he manifested an unusual thirst for knowledge and this marked him all his life. He was converted and united with the M. E. Church in 1799, and in 1801 was admitted into the NEW YORK CONFERENCE, having traveled a portion of the previous year in New England under JOHN BRODHEAD. In 1804 he was stationed in Montreal, CANADA, as this was before the War of 1812, which effectually, —but by amicable mutual agreement—later divided American Methodism on the Canadian-United States border.

The following year Ruter returned to New England and in 1809 was appointed to the NEW HAMPSHIRE district where he filled a number of prominent appointments. In 1818, his educational ability being recognized, he was put in charge of the New Market Wesleyan Academy, and this subsequently was removed to WILBRAHAM, Mass. In 1820 the GENERAL CONFERENCE elected him BOOK AGENT to found and conduct the book business at Cincinnati, just at that time becoming the western center of the BOOK CONCERN. He was reelected BOOK AGENT again in 1824, but before his term of service expired, he was appointed president of AUGUSTA COLLEGE, in KENTUCKY, which position he accepted in 1828, and remained in charge of that college until August 1832. Wishing to get back into the itinerant ranks, he was transferred and stationed as pastor in the city of PITTSBURGH. However, when ALLEGHENY COLLEGE at Meadville, Pa., was accepted by the Conference in 1833, Ruter was unanimously selected as its president.

At the General Conference of the M. E. Church in Cincinnati in May 1836, the news of the decisive battle of San Jacinto, where TEXAS won its independence, came while the Conference was in session. The appeal which had been offered in insistency from the Methodists in Texas that ministers be sent there was felt by Ruter, who offered himself on the spot as a missionary to Texas. A good deal of discussion ensued among the leaders of the Church about the advisability of sending someone there, but when they became convinced that the freedom of Texas, then a republic under its Lone Star flag, was "measurably secure" and that they were not invading a forbidden land, Ruter obtained his commission to go—not, however, until the next year when Bishop HEDDING appointed him "superintendent of the Texas Mission." ROBERT ALEXANDER of the MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE and LITTLETON FOWLER of the TENNESSEE CONFERENCE were selected to go with Ruter to "the foreign field," as Texas was then called. The vast Texas Methodism of today cherishes the names of Ruter, Alexander and Fowler as their founding fathers.

Ruter left his family, whom he was destined never to see again, at New Albany, Ind., and fearful of yellow fever then raging in NEW ORLEANS, felt compelled to wait until late in the year to begin his journey. Then he came down the Mississippi by steamboat, landing at Rodney, La., and rode on horseback across LOUISIANA to Texas.

Arrived there, it is said that Ruter "rode more than two thousand miles on horseback, swam or forded rivers; preached almost daily, and not unfrequently three times a day; shrank from no fatigue; avoided no hardships and no danger. . . . lived upon the rough fare, and slept in the still rougher lodgings of that wild and sparsely-populated region." (Simpson, p. 770.) He did such work during the one year he was destined to serve there that he ever after left a deep impress on Texas and its Methodism. He formed societies, secured the building of churches, made arrangements for the founding of a college, and laid out the greater part of the state into circuits. The following Spring he started homeward to get his family and make his report to the mission authorities, but after riding about fifty miles was taken seriously ill, and died in Washington, Texas, May 16, 1838.

The versatility as well as energy of Martin Ruter can be seen in the fact that among his other accomplishments he published a Hebrew Grammar, a History of Martyrs, and an Ecclesiastical History, as well as numerous sermons and letters on various subjects. Martin Ruter kept a personal Journal which reflects the enormous work he did while he was traveling about in Texas. The Journal is especially moving when he neared his end and realized his condition and noted that no physicians were immediately available. Friends and physicians were with him, however, in his last moments in Washington, Texas, May 16, 1838.

John O. Cross, Martin Ruter, Pioneer in Methodist Education. Nashville: Board of Education, 1956.
M. Phelan, Texas. 1924.
E. A. Smith, Martin Ruter. 1915. N. B. H.

RUTLEDGE, WOOLLS WILLIAM (1849-1921), Australian minister, was the son of James Rutledge who had accepted the position of a teacher at Castlereagh, New SOUTH WALES in 1840 and subsequently joined the staff of a boys' school at Parramatta, founded by William Woolls.

Woolls Rutledge attended the University of Sydney and was a journalist on the SYDNEY newspapers Harbinger and The Empire until he became editor of the Newcastle Chronicle. In 1875 he entered the ministry and was appointed to Orange, and from 1877 to 1880 served in Sydney at Waverley and Newtown. The following twelve years were spent in country appointments and in 1893 he ministered again in Sydney at Ashfield. In 1896 he followed W. G. Taylor as superintendent of the Central City Mission, Sydney.

The effect of the economic depression in 1893 was still severely felt and the Mission had to find $50,000. Rutledge, recognized as an eloquent preacher and a renowned singer, with extraordinary administrative gifts, succeeded in not only overcoming the financial difficulties, but also in extending the work by establishing a rehabilitation center for alcoholics.

He also commenced the "Pleasant Sunday Afternoon" programme which has continued through the years. In order to promote the spirit of Church Union he was appointed to Newcastle in 1901.

His outstanding contribution to Church Union was recognized when he was elected as the first president of the Conference of United Methodism.

In 1910-15 he organized the Centenary Thanksgiving Fund of which today WESLEY COLLEGE within the University of Sydney and LEIGH THEOLOGICAL COLLEGE, Enfield, New South Wales, are the fruits of his labors.

AUSTRALIAN EDITORIAL COMMITTEE

RWANDA, Africa, lies north of BURUNDI, and borders the eastern shore of Lake Kivu. This "Pearl of Africa" high altitude country has an area of 10,166 square miles and the same physical characteristics as Burundi. It was formerly a German colony, and was mandated to Belgium by the League of Nations after World War I. Later it became a trustee of the United Nations (1942). There is a president and forty-four member elected assembly. The population in 1969 was 3,500,000.

Until 1962 Rwanda and Burundi formed one mission field of the FREE METHODIST CHURCH. When two independent nations were established in 1962, separate conferences were organized. There is a new hospital at Kibogora, and a Bible School was opened in 1965.

As in Burundi, education has traditionally received generous government aid. Missionaries have been encouraged to organize and administer the educational program. Bible study is a regular part of the curriculum. The mission-administered schools reach the populated areas of the country. School buildings serve as churches on Sunday. Great congregations assemble for the district and conference meetings. There has been a genuine revival in this fast-growing field. In 1969 there were 7,000 Free Methodist members and 8,000 students.

BYRON S. LAMSON

RYAN, HENRY (1775-1833), Canadian preacher, was born April 22, 1775. He was converted at the age of sixteen; and after being turned out by his father, he acted as a local preacher in Dutchess County. Received on trial in 1800, for the next three years he served circuits in VERMONT. In 1802 he was ordained DEACON and in 1804 ELDER. While attending Conference at ASHGROVE, N.Y., in 1805, he responded to a call for volunteers to go to Upper Canada, and was appointed superintendent of the Bay of Quinte circuit; WILLIAM CASE was appointed as his assistant. For the next twenty-five years he led the Methodists of Upper Canada successfully through three great struggles, only to fail dismally in the fourth, causing the first tragic schism in Canadian Methodism.

F. Reid described Henry Ryan in an article which appeared in The Northern Christian Journal.

He was well nigh six feet in height, of large, symmetrical proportions, with prodigious muscular developments, and without doubt one of the strongest men in his age . . . His voice excelled, for power and compass, all that I ever heard from human organs. When occasion required, and it gave its full power, it was "as when a lion roareth."

The first contribution to Canadian Methodism by Henry Ryan was the initiation of the CAMP MEETING movement, so significant in the life of the people of Upper Canada. NATHAN BANGS, who attended the initial meeting at HAY BAY, Sept. 27-30, 1805, paid tribute to Ryan, who, though helped by William Case, planned, promoted, and carried through this evangelistic effort and thereby established the utility of this technique. The converts and the awakened souls were nurtured in the CLASS MEETINGS, the PRAYER MEETINGS, and the preaching services.

During these first five years in Upper Canada, Ryan served with energy and spirit in several circuits. He proved to be a man of great activity—bold to a fault, pious and practical, adventurous and aggressive. As an itinerant, he was a powerful preacher and a mighty man of prayer. His courage, his fighting spirit, his enthusiasm and his ready wit, combined to make him one of the most vivid and striking personalities among the preachers of Upper Canada before 1830.

In 1810, Ryan was appointed presiding elder for the Upper Canada District. When the War of 1812 began, Ryan, in spite of his American connections remained loyal to Canada and Britain. Although many of the American preachers left, he stood at his post holding the work together in those days of bitter conflict. Especially he brought hope, encouragement, and a sense of purpose to a perplexed people. Nothing can dim Ryan's achievement during the War of 1812-14.

The next phase of his career was marked by a struggle of another kind in which his character and devotion were illuminated. The Wesleyan Methodist Conference, which had to date shown little interest in the Canadas, now sent missionaries first to Lower Canada and later to Upper Canada. As early as 1815 Ryan, then presiding elder of Lower Canada, came into collision with the Wesleyan missionary and his supporters, in MONTREAL. Ryan refused to tolerate the presence of the latter, believing that in so doing he was carrying out his responsibility.

Immediately there was a sharp division. Ryan reported the situation to FRANCIS ASBURY, who laid the matter before the missionary society. At its 1816 session the Methodist GENERAL CONFERENCE, with Ryan present to plead his cause, affirmed that it could not relinquish its work in Lower Canada.

During the next four years the problem became increasingly acute. British immigrants poured into the colonies and anti-American sentiment grew. The removal of Ryan to Upper Canada did not help, for the British Wesleyans were there too, in smaller numbers. In 1820 agreement was finally reached. The British Wesleyans were to concentrate on Lower Canada, and the M.E. Church was to minister to Upper Canada, a solution that Ryan reluctantly accepted.

The final issue, which resulted in Ryan's disgrace, developed in 1823 when he failed to secure election as a delegate to the General Conference. As a presiding elder he claimed this position as a right and was humiliated when his subordinate was chosen over him. Accompanied by a local preacher, he attended the Conference (May 1824) unofficially and secured the right to address the court, pleading for the independence of the CANADA CONFERENCE. While permitted to speak, he could not mistake the coolness shown to him.

So much dissension resulted from Ryan's subsequent agitation that the new Canada Conference meeting at Hallowell, Aug. 25, 1824, had to declare itself. Separation from the M.E. Church (which Ryan demanded at once) was said to be inevitable but had to be worked out legally and in a brotherly fashion. Ryan's attitudes and actions rendered him undesirable as a presiding elder; hence he was stationed at Chippewa, a mission where he had a farm. He accepted these decisions but was never able to rise above the defeat and discipline meted out to him.

In 1825 he became superannuated and gave full time to agitation for the independence of the Canada Conference. Since he knew that the next General Conference would probably grant his wish, his trouble-making was probably malicious. He could not grasp the fact that independence would come in spite of his actions. By this time he was accusing his fellow preachers of corruption and was distributing literature containing allegations against the Conference.

Hence at the Conference of 1827, presided over by Bishop HEDDING, Ryan was charged with circulating scurrilous printed material, and with disturbing the peace and unity of the church. After a careful investigation, he was judged guilty. Though the bishop reproved him in the kindest spirit, Ryan was deeply angered and was located. Subsequently he traveled through the church making inflammatory speeches and disquieting the people.

Eventually Ryan organized the Canadian Wesleyan Methodist Church. But, at the Conference of 1828 the independence for which Ryan had fought was accepted. This limited his followers to personal friends and disgruntled society members. With his death the impetus went out of the splinter group—which continued until 1841 when the 1,951 members voted to unite with the New Connexion.

Henry Ryan's last years were bitter and unhappy. The cause for which he had sacrificed triumphed in spite of him and without him. His unfortunate schism proved neither popular nor dangerous. The unrest and strife which he generated militated as much against his new denomination as it did against the regular church. History has punished him by largely ignoring his useful life. Ryan is a pathetic example of a mighty man who fell, carrying down with him the glory of his earlier achievements.

He died on Aug. 14, 1833 at Gainsborough, Upper Canada, and is buried in Grimsby Township.

J. Carroll, Case and His Cotemporaries. 1867-77.
Centennial of Canadian Methodism. 1981.

C. F. Playter, Canada. 1862.

E. Ryerson, My Life. 1883.

A. Stevens, Nathan Bangs. 1863.

ARTHUR E. KEWLEY

RYAN, SARAH (1724-1768), British Methodist, one of WESLEY's most intimate correspondents, was born of poor parents on Oct. 20, 1724. At the age of seventeen she was stirred by WHITEFIELD's preaching. Later she heard Wesley at the Foundry and joined the society there. She was three times married, but with Wesley's encouragement refused to join her second husband when he settled in America. She lived for a time with Mary Clark and SARAH CROSBY in Moorfields. In 1757 Wesley made her housekeeper at BRISTOL, where she incurred the jealous wrath of his wife. From 1762, she was a close companion of MARY BOSANQUET (FLETCHER) at Leytonstone and later in Yorkshire, where she died on Aug. 17, 1768.

JOHN A. VICKERS

I. S. RYANG

RYANG, JU SAM (1879-1950?), first Korean bishop of the autonomous Korean Methodist Church, was born in Kong-Moon-Ri, South Pyeng-Ahn Province, Korea, Jan. 25, 1879. He studied Chinese classics in KOREA, and later completed the work in a Southern Methodist high school in Shanghai, where he was baptized. In 1906 he established a Korean church in SAN FRANCISCO, and this he served for three years.

After graduating from VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY and the Divinity School of Yale University, he returned to Korea to be one of the first Korean elders ordained by his denomination. His first appointments were characteristic of his career—teaching in the Methodist Union Theological Seminary in SEOUL; editing a church magazine, The Theological World, and serving a pastorate.

In 1918 he became Centenary Secretary and Literature Secretary for his annual conference, and in a four-year campaign in which his team visited every circuit, he opened 150 new churches and enrolled 16,000 new adherents. At the close of the campaign he became Conference Missionary Secretary, which position he held until 1940. In 1921 he took charge of the Siberia-Manchuria Mission and continued a life-long contact with this work.

He was the first Korean district superintendent of the M.E. Church, South's mission work and in that capacity served four years. When not acting as district superintendent he taught in the seminary.

In 1928-30 he led the campaign for union of the two branches of Methodism in Korea, and became the first general superintendent when the Korean Methodist Church was organized in 1930. He was re-elected in 1934, as the Korean Church provides for term episcopacy. Being restricted by the constitution of his church to two terms only, he gave full time again to editorial work and the supervision of the Manchurian Mission.

During World War II, Ryang acted as trustee for all Methodist Mission Board property in Korea. For his management during this difficult time he has been highly commended. In 1945 he was elected President of the Korean Red Cross. It was this "crime" for which he was abducted by the communists when they occupied Seoul in the summer of 1950. His whereabouts since then have remained unknown and he is presumed dead.

Bishop Ryang held honorary degrees from two American universities. Chief among his many publications was a bilingual work, Southern Methodism in Korea, published in 1929.

CHARLES A. SAUER

RYCKMAN, HAROLD H. (1902-), American mission executive of the FREE METHODIST CHURCH and an ordained elder in the Pacific Coast Latin America Conference, was born at Dale, N. D. He was educated at GREENVILLE COLLEGE, A.B., 1927; graduate studies, Whittier College, California; honorary D.D. degree, Los Angeles Pacific College, 1963. He married Evelyn A. Bartholomew in 1927 (deceased 1964); married Lucile Damon in 1966. His pastoral service has been in Southern California Conference, 1929-45; Missionary Superintendent, Paraguay, 1946-52; Brazil, 1952-62; architect and builder for BRAZIL seminary complex; Area Secretary for Latin America since 1962. He was Executive Secretary for Free Methodist World Fellowship, 1964-65.

BYRON S. LAMSON

RYERSON, ADOLPHUS EGERTON (1803-1882), Canadian minister and educator, was born near Vittoria, Norfolk County, Upper Canada, on March 24, 1803, to Joseph and Mehetabel Ryerson. Colonel Joseph Ryerson served as a Loyalist officer in the American Revolution, and subsequently migrated first to New Brunswick and thence to Upper Canada, where he farmed for the remainder of his long life.

As a member of a prominent family, Egerton Ryerson attended the local grammar school where he laid the foundations of a sound classical education. In these same years too he witnessed the War of 1812-14, in which his father and three elder brothers participated. After the war, perhaps owing to their mother who had been one of WILLIAM BLACK's attentive auditors in New Brunswick, Egerton, along with his brothers, George, William, and John, was converted in the Methodist fold. Although he joined the church, he was not attracted immediately to the ministry; rather in 1824 he entered the Gore District Grammar School in Hamilton, as a prelude to legal training.

Intent though he was upon academic pursuits, Ryerson was still deeply concerned about his spiritual condition. Possibly this accounted in part for a critical illness in 1824-25, during which he had another profound religious experience. He gave his first sermon on Easter Sunday,

EGERTON RYERSON

1825; at the conference held in September 1825, he was taken on trial and posted to the York and Yonge Street circuit. JAMES RICHARDSON, the future Methodist Episcopal bishop, was his superintendent.

Although he was ordained at the appropriate times (1827-29) and was a vigorous preacher throughout his career, Egerton Ryerson's life was not played out in the itineracy. Within a year he challenged the existing political and religious establishment in a massive letter published on May 11, 1826. Abruptly the unknown junior minister became a celebrity in Upper Canada. From that time forward he grew in stature both to his friends and to his enemies, a development which was facilitated by his appointment as first editor of The Christian Guardian in 1829. He held this post until 1832, from 1833 to 1835, and from 1838 to 1840.

As an editor and controversialist Egerton Ryerson had few outstanding rivals in his generation. A subtle, if prolix stylist, writing in an age addicted to partisanship and misrepresentation, he was often misunderstood.

Fundamentally, Ryerson's views epitomized those of Canadian Methodism at its best. Politically he was a liberal-conservative, one who sought to maintain British North America's monarchical institutions and relationships. He was unsympathetic toward radical political changes; he was more concerned with the spirit in which the political system functioned than with its outward forms. The spirit he hoped and strove for was to be characterized by every action. Second, he was convinced that the state must treat all social and religious groups equitably. Undoubtedly he preferred that church and state should be kept separate and that all religious denominations should provide for their own needs in their own ways. If state support was afforded for religious ends, it should be distributed impartially. Third, Ryerson approached secular issues as a Canadian. What was best for any group in Canada could never be determined in the light of extraneous or foreign conditions. On the contrary all had to put aside their inherited or transmitted prejudices and to consider all issues in the light of Canadian circumstances and needs. Holding to these views, Ryerson contributed greatly to the liberalization of Canadian politics and to the satisfactory readjustment of the church-state relationship.

Before he gave up The Guardian, Ryerson was deeply involved in the third of his great interests—education. In his first years as editor, he commented frequently on this subject and especially on the necessity of breaking the Anglican monopoly on university education. His unceasing efforts secured a charter for Upper Canada Academy. After it became VICTORIA COLLEGE, Ryerson became its first principal in 1841, a post which he held until 1847. During his remaining years, Ryerson was continuously active in the resolution of the university question and in the maintenance of Victoria University as an institution in which higher education was provided in a Christian context.

In 1844 Egerton Ryerson accepted office as superintendent of education in Canada West (Ontario), a position which he retained until 1876. During these years, filled with incessant administrative and political labors and often with acrimonious battles, he laid the foundations of the Ontario educational system. His purpose, throughout, was to build a system in which a useful and relevant body of knowledge would be imparted to all children, and to maintain an intimate connection between the moral ideals shared by all Christians and the subjects taught in the schools. To this end he resisted the introduction of denominational elementary schools, but, when obliged to accept them, tried to regulate them fairly and generously. When he retired, Ontario had a primary school system which could bear favorable comparison with those of other western countries.

Despite his preoccupation with educational and political issues, Ryerson's concern for his own spiritual condition and for the Methodism to which he was so devoted never diminished. In many ways not easily traced he contributed to the Canadianization of Wesleyan Methodism and to the liberalization of the outlook of his brethren. His election in 1874 as the first president of the General Conference of The Methodist Church of Canada was a fitting and symbolic climax to his career as a Methodist itinerant.

In his latter years Ryerson worked happily and vigorously on three books that were dear to his heart: The Loyalists of America and Their Times (1880), Canadian Methodism, Its Epochs and Characteristics (1882), and The Story of My Life (1883). He died full of honors, at peace with his church, his neighbors, and his opponents, in Toronto, Feb. 19, 1882.

The enormous throng who crowded the great Metropolitan Church in Toronto for his funeral testified to the esteem and affection in which Ryerson was held.

E. RYERSON, My Life. 1883.

———, Canadian Methodism. 1882.

C. B. Sissons, Egerton Ryerson. 1937. G. S. FRENCH

RYERSON, JOHN (1799-1878), Canadian minister, wise administrator, one whose aim was to preserve the institution and dignity of the Methodist Church, was born at Long Point, Upper Canada, the third son of Colonel Joseph Ryerson, a staunch Anglican Loyalist. To his dismay, five of his six sons became Methodist preachers, John being the first to itinerate. With his two older brothers, George and William, John had a deep religious experience in 1815, probably at a Methodist CAMP MEETING. In spite of his father's opposition, he began to travel as a preacher on the Long Point circuit in 1820. The next year he was received on trial, "aged twenty-one, single, and not in debt." In 1823 he was ordained a DEACON and in 1825, an ELDER.

In spite of his studious ways and his ability to preach great sermons, he was destined to be an ecclesiastical statesman rather than a preacher or a pastor. His long list of high offices, heavy responsibilities, and honors begins in 1827 with his appointment as presiding elder of the Niagara district. In 1832 he was presiding elder of the Bay of Quinte district, and subsequently he was many times chairman of district. In 1843 he was elected president of Conference. He was chosen co-delegate from 1850 to 1858, the representative to the British Wesleyan Conference in 1846 and 1849: and representative to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M.E. Church in the United States twice.

He was elected to the important post of BOOK STEWARD in 1837 and held this office until 1841. With his brother's support, EGERTON RYERSON was re-elected in 1838 editor of The Guardian. The two brothers were key figures in determining the Methodist response to the Rebellion of 1837, in the removal of Principal MATTHEW RICHEY from Upper Canada Academy, and in the clash between the British and Canadian Wesleyans, leading to the disruption of 1840. The resolution and determination of John Ryerson, coupled with the debating and journalistic skills of his brother Egerton, were closely related to the Canadian Methodists' successful defence of their cause.

While attending the British Wesleyan Conference in 1846, John Ryerson entered into negotiations with ROBERT ALDER—negotiations that brought the reunion of the two Conferences in 1847. The new basis of union was so well-constructed that the two Conferences were able to collaborate effectively until other events suggested a new basis of separation. It was appropriate that John Ryerson became for several years the Canadian vice-president of Conference.

As a senior statesman, he was asked in 1854 to visit the territories of the Hudson's Bay Company, to investigate and reorganize the missionary work begun earlier by the Wesleyan Missionary Society. Upon completion of his long and arduous inspection tour he made his report, which was printed in 1855 under the title, Hudson's Bay: or a Missionary Tour in the Territory of the Honorable Hudson's Bay Company. He stressed that only eighteen Protestant missionaries served the vast area—thirteen Anglicans, four Methodists, and one Presbyterian. His journal provided invaluable information about the social and religious life of the Northwest at the middle of the nineteenth century.

Faced by declining health, John Ryerson became a superannuated preacher in 1860. He continued, however, to take an active interest in his church. Much of the material in Egerton Ryerson's Canadian Methodism: Its Epochs and Characteristics, a work which threw much light on the history of Canadian Methodism, was supplied by him. It reflected his awareness of the changing character of Methodism and of its changing role in Canadian society.

To his contemporaries he must have appeared austere, and deficient in the emotional fervor which Methodists were expected to display. He was in fact an ecclesiastical statesman, who labored mightily and effectively for the welfare of the Methodist Church in Canada. Aged, lonely, and almost forgotten, he died near Simcoe, Ontario, Oct. 8, 1878, and was buried in the Ryerson Cemetery.

Nathanael Burwash, Egerton Ryerson. Toronto: Oxford University Press, 1926.

J. Carroll, Case and His Contemporaries. 1867-77.

A. Green, Life and Times. 1877.

C. B. Sissons, Egerton Ryerson. 1937, 1947. A. E. KEWLEY

RYERSON, JOSEPH WILLIAM (1797-1872), Canadian minister, was born in New Brunswick, into an Anglican and Loyalist family. As a boy he took part in the War of 1812-14 and subsequently became a farmer and local preacher in Oxford County (Upper Canada). Received on trial in 1823, at the last session of the GENESEE CONFERENCE, in which Canadian Methodists participated, he was ordained in 1825.

Although he had little formal education, William Ryerson rapidly attained an outstanding reputation as an eloquent and fearless orator, one who could move masses of people "like forest trees swayed to and fro by the wind." His energy and ability brought prompt recognition among his brethren. He became a presiding elder in 1828 and a district chairman after the union of 1833. In 1840 he accompanied his brother, EGERTON RYERSON, to the fateful session of the British Conference which resulted in the severance of the 1833 union. As an outspoken defender of Canadian interests, he was elected president of the CANADA CONFERENCE in 1841 and again in 1847.

Superannuated in 1858, Ryerson returned to a farm near Brantford (Canada West). As he had long been interested in politics and closely identified with the liberal-minded among his brethren, it was natural for him to seek election to the provincial legislature in 1861. He was returned, and kept his seat through two sessions. Increasingly infirm in his later years, he died at his farm in 1872, and was buried in the cemetery of the Sour Springs Church.

J. Carroll, Case and His Contemporaries. 1867-77.

Christian Guardian, June 11, 1873.

C. B. Sissons, Egerton Ryerson. 1937, 1947. G. S. FRENCH

RYFF, JULES (1874-1961), American FREE METHODIST pioneer missionary to Africa, was born in SWITZERLAND Dec. 21, 1874. He came to the United States at the age of sixteen, and worked in lumber mills and on farms. Converted in young manhood, he entered SEATTLE PACIFIC COLLEGE (then a Seminary) to prepare for full-time Christian service. He taught school for several years, served as pastor in the Washington Conference, then felt called to Africa. He married Elisabeth Ellen Eva, Oct. 8, 1902. In 1903 he and his wife went to SOUTH AFRICA, served two years at Fairview, Natal, and then transferred to Germiston. He superintended mission work at the compounds of the mines.

In his early years of missionary service, his wife died. A few years later, he married Ethel Davey. His children were: Lois, Ruth, Helen, and Frederic, the latter a Free Methodist missionary in the Transvaal.

Jules Ryff was a superior linguist, a master of German, English, French, Latin, Greek, as well as Shesha, Zulu and other African dialects. He was adept in handling affairs with the nationals, government officials, and mine superintendents. He was truly a missionary statesman. He gave in all fifty years of missionary service, and died in Germiston, Dec. 15, 1961.

The Free Methodist, January 1962.

B. S. Lamson, Free Methodist Missions. 1951.

BYRON S. LAMSON

RYLAND, WILLIAM (c. 1770-1846), American minister who became chaplain of both Houses of the Congress of the United States, was born in IRELAND and migrated to MARYLAND in 1788. J. E. ARMSTRONG said that this was when he was eighteen years of age and that he first settled in Harford County, Md., where he was converted.

He came to BALTIMORE and entered the BALTIMORE CONFERENCE in 1802 and for twenty-seven years was in the itinerant ranks. He was a delegate to four GENERAL CONFERENCES of his Church. He served as CHAPLAIN both of the House of Representatives and the U.S. Senate and during that time acted as pastor to President Andrew Jackson and his family. After his superannuation, he acted as chaplain in the U.S. Navy, being stationed at the Marine Barracks in WASHINGTON where he spent the remainder of his life. He died Jan. 19, 1846. His papers are preserved in the Methodist Historical Society, Baltimore.

J. E. Armstrong, Old Baltimore Conference. 1907.

EDWIN SCHELL

S

JULIO SABANES

SABANES, JULIO MANUEL (1897-1963), bishop, was born in MONTEVIDEO, URUGUAY, July 2, 1897, the son of Methodist parents. After attending primary school, he secured gainful employment and in time became a bank clerk. Joining the church, he rose to leadership in the Methodist Youth Movement, and was one of the founders of La Idea, the organization's periodical in Uruguay. Also, he engaged in open air evangelistic preaching. He married Juana Puch, the daughter of a Methodist minister, March 10, 1923, and they had three children, Julio Ruben who is a pastor and district superintendent in Argentina, and Carlos, and Miriam.

Sabanes joined the River Plate Annual Conference on trial in 1923 and was ordained elder in 1927. He was appointed traveling evangelist for Uruguay. In 1926 he served two small churches near Montevideo, and later became assistant pastor of Central Church in the city. In 1929 he was appointed to Central Church, ROSARIO, Argentina's second largest city where he served eighteen years. During part of that time he was also district superintendent in ROSARIO and editor of El Estandarte Evangelico, the conference magazine. He was a delegate to five CENTRAL CONFERENCE sessions and to the 1940 GENERAL CONFERENCE, Atlantic City, New Jersey.

In 1947, Sabanes was appointed to Central Church, BUENOS AIRES, and district superintendent in that city. During the next five years he engaged in many civic and community activities along with his church work. In September 1952, the dictatorial regime of President Juan Peron banned him from his pulpit and forbade him to engage in pastoral work.

In November 1952, the Latin American Central Conference elected Sabanes bishop, and in 1956 he was reelected for four more years. He was assigned to the SANTIAGO Area (later Pacific Area) which included CHILE, PERU, PANAMA, and COSTA RICA. With his episcopal headquarters in Santiago, Chile, Sabanes traveled and superintended his area for the next seven years. Also, he attended several meetings of the COUNCIL OF BISHOPS and the 1956 General Conference in MINNEAPOLIS. Because of poor health, Sabanes retired at the session of the Latin America Central Conference at LIMA, Peru, in 1960. Known as a "gentle person" who was "greatly beloved," he spent his remaining days at his home in Buenos Aires, where he died after a long illness, Aug. 29, 1963.

World Outlook, October, 1963.

JESSE A. EARL
ALBEA GOBOLD

SACKETT, ALFRED BARRETT (1895-), British Methodist, born at Strood, Kent, England, the only son of A. B. Sackett, Wesleyan minister. He was educated at KINGSWOOD SCHOOL and Merton College, Oxford. During the Great War of 1914-18 he served with the Northumberland Fusiliers, winning the Military Cross. After six years as housemaster at Christ's Hospital (transferred from London to Horsham, Sussex, in 1902), in 1928 he began an eminently successful headmastership, lasting thirty-one years, at his old school, JOHN WESLEY'S foundation, Kingswood School. He has served on many Methodist committees, including the WORLD METHODIST COUNCIL.

FRANK BAKER

SACO, MAINE, U.S.A. School Street Church. JESSE LEE, sometimes called the apostle to New England, preached the first Methodist sermon ever heard in Saco village, MAINE, on Sept. 10, 1793. His text was "Behold ye despisers and wonder and perish" (Acts 13:41). After passing the night at the home of Dr. Josiah Fairfield, he left on his further travels in the province of Maine.

The first Methodist church in Saco was dedicated in 1828, and was known as Wesleyan Hall and "the Corn Crib." Four years later a larger building was needed. The church continued to grow and many members were added to the Kingdom of Christ. In 1847, the Methodist society had grown enough to warrant being host to the Maine Annual Conference. In 1943 on the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of Jesse Lee's visit, Bishop G. BROMLEY OXNAM gave the anniversary address on "The Crusade for a New World Order." Through the years the loyalty, faithfulness, and charity of the School Street members and pastors has been marked.

JOHN H. JORDAN

SACRAMENT OF HOLY COMMUNION. (See COMMUNION, THE HOLY.)

SACRAMENTAL FELLOWSHIP, METHODIST (British), is a devotional society of some 400 ministers and laymen pledged to pray daily for corporate Christian unity, seeking to foster the churchmanship and catholic inheritance of British Methodism. Originating in the 1920's among a group of Wesleyan ministers led by T. S. Gregory, it was inaugurated as a society in 1935 on a three-fold basis of doctrine, sacramental worship, and reunion. Its presidents have been Alfred E. Whitham (1935); J. E. RATTENBURY (1938), and DONALD SOPER (1950). Annual conferences have maintained a high level of ecumenical understanding, and the society continues to exercise an influence largely disproportionate to its numerical strength. In association with certain other groups it publishes a bulletin, and it maintains contact with parallel movements in other communions.

A. S. GREGORY

SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA, U.S.A., seat of Sutter's Fort, mecca of overland immigrants to CALIFORNIA. Dr. William Grove Deal, physician and local preacher, began a Methodist ministry in the open air and aboard a ship. WILLIAM ROBERTS organized a Methodist church in July 1849, on the foundation laid by Deal, and left the work in Deal's care.

John Sutter donated to the M.E. Church a lot on the southeast corner at Seventh and L Streets, and on this was erected a chapel shipped from BALTIMORE, the first church building in Sacramento. ISAAC OWEN arrived to serve as pastor on Oct. 23, 1849. On October 28 he received seventy-two persons into the church, and one week later held the first services in the new church edifice. Owen, who was thereafter to serve as presiding elder, was followed as pastor in 1850 by M. C. BRIGGS for the first of three pastorates in that city. Influential in opposing intemperance and slavery, he also led the California delegation to the convention which nominated Lincoln for the presidency in 1864.

One Methodist layman, J. H. Ralston, a brother of the prominent Methodist theologian, T. N. RALSTON, wrote to his sister, Mrs. James B. Dodd of KENTUCKY, from Sacramento in 1850 as follows: "... There is much Drinking, gambling, etc in all this country. Say to Neely [T. N. Ralston], a vast field is open for Preachers. Why does not the church send them out here. . . . Preaching is Needed here as much as any where. . . ."

In 1852 a larger church was built, but soon was destroyed by fire. Rebuilt on the same site the new building was a few years later sold to the Jewish congregation to be the first synagogue on the Pacific coast. The fourth building was erected on Sixth Street in 1859-60 and completed in 1870. A historical marker indicates the site of the pioneer Methodist church.

The work of the M.E. Church, South was begun in Sacramento in April 1850, and a chapel was erected in August of that year on Seventh Street between J and K Streets. D. W. Pollock was the pioneer leader, but his health soon failed and he was succeeded by local preacher Penmann. In 1851 W. R. Gober assumed the work and also organized a school, Asbury Institute. Gober was capable and influential, and served two pastorates in Sacramento.

Perhaps the outstanding lay Methodist in Sacramento was Mrs. LIZZIE GLIDE, who worked ardently in city mission work and gave generously, providing for the building of residence halls for girls in two cities and at ASBURY COLLEGE in Kentucky. The Glide Foundation which she established has had a deep and valued influence in California. C. M. and Mary Glide GOETHE provided financial backing for city and state councils of churches and many other good works. Goethe has been widely honored for leadership in appreciation of nature and in guidance of youth.

Most noted among Sacramento Methodist preachers in this century was A. RAYMOND GRANT, elected bishop while pastor at First Church. In 1970 there were seventeen United Methodist churches in Sacramento in addition to a ministry to students at Sacramento State College. There are eighteen ministers, and 7,431 members.

The Sacramento Methodist Union serves as a church extension society, and has been instrumental in securing sites on which a number of churches have been built.

First Church, organized in 1849, was a contemporary and not a child of the "gold-rush." There was no "god-rush" in the "gold-rush." But even before prospectors came seeking gold for men, pioneer preachers came seeking men for God.

WILLIAM TAYLOR and Isaac Owen were sent by authority of the M.E. Church to California. Bishop Taylor came by way of "the Horn" at the tip of South America. Isaac Owen came by ox-team across the plains and mountains. When he arrived, he found Taylor already working in SAN FRANCISCO, so he came on to Sacramento. Before leaving the east Taylor's friends in BALTIMORE framed and furnished a chapel 24 by 36 feet intended for San Francisco. It was shipped around Cape Horn and because Sacramento had a stronger society in need of a building, it was shipped on to Sacramento.

Since 1849, the original "Baltimore-California" Chapel and other church buildings have been replaced and congregations have risen and combined until in 1924 First Church became the latest successor, growing to be the second largest church in the CALIFORNIA-NEVADA CONFERENCE. Now a modern, multiple-staff institution of 2,060 members, it carries in stone over its main entrance, the figure of the Circuit Rider and the words: "To the pioneers of the Cross through whose heroism and self sacrifice we owe our present Methodism in this the Capital City of California."

Like them, First Church is still pioneering its program geared to serving from within the heart of a great and growing Capital City.

C. V. Anthony, Fifty Years. 1901.

California Christian Advocate.

L. L. Loofbourov, In Search of God's Gold. 1950.

J. C. Simmons, Pacific Coast. 1886.

DON M. CHASE
ROBERT A. PANZER

SACRAMENT, THE. "Sacraments," states ARTICLE OF RELIGION XVI (number XXV of the XXXIX of the Church of England), "ordained of Christ are not only badges or tokens of Christian men's profession, but rather they are certain signs of grace, and God's good will toward us, by which he doth work invisibly in us, and doth not only quicken, but also strengthen and confirm, our faith in Him. There are two Sacraments ordained of Christ our Lord in the Gospel; that is to say, Baptism and the Supper of the Lord."

This affirmation explains itself and denominates the two Sacraments which Methodism with the Protestant world accepts as such. Sacrament is from the Latin sacramentum. "The Romans used the word for their military oath and in that sense it has great significance, as in this ordinance, as well as in Baptism, we swear allegiance to the captain of our salvation," so stated THOMAS O. SUMMERS, an authority in this field. For a further explanation of these two sacraments, see BAPTISM and COMMUNION, THE HOLY.

Article of Religion XVI, the first part of which is quoted above, goes on to mention five other rites "commonly called sacraments, that is to say, confirmation, penance, orders, matrimony, and extreme unction." The Article holds that these are "not to be counted for Sacraments of the Gospel; being such as have grown out of the corrupt following of the apostles, and partly are states of life allowed in the Scriptures, but yet have not the like nature of Baptism and the Lord's Supper, because they have not any visible sign or ceremony ordained of God." (See also DOCTRINAL STANDARDS OF METHODISM.)

J. C. Bowmer, Lord's Supper, 1961.

—, Sacrament, 1951.

Robert W. Goodloe, The Sacraments in Methodism. Nashville: Methodist Publishing House, 1943.

N. B. Harmon, Rites and Ritual. 1926.

N. B. H.

SAHAI, GEORGE SYLVESTER (1908-1966), Indian minister and educator, was a third-generation Christian. His father was an ordained Methodist minister. Lucknow University conferred upon him the B.A., B.Ed.Sc., M.A., and Ph.D. degrees. He studied for a time in the Union Theological Seminary, New York. He married Lois Tika in 1934.

After seventeen years on the faculty of the LUCKNOW CHRISTIAN COLLEGE teaching history, he was appointed pastor of one of Indian Methodism's greatest churches, Central Church in LUCKNOW. In 1957 he became the first Indian principal of Leonard Theological College. Sahai's Ph.D. dissertation was on the subject, "Christian Missions and Indian Education." He set forth impressively the contribution of Christian missions to the development of modern education in INDIA.

Sahai represented the LUCKNOW ANNUAL CONFERENCE in the 1960 GENERAL CONFERENCE, and was a delegate to the tenth WORLD METHODIST CONFERENCE in Oslo, where he read a paper on Methodist beliefs. He represented the Methodist Church of Southern Asia in the WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES Assembly in New Delhi. He lectured in the United States on the theology of missions, conducted Bible study classes for the interdenominational missionary conference at Lake George, N. Y., and twice taught classes on missions at GARRETT SEMINARY summer sessions.

He died in 1966 at Jabalpur from a heart attack, and is buried there.

The Indian Witness, 1966.

J. WASKOM PICKETT

SAINT, CHARLES (1764-1840), was born in England and came to Bonavista, Newfoundland, where he was converted under the ministry of George Smith, first Methodist missionary to Bonavista. After Smith's departure in 1796, Bonavista had no missionary for fourteen years, and during this period Charles Saint served as class leader and local preacher, and kept alive Methodism. He gave faithful and devoted service and strong leadership throughout his life.

Bonavista became—and still is—one of the largest pastoral charges in the Newfoundland Conference.

T. W. Smith, Eastern British America. 1877. N. WINSON

ST. GEORGE'S CHURCH edifice, located at 235 North Fourth Street, PHILADELPHIA, Pa., is the oldest Methodist meeting house in continuous use in America and one of the shrines of The United Methodist Church. Its claim to be the world's oldest Methodist Church edifice in continuous service has been challenged by the British Methodists.

The edifice was purchased by the Methodists in 1769 under the leadership of JOSEPH PILMORE from William Branson Hockley, whose mentally deficient son had purchased it at auction from a splinter group of the Dutch Reformed Church currently located at Fourth and Race Streets. The building as purchased consisted of four brick walls, a roof and a dirt floor. It was sold when the splinter group, who had over-extended themselves in borrowing money for the building, were unable to borrow further funds although they appealed both to the Anglican and the Dutch Reformed churches. The Trustees of the original project were arrested for the indebtedness on the building, and the auction was contrived to secure funds to pay the indebtedness and secure the release of the trustees from jail.

The St. George's Society, itself, was organized two years previously, in 1767, by CAPTAIN THOMAS WEBB who, on coming to Philadelphia from NEW YORK, had found a small group of the converts of GEORGE WHITEFIELD meeting irregularly in a sail loft on Dock Creek (now Dock Street) at Front Street. Their leaders were EDWARD EVANS, a cordwainer, maker of fine shoes for ladies, and JAMES EMERSON, an Irishman, a seller of Orange Lemon Shrub. These men, converted under Whitefield in 1741, had formed a group of "Methides," as they were then called, and held it together for twenty-six years until the coming of Webb who organized the group into "The Religious Society of Protestants called Methodists." Under Webb's inspired preaching and leadership the Society grew and in 1768 sought larger quarters in a house located at 8 Loxley Court. Prayer meetings were held on the first floor of the house and public preaching services were conducted in the courtyard in front of the building, with the preacher proclaiming his message through the window on the second floor, to the group gathered below in the yard. When Joseph Pilmore and RICHARD BOARDMAN, WESLEY's first Missionaries to America, arrived in Philadelphia in 1769 the Society had grown to about 100 members. Under Pilmore's prodding the Society again sought larger quarters and subsequently purchased the present structure. The building had been named St. George's Church by the Dutch Reformed splinter group when they were seeking financial aid from the Anglicans, and the Methodists continued the name. ASBURY is purported to have referred to the building as the "Cathedral of Methodism."

Although St. George's is not the oldest Society in America, its building is the oldest in continuous use and its history is marked by a distinguished list of "firsts" and other important events.

All Wesley's itinerants visited St. George's first on coming to America, Philadelphia being at that time the port of entry to the new world. On Oct. 7, 1769, the first hymns published by an American Society were printed for St.

ST. GEORGE'S CHURCH, PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA

George's. On Dec. 3, 1769, Joseph Pilmore here made the first public statement in America of the faith and the body of Principles of Methodism. On Dec. 8, 1769 he held at St. George's the first PRAYER MEETING in America, called "Intercession." The first Wesleyan itinerant licensed to preach by an American Society, JOHN KING, was licensed by Pilmore at Old St. George's Aug. 31, 1770. The first WATCH NIGHT held in America was held in St. George's Nov. 1, 1770, and on October 28 of the following year Francis Asbury preached his first sermon in America. The first three Conferences of American Methodism were held at Old St. George's in 1773, 1774, and 1775, and on Nov. 7, 1784, THOMAS COKE first publicly proclaimed and explained Wesley's new plan of church government for the American Methodists.

In 1784 RICHARD ALLEN, the first Negro licensed to preach by the Methodists in America, was licensed by St. George's and in the same year the church licensed Absalom Jones, the second Negro licensed to preach by the Methodists in America. In 1789 the Methodist Book Concern, now the METHODIST PUBLISHING HOUSE, was organized here by JOHN DICKINS, the pastor of St. George's. He lies buried in the churchyard behind the church, and EZEKIEL COOPER, his successor as "Book agent," lies buried at the front entrance. This is only a partial list of the distinctions of the Church.

It is informative also to note that John Adams of MASSACHUSETTS, representative to the first Continental Congress and later second President of the United States, worshipped here at times, and that THOMAS RANKIN records in his Journal that some of the Continental Congress worshipped at Old St. George's. According to a former pastor of the church, FRANCIS TEES, St. George's through its history has financially aided in organizing or in preserving over 100 churches along the eastern seaboard. Tees also stated that numerous revivals have marked the history of the church, the most noted being 1836 when 1,281 persons were converted and fifty-three young men entered the ministry.

In 1920 when the Delaware River (now the Benjamin Franklin) Bridge was built, the church was threatened with destruction since the plans for the bridge placed one abutment where the church still stands. Through the influence and leadership of Bishop THOMAS NEELY the plans of the bridge were changed, the church was saved, and the roadbed of the bridge moved further south.

During the pastorate of Albert W. Cliffe guides for tourists visiting the building were added to the staff. During the pastorate of FREDERICK E. MASER (1958-1967) group visitations were encouraged, with groups coming from as far away as CHINA and AUSTRALIA, and the pastor made several preaching tours in the United States, Europe, and the South Pacific in the interest of the church. During this pastorate also the trustees instituted the St. George's Gold Medal Award presented annually to at least one layman and one minister for "distinguished service to The Methodist Church." The medal is patterned after the seal of Old St. George's, a dove carrying an olive branch in its bill surrounded by the words, "Let brotherly love continue." Among the first recipients were CHARLES C. PARLIN, Bishop FRED PIERCE CORSON, JAMES T. BUCKLEY and George Ruck. Subsequent recipients have constituted a Who's Who in American Methodism.

In 1967 under the leadership of the present pastor, Dr. John H. Barnes, an additional award was instituted, "The John Wesley Ecumenical Award." It commemorates both John Wesley's sermon, "The Catholic Spirit," and the Second Vatican Council. Among the first recipients was John Cardinal Krol of Philadelphia.

In its Historical Center adjoining the sanctuary, the Church houses the possessions of the Historical Society of the EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA CONFERENCE, including nearly 10,000 volumes of Methodistica and memorabilia of early Methodism. Among these are Asbury's Bible, spectacles and razor, Pilmore's Journal, the desk over which THOMAS RANKIN presided at the first conference of Methodist preachers in America, early LOVE FEAST cups, and letters of Asbury, Wesley, Whitefield and other early Methodists.

With the rehabilitation of the neighborhood near old St. George's and the establishment near the church of a residential area known as "Society Hill," it is hoped that a larger membership will result and that the past glories of Old St. George's will become present and future possibilities.

A. W. Cliffe, Our Methodist Heritage. 1957.

F. H. Tees, Ancient Landmark of American Methodism or Historic Old St. George's. Philadelphia: Message Publishing Co., 1951.

—, Beginnings of Methodism. 1940.

FREDERICK E. MASER

ST. JOHN'S RIVER CONFERENCE was organized Jan. 25, 1886, in Jacksonville, Fla., with Bishop E. C. ANDREWS presiding. Composed of white ministers and churches, it was formed by dividing the denomination's FLORIDA CONFERENCE on racial lines. After 1886, the latter conference continued as a Negro conference.

The boundaries of the St. John's River Conference included FLORIDA east of the Appalachian River and a small fraction of south GEORGIA. At the outset it had fifteen preachers, one probationer, five available supplies, and 657 members. By 1900 it had grown to twenty-eight appointments and 1,160 members.

For a few years, beginning in 1887, the conference published a paper called the Florida Methodist. The St. John's River Conference College was launched at Orange City in 1887, but for lack of financial resources it failed in five years. Thereafter some support was given to Cookman Institute at Jacksonville, a school for Negroes founded in 1874 by the FREDMEN'S AID SOCIETY. Cookman merged with a school for Negro girls in 1922 to become BETHUNE-COOKMAN COLLEGE at Daytona Beach. In 1928, the conference began patronizing TENNESSEE WESLEYAN COLLEGE, Athens, Tenn., and was given representation on that school's board of trustees.

The St. John's River Conference grew rapidly in the 1920's when large numbers of people from the North, many of them members of the M. E. Church, moved to Florida.

There was little fellowship or cooperation between the conferences of the two Episcopal Methodisms in Florida until the 1920's. In 1936, the St. John's River Conference joined the FLORIDA CONFERENCE (MES) in supporting the Methodist Children's Home at Enterprise. Voting unanimously for Methodist union, the St. John's River Conference came to the merger in 1939 with fifty-two pastoral charges and 14,085 members. SCHUYLER E. GARTH, who served as superintendent of the MIAMI District in the 1920's and was elected bishop in 1944 from the NORTH CENTRAL JURISDICTION, was one of several able leaders developed in this relatively small conference.

General Minutes.

C. T. Thrift, Jr., The Trail of the Florida Circuit Rider. 1944.

JESSE A. EARL

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI, U.S.A. (population 607,718 in 1970), was founded in 1764 as a fur trading post in the wilderness. Prior to 1804 only the Roman Catholic religion was permitted in the city. However, beginning in 1798, JOHN CLARK, a Methodist preacher in ILLINOIS, secretly crossed over to MISSOURI and preached several times in the environs of St. Louis.

For a decade after St. Louis became a part of the United States, the Protestant preachers left it "to the Catholics and the infidels" and went to the rural areas which were then regarded as the more promising missionary fields.

Presbyterian, Baptist and Episcopalian missionaries began preaching in St. Louis in 1816, 1817, and 1819, respectively. Officially the Methodists began work in Missouri in 1806 when the WESTERN CONFERENCE appointed John Travis to the Missouri Circuit which extended some 300 miles up and down the Mississippi River and some fifty miles west. In the next decade several strong circuits were established in the rural areas. In 1817 JOHN SCRIPPS, who had been appointed to the Cold Water Circuit north and west of St. Louis, decided to make St. Louis a preaching point on his work. Learning that Joseph Charles, editor of the Missouri Gazette, had a Methodist background, Scripps asked his help. As a result, the paper announced Scripps' first preaching appointment in St. Louis for Sunday, April 23, 1817. The service was held in a log house which served the town as a theater. Later the Presbyterians allowed Scripps to use their little frame house, and he regularly preached there once every three weeks until the end of the conference year. Scripps saw "no visible results" but he believed good could be done in St. Louis. The preachers who followed Scripps in the next three years made no effort to establish work in St. Louis. One said he had no building in which to hold services, and another, according to Scripps, found work on the circuit more congenial.

JESSE WALKER, the "Daniel Boone of Methodism," a man of practical ability and marked determination, established Methodism in St. Louis. From 1807 to 1819 Walker rode circuits and served as PRESIDING ELDER in Illinois and Missouri. For reasons which are not clear, the MISSOURI CONFERENCE appointed him "missionary" in 1819 and 1820. This of course allowed him to work where he pleased in the conference. Walker and Scripps were friends, and since both had St. Louis on their hearts, Scripps encouraged Walker to try to establish a Methodist church in the city. Knowing the undertaking would be difficult, Walker laid his plans carefully. Leaving his family on his farm in Illinois, he rented an old two-room log structure in St. Louis, and lived in one room and fitted up the other as a chapel and a school room. He brought provisions from his farm. In the late fall of 1820, he announced his first preaching appointment in St. Louis. About a dozen came. Walker then visited throughout the town, making acquaintances and inviting people to church. As time passed, he won more adherents by his simple goodness than by his sermons, for he was not an impressive preacher.

In January 1821, Walker organized a class of six. His congregation soon outgrew the log house and even the courthouse nearby. Though he had no money, Walker determined to build a church. A man in Illinois gave him timber. He then begged money and had the logs cut and brought across the river. With the help of three men, he cut the lumber with a whipsaw, and in 1822 built a frame church thirty-five by forty-five feet at Fourth and Myrtle Streets, now Fourth and Clark. Thus was erected the first Protestant church building in St. Louis.

The Missouri Conference met in the St. Louis church, Oct. 24, 1822, and WILLIAM BEAUCHAMP, an eloquent preacher, was appointed there. Walker moved on and later established Methodism in CHICAGO. In 1830 the St. Louis congregation moved into a new brick church at Fourth and Washington.

Methodism grew slowly in St. Louis. In 1822 there were eighty-seven members; in 1839 there was still only one congregation with 365 white and 148 colored members. However, in that year, stirred by the celebration of the centennial of world Methodism, St. Louis Methodists raised $3,000 and started two new churches—Centenary and Mounds (now St. Paul's). Both have survived and still serve near their original locations.

The division of 1844 was keenly felt in St. Louis Methodism. In 1845 all of the congregations adhered South, but some members, insisting on adhering North, formed Ebenezer M.E. Church in that year. Three years later it reported 130 members. Though the M.E. Church organized a MISSOURI CONFERENCE in 1848 and started a second and third congregation in St. Louis in 1852 and 1857, through the years it was not as strong in the city as the Church South. However, the Church North was dominant in St. Louis during the Civil War. Editor D. R. MCANALLY of the St. Louis Christian Advocate (MES) was imprisoned, and ENOCH M. MARVIN (later bishop), pastor of Centenary Church, went South to avoid arrest. Union Church (ME), organized in 1862, flourished under the pastor, Henry Cox, who required persons joining the church to swear allegiance to the United States with the stars and stripes floating over their heads.

THE METHODIST PROTESTANT CHURCH had no constituency in St. Louis. The FREE METHODIST CHURCH had three congregations and 129 members in the city in 1968.

In 1858 some seventy-five Negroes in M.E. Church congregations withdrew and organized Wesley Chapel. As late as 1883 it was the only Negro M.E. Church in the city. In 1938 the CENTRAL WEST CONFERENCE (ME) had seven congregations and some 3,500 members in St. Louis.

The A.M.E. CHURCH organized St. Paul's Church in St. Louis in 1841 and established the Missouri Conference in 1855. In 1967 the denomination reported sixteen churches and 7,471 members in greater St. Louis. The A.M.E. ZION CHURCH began work in St. Louis in 1864. In 1967 it reported four congregations and 2,234 members. Shortly after its organization in 1870, the C.M.E. CHURCH began work in St. Louis, but in 1899 it still had only one congregation. In 1967 the denomination reported eleven churches and 6,340 members in greater St. Louis.

Considering the age and size of the City of St. Louis, Methodism has not established many institutions in or near it. The M.E. Church, South published the St. Louis Christian Advocate there, 1852-1931, and in 1865 that denomination founded an orphanage in the city now known as the Methodist Children's Home. The St. Louis Mission and Church Extension Society and Kingdom House, inaugurated in 1885 and 1903 by the Church South, are still functioning. Barnes Hospital, established in 1914, was closely related to but not owned by the Church South, and today the bishop of the St. Louis Area has the responsibility of appointing its trustees. The MISSOURI EAST CONFERENCE appoints the chaplain at Barnes Hospital. In 1853 representatives of the M.E. Church started the Central Christian Advocate which later moved to Kansas City. In 1970 the two Missouri Conferences allocated apportionments to the churches with the promise that when enough funds are in hand a Methodist home for the aged will be built in the vicinity of St. Louis.

In 1970, The United Methodist Church reported twenty-five churches in the City of St. Louis with 11,329 members, property valued at $11,180,857, and $1,320,149 raised for all purposes during the year. The two St. Louis Districts which include the city and the suburbs to a distance of forty miles north, south, and west, reported 113 congregations and 50,062 members in 1970.

General Minutes, MEC, MECS, MC, and UMC.

Minutes of the St. Louis Conference (MECS).

Minutes of the Missouri East Conference.

Almer Pennewell, A Voice in the Wilderness. Nashville: Parthenon Press, [n. d., circa 1962].

St. Louis Christian Advocate files, St. Louis Public Library. ALBEA GOBOLD

Barnes Hospital was established in 1914, as a trusteeship under the terms of the will of Robert A. Barnes, a St. Louis merchant who died in 1892. Barnes left $940,000 and directed the trustees to use $100,000 of it for a building. Convinced that an adequate plant could not be constructed for that amount, the trustees delayed building and invested the corpus. Twenty years later when it had grown to $2,000,000, they spent about half of it for a building and used the rest as endowment.

At the time Barnes Hospital was established Washington University Medical School was being reorganized. The two institutions affiliated, and through the years Barnes has been the teaching hospital of the Medical School.

Because of the friendship of Robert Barnes with Adam Hendrix, a banker in Fayette, Mo., who was a Methodist layman, Barnes Hospital from the beginning was related to the M.E. Church, South. Hendrix's son, Bishop EUGENE R. HENDRIX (MES), delivered the address at the laying of the cornerstone of the hospital, Oct. 11, 1912. In his speech the bishop said that Barnes "deemed the Methodists were best calculated to carry out his large plans" for a hospital for sick and injured persons without distinction of creed or color. Therefore Barnes provided in his will that the hospital trustees should be appointed by the Methodist bishop in charge in St. Louis, a practice that has continued to this day. Also, the Methodist Annual Conference which includes St. Louis appoints the hospital chaplain.

Barnes Hospital opened with twenty-six patients, Dec. 7, 1914. Today the hospital complex includes nine separate physical institutions which are owned or operated by the trustees. Among them are Children's, McMillan, Maternity, Wohl, Barnard Free Skin and Cancer, and Renard Psychiatric Hospitals. In 1970 these hospital units with over 1,200 beds reported some 350,000 in-patient days and 135,000 out-patients. With able medical men on its staff, Barnes is recognized as one of the outstanding private hospitals in America and indeed in the world. It keeps abreast of and contributes to the medical advances of our time. The late Everts A. Graham organized the hospital's department of chest surgery, and he himself was the first surgeon in the world to remove an entire lung of a patient suffering from lung cancer.

Barnes Hospital is approved by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals, and holds membership in the American Hospital Association, the Missouri Hospital Association, the Metropolitan Hospital Association of St. Louis, and the Association of American Medical Colleges.

The 1971 Agency Directory and Certification Manual of the Board of Health and Welfare Ministries, The United Methodist Church.

F. C. Tucker, Missouri. 1966.

NANCY CRAIG

Centenary Church. The trustees of Fourth Street (later First) Church resolved on March 2, 1838 that it was "expedient to build a new Methodist church in St. Louis." It was organized in 1839, and the pastor at Fourth Street served both congregations for three years. The cornerstone of Centenary Church was laid at Fifth and Pine Streets, May 10, 1842, and in October John H. Linn came from the KENTUCKY CONFERENCE to be the pastor. In 1843 the church reported 200 members, and in 1850 the Second General Conference (MES) was held at Centenary.

In 1867 Centenary Church decided to move farther west and bought a lot at the southeast corner of Sixteenth and Pine Streets for $36,000. The cornerstone of the new building was laid May 10, 1869, while the bishops of the denomination were in session in St. Louis, and Bishops J. O. ANDREW, H. N. MCYRE, and W. M. WIGHTMAN participated in the ceremony. In a crypt back of the chancel were placed the ashes of Thomas Drummond (1806-1835), the first Methodist preacher to die in St. Louis. Born in England, Drummond had come from the PITTSBURGH CONFERENCE as a missionary to the frontier.

From the time of its founding to the unification of Methodism in 1939, Centenary was a strong and prominent church in Southern Methodism. Under the long ministry of CHARLES W. TADLOCK, 1913-17 and 1919-37, its membership rose to 3,600. Three of Centenary's pastors were elevated to the episcopacy—ENOCH M. MARVIN (1854-56 and 1859-61), WILLIAM F. McMURRY (1902-05), and SAM R. HAY (1906). The 1890 General Conference convened at Centenary.

Some thought that the rapid changes in downtown St. Louis before and after World War II would compel Centenary to relocate or die. But Centenary has stayed put, the only non-liturgical Protestant church to survive in the St. Louis downtown area. Not only has it remained downtown, it has also continued as a fairly strong church, and in recent years has experienced modest growth in membership. The entire church plant was renovated about 1960 at a cost of $250,000. Urban renewal with high rise and split-level apartments has brought residents back to the neighborhood and many have joined Centenary. The church continues to draw members from over the city, the suburbs, and even from across the Mississippi River in Illinois. Since all new expressways in the region enter downtown St. Louis within a few blocks of Centenary, the church is easily accessible from all sections of the metropolitan area.

The resident bishop, the two St. Louis district superintendents, and the St. Louis Mission and Church Extension Society maintain offices in Centenary's education building.

In 1970 Centenary Church reported 790 members, property valued at $1,351,762, and $98,733 raised for all purposes during the year.

General Minutes, MEC, MECS, MC, and UMC.

Minutes of the Missouri Centenary Conference.

Francis E. Williams, Centenary Methodist Church of St. Louis. St. Louis: Mound City Press, 1939. J. LESTER MCCOE

Grace Church began in 1892 as Lindell Avenue Church (ME) at Lindell and Newstead. The charter members came from Union Church which was then located near Grand and Washington. The new church reported 110 members in 1893. Within a few years the congregation had built and paid for a stately English Gothic church valued at $165,000.

In 1913 when Lindell Avenue had 372 members the Roman Catholics completed a tremendous new cathedral just across the street on Lindell. The Methodist congregation then moved approximately three miles west to Skinker and Waterman just off the northwest corner of Forest Park and two blocks from the northeast corner of the Washington University campus. Lindell Church not only relocated, it literally moved its impressive Gothic church building stone by stone to its new site, an unusual engineering feat for that day which was written up in several journals. Thereafter it was called Grace Church.

In the new location the church membership doubled by 1931 and Grace became the premier church of the denomination in St. Louis. At unification in 1939 the church had 1,235 members. Through the years Grace has had strong lay leadership, and several of its members have served on the general boards of the denomination. In 1961 Grace reached a peak membership of 1,691 and thereafter with the movement of people to St. Louis County it declined slowly.

About 1955 the entire church plant was modernized and a chapel was added. Under the leadership of Wesley H. Hager, pastor, 1949-70, Grace Church led St. Louis Methodism in contributions to world service and some other benevolent causes, participated in the ecumenical movement, and began working with neighboring Protestant and Roman Catholic churches in developing a ministry adequate for the changing metropolitan scene.

In 1970 Grace Church reported 1,197 members, property valued at $1,946,344 and $156,396 raised for all purposes during the year.

General Minutes, MEC, MC, and UMC. WESLEY H. HAGER
ALBEA GODBOLD

Methodist Children's Home of Missouri began in 1865 as the Methodist Orphan Home (MES). In 1937 the name was changed to Methodist Children's Home, and at unification in 1939 when it began receiving modest financial support from all of Missouri Methodism, the words "of Missouri" were added.

In 1939 Central Wesleyan Orphan Asylum, Warrenton, Mo., was merged with the home in St. Louis. The former was founded in 1864 by German-speaking Methodists, and after their conference (ST. LOUIS GERMAN) was merged in 1925, the M.E. Church continued to maintain the orphanage. The St. Louis home received thirty-two children from Warrenton in 1939.

The Methodist Orphan Home was located on Maryland Avenue in St. Louis, not far from St. John's Church, and through the years that congregation took a special interest in it, giving both leadership and financial support. The children from the home regularly attended Sunday school and church at St. John's. From 1922 to 1939 the names of the trustees of the home were printed in the St. Louis Conference Minutes, and prior to 1936 all of the trustees were members of St. John's Church.

In 1920 the St. Louis Conference voted to ask the churches to take a free will offering for the home on the Sunday before Thanksgiving. In 1923 the statistical tables in the conference minutes began to include a column showing the amount contributed by each charge for the orphanage. The first year St. John's Church gave $15,000, four other churches gave a total of $110, while the rest contributed nothing. The next year the St. John's members reverted to giving directly to the orphanage, and the gifts of the other churches in the conference gradually increased until they reached a total of $1,230 in 1938. In 1941 all the churches in Missouri gave $6,051. In 1955 the amount was $35,895, and in 1970 it was $40,432.

In 1928 the home in St. Louis employed a professionally trained social worker as administrator, one of the first in the area to do so. Also, it became the first church-related children's home in Missouri to qualify for membership in the Child Welfare League of America.

In the years following the founding of the Orphan Home, interested persons bequeathed money to it and an endowment was built up. The home's financial report to the conferences in 1941 showed that about $20,000 of its total income of some $39,000 for the year was interest from its endowment.

In 1951 the home was relocated in two new buildings on a five-acre campus at 3715 Jamieson Avenue, St. Louis. The residence with four apartments for nine children each attracted wide attention, because it meant that with house parents in each apartment the children would be living in a family. In addition, the home maintained a staff of social workers.

Most of the children in the home come from homes broken by neglect, desertion, disease, and divorce, and they are referred to the institution by ministers, circuit courts, clinics, health departments, and welfare offices. Most of them need to stay in the home less than two years. Including the children who are served in its foster home program, the Children's Home ministers to 150 to 200 children each year.

Minutes of the St. Louis, Missouri, Southwest Missouri, Missouri East, and Missouri West Conferences.

DONALD L. GOUVENS
ALBEA GODBOLD

St. John's Church was established in 1868 partly as the result of dislocations caused by the Civil War. Asbury and Christy Chapels (MES) sold their properties and joined in launching St. John's Church in the Stoddard Addition, a fast growing suburb two and one-half miles west of the Mississippi River. With liberal financial assistance from First and Centenary Churches, a rather impressive building, which still stands, was erected at 29th and Locust Streets. The new congregation was organized, October 18, with eighty charter members. Francis A. Morris was the first pastor. St. John's quickly became one of the strong churches of the connection.

In 1901 the congregation erected at a cost of $220,000

ST. JOHN'S CHURCH, ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI

a magnificent Italian Renaissance edifice at Kingshighway and Washington five miles west of the river. The church then had 888 members. James W. Lee, who served three four-year terms as pastor between 1893 and 1914, led in relocating the church and almost singlehandedly raised the money for the new building.

About 1925 the congregation considered relocating again still farther west, but convinced that their architectural monument at the intersection of the two thoroughfares which traversed the city east and west and north and south would always draw people for worship, they decided to stay. In 1928 an education building and a chapel costing $300,000 were added to the church, and in 1949 the chancel was rebuilt and other improvements made at a cost of more than $100,000.

Believing that an endowment fund would be an asset if not a necessity for the long pull, the church officials inaugurated one in 1925. It grew slowly at first, totaling $75,000 in twenty years, but after another score of years it was eight times that amount. For many years income from the endowment was added to the corpus, but more recently it has been used to keep the large plant in first class condition and to buy parking space adjoining the church.

Prior to unification in 1939 St. John's was financially one of the strongest churches in the connection. In its first fifty years it raised for all purposes about $2,000,000 or an average of $40,000 per year, an impressive figure for a Southern Methodist congregation in that period. Probably one-half the money raised by the church in its first half century was given for causes outside its own walls. Some $150,000 went to help establish or build eight other churches of the denomination in St. Louis between 1879 and 1910. Between 1909 and 1938 substantial sums were donated to build "St. John's" Churches in Soochow, CHINA; RIO DE JANEIRO, BRAZIL; and Okayama, JAPAN. The Soochow church was said to be the largest and strongest of Southern Methodism in the Orient.

During its first seventy years St. John's was closely related to three service institutions in St. Louis—the Methodist Children's Home, Kingdom House, and Barnes Hospital—which were established in 1865, 1903, and 1914. Through the years the church raised large sums for the Children's Home and Kingdom House, while at the same time undergirding their annual budgets. In addition, many members of St. John's served on their boards of managers and trustees. For many years all of the trustees of the Children's Home and Barnes Hospital were members of St. John's.

Two St. John's pastors were elevated to the episcopacy, JOHN M. MOORE (1909) and IVAN LEE HOLT (1918-37).

Since World War II many churches of various denominations in the environs of Kingshighway and Washington have relocated farther west or have passed out of existence. For thirty-five years after deciding against moving farther west St. John's was able to hold its own and even grow a little in membership; it had 1,425 members in 1925 and 1,554 in 1960. But since the latter date its membership has declined—1,120 in 1965 and 569 in 1970.

It remains to be seen whether St. John's and many other churches similarly situated, that is, with loyal members, an impressive and well-equipped plant, an ample endowment, and a strategic location, can survive and continue to serve in our cities.

In 1971 St. John's Church reported 550 members, property valued at $1,848,000 and $86,102 raised for all purposes during the year.

Thomas M. Finney, Life and Labors of Enoch M. Marvin. St. Louis: James H. Chambers, 1850.

General Minutes, MECS.

Albea Godbold, A Unique Church, Centennial Address, St. John's Church, St. Louis. Typescript, 10 pp. 1968.

Minutes of the St. Louis and Missouri East Conferences.

St. Louis Christian Advocate files. St. Louis Public Library. ALBEA GODBOLD

St. Paul A.M.E. Church, the oldest church of the denomination west of the Mississippi River, was established in 1841 by WILLIAM PAUL QUINN who had been commissioned by the General Conference to extend the boundaries of the denomination westward. Forbidden to preach in St. Louis because it was slave territory, Quinn, it is claimed, stood on the Illinois side of the river and preached across to people on the Missouri side. The result was the formation in May, 1841, of Little Bethel Church, later named St. Paul, in the home of Priscilla Baltimore in East St. Louis, Ill. John Anderson was the first pastor.

Coming across the river to St. Louis, the small congregation met in homes and blacksmith shops for at least two years. In time a church that cost $5,000 was built at Eleventh and Lucas Streets. In 1872 a new brick church was dedicated on an adjoining lot. Four years later the church reported 572 members.

In 1891 St. Paul relocated at Leffingwell and Lawton, dedicating there a church that cost $90,000. Because of an extensive urban renewal program, the congregation was compelled to move again in 1962, locating at Hamilton and Julian Avenues where it was able to build a church, an education building, a community center, and a parsonage.

As the mother church of the denomination in St. Louis, St. Paul established a mission at Enright and Pendleton Streets in 1925 which grew into St. John Church, a strong congregation.

Three St. Paul pastors have become bishops, NOAH W. WILLIAMS (1924-32), FRANK MADISON REID (1936-40), and G. WAYMAN BLAKELY (1953-64). Through the years St. Paul Church has entertained the A.M.E. General Conference several times. In 1969 the membership of the church was approximately 2,000.

Minnie Ross Sims, History of St. Paul A.M.E. Church. Pamphlet, 1965.

M. Simpson, Cyclopaedia. 1878. GRANT S. SHOCKLEY

Union Memorial Church is the oldest continuing Negro congregation in St. Louis, and was recognized and honored in 1966 during the celebration of American Methodism's bicentennial. The church was organized in 1840 and in 1846 was served by a local preacher, James Farrar. The congregation worshipped at Broadway between Morgan Street (now Delmar) and Franklin Avenue. Adolphus Foshee succeeded Farrar, and the church was guided by various dedicated white preachers until 1865, when E. W. S. Peck of Baltimore, Md. became the first Negro pastor of the church. In 1873 under the pastorate of F. H. Small, the congregation bought the building on Wash Street (now Cole) for $10,000, and moved to the new location on Aug. 21, 1873. On Oct. 26, 1884 the edifice was dedicated, then called Wesley Chapel, with Bishop BOWMAN and E. W. S. Peck officiating.

In 1899 Wesley Chapel and Elliot Avenue congregations consolidated and sold Wesley Chapel for $10,000. The merged church was named Centennial. In April 1900, Bishop FITZGERALD, presiding over the annual session of the Central Missouri Conference at Marshall, Mo., appointed R. E. Gillum to Centennial, and soon thereafter the name was changed to Union Memorial M.E. Church.

By 1904 Union Memorial's membership had outgrown the building's capacity, and a committee contracted for the purchase of Temple Israel on the corner of Leffingwell Avenue and Pine Street. On July 28, 1907 the congregation moved to the new location, having purchased the building for $41,500.

The following churches were started by Union Memorial: First M. E. Church in Kinloch Park, 1907; Wesley Chapel, East St. Louis, Mo., 1908; Webster Groves, 1908; Cosby Chapel, 1914; Asbury, 1915; Samaritan, 1917; LaSalle Street, 1920, the last three located in St. Louis.

E. W. KELLEY served as pastor from 1939 to 1944, when he was elected to the episcopacy. He left a new parsonage as one of his contributions. Although each minister shared greatly in the growth of the church, J. J. Hicks brought outstanding recognition to Union Memorial. Under his leadership the property at Belt and Barmter was purchased for $51,000 and an ultramodern building constructed. During the pastorate of John N. Doggett, Jr., a new parsonage has been purchased and a plan is proceeding to liquidate the outstanding debt. In 1970 the church reported 1,067 members.

Grace Bumbry, internationally famed Metropolitan Opera star, is a product of Union Memorial. She donated her talent in 1965 to aid her church in assisting promising young students.

JOHN N. DOGETT, JR.

ST. LOUIS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, THE, was published weekly, barring a few interruptions, for or by the Missouri Conferences (MES) from 1850 to 1931. The organ was suppressed for a time during the Civil War because of the alleged seditious utterances of the editor David R. McAnally and he himself was imprisoned for some weeks.

McAnally served a total of thirty years between 1851 and his death in 1892. Controversy involving both ministers and laymen continually swirled around him, but even so he was a capable editor. He established policies which endured throughout the life of the paper—serious articles, sermons, and addresses dealing with contemporary religious, social and economic issues, together with extensive coverage of local, district, annual conference, and church-wide events. His high literary standards won subscribers outside church circles. Displaced by THOMAS M. FINNEY as editor in 1869, McAnally was recalled three years later, an indication that even his detractors recognized his superior journalistic ability.

Prior to 1891 responsibility for the paper was handled in various ways. At first a committee published it for the conferences. Then in 1870 a joint stock company called the Southwestern Book and Publishing Company bought and operated it. Two years later Logan Dameron, president of the company, bought up the stock and published the paper for the benefit of the conferences. In 1881 he tried to give the paper to the conferences but the ST. LOUIS CONFERENCE, influenced by a quarrel then in progress between McAnally and some ministers and laymen, would not agree. In 1886 Dameron deeded the paper to the conferences, retaining a life interest. Four years later he sold his interest, and in 1891 WILLIAM B. PALMORE bought the paper and gave it to the conferences. Thereafter it was wholly owned by them and was controlled through a joint conference publication committee.

McAnally died in 1892 and Palmore then became editor, serving until his own death in 1914. During Palmore's time the paid circulation rose to more than 20,000. He wrote good editorials and extensively covered local church news. Numerous anti-liquor and anti-tobacco articles marked him as a reform leader in Missouri. Travelogues covering his visits to mission stations and places of interest throughout the world gave readers fresh impressions of missions and world affairs.

Several editors followed Palmore in quick succession: Charles C. Woods, ALFRED FRANKLIN SMITH (later editor of the Nashville Christian Advocate), George B. Winton, and Charles O. Ransford. The latter took office in 1923 and though widely known in Missouri, he was unable to arrest the steady decline in circulation. With the onset of the economic depression, the conferences were unwilling to subsidize the paper and it ceased publication in October, 1931.

St. Louis Christian Advocate files, St. Louis Public Library. F. C. Tucker, Missouri. 1966. FRANK C. TUCKER

ST. LOUIS CONFERENCE (ME). See MISSOURI CONFERENCE (ME).

ST. LOUIS CONFERENCE (MES) was organized at Boonville, Mo., in October 1846 with Bishop ROBERT PAINE presiding. Formed by dividing the MISSOURI CONFERENCE, its territory included the part of the state below the Missouri River. At the beginning the Conference had six districts, St. Louis, Boonville, Cape Girardeau, Lexington, Springfield, and Steelville. It had 12,567 white and 1,304 colored members.

In 1850 the St. Louis Christian Advocate was established as an official organ of the M.E. Church, South. With DAVID R. MCANALLY, an able writer and administrator, as editor, the paper achieved a wide circulation beyond Missouri, and it strengthened Southern Methodism in the state. The organ continued publication until 1931.

In 1855 the St. Louis Conference joined the Missouri Conference in launching CENTRAL COLLEGE at Fayette, the one Methodist college in the state which has survived to the present time. In 1869 the conference, interested in projecting a college in southeast Missouri, became affiliated with Bellevue Collegiate Institute at Caledonia which the citizens there had launched in 1867. Becoming convinced in time that there was no future for a school in Caledonia which was twelve miles from a railroad, the conference severed its connections with Bellevue in 1893 and three years later accepted Marvin College at Fredericktown which continued operation until 1924.

In 1877 the St. Louis District of the conference adopted as a church institution the Methodist Orphans Home which was begun two years before by a conference member, W. W. Prottzman, and a layman named W. H. Markham. In 1941 this institution, which had rendered outstanding service, received the children from the Central Wesleyan Orphanage at Warrenton, Mo., which was founded and maintained for many years by the ST. LOUIS GERMAN CONFERENCE (MEC). The name was then changed to the Methodist Children's Home of Missouri. Housed in new buildings in St. Louis, the home continues to render notable service to children.

Kingdom House in St. Louis grew out of a mission Sunday school which was started by St. John's Church in 1904. The WOMAN'S HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY of the denomination soon took responsibility for "social work activities" at Kingdom House. Today the institution has an adequate building, and it receives financial support both from the conference and from the united fund of the city.

The conference established a summer assembly known as Epworth Among the Hills at Arcadia in 1908. In the 1950's a large camp called Blue Mountain was developed nearby as an added feature.

In 1892 Robert A. Barnes gave $1,000,000 for a hospital in St. Louis and stipulated that its trustees should be appointed by the presiding bishop of the Methodist Church. Barnes Hospital opened in 1914 and today it is the nucleus of one of the great medical centers of the world. While the hospital is neither owned nor operated by the church, the conference has maintained the chaplaincy from the beginning, and its Golden Cross offering is directed annually to the hospital.

In 1870 the St. Louis Conference was divided to form the Southwest Missouri Conference. (The new body was called the West St. Louis Conference until 1874.) Before the division the St. Louis Conference had nine districts, ninety-seven charges, and 20,304 white and 243 colored members. The next year the statistics were four districts, forty-six charges and 9,942 white and twelve colored members. In 1900 there were five districts and 26,791 members. At unification in 1939 the St. Louis Conference brought 268 ministers, 124 charges, 259 churches, and 46,379 members into The Methodist Church. In 1941 there were 62,949 members.

Three members of the St. Louis Conference were elected bishops in the M.E. Church, South, ENOCH M. MARVIN (1866), WILLIAM F. McMURRY (1918), and IVAN LEE HOLT (1938).

The Board of Finance (Pensions) of the Southern Church was domiciled in St. Louis from the time of its organization in 1922. LUTHER E. TODD, a member of the St. Louis Conference, was the first general secretary.

By authority of the 1960 SOUTH CENTRAL JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCE, the three Missouri conferences were consolidated into two in 1961. All of the St. Louis Conference became a part of the new MISSOURI EAST CONFERENCE. At its last session in 1961, the St. Louis Conference reported six districts, Cape Girardeau, Farmington, Jefferson City, Poplar Bluff, Rolla and St. Louis. There were 243 ministers, 358 churches, 233 charges, and 89,199 members. The property was valued at $29,891,712.

General Minutes, MECS and MC.

Minutes of the St. Louis Conference.

Frank C. Tucker, The Methodist Church in Missouri. 1966.
F. E. MASER

ST. LOUIS GERMAN CONFERENCE (ME) was organized in St. Louis, Sept. 3, 1879 with Bishop THOMAS BOWMAN presiding. It was formed by dividing the SOUTHWEST GERMAN CONFERENCE. The latter (called Southwestern German Conference until 1868) was one of the original German language conferences created by the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1864. The territory of the St. Louis German Conference included east MISSOURI, southern ILLINOIS, and southeast IOWA. At the beginning the conference had four districts, St. Louis, Belleville, Quincy, and Burlington. There were eighty-four charges and 7,564 members.

Methodist work among the Germans in Missouri began in 1844. (See MISSOURI.) A German mission district with eleven charges was formed in the MISSOURI CONFERENCE in 1844. But in 1845 the German preachers and churches opposed to slavery and unwilling to adhere South with the Missouri Conference, were attached to the ILLINOIS CONFERENCE, an arrangement which continued until the formation of the Southwestern German Conference in 1864.

The German Methodists established a college and an orphanage in Missouri which did notable work so long as the German language conferences continued. The Germans started what was called the German and English College in Quincy, Ill., in 1854, but it failed during the Civil War. Determined to establish a self-supporting school and to care for children orphaned by the war, the German Methodists then bought 932 acres of land at Warrenton, Mo. (1864). In 1869 they secured a charter for Central Wesleyan College and Orphan Asylum. Three years later a separate charter was issued for the college. Adequate buildings were erected, an endowment of $170,000 was built up, accreditation was achieved, and enrollment exceeded 350. The German Methodist College, Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, was merged with Central Wesleyan in 1908, bringing a theological department with it. The future seemed promising. But the first world war created difficulties for the school. Then in the 1920's the German language conferences disappeared, a turn of events which drastically curtailed financial support and the number of prospective students. The college closed in 1941.

Central Wesleyan Orphanage operated a 300-acre farm and cared for up to 100 children. It was one of the first orphanages in the nation to place children in cottages with house parents, thus simulating normal family life. At unification in 1939 the orphanage was merged with the Methodist Children's Home in St. Louis.

Partly due to German immigration into the region, the St. Louis German Conference grew and reached its peak strength about 1900. In that year it reported ninety-three charges and 11,134 members. In the years following the membership continued at about 10,000. As time passed some ministers and churches transferred to the English-speaking conferences. In 1925 when the St. Louis German Conference was absorbed by the overlying conferences of the M.E. Church, it reported two districts, Peoria and St. Louis, sixty-two charges, 9,982 members, and property valued at $1,106,600.

General Minutes, MEC.

Frank C. Tucker, The Methodist Church in Missouri. 1966.
F. E. MASER

ST. PAUL, MINNESOTA, U.S.A., the capital city of MINNESOTA, is regarded as a strategic railroad center. St. Paul and MINNEAPOLIS are referred to as The Twin Cities. Only the Mississippi River divides them.

Methodism in St. Paul had its beginning in a series of small missions that were built along the Mississippi River. South St. Paul was the first mission, beginning in 1837. This was an Indian settlement and was called Kaposia. Two years later, RED ROCK, now Newport, another Indian settlement, established another mission. The first Methodist church in St. Paul was organized in 1848, and in 1849 the Market Street Church was built, the first Protestant and Methodist church building in Minnesota. Out of this first church came the Jackson Street Church in 1856; and out of this church came the present Central Park Church. Out of the old Market Street Church of St. Paul came the First Church, which recently has been united with the Trinity Church and is called First-Trinity. First-Trinity has a membership of 592 members. Central Park Church has a membership of 629.

Hamline Church is the most beautiful cathedral-like church building in St. Paul. It has a membership of 992 as of 1970. In former years, this church had a much larger one. This is likewise true of First and Trinity Churches. Hamline Church is the host to the MINNESOTA ANNUAL CONFERENCE each year, along with HAMLINE UNIVERSITY, named for Bishop LEONIDAS HAMLINE. This Methodist related university had its beginning in Redwing in 1854, even before Minnesota became a state. In 1880 it was moved to St. Paul where it has grown on its original site to one of the finest schools of higher learning in Minnesota. There are more than 1,200 students enrolled in Hamline University each year. Hamline was the first institution of higher learning in Minnesota, one of the first twelve Methodist colleges in the United States, and the fourth Methodist college to open as a coeducational college.

St. Anthony Park Church has another beautiful site and an up-to-date building containing a beautiful worship sanctuary, an adequately equipped educational unit and social hall, fine office facilities and a beautiful chapel. It has a membership of 578 members. It is located near the agricultural college of the State University and serves the student body in a very fine way as well as their resident membership. Centennial is a new suburban Methodist church located a block off from North Snelling Avenue. In fifteen years of its existence, this congregation that began with a chartered membership of sixty-seven has grown to a membership of 1,066. In this short period of time, they have built three units and have adequately furnished them. Fairmount Avenue Church began in 1852 and is located directly across the campus from MacCalester College on South Snelling Avenue. It has a remodeled church edifice that Methodism in St. Paul is likewise proud of. It has a sanctuary "in the round," an adequate educational unit, offices, social hall and a beautiful church parlor. Its membership (1970) was 553. Arlington Hills Church has a membership of 548, and is located in the northeast part of St. Paul. St. Paul's Church is another beautifully located church, with a membership of 556.

In the twenty-five St. Paul United Methodist churches, there is a membership of 11,062 (1970). It should be added that St. Paul has been and is a strong Catholic city, claiming about forty percent of its total population. The Lutheran church is another strong group in St. Paul, as it is throughout Minnesota.

Hamline Church is the college church of Minnesota Methodism. It is located across Englewood Avenue from Hamline University, Methodism's only college in Minnesota, and has been closely associated with the University throughout the eighty-five years of its history. The church was literally born on the campus of the University. On Sept. 12, 1880, Hamline Church held its first service of worship in the auditorium of "Old Main," conducted by Charles F. Bradley of the University faculty. Services continued in "Old Main" for three years, until the first church building was erected on the site of the present building; and Hamline professors continued to serve the church as ministers until 1886 when the first full-time minister was appointed. The church continues its ministry to the campus. Many of the Hamline faculty are active members. Approximately half of the student body attend its services. The University frequently uses its facilities for chapel services, choir concerts and other special programs. Former presidents and faculty members are memorialized in its magnificent stained-windows.

After a destructive fire on Dec. 26, 1925, the present beautiful structure was erected. The exterior is of Bedford limestone in accurate Gothic detail, and the walls are laid in random ashlar.

Hamline Church has not only served Methodism's university, but it has also served the Minnesota Conference. Since the merger of the Minnesota Conference with the NORTHERN MINNESOTA CONFERENCE in 1948, all conference sessions have been held on the Hamline campus, with both the church and the university acting as hosts. Most of the ministers ordained in the past eighteen years have been ordained in Hamline Church.

E. F. Baumhofer, Trails in Minnesota. 1966.

Journals of the Minnesota Conference. ORVAL CLAY DITTES
PAUL O. METZGER

SAINT PAUL SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY (METHODIST), Kansas City, Missouri, was one of the two schools authorized by the General Conference of 1956. The bishops of the Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, and St. Louis areas appointed provisional trustees, and the school was chartered as the National Methodist Theological Seminary, March 3, 1958. The present name was assumed in 1961. Conversations concerning the school's use of the campus and facilities of NATIONAL COLLEGE culminated in the deeding of this property, valued at $2,500,000, to the seminary in 1964. The seminary opened on the former campus of National College in September, 1965, with an enlarged and expanded program in church vocations, including special emphasis on preparation for the pastoral ministry and the training of women for Christian vocations. It gives the B.D. and M.R.E. (Religious Education) degrees. The governing board is seventy-five trustees, nine of whom are chosen from the six jurisdictions plus three extra from the South Central Jurisdiction, twenty-six from the annual conferences, fifteen from the Woman's Division of Christian Service, two from the Board of Education, four from alumni, nine at large, six bishops and the president ex officio.

JOHN O. GROSS

ST. PETERSBURG, FLORIDA, U.S.A., a resort city in Pinellas County with a population of 213,189 in 1970, was founded in 1888 and incorporated in 1903. Methodism was brought to the county by settlers from GEORGIA and north FLORIDA; in 1869 they built a church at Curlew, the oldest community in the county. What is now First Church, St. Petersburg, was established in 1889 by Southern Methodists when the town had a population of thirty. The church began with seven members. In 1891 the M.E. Church started what is now Christ Church. For many years afterward the two congregations were known as "Southern" and "Northern" churches.

At unification in 1939, the M.E. Church had five churches in St. Petersburg with 2,160 members to four for the M.E. Church, South with 1,833 members.

In 1970 The United Methodist Church had twenty churches in St. Petersburg with 22,332 members. The property of those congregations was valued at $8,454,367, and they raised for all purposes during the year $976,877.

First Church was founded in 1889 with seven members when the population of the village was 30. At the time the Congregationalists in the community were worshipping in a railroad car, and there was a small Episcopal church two miles away. The village was officially named St. Petersburg in 1890.

In 1895, citrus growers came to the St. Petersburg area seeking frost-free land. By 1900 the town had 1,575 people and First Church reported 134 members. In that year the congregation's frame building was moved to the present church site. In 1910 it gave way to a brick structure which in turn was replaced in 1924 by what is still one of the largest church edifices in Florida Methodism.

First Church had 1,137 members in 1924, and the number rose to 1,850 by 1927. The collapse of the Florida boom in 1928 and the national economic depression which began in 1929 caused a drop in membership to 966 by 1934. Beginning in 1924, First Church carried a debt which at times approached $300,000. Loss of the building valued at $600,000 was a constant threat. However, a strong sermon by O. E. Rice moved a winter visitor to offer a loan to the church. Three members added to the amount, and the financial crisis was eased. The building was finally dedicated debt free in April, 1936. In succeeding years improvements and innovations, including an eight-story carillon bell tower, were made. After 1934, the membership rose steadily; it reached 1,503 in 1939, 2,566 by 1950, and during the 1960's it was close to 3,000.

In 1970, First Church reported 2,899 members, property valued at $1,530,638, and $149,747 raised for all purposes during the year.

Christ Church was organized as a Methodist Episcopal congregation, St. John's River Conference, in 1891. Called "St. Petersburg" in the conference journal from the beginning, the name was changed to First Avenue in 1925 and to Christ Church in 1953.

At first the church grew slowly; five years after its founding it had only twenty members, and only 208 after 25 years. However, with the influx of people from the north after the first world war, the membership steadily increased, growing to 870 in 1925, 1,422 in 1939, 2,396 in 1950, and 3,726 in 1960.

During the pastorate of Schuyler E. Garth, 1929-33, later bishop, First Avenue began holding two morning services to seat the crowds, one of the first if not the very first church in the nation to do that. The church's seating capacity was then 1,039, but it drew large crowds because of its popularity with winter tourists and permanent residents alike.

A radio station in the church tower, the first in the city, was awarded a broadcasting license in the mid-1920's. Though the city now owns the WSUN radio station, the church sends its worship services, including Holy Communion, to some 250 shut-in members and others by means of radio. The church loses about 120 members by death each year, due to the fact that so many are retirees.

Medical Forums, now conducted in over 50 cities, originated in St. Petersburg and are held in Christ Church. Also, the church sponsors a Saturday night concert series by American college and school choirs.

Paul R. Hortin was appointed associate pastor of the church in 1931, became senior minister in 1933, and in 1970 was still serving in that capacity. In 1952 a new sanctuary with a seating capacity of 1,844 was erected and was soon debt free. In recent years 15 men from the congregation have gone into the ministry.

In 1970, Christ Church reported 4,332 members, 1,763 enrolled in the Church school, property valued at $1,405,571, and $147,319 raised for all purposes during the year.

PASADENA CHURCH, ST. PETERSBURG, FLORIDA

Pasadena Community Church was started in 1924 and organized in 1925 in the sparsely settled section of Pasadena seven miles from St. Petersburg. Sponsored by the M.E. Church, South, it was projected as a church for the whole community, and from the beginning it has drawn members from many different denominations. Its first building, erected in 1925, was of Spanish architecture.

Prior to 1929, the congregation was served for brief periods by three different ministers. In December, 1928, three laymen from the church attending a district conference, heard a sermon by a young minister named J. Wallace Hamilton. They asked for Hamilton as their pastor, and in May, 1929, he was appointed to the Pasadena Church. He served it continuously thereafter for 39 years until his death in 1968. During his long ministry there Hamilton became widely known as one of the ablest preachers in the United States.

For many years the membership of the church grew slowly. It did not permanently pass the 100 mark until 1935. Beginning in 1941 when the membership was 360, Hamilton was given an associate pastor, but not until 10 years later did the number of members exceed 1,000. Thereafter the church grew rapidly, increasing from 1,283 members in 1952 to 1,668 in 1953. In 1956 there were 2,100 and in 1964 more than 3,000.

As a young minister apparently Hamilton worked harder at preparing sermons which would draw people to the services than at enlisting them as church members. Within a few years after he assumed the pastorate there were overflowing congregations and amplifiers were installed so people seated on benches outside the church could hear the services. Later additional ground was purchased so that people could sit in their cars while participating in worship. It is claimed that on Easter Sunday in 1951, there were 3,450 automobiles with 10,000 people listening to the service in what the church calls its Garden Sanctuary.

Between 1937 and 1957 Pasadena Church conducted four campaigns for funds and built two wings, two education buildings, and a chapel. Also, it acquired 18 acres for the Garden Sanctuary. In 1960, a new church edifice with a seating capacity of 2,000 was completed at a cost of $850,000, and a 50-rank organ valued at $150,000 was installed. Through the years the church has kept itself practically free of debt.

In 1970, Pasadena Church reported 3,510 members, 1,055 enrolled in church school, property valued at $2,402,152, and $132,825 raised for all purposes during the year.

W. E. Brooks, Florida Methodism. 1965.

A Brief Portrayal of Pasadena Community Church. Pamphlet, n.d.

General Minutes, UMC, 1970.

Minutes of the Florida Conference.

F. S. Mead, Seven Miles Out. Pamphlet, n.d.

James M. Smith, "History of the St. Petersburg District." Ms., 1966.

JESSE A. EARL

ALBEA GODBOLD

N. B. H.

FRANK M. SLEEPER

ST. SIMON'S ISLAND is some sixty miles south of SAVANNAH, Ga. While in America, JOHN and CHARLES WESLEY were associated with the island as well as with Savannah. General OGLETHORPE built a fort and a garrison town, both called Frederica, on St. Simon's Island and stationed a British regiment with a number of its families there. As chaplain to the colony, John Wesley ministered to the people on the island. Ruins of the fort and foundations of the houses may be seen today at the Fort Frederica National Monument at the northwest corner of St. Simon's Island. In the 1920's a causeway was built connecting the island with the city of Brunswick, Ga., and in succeeding years the island has been developed as a resort and residence area.

In 1947 the SOUTH GEORGIA CONFERENCE established a church on St. Simon's Island, and about the same time it purchased the Hamilton Plantation on the west side some miles south of Frederica. There under the guidance of Bishop ARTHUR J. MOORE, the South Georgia Conference Center, Epworth-by-the-Sea, was developed. The old Hamilton family chapel was renamed Lovely Lane Chapel, honoring the memory of the BALTIMORE edifice in which the CHRISTMAS CONFERENCE was held in 1784.

LOVELY LANE CHAPEL, ST. SIMONS ISLAND

In the 1950's South Georgia Methodism built at Epworth-by-the-Sea a dining room, auditorium, youth building, and lodges which throughout the year accommodate numerous gatherings of young people and adults, some groups coming from outside the conference. Several annual sessions of the South Georgia Conference have been held at Epworth-by-the-Sea. The Winter Camp Meeting held in February has been a high point at the Center in recent years. The Arthur J. Moore Memorial Building at the Center was completed in June 1960, when Bishop Moore was presiding over the South Georgia Conference for the last time before his retirement.

Epworth Acres, just north of Epworth-by-the-Sea, is a section of privately owned homes on lots made available by the Conference Center. A number of the South Georgia Conference superannuate homes are there. By the mid-1960's the conference had erected an office building at the Center to house its Boards of Education and Missions. Thus, within a quarter of a century South Georgia Methodism transformed an old cotton plantation into a productive center of Christian influence, and gave it a name widely known in Methodism, Epworth-by-the-Sea.

Minutes of the South Georgia Conference, 1945-67.

WALTER S. MCCLESKEY

ST. STEPHEN'S COLLEGE, formerly ALBERTA COLLEGE (South), former Methodist theological College in Edmonton, Alberta.

Originating as the theological department of Alberta College in 1909, Alberta College (South) took advantage, in 1910, of the offer of the University of Alberta of a free site on the campus of the new university. The building then erected was known until the formation of The United Church of Canada in 1925 as Alberta College South, the theological college of the Methodist Church in Alberta.

J. H. RIDDELL was the first principal, and continued in office until 1917, when D. E. THOMAS became acting principal. In 1919 A. S. TUTTLE was elected principal and professor of philosophy of religion. Until 1925 the college provided high school matriculation subjects as well as theological courses, and also a men's residence for students. Since 1925 the college has provided theological courses exclusively. From 1911 until 1925 Alberta College South graduated ninety-four candidates for the ministry.

With church union in 1925, Alberta College (South) merged with Robertson College, the Presbyterian seminary in Edmonton, the premises used being those of the former Methodist institution. At first called United Theological College, in the spring of 1927 the two college boards became one under the new name of St. Stephen's College, incorporated by the provincial legislature. Until the death of J. M. Millar, former principal of Robertson College, Tuttle and Millar were joint principals, Tuttle becoming principal in January, 1930.

With the retirement of Tuttle, A. D. Miller, professor of Old Testament language and literature, was elected principal in October 1943, retiring from this office in 1946 after thirty-five years' service. E. J. Thompson became principal in October, 1946. Under Thompson's leadership, funds were raised for the erection of a new unit for classrooms, offices, and library, which was opened February 25, 1953. On Thompson's retirement in June, 1966, G. M. TUTTLE was appointed to succeed him as principal.

J. Macdonald, The History of the University of Alberta. Edmonton: University of Alberta, 1958.

J. H. Riddell, Methodism in the Middle West. Toronto: Ryerson, 1946.

J. E. NIX

ST. STITHIANS COLLEGE, Johannesburg, SOUTH AFRICA, is the newest connexional school for boys. It is set in 250 acres some ten miles north of Johannesburg and has an enrollment of 625 boys from the ages of five to seventeen. The school follows an academic course and seeks to prepare for University entrance. The first headmaster was Walter Mears, who was succeeded in 1962 by M. T. S. Krige. The foundation of St. Stithians in 1953 was the result of generous donations from two Cornishmen, Albert Charles Collins and William Mountstephens, in order to provide a liberal education with Christian teaching.

II. F. KIRKBY

SALAKO, NATHANAEAL ODUYEBO (1903-), president of the Conference of the Methodist Church of NIGERIA, was born at Ikenne in the Ijebu Remo Division of the Western State on Dec. 12, 1903. He was educated at the Methodist schools of Ikenne and Iperu from 1912 to 1922 and then went to Wesley College, Ibadan, from 1923 to December 1927. He started as a sub-pastor at the Imo Methodist Church in 1928 where he taught. In 1929 he went to the Oyo Methodist Circuit as sub-pastor in charge of the circuit, as well as being headmaster of the Methodist school at Oyo. In 1930, however, he felt a definite call to go into the Methodist ministry and re-entered Wesley College in 1932 as a divinity student. He served Osu in Ilesha Circuit in 1933, returned to Wesley College and then in 1935 was stationed as circuit minister to the Imesi-Ile Methodist Church. From 1936 to 1938 he was in charge of Oshogbo Methodist Church and in 1939 was at Igbo-Ora in Ibadan Circuit.

He was ordained as a minister in full connection with the British Methodist Conference in 1939. He served about within his own country and in September 1949, became the first African superintendent of Ilesha Circuit. The church advanced under his superintendency, two high schools being founded during that time.

His first wife was Mrs. Marry O. Salako whom he married on June 30, 1932, and to them were born two daughters. His first wife died on Aug. 7, 1942. On Dec. 21, 1944, he married Mrs. Comfort O. Salako. To them were born three daughters and three sons. His leadership of work in his country continued and the Methodist Church Conference which met at Yaba Methodist Church, Lagos, Jan. 22-24, 1968, appointed him as the president of the Methodist Church in Nigeria.

N. B. II.

SALAZAR, MARIO (1918-), Bolivian educator, is a native of COCHABAMBA. He received his normal school degree and law degree at the university there. In the United States he received a M.A. from Peabody, later taking other studies at GARRETT THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY and NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY. He married Julia Albricias, a teacher, and they have three children.

In 1954 he became director of American Institute (COLEGIO EVANGELICO METODISTA) in LA PAZ, and in 1964, director of the American Institute in Cochabamba. In the church Salazar was secretary of the annual conference, executive secretary of the Commission on Missions and Finance, a delegate to several international conferences, and in 1966 executive secretary of social action.

NATALIE BANBER

SALEM, NEW JERSEY, U.S.A. In 1774 Daniel Ruff visited Salem and preached in the court house. Among his hearers was THOMAS WARE, then a youth, but who became a distinguished minister. The first Methodist church in Salem was built in 1784. Both Thomas Ware and BENJAMIN ABBOTT were present at the dedication of this church. Later, Benjamin Abbott was baptized in the church. Both Ware and Abbott are buried in the cemetery of the church.

Until 1826 the Methodist Church in Salem belonged to the Salem Circuit. In 1789 it was a "six weeks circuit" embracing all of West Jersey south of BURLINGTON. During the same year an effective spiritual revival, resulting in a significant increase in church membership, took place within the bounds of the present Salem County. In 1790 Salem Circuit was sub-divided into the old Bethel Circuit, which included Gloucester County and north to Burlington. In 1804-05 Salem Circuit included the three counties of Salem, Cumberland, and Cape May. By 1809 Salem Circuit was limited to the counties of Salem and Cumberland.

In 1826 Salem Town became a preaching station with 105 members. JOHN LEDNUM was the first pastor. Thomas Ware was a supernumerary there.

Around 1850 some members withdrew from old Walnut Street Church, now known as First Church, to form the Broadway Church. These two churches now serve the Methodists of Salem.

Six sessions of the NEW JERSEY ANNUAL CONFERENCE have been held in Salem (1847, 1860, 1871, 1881, 1889, 1902).

G. A. Raybold, Reminiscences of Methodism in West Jersey. New York: Lane & Scott, 1849.

Joseph S. Sickler, The History of Salem County, New Jersey. Salem: Sunbeam Publishing Co., 1937.

F. B. Stanger, New Jersey. 1961. FRANK BATEMAN STANGER

SALEM, OREGON, U.S.A. First Church dates from the arrival of the Methodist missionaries in 1840. That year JASON LEE began the removal of the Methodist Mission to Chemeketa, now North Salem. The first building erected on Mill Creek houses a sawmill and gristmill. In 1841 the Indian Manual Labor School was constructed and the First Methodist Church organized. DAVID LESLIE is credited with laying the foundations for Methodist work at Salem.

In 1848 JAMES HARVEY WILBUR and ALVIN F. WALLER were appointed to the Salem Circuit which included all Methodist work east of the Willamette River south of OREGON CITY. Membership of the circuit was 115 and that of Salem, 105. Initial services were held at the Oregon Institute which had acquired the building of the Indian Manual Training School from GEORGE CARY.

In 1849 William Helm and J. O. Raynor were appointed to the Salem Circuit with David Leslie, superintendent. In 1850 Alvin F. Waller became pastor at Salem and William Helm, superintendent. In 1852 WILLIAM ROBERTS, superintendent of the Oregon Mission Conference, reported a church building under construction at Salem. The edifice, 40 by 60 feet and costing $8,000, was dedicated Jan. 23, 1853.

A new building was projected in the summer of 1870, when C. C. Stratton was pastor. Construction began in August 1871, and the cornerstone was laid October 9. The building was completed and dedicated March 17, 1878, costing $45,000. In 1938 the membership was 1,342; in 1948 it was 1,647, and in 1970 the membership was 1,426. Property was valued at $1,011,283 in 1970.

Lee House. The first frame house built in the capital city of OREGON was built by the Methodist missionaries under the direction of Jason Lee in 1841. Mission headquarters were moved from their original location on the banks of the Willamette River some ten miles from the present city of Salem. The move was motivated by unhealthy conditions created by the winter floods, and also because the new site offered water power for a small saw and grist mill which was greatly needed by the mission in the undeveloped Oregon country.

The house, which was the home of Jason Lee, superintendent of the mission, was shared with three other mission families although it was only an eighteen by forty two-story house. The first meeting which led to the organization of the Oregon Institute, which became WILLAMETTE UNIVERSITY, was held in this house. Also important meetings concerning both the M.E. Church and a government for Oregon were held here.

After the close of the Indian Mission the house was sold by the church, and in private ownership it was used to house the second store operated in Salem, and the first post office. For over a century the house was used as a private residence, but it has now been moved to the Thomas Kay Historical Park near Willamette University. With all the additions of over a century removed, it is being restored to the original structure and will be maintained as a historic shrine.

Lee Mission Cemetery is the burial place of Jason Lee, the first missionary to the Pacific Northwest. When Lee established his mission for the Indians of Oregon in 1834, the sovereignty of the Pacific Northwest was still in dispute between Great Britain and the United States. In this pioneer burial ground, near the grave of the missionary leader, are those of his two wives and infant son, and of Cyrus Shepard, the first teacher of the mission school. Nearby are the graves of many other early Methodist missionaries, including Alvan F. Waller, GUSTAVUS HINES, JOSIAH L. PARRISH, Alanson Beers, William Roberts, James H. Wilbur, Nehemiah Doane, and others. It is also the burial place of many of the Methodist circuit riders of pioneer Oregon including John Rook, Daniel Rader, George M. Booth and many others. The cemetery is in contemporary use and is under the direction of a board of trustees responsible to the OREGON CONFERENCE of The Methodist Church.

The Old Parsonage which housed a generation of Methodist missionaries and circuit riders of pioneer Oregon days was the second house built in what is now the capital city of Oregon. Built in 1841-42, directly after the Lee House was finished, it was first occupied by Gustavus Hines when he was in charge of the Indian Mission Manual Labor School.

When the Indian Mission was closed, the "Old Parsonage" as it became known in later years, was given by the Mission Board as a parsonage for the M.E. Church in Salem, and later for the circuit riders whose circuit included all the Willamette Valley south of Salem. In the "Old Parsonage" were held many meetings pertaining to the organization of the Oregon Institute, which became Willamette University, and meetings of the M.E. Church in pioneer Oregon.

For over a century the "Old Parsonage" was used as a private residence, but now it has been moved back near its original site, where it is being restored to its original structure. With the Lee House it will be a part of the Thomas Kay Historical Park.

C. J. Brosnan, Jason Lee. 1932.

General Minutes.

H. K. Hines, Pacific Northwest. 1899.

T. D. Yarnes, Oregon. 1958.

ERLE HOWELL
ROBERT MOULTON CATKE

SALINA, KANSAS, U.S.A. First Church looks back to May 2, 1860, when the first meeting was held in Salina. The church did not organize until 1863, but a Sunday school had been organized earlier and many of the meetings were held during the intervening months.

During the church's history, there have been two building locations within half a block of each other, and three sanctuary buildings. In 1965 an educational wing was added to the present building. The entire property, including three ministerial residences, is presently valued at over $1,000,000.

The church in 1962 accepted the responsibility for assisting in the organization and support of Trinity, a new Methodist church in Salina, and contributed $24,000 over a three-year period for such support, as well as releasing 150 members to go into the new church. At present the church supports a missionary to the CONGO in Africa. In 1970 membership was 1,834, and the church had a staff of thirteen members with a total of six choirs.

General Minutes.

BASIL L. JOHNSON

SALISBURY, FRANK OWEN (1874-1962), British artist, was born on Dec. 18, 1874, at Harpenden, England, was educated privately and at Heatherly's and the Royal Academy Schools and studied also in Italy, Germany, and France. He received honorary doctorates from British and American institutions and was awarded the Victorian Order by the British Crown, and Cavaliere of the Order of the Crown of Italy.

Salisbury was a prolific painter of portraits and historical scenes. His subjects included most of the members of the Royal Family, six presidents of the United States, and numerous notable personages on both sides of the Atlantic. He received more official commissions than any other man, and he accompanied Queen Elizabeth to America on the occasion of the presentation of his portrait of King George.

Rearred as a devout Methodist, Salisbury painted three portraits of JOHN WESLEY and also portraits of CHARLES and SUSANNA WESLEY, THOMAS COKE, FRANCIS ASHURY, and the five first officers of the WORLD METHODIST COUNCIL after its reorganization with permanent officials in 1951. Ten Salisbury portraits are in the World Methodist Building at LAKE JUNALUSKA, N. C., U.S.A., and three of these have been reproduced and sold widely.

Salisbury died at his home in LONDON on Aug. 31, 1962. He bequeathed his palatial home, Sarum Chase, to the BRITISH COUNCIL OF CHURCHES.

JOHN KENT

SALISBURY, NORTH CAROLINA, U.S.A., the Rowan County seat since 1753, lies west of the Yadkin River on historic Trading Path. It was the most important town in western NORTH CAROLINA for a century, and supply depot to surrounding states. Salisbury was encompassed by the Yadkin Circuit of the M.E. Church in 1780. Salisbury Society and Circuit were organized by BEVERLY ALLEN in 1783, served by JESSE LEE in 1784, HOPE HULL in 1785, and William Lambeth in 1796. The Circuit covered counties along Yadkin River south from Salisbury to the SOUTH CAROLINA line. Salisbury was host to the annual conference of Feb. 21, 1786. The Salisbury District, covering the Piedmont and much of the mountains of western North Carolina in 1801 (covering Rowan and Cabarrus Counties today), was originally in the VIRGINIA CONFERENCE. Then it went into the NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE from 1837-1890; and since 1890 has been in the WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE.

From the Society of 1783 has grown the 1,740 member First Church of Salisbury. It has been on the present site since 1831, though the congregation rebuilt in 1857, again in 1917, and since 1960 has erected a $1,200,000 plant. Coburn Memorial Church was organized in 1888; Main Street and Park Avenue after 1899, and Milford Hills after 1950.

Among other Methodist denominations in Salisbury, the A.M.E. ZION CHURCH established its denominational school, LIVINGSTONE COLLEGE, in 1879, and has important Moore's Chapel and Soldier's Memorial Churches. The college presently has 900 students. The denomination's Hood Theological Seminary is on the same campus.

The C.M.E. CHURCH has Craigie Street Church. The WESLEYAN METHODIST CHURCH has a mission in Salisbury. The United Methodist Church continues to station its district superintendent in Salisbury and the Salisbury district presently reports 20,164 members.

F. Asbury, Journal and Letters. 1958.

W. L. Grissom, North Carolina. 1905.

Journals of the Virginia, North Carolina, and Western North Carolina Conferences.

Jethro Rumble, A History of Rowan County, North Carolina. N.p., n.d.

G. W. BUNGARNER

QUEEN SALOTE

SALOTE, TUPOU, QUEEN OF TONGA (1900-1965), was born on March 13, 1900, at Nukualofa, TONGA, and was educated in AUCKLAND, NEW ZEALAND. She was the daughter of King George Tupou II and great-great-granddaughter of King George Tupou I, a member of the world's oldest dynasty, the kings of which have been Christians and Methodists since the beginning of the nineteenth century.

Queen Salote became the leader of three Methodist classes and her son, Crown Prince Tunge, was licensed as a LOCAL PREACHER. The Queen is regarded as the head of the Methodist Church, which is related to Australasian Methodism; and in Tonga is the nearest approach of Methodism to the position of a state church in the world. She attended the coronation of Queen Elizabeth II in LONDON in 1952 and Her Majesty attended the Methodist Church when she visited Tonga; it was said to be the only instance when a reigning British sovereign worshipped in a Methodist service.

Queen Salote received three decorations from the British Government.

She died Dec. 16, 1965.

AUSTRALIAN EDITORIAL COMMITTEE

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, U.S.A., was founded in 1847 by Mormon pioneers led by Brigham Young. From a population of 1,500 in 1848, the city had grown to 176,793 by 1970. It is located in the bed of pre-historic Lake Bonneville, in the shadow of the Wasatch mountains, about fifteen miles east of the Great Salt Lake. Salt Lake City has become the business, industrial, medical, transportation, communication and cultural heart of a vast agricultural-mining region. It has always been the international headquarters for the Church of Jesus Christ of the Latter Day Saints. The community has fostered numerous educational institutions, including WESTMINSTER COLLEGE, supported by Presbyterian (U.S.A.), Methodist, and United Church of Christ denominations. In 1970 there were three United Methodist congregations and one A.M.E.

Salt Lake City existed for seventeen years before Norman McLeod, a Congregational minister from DENVER, Colo., established the first Protestant church in 1864. By 1871 the Presbyterians, Methodists, Roman Catholics and Baptists had arrived.

Methodists A. N. Fisher and Bishop CALVIN KINGSLEY had preached in the Latter Day Saints' Tabernacle at the invitation of Church President (and one-time Methodist) Brigham Young in 1868 and 1869 respectively. In November 1869, Bishop MATTHEW SIMPSON urged the Methodist Missionary Board to create a UTAH mission. By December 1869, LEWIS HARTSOUGH was in Salt Lake City as the state's first Methodist mission superintendent. From the CENTRAL NEW YORK CONFERENCE, Gustavus Marshall Pierce was sent to be the pastor-organizer of Salt Lake City's First Methodist Church. Pierce arrived on May 8, 1870, preached his first sermon on May 15, and on the next day organized the congregation. By 1875, a $72,000 church had been erected, $52,000 of which was raised across the nation through the efforts of C. C. McCABE, then with the CHURCH EXTENSION SOCIETY. In 1905, First Church was relocated and a new building erected. This still serves the congregation.

Salt Lake City has five other Methodist churches. One, organized in 1892 in an abandoned Congregational chapel, received help from the CENTENARY FUND in 1921 to relocate and build a new church, and this continues today as Centenary Methodist Church. A west side project started by the Utah Mission Conference in 1894 was also rebuilt in 1922 with gifts from the Centenary Fund, and today serves a difficult neighborhood as Grace Methodist Church.

Liberty Park Church, organized and built in 1892, was relocated and rebuilt in 1904, only to be relocated and renamed Christ Methodist Church in the early 1950's.

The Community Methodist Church at Midvale, a suburb, was organized in 1907, and still continues its program in a building erected in 1924. Trinity Methodist Church was organized in 1956, in a new housing development southwest of the city which was built on the site of a World War II Air Force Recruit Replacement Center. In 1970, these six churches reported 2,763 members, combined budgets of $209,849, and properties valued at $1,563,881. Cooperative studies were instituted by the Salt Lake City Methodist Churches in 1967 to determine more effective patterns for carrying out their mission.

The WOMAN'S HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY of the M.E. Church became interested in Utah in the early 1880's. DEACONESS work was established in Salt Lake City in 1894, and a pleasant home was erected in 1905. In 1937, new modes of operation transformed this building into a boarding residence for young women who had come to the city. Still another transition was effected in 1966 when the residence was renamed Crossroads Urban Center and a program of service to inner city youth was initiated by the Woman's Division of the Board of Missions of The Methodist Church.

General Minutes, UMC.

H. M. Merkel, Utah, 1938.

Thomas F. O'Dea, The Mormons, Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1957.

WILLIAM R. PERSONS

SALTER, MOSES BUCKINGHAM (1841-1913). American bishop of the A.M.E. Church, was born in CHARLESTON, S. C., on Feb. 13, 1841. He was educated at WILBERFORCE UNIVERSITY. In 1866, he was admitted to the South Carolina Annual Conference. He was ordained DEACON and ELDER in 1866 and held pastorates in SOUTH CAROLINA and GEORGIA. He was a presiding elder in South Carolina during 1868-70. He was elected bishop in 1892 from the pastorate of Emmanuel Church, Charleston. Bishop Salter served in South Carolina, KENTUCKY and TENNESSEE, TEXAS and OKLAHOMA, MISSISSIPPI and LOUISIANA and FLORIDA. He was elected to the ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE of 1901. He retired in 1912.

R. R. Wright, The Bishops. 1963.

GRANT S. SHOCKLEY

SALTVILLE, VIRGINIA, U.S.A. Madame Russell Church. (See RUSSELL, ELIZABETH HENRY; KEYWOOD, VA.)

SALVADOR, Brazil. In 1880 Bishop WILLIAM TAYLOR made the attempt to plant Methodism in Salvador, capital of the State of Baía. Due to lack of workers, this effort proved unsuccessful and was soon given up. Thereafter, for many decades Methodist work in Brazil—except for that of GEORGE B. NIND in Recife, Pernambuco (1880-92), and that of JUSTUS NELSON in Belém and Manaus, Amazonas (1880-96)—was confined to the Southern third of the nation.

A second, and this time successful, effort resulted when the 1946 General Conference of the Methodist Church of Brazil, appointed Benedito Natal Quintanilha as the first "missionary" to that city, capital of the state. The financing of the plan was carried out by a fourth Sunday offering in all Sunday schools. By 1950, a house had been acquired, large enough for a congregation of forty, Sunday school, clinic, and pastoral residence. In 1955, Salvador became a regular pastoral charge; and in 1960, the Salvador District was organized with two pastoral charges and 117 members. The growth has been consistent since that date.

W. C. Barclay, History of Missions. 1957.

Journals of General Conference and Annual Conferences, Brazil, 1946, 1950, 1955, 1960.

D. A. REILY

SALVATION. Salvation has been defined as a right relation to God, fellowship with God being both the highest and noblest of human experiences, and also that which sets him free from bondage to sinful habit. The Bible opens with a graphic representation of the dreadful fact that man is a fallen and disobedient creature, spiritually alienated from God (Genesis i:26, 31; iii:23). However, the heavenly Father has done everything possible to lead back His children into a right relation with Himself. Without this salvation man is as a sheep which has gone astray, not knowing where he is, or in what direction he should go. Yet in every normal human being there is a God-implemented instinctive hunger for more than our present life realizes. We feel in at least some dim way our contact with a world of spiritual reality, and we begin to appreciate it and to seek after it. So Wesley writes: "Whether this is natural, or superadded by the grace of God, it is found at least in some small degree in every child of man . . . not only in all Christians, but in all Mohammedans, all pagans. . . ."

We see the development of this conception in the Old Testament. In earlier days a right relation to Jehovah was considered as possible through membership of the People of Israel. Not until after the Exile, perhaps, did the pious Jew commonly think of himself as an individual in God's sight. In the Church the New Testament conception of God as "Father," and of man as His "child," was during ages of barbarism sometimes obscured, or even lost. Nevertheless, the promise of Jesus, "And if I go I will send you the Comforter, who will guide you into all truth," proved to be a reality. In times of spiritual renewal in the Church the race recovered the truly Christian idea of God as "Father," and came to believe in the possibility that men may become "sons of God."

Salvation requires a right relation to man as well as to God. In His summary of "all the law and the prophets" Jesus linked the love of neighbor with the love of God. Furthermore, the experience of modern industrial societies has led Christians back to the ancient conviction that the right relationship of man to man must include what we may call "social" situations. God requires a wholesome community as well as upright individuals.

How then is this right relation to God, this salvation, to be brought into human experience? The essential Christian answer is: "By grace are ye saved through faith." (Ephesians ii:8.) Being a real "Father," God was concerned for the lost son, and set out to help man to come once again into the family. This divine attitude, act, or initiative, is called "grace." Grace, then, is a personal influence brought to bear upon the spirit of man by the Spirit of God. In the gospel this grace of God is expressed in Jesus, in His coming to man as man, the loving invitation of His teaching, His delivering acts of healing, and His death and resurrection. His name was called "Jesus" because He came to save His People from their sins. (Matthew i:21.)

Thus Jesus is found to be not only the bringer of God's grace, but also the means whereby that divine concern is able to move out savingly to those who believe in Him. If we who are indwelt and empowered with His Spirit of grace follow His example of love, service, and forgiveness, then "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved" (Acts xvi:31) is fulfilled in us. The Good Samaritan of the parable is therefore an illustration of the grace of God going out through man.

"By grace are ye saved through faith." (Ephesians ii:8.) It remains for man to respond to the divine initiative of forgiveness and power. So St. Paul writes: "Work out your own salvation . . . for it is God which worketh in you." (Philippians ii:12, 13.) As sin involves personal choice and action, so also does salvation. The faith of man must cooperate with the grace of God. As Dr. Rufus Jones has said, "Something comes down from above, but something must also go up from below."

Faith in Christ occasions an eager desire to be like Him. It inspires the will to do God's will, as Jesus reveals and interprets it. "No spiritual good can be ours until we desire it; nor will any be withheld from us which through appreciation and preference we are capable of receiving." Faith therefore fulfills itself in "good works." As Wesley constantly urged: "To those who attentively consider the thirteenth chapter of the first epistle to the Corinthians, it will be undeniably plain that what St. Paul there describes as the highest of all Christian graces, is properly and directly the love of our neighbour. And to him who attentively considers the whole tenor both of the Old and the New Testaments, it will be equally plain that good works springing from this love are the highest part of the religion therein revealed."

What then, we ask, is the state of mind of the one who has come into a right relation with God? the one who possesses salvation? The thought of being "saved" lifts one's heart toward God, and hence brings a sense of joy. When a man honestly says "Our Father who art in heaven" he rises to strength, to assurance. Humbly, yet with certainty, he may with the Apostle Paul say: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give to me at that day; and not to me only, but to all them also that love His appearing." (2 Timothy iv: 7-8.) So salvation culminates in life with God for ever.

W. N. Clarke, An Outline of Christian Theology.

Wm. Adams Brown, Christian Theology in Outline.

A. C. Knudson, Present Tendencies in Religious Thought.

W. L. Sperry, What We Mean by Religion.

ROBERT W. GOOLOE

SALVATION ARMY, Br. (See BOOTH, WILLIAM.)

SAMOA is the name by which the Samoan Islands are usually referred to, and its eastern section—which is smaller than western Samoa—is a possession of the United States. American Samoa comprises seven eastern islands of the Samoan group—Tutuila, Aunu'u, Manua Islands (Tau, Olosega, and Ofu) and Rose Island, which is a coral atoll. Western Samoa is now independent, but for awhile was under a NEW ZEALAND mandate. Population (1970): American Samoa, 27,769; Western Samoa, 141,000.

Samoans are an outstanding section of the Polynesian race, dignified and skilled in oratory, "the aristocrats of the Pacific." Samoans and Tongans have a racial affinity, with similarity in language. The comparative proximity of the two groups has led to frequent intermingling.

In 1828 a visiting Samoan chief professed conversion in TONGA very soon after missionary work began there. On returning to Samoa he began to persuade many of his neighbors to renounce heathenism and to accept the "Tongan religion," as Christianity was called. Samoan Methodists regard 1828 as the year when Christianity first reached their land.

PETER TURNER was the first resident European missionary. He came in 1835, accompanied by enthusiastic Tongan pastors, and found 2,000 already claiming to be Methodists. Revival scenes, like those in Tonga in the previous year, followed Peter Turner's ministry and in four years the number of adherents had grown to 13,000.

Unfortunately, Samoa was to provide a disturbing example of two evangelical Protestant missions operating in the same group. John Williams, the redoubtable pioneer of the London Missionary Society in many South Sea Islands groups, visited Samoa in 1830 and left eight teachers from Tahiti. Shortly afterwards he discussed the position with the Methodist missionaries in Tonga and a definite policy of limiting areas of operations was agreed upon by the parent bodies of the Methodist and London Missionary Societies in Britain. The London Missionary Society, it was decided, should work in Samoa and the Methodists in Tonga and Fijii.

When, in 1836, London Missionary Society representatives arrived in Samoa they resented the presence of Peter Turner. He received instructions to vacate the field only after they had arrived. At that time communication was irregular and infrequent in the Pacific. The Samoan Methodists were in genuine distress; they were attached to Turner and the "Tongan religion"; they said they "heard of the 'Tahitian religion' only last night."

From 1839 to 1857 there was no official Methodist Church in Samoa but thousands of the Samoan converts refused to join the London Missionary Society. As the years went by many of them relapsed into heathenism.

When British Methodism created an independent Australasian Conference responsible for the Pacific Islands in 1855, it was decided to resume work in Samoa. This happened through the advocacy of JOHN THOMAS, the veteran Chairman in Tonga, who believed that those who still claimed to be Methodists in Samoa needed missionary oversight. He also contended that the Australasian Conference was not bound by the agreement made in 1839 between the London Missionary Society and the British Conference—a rather flimsy argument.

It is generally agreed that the decision to return was a blunder. When Martin Dyson arrived in 1857, he found fewer than 3,000 nominal Methodist adherents and religious life at a very low ebb. The main influence in the division was tribal feeling and a spirit of faction. Although he believed that the Samoan Methodists should be induced to join the London Missionary Society, Dyson finally accepted the situation. His work was followed by that of GEORGE BROWN, who became the most successful Methodist missionary in the history of the Pacific Islands. Both of these men maintained friendly relations with the missionaries of the London Missionary Society which their people were resolved not to join.

The later years of the century were marked by civil wars, the entry of foreign powers, and the division of Samoa between GERMANY and the U.S.A. in 1899. The residence of the famous writer, Robert Louis Stevenson, was in Western Samoa during this period.

When Germany was defeated in the 1914-18 war, the mandate for Western Samoa from the League of Nations was given to New Zealand. In 1919 pneumonic influenza caused the death of more than twenty percent of the population of Western Samoa in a few weeks; in Eastern Samoa not a life was lost through careful American quarantine.

Educational progress, church-building, happier relations with the London Missionary Society have marked recent years. Always the comparatively small Methodist Church in Samoa has been distinguished by its willingness to send workers to pioneer fields. In 1964 Samoan Methodism became an independent conference associated with the General Conference of the Methodist Church of Australasia.

Since 1962 Western Samoa has been an independent nation, with its motto, "Samoa founded upon God," a tribute to the effect of Christian missions and the ideal for Samoa's future.

- G. Brown, Autobiography. 1908.
 J. W. Burton, Call of the Pacific. 1912.
 J. Colwell, Century in the Pacific. 1914.
 M. Dyson, Samoaan Methodism. 1875.
 Findlay and Holdsworth, Wesleyan Miss. Soc. 1921.
 S. Masterman, Outline of Samoaan History. 1958.

HAROLD WOOD

JOHN VICTOR SAMUEL

SAMUEL, JOHN VICTOR (1930-), bishop of The United Methodist Church of PAKISTAN, was elected to this position on Oct. 15, 1968, in Multan, West Pakistan. He had previously been an ecumenical executive, a district superintendent, and a former staff member of the Methodist Board of Missions. A Pakistani, he is the first bishop to be chosen by the Methodists of Pakistan, and the first of his nationality to be elected to the Methodist episcopacy. Bishop Samuel is one of the youngest men ever elected to the episcopacy. His election came on the first ballot at the first meeting of the newly constituted Pakistan United Methodist Central Conference in Multan. His area includes the Indus River Annual Conference and the Karachi Provisional Annual Conference with approximately 40,794 members.

N. B. II.

SAN ANGELO, TEXAS, U.S.A. First Church is almost as old as the city in which it has witnessed for eighty-four years. The "fighting parson," A. J. Potter, a circuit rider, began preaching in the new county seat town in 1882. Preaching at times with a pistol on his hip and a Winchester in his pulpit, work was begun which resulted in the organization of First Church one year later. The first building was a white frame structure, the only Methodist church in a five-hundred mile area, and was used for all other Protestant services for several years. By 1906 the growing membership of 750 met its demands for additional facilities by moving to a new building at the present location on Beauregard and Oakes. This sanctuary served well until a membership of 1,919 necessitated expansion and remodeling by 1928. Destroyed by a fire in 1945, plans for a new and larger building were begun. In 1950 the present Gothic sanctuary was completed.

The education ministry of the church was first aided by the construction of Massie Memorial Education Building in 1924. Dedicated in honor of Mrs. Massie, a tireless, influential laywoman, the building was used by all divisions of the church school until growth in the classes demanded further expansion. The present four-story education building, completed in 1962, once again provides space for all classes in the same building.

The church's 1970 membership of 1,876 is guided by the pastor and a staff of eight full-time and three part-time employees, including three ministers, a director of education, and an organist-director of music.

The history of the growth and development of First Church closely parallels that of its home city. Through the years it has sought to meet the demands and challenges of San Angelo as the downtown church in a growing city.

GLENN D. WEIMER

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS, U.S.A., an old historic city which combines the historic Texas-Mexican past with the forward looking impetus of a growing and great city, is situated in southwest Texas and has long been a dominant metropolis of that section of the state. Methodism was first introduced into San Antonio in April 1844 by circuit rider JOHN WESLEY DEVILBISS, missionary from OHIO, who in company with a Presbyterian minister, John McColough, rode into the city from Seguin under an escort obtained from Captain Hay's Texas Rangers. On Sunday he preached in the County Clerk's office to a congregation of fifteen people. A year later, while serving as pastor of the Gonzales Circuit, he returned to San Antonio and established a regular appointment, preaching in the parlor of the Veramendi Hotel.

On Feb. 4, 1846, at the meeting of the TEXAS CONFERENCE in Houston, he was appointed to "The San Antonio Mission" with a missionary appropriation of $200. Moving to San Antonio, DeVilbiss became the first resident Protestant minister in the city. He taught a small school to supplement his salary allowance, and obtained the use of the court house for regular preaching services. At this time San Antonio was in the Rutersville District, and in May the district superintendent, Mordecai Yell, accompanied by two other Methodist ministers, visited the city, their unexpected appearance moving the lonely pastor to tears. In June 1846 the organization of a church was effected with eleven members enrolled. In 1853 a tract of land was purchased on Soledad Street, and a building was erected which was called Paine Chapel. The membership was by that time thirty-five whites and fifteen "colored." This building housed the growing church for some thirty years when the membership, then above 300 souls, purchased lots on the corner of Travis and Navarro Streets. The relocated church was thenceforth called Travis Park Methodist Church.

The influx of German people into the city, following their migration to Texas at and after mid-nineteenth century, led to the organization of a German Methodist Church. Their building, erected in 1876, still stands as a shrine in La Villita (Little Town), a typical mid-eighteenth century Spanish settlement in the heart of historic San Antonio. As the language barrier gave way, this and other German-speaking Methodist congregations merged with the English-speaking churches.

Immediately following the Civil War and the abolition of slavery separate organizations of Negro Methodists began to appear, both the M.E. and the A.M.E. churches dating their origins as of 1867. The M.E. group recognized modern St. Paul's as their mother church. In 1970 there were eight churches of the former Central Jurisdiction with a membership of 2,327. The A.M.E. work was begun by Richard Haywood, who spent some four years in the organizational effort, preaching most of this time in an old stone building called "the Soap Factory" which was rented for $15 per month. This branch of Methodism now has ten churches in San Antonio with a membership of 2,600.

From the beginning of organized Methodism in San Antonio a "Mexican Mission" was maintained, this appointment later becoming part of a Mexican Mission District covering all of south Texas. In 1874 La Trinidad Church was organized by missionary A. H. Sutherland, and became the center of Methodist work among Spanish-speaking people. In 1878 the pastor reported 100 members and three Sunday schools. There are now in the city seven Spanish-speaking United Methodist churches, holding membership in the RIO GRANDE CONFERENCE which covers most of Texas and NEW MEXICO. The Wesley Community House, originally operated by the WOMAN'S SOCIETY OF CHRISTIAN SERVICE, offers playground facilities, fellowship, and religious training for hundreds of the underprivileged.

In old San Antonio, predominantly Latin and Catholic, Methodism made a slow beginning. The Journals of 1900 show only seven churches with less than 1,500 members, but with the turn of the century and the growth of the city Methodism grew apace. The several branches of Methodism now number fifty-seven churches with a total membership of over 35,000.

The institutional life of San Antonio Methodism began with the first meeting of the Rio Grande (Southwest Texas) Conference in Goliad in 1859. A San Antonio Female College was projected and fifty-five trustees were elected. After a few difficult years it disappears from record, but was opened again in 1894. In 1918 it was made coeducational and the name was changed to Westmoreland—later to the University of San Antonio. In 1942 it was decided outright to the Presbyterian Church and became Trinity University.

For many years San Antonio has been the established center of Methodism in the SOUTHWEST TEXAS CONFERENCE. A Methodist Building is maintained with offices for the white, Negro and Latin superintendents, the conference treasurer, and for all conference secretaries. The annual conference meetings are regularly held in Travis Park Church.

Alamo Heights Church is one of the largest and finest churches in San Antonio. Started in 1910 as a struggling mission and connected with Travis Park Church for a while, it has grown into one of the major churches of the Southwest Texas Conference.

At one time, the church was on the outer rim of the city, but that same location today is in the heart of one of the great and rapidly expanding areas. It is now the second largest United Methodist Church in San Antonio, with a membership of 2,369.

Situated in one of San Antonio's most beautiful areas, the church has a plant valued in excess of $1,400,000.

Jefferson Church is part of a master plan development in south Texas following World War II. Projected by the San Antonio City Mission Board on the basis of sociological and industrial surveys, its institutional functions have been related to three stages of development.

The first congregation met in surplus army tents in an undeveloped residential area, with the expected residential saturation the basis for all projections. From sixty-six members on March 10, 1946, membership grew to 1,000 in six years and 2,000 in fourteen years. It reported 1,711 members in 1970.

In the first phase, the church served as a social and recreational center for all of the people in the community. Its first buildings were therefore a chapel and a community recreation hall. A lighted sports area, food service facilities for large community gatherings, and a meeting hall for public forums made possible community service to the developing neighborhood. A week-day school was founded during the first phases.

The second planned phase took into account the organization of other churches and schools as well as the rise of service clubs and recreation centers. During this phase, the church turned to its denominational responsibilities and built facilities designed to serve its congregational needs: church school units and a large sanctuary. Organizationally, it undertook to become an effective institutional church for the northwest quadrant of the city.

The church entered its third planned phase after twenty years. It has sought to become an institutional center from which members will participate in the social and political life of the city. Its membership includes leaders of numerous educational, business, governmental, and industrial enterprises. The church houses a Child Care Development Center in cooperation with the national economic opportunity program, and undertakes social service projects especially related to poverty groups of the city.

Jefferson Church has from its inception been a center for experimentation and innovation in church life, both in worship and education, and in its approach to community service work. The existing plant consists of a sanctuary, a chapel, a community hall, and three educational buildings, all on ground level on a site comprising a city block. Architecture is a contemporary adaptation of Spanish Mission Colonial by the ecclesiastical architect Henry J. Steinbomer. Properties are valued in excess of $900,000.

Laurel Heights Church was organized in 1909 when San Antonio had a population of only 96,000. The nearest Methodist churches, Travis Park and West End, were each about two miles away. Among the leaders in promoting the new church were Judge and Mrs. J. O. Terrell and Allen K. Ragsdale. A small tabernacle was first built to serve as a temporary meeting-place. An English Gothic sanctuary was ready for use on Easter Sunday, 1912. The charter roll contained 178 names. An indebtedness of $30,000 had been incurred in the building program.

Six years later the debt was liquidated, and on Sept. 29, 1918, Bishop EDWIN D. MOUZON formally dedicated the church. In succeeding years two important building-expansion programs—in 1928 and 1958—have greatly increased the capacity and facilities of the church plant.

Throughout the span of its history Laurel Heights has been served by capable and dedicated ministers. Two pastors, A. FRANK SMITH and H. BASCOM WATTS, later became bishops.

In 1946 the Laurel Heights Church financed the building of a Methodist bishops' residence in Mexico City. Since the 1940's it has supported a missionary couple in South America, first in CHILE and in recent years in BOLIVIA. It gives fifteen scholarships annually to needy young people who are attending Texas Methodist colleges. Its members have accepted leadership roles, served on boards of directors, and engaged in a continuing program of volunteer services, all related to the Methodist institutions which serve the local community—the Methodist Hospital, the Wesley Community Centers, the Methodist Mission Home, and the Morningside Retirement Home. The church is presently moving toward a wider service to its own immediate neighborhood, which now possesses many aspects of the "inner city" with sub-standard housing and deprived families. Plans made in collaboration with a nearby Roman Catholic church call for a summer activities program for children, as a first step in an ecumenical program of social service. It is hoped that this "unity in mission" will expand in the years to come.

Methodist Mission Home of Texas. About the year 1890 Mrs. M. L. Volino, who operated a brothel in the "Red Light" district of San Antonio, was soundly converted to the Christian faith under the ministry of W. W. PINSON, pastor of Travis Park Church. She immediately converted her home into a place of refuge for her own and such other girls as wished to escape from a life of prostitution. Her word was, "I will give you a home and God will give you bread." The support of this "Rescue Home," as it was called, was taken over by Travis Park Church and later, in 1901, by the West Texas (Southwest Texas) Conference. By degrees it became a refuge for expectant, unwed mothers. This involved a new name, a new location, and eventually the support of six conferences of Texas Methodism. It now provides medical care, personal counselling, and rehabilitation training for hundreds of unfortunate girls and is a licensed adoption agency for their babies. During the seventy years of its existence it has served over 5,000 residents and has placed over 2,000 babies in Christian homes. A new twenty-acre site has been purchased for the home, and building plans involving more than a million dollars are under way.

Morningside Manor is a home for older adults, owned by the San Antonio District, situated on a twenty-acre campus in northwest San Antonio. Established in 1961 at a cost of $1,250,000, it has a capacity for 144 people.

Oak Island Church, located fifteen miles south of Bexar County courthouse, is on a site that has been under flags of six nations—France, Spain, Mexico, Republic of Texas, U.S.A., and Confederate States of America. Oak Island people today reflect something of this varied background. Huguenots fleeing religious persecution in FRANCE as early as 1684 settled in the English colony of MARYLAND, and they have descendants in Oak Island. In 1691 SPAIN, fearing French aggression in Texas, established a government in the present Bexar County area, though Spanish colonization did not begin there until 1718, when San Antonio was founded. A trickle of American colonists ventured into Texas in the 1820's. Some Oak Islanders today can trace back to Spanish land grants of the period. After Texas won independence from MEXICO by revolution in 1836, and during Republic of Texas days (1836-1846), tides of English-speaking and other immigrants poured into Texas. Among Oak Island settlers many German immigrants added to the mosaic of culture.

The first link of Oak Island with Methodism goes back to early eighteenth century and its indefinite boundaries when Spain claimed a large part of North America, including the new English colony of GEORGIA, when JOHN WESLEY ministered to colonists in 1736-1737. Wesley found Spanish-speaking settlers and immediately learned the Spanish language to minister to them. More than a century later, 1858-1859, John Wesley DeVilbiss continued Wesley's precedent in west and southwest Texas, including Bexar County. In 1867-1868 DeVilbiss organized a congregation in Oak Island. In 1871 the present building was begun with volunteer help from the community, including Comanche Indian contribution. When finished the building was used for the Oak Island public school on week days. Architecture is the simple classic type found in pioneer churches from New England to the Rio Grande. DeVilbiss and his son made by hand pews, pulpit, and lampstands, still in use. Oak Island cemetery holds graves of pioneers, circuit riders, soldiers of several wars, grave of Mrs. CILLOE STEVENS, Negro heroine of the Battle of San Jacinto, and many others whose lives contributed to building church and nation.

Oak Island Church, in the shadow of creeping urbanization, maintains its identity as a small church by the side of a road, continuing a Christian witness to all with warmth, friendliness, loyalty, and patriotism. An official Texas Historical Marker sponsored by the Texas State Historical Survey Committee and Texas Historical Foundation marks the site.

St. Andrew's Church, located in the northeast section of the city, was organized in 1952 by a small group of faithful people who first met on Wednesday evenings making preliminary plans for the new church. The first worship service was held in the Woodmen of the World Chapel, with the Alamo Heights Church providing hymnals and church school literature. Seventy-four members, representing thirty or more different families, were the first charter members. The church had expanded to 150 by September 14.

Sam L. Fore was the first pastor of St. Andrew's, and he served until June 1, 1957. Two units of a master plan of six buildings were completed in September 1954. This included a Fellowship Hall, which served the church as a sanctuary, and a Children's Building, designed to accommodate 300 children. Two other buildings were completed soon afterward, providing facilities for a kindergarten, week day school, library, Scout activities, church offices, and storage rooms.

Darrel D. Gray was pastor from 1957 through 1962, and under his leadership a new sanctuary was completed in April 1960.

An additional education building was completed during the pastorate of J. Barcus Moore.

Church membership in 1970 was 2,057.

Southwest Texas Methodist Hospital. This property of the Southwest Texas Conference is situated on seventy-four acres of land in the Oak Hills area of west San Antonio, and is part of a 750-acre medical complex which includes the South Texas State Medical School, Bexar County Teaching Hospital, Community Guidance Center, United Cerebral Palsy Treatment Center and Santa Rosa (Catholic) 300-bed Psychiatric and Rehabilitation Center. The hospital was projected in 1955, ground was broken for the first building on May 23, 1960, and the first patients were admitted Sept. 23, 1963. Still in the building process, it aims at a $20,000,000 project with 750 beds. It is modern in every respect including an underground survival complex with all vital facilities capable of accommodating 1,800 people for two weeks. It is fully accredited and at present has a professional staff of 402 physicians and an auxiliary of 940 women rendering free service.

Travis Park Church is known as "The Friendly Church in the Heart of the City." The battle of the Alamo had not yet begun when William B. Travis, a devout Methodist, in the fall of 1835 made a desperate appeal for religious instruction to Texas colonists. A few months later Travis was killed at the Alamo, but his plea for missionaries was answered by his denomination when the Methodists sent additional pioneer ministers to Texas. By 1842 John Wesley DeVilbiss, father of Travis Park Church and San Antonio Methodism, was sent to Texas to preach in several counties.

In 1846 DeVilbiss received his appointment to San Antonio where he was to organize a church. He and a Presbyterian minister made arrangements to preach in the court house on alternate Sundays and sometimes held joint services. From this humble beginning sprang one of the largest churches in the Alamo City, Travis Park Church.

In 1847 a lot was purchased on Villita Street. DeVilbiss began gathering funds to build a church. In 1853 the Methodists built a church situated on Soledad Street, on the muddy banks of the San Antonio River and named it "Paine Chapel." By 1883 the congregation was outgrowing its structure on Soledad Street and two lots were given on the corner of Travis and Navarro Streets to build a new church. In 1885 when the church had been built the name was changed to Travis Park. An education building was built next to the church on Navarro Street in 1910.

In 1921 Travis Park was enlarged to meet the requirements of its membership of 3,000. In subsequent years this great old church underwent three face-liftings. In later years the property on Travis Street next door to the church was purchased with funds left by the late Mrs. Ida Stephenson, and the Stephenson Memorial Building was erected. Ravaged by fire in October 1955, the church building was made useless and for the next three years morning services were held in the Texas Theatre.

Spearheaded by its faithful members, Travis Park Church, after considering many alternate proposals, began its rebuilding plans. The reopening of the church sanctuary took place on Sunday, Sept. 7, 1958. The properties of Travis Park are now worth $2,666,000, with a sanctuary seating capacity of approximately 2,000 and with adequate facilities for all activities.

Five of the former pastors were elected to the episcopacy: JOHN M. MOORE, EDWIN D. MOUZON, PAUL B. KERN, ARTHUR J. MOORE, and KENNETH W. COPELAND.

In 1970 the church membership was 3,221, and a very full and active program is being carried on for all age groups. One of the church's newest and most rewarding ministries is that of the Ichthus Coffee House each Saturday night, which affords San Antonio's many servicemen an opportunity for recreation in a religious atmosphere.

The WESLEY FOUNDATION, organized in 1953, is situated across the street from the main buildings of San Antonio College. It has improvements valued at $75,000, and ministers to some 500 Methodist students.

C. Stanley Banks and Pat Ireland Nixon, Laurel Heights Methodist Church, San Antonio: the church, 1949.

R. F. Curl, Southwest Texas, 1951.

Journals of the West Texas, Southwest Texas and Rio Grande Conferences.

General Minutes, UMC, 1970.

O. W. Nail, Southwest Texas Conference, 1958.

_____, Texas Methodism, 1961.

M. Phelan, Texas, 1924.

H. Yoakum, History of Texas. New York: Redfield, 1855.

LOUIS UHLAND SPELLMAN

STERLING F. WHEELER

LUCY BANKS

RUTH G. JACKSON

WILMA DAVIS

EMMA GERDES

SANCHEZ Y BONET, SILVANO (1894-1967), a Cuban pastor, was born in Holguin, Orte., CUBA, Feb. 6, 1894, in the home of José Angel Sanchez Gomez and Lorenza Bonet Cedeño. His education was in the public schools of Holguin and later in CANDLER COLLEGE, Havana.

When only a youth he learned the printers' trade in which he worked until entering the ministry in 1921. Early in life he came under the influence of a Friends (Quaker) missionary who conducted a Sunday afternoon mission and was converted under the influence of Prospero Guerra.

It was unique that his first and last pastoral charge was Santiago de las Vegas, Havana. In addition he served seven other pastorates and was four times district superintendent.

Frequently he was called on to hold revivals, and in many issues of the conference paper were found gems of his writing. He was the author of the Conference hymn, Cuba for Christ.

His ministry was noted for faithfulness to all details, hard work, a friendly and jovial spirit, and a smile for every one.

Anuario Cubano de la Iglesia Metodista. CARFIELD EVANS

SANCTIFICATION. (See CHRISTIAN PERFECTION and DOCTRINAL STANDARDS OF METHODISM.)

SANDERS, ARTHUR MACMILLAN (1886-1960), missionary to AUSTRALIA and TONGA, was born in Bloxwich, England. His grandfather, Kirkpatrick MacMillan, was the inventor of the bicycle. He trained as a teacher under the aegis of the University of Birmingham. In 1913 he was accepted as a candidate for the ministry in NEW SOUTH WALES and was immediately stationed at Murrumbidgee. In 1914 he was sent to Vavau, Tonga where he spent one third of his active ministry. Returning to New South Wales he served again with distinction in Strathfield, Gordon, Maily, and Concord Wesley. In 1942 he was appointed superintendent of the Newcastle General Mission. In 1949 he was elected Secretary of the Conference and President in 1951. He is affectionately remembered for the charm of his personality, his magnificent bass-baritone voice, the readiness of his wit, and his devoted service.

AUSTRALIAN EDITORIAL COMMITTEE

SAN DIEGO, CALIFORNIA, U.S.A. Methodism serves an area that is rapidly becoming a mecca for tourists in winter and summer because of its mild sub-tropical weather, and its accessibility from LOS ANGELES to the north and to MEXICO (Tijuana) twenty miles south. The University of California is expanding with four new colleges and a medical school. The Scripps Institution of Oceanography is located at a site most favorable for oceanographic exploration and research on the west coast. There are also San Diego State College, two private universities, five community colleges (junior), the Salk Institute for Biological Studies, and the Western Behavioral Sciences Institute.

San Diego and its excellent bay was first discovered in 1542 by the Spanish explorer, Juan Rodriguez Cabrillo. The first religious life was organized July 16, 1796 by Roman Catholic priests from the first CALIFORNIA mission, named San Diego de Alcalá.

JEDEDIAH SMITH, a fervent Methodist nicknamed "Bible-toter Jed," came to San Diego, Dec. 12, 1826 as the first American to cross the deserts into California.

The first Methodists in San Diego held prayer meetings in homes and the bare upper room of the Army Barracks. Seventeen persons attended a meeting recorded as Feb. 6, 1869. The first QUARTERLY CONFERENCE met May 12, 1869; the first regular minister was appointed in October 1869, and the first building was dedicated Feb. 17, 1870.

The gold rush brought people to northern California over the routes of Jed Smith. Driving the gold spike on the Union Pacific Railroad on May 10, 1869 started people toward southern California and a land boom in the 1880's. Six churches were started during this period but only two of these continue today. Three churches were organized during the depression starting in 1892: La Mesa First, Nestor Community, and Otay M. E., which closed after the Otay Dam broke as a result of the 1916 flood.

Population quadrupled from 17,700 in 1900 to 74,638 in 1920, so eight new churches were built in the eight years between 1907 and 1915. Although the population doubled to 147,897 in 1930 only two churches were started in the 20's when the CENTENARY Movement was launched. The Depression stopped all new church extension except for the work of GOODWILL INDUSTRIES which began operations in San Diego Jan. 1, 1930. Myron Insko, as Executive Director, reported they started in a rented building with equipment worth about $5,000 and paid about $5,400 wages during that first year. There are now six branch stores and equipment worth about $650,000. They provide employment to 500 persons who receive wages of about $600,000.

The war years, 1940-45, brought into being five new churches to care for the military, their families, and the war industry workers. The post-war boom, 1947-58, saw the need for nine new churches to be built for young families seeking new homes in new tract areas, and increased the need for facilities in higher education. For ten years, 1956-66, Methodists sponsored the only Protestant university in San Diego. A million dollars was raised through the church for expansion, in addition to large amounts given through gifts and bequests from individuals and local churches. The University, however, at the 1966 annual conference requested to be released from the control and liabilities of the church. Thus they could feel free to apply for financial support from other sources.

A new pattern for starting new churches was developed in 1960. Rather than holding meetings in homes or public buildings, a demountable "A-frame" building was designed as a temporary building on the church site to serve all the needs of the people until they could organize and build their own first permanent unit. North Clairemont was started with this "A-frame" in 1960. It was dismantled and re-erected to start San Carlos in 1962. Later it was moved to start Park Hill in Chula Vista.

A vital organization in the development and support of Methodism in San Diego has been the San Diego Methodist Church Union, which was organized Feb. 22, 1926. About two-thirds of the present churches have been aided at some time by cooperative effort through the Union in the form of a gift, guaranteeing a church loan, or holding a deed. They have been instrumental in stabilizing support for the work of WESLEY FOUNDATION at San Diego State College, and in encouraging and assisting local churches to support the development of Bethel Mission in Tijuana, Mexico. CHAPLAIN service for Methodists, primarily at the County General Hospital, was started in 1952. It has also become the coordinating agency for chaplain service at the Edmoor Geriatric (county) Hospital.

In the nearly 100 years since Methodism started in San Diego at a prayer meeting with seventeen persons present (the lots, building, and parsonage for First Church costing $3,150), Methodism has grown to thirty-two churches belonging to the above Union. In 1970 twenty United Methodist churches reported a total membership of 12,229 and property valued at over $10,000,000.

Other Methodist churches in San Diego include one A.M.E. CHURCH, one C.M.E., one Evangelical, two FREE METHODISTS and one Free Methodist Latin American.

Meeting challenges of urbanization. Metro was organized early in 1967 as a department of the Union to involve and release the latent energies of Methodists in San Diego: (1) to serve the needs of people in contemporary metropolitan living; (2) to create better understanding and active concern among people of different economic, ethnic, racial, and creedal backgrounds, and (3) to enable these people to implement their concern through effective action, including cooperation with other denominations and community welfare agencies.

Specific Metro programs in operation are: (1) Good Neighbor Center, where volunteers provide a variety of emergency help for people living near the Center; (2) Servicemen's Center, providing a downtown lounge with a homelike atmosphere; (3) Summer Camps for more than 500 underprivileged children, being a cooperative ministry of Metro and Presbyterians utilizing the concern and talents of twenty-seven college student volunteers; (4) Operation Adventure craft classes on Saturdays with nearly 400 children enrolled; (5) an inter-racial vacation church school known as Operation Crosstown; (6) providing facilities for Woodlawn Park Community Library in an isolated semirural area; (7) established Metro Blood Bank for members of churches contributing blood, and (8) Seminars and Leadership Training for what Metro ought and can do in San Diego.

Plans for a Methodist Home in San Diego originated in 1946. In 1953 the San Diego Methodist Home Corporation took the responsibility of operating the Fredericka Home which had been organized in 1908. Pacific Homes Corporation, a benevolent, non-profit corporation of the conference, started operation of Casa de Manana in 1953, and developed Wesley Palms for occupancy in 1961. These three homes can now care for 720 persons, plus 115 in two convalescent hospitals, also operated by Pacific Homes Corporation.

"Work With Senior Citizens" is a pilot project to design and demonstrate ways of meeting needs of older adults to serve and be served through a local parish. The Women's Division of the National Board of Missions started this project in 1960 with income from the Estate Trust Fund of Frank and Georgia A. Lynch, former members of

First Church. The work has expanded now to include five United Methodist Church parishes.

The latest creative attempt to meet the changing needs of people in a growing megalopolis is an ecumenical program, the New Adult Community. This project, initiated in 1967, was also made possible by funds from the Lynch Estate Trust Fund. A sincere effort is exerted to provide an ecumenical experimental ministry which can: (1) facilitate dialogue among "straight" young adults, the churches, and the new adult generation; (2) provide counsel, catalytic, therapeutic, or facilitative service for new adult groups or individuals; (3) collaborate with other community ministries and agencies in planning to meet the needs of the new adult generation, and (4) develop community comprehension groups which try to make churches sensitive and capable of meeting the needs of young adults, to have "authentic" adults whom they accept as their models, and to participate in the shaping of society.

Methodists have generally been "where the action is." Since 1939 they are increasingly ecumenical and cooperative. As United Methodists they have the added strength of two former E.U.B. churches to meet the needs of people in San Diego, "a city in motion."

First Church is the oldest Protestant church in San Diego. It began in an army barracks in February 1869, with seventeen members; it now lists a membership of 2,857. After several successive moves were made the First Church building was erected and dedicated in 1870, while D. A. Dryden was pastor. This building served the congregation for seventeen years until the second church, called the Brick Square, was built. When hard times fell upon San Diego in the 1890's it required a supreme effort by all concerned to save the church from foreclosure. In 1905, with good times restored, the Brick Square was sold to U. S. Grant, Jr. and the cornerstone laid for a new First Church at Ninth and C Streets, dedicated in 1906.

Chimes, weighing 9,600 pounds, proved to be a feature of the building. First Church became widely known through the Second World War years as a friendly church where service personnel and others, made mobile by circumstances, could find inspiration, help, food, housing, or whatever was needed. San Diegans spoke of it as "the Church of the Cross, the Chimes and the Crowds," as its lounges and offices over flowed. A new site was thereafter purchased under the ministry of Stan McKee.

The new Cathedral Church, seating 1,200 people, was built under the administration of Noel LeRoque and consecrated in November 1963. It is located at 2111 Camino Del Rio overlooking Mission Valley where over 85,000 people pass daily. A new period of growth promises continuing vitality and service to a vast city population. The church celebrated its centennial in 1969.

Edward J. P. Davis, Historical San Diego: The Birthplace of California. San Diego: the author, 1953.

Samuel D. Erwine, comp., History of the First Methodist Church, 1869-1937. San Diego, 1937.

General Minutes, UMC, 1970.

Robert F. Green, "Protestant Churches in San Diego." Unpublished thesis, on file with San Diego Historical Society Research Library at Serra Museum, San Diego, 1952.

Geraldine K. Haynes, Fifty Years of Trinity Methodist Church, 1915-1965. San Diego, 1965.

E. D. Jervey, Southern California and Arizona. 1960.

Journal of the Southern California-Arizona Conference.

The Methodist Woman, May 1965.

San Diego Historical Society Quarterly, April 1955.

San Diego Methodist Church Union Minutes.

William E. Smythe, History of San Diego, 1542-1907. San Diego: The Historical Company, 1907. HARRY E. SHIERSON

SANFORD, ALBERT MORRIS (1871-1952), Canadian Methodist and United Church of Canada minister, was born in Center Burlington, Hants County, Nova Scotia, on Dec. 23, 1871. In 1895 he graduated from MOUNT ALLISON UNIVERSITY, Sackville, New Brunswick. Upon completion of his arts course he became a probationer for the ministry, and served for two years as assistant pastor in Truro, Nova Scotia. In 1895 he came to Vancouver, British Columbia and was ordained at the annual session of Conference.

Then followed sixteen years in the pastorate. In 1913 he was appointed principal of Columbian College in New Westminster, the first degree-conferring institution in British Columbia. After Union in 1925, he became professor of Christian education and librarian in Union Theological College of British Columbia.

In the first decade of this century, when the city of Vancouver was experiencing a boom with a corresponding need for new churches, Sanford took on the responsibility of raising funds for church extension. Many a situation was saved by his borrowing from a bank solely on the strength of his own signature. In 1907, and again in 1925, he was elected President of British Columbia Methodist Conference. Not only was he the last President of this Conference, but he was also the first President of the United Church Conference of British Columbia. He played an important part in the life of the Methodist Church during its maturing years, and in the United Church in its formative decades. His place in the community was recognized by his election as the city's "Good Citizen" for 1952. After a brief illness he died on July 30 of that year.

Records of the British Columbia Conference.

E. G. Turnbull, The Church in the Kootenays. Trail: Trail Times, 1965.

W. P. BUNT

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA, U.S.A. Methodism was begun by WILLIAM ROBERTS, who was appointed late in 1846 to superintend the OREGON and CALIFORNIA mission. He arrived at San Francisco on April 24, 1847, and the following day his colleague, JAMES WILBUR, preached on shipboard and Roberts preached in J. H. Brown's hotel, situated facing Portsmouth Square. This was the first Protestant service in the village of some 100 homes.

Shortly afterward Wilbur organized both a class and a Sunday school. In the late autumn Elihu Anthony visited San Francisco from San Jose and preached a few times in California's first schoolhouse and on shipboard. The class and Sunday school were still active.

Gold discovery disrupted life in San Francisco in the spring of 1848. In the winter of 1848-49, local preacher C. O. Hosford reorganized the class and preached regularly.

William Roberts returned to San Francisco early in 1849. He met with the class, but Presbyterian Timothy D. Hunt was conducting worship for all Protestants at that time.

Asa White, local preacher with his famous "blue tent," arrived at San Francisco May 10, 1849, and led Methodist work until the arrival of WILLIAM TAYLOR, Sept. 21, 1849. Taylor carried on his famous street preaching until 1856, when he left San Francisco. He and ISAAC OWENS established the BOOK CONCERN of the Pacific in 1850, first bookstore in California. S. D. Simonds was appointed pastor in San Francisco in 1852, and M. C. BRIGGS followed him in 1853.

The M.E. Church, South began work in San Francisco in May 1850, with JESSE BORING as superintendent. A. M. WYNN assisted for a few weeks. The outstanding minister of the Southern Church in San Francisco was O. P. FITZGERALD, who also served for four years as State Superintendent of Public Instruction, and was later elected bishop. The Glide Memorial Church has been the most successful church of the Southern Church tradition.

Three Methodist congregations established in the 1850's eventually grew to include German, Norwegian-Danish, Swedish, Chinese, Japanese, Korean, Filipino and Negro churches, as well as numerous undifferentiated congregations. In the late 1920's four congregations united to form Temple Church, and to build the William Taylor Hotel, with the Temple Church on the lower floors. Conceived as a scheme to produce revenues for mission, it was a casualty of the 1929 depression and was lost to Methodism. Great preachers in San Francisco after the pioneer period include ELBERT R. DILLE, WILLIAM STIDGER, and Walter John Sherman.

The WOMAN'S HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY'S National Training School in San Francisco for a generation trained women as deaconesses and for pastoral work. Miss Katherine Maurer, most noted of its graduates, served at the U. S. immigration station at Angel Island for thirty-nine years. The Mary Elizabeth Inn, a home for working girls; Gum Moon Hall, a residence hall for Chinese girls; and the GOODWILL INDUSTRIES are Methodist institutions in San Francisco.

At present there are eighteen United Methodist churches in San Francisco, in addition to a ministry to students at San Francisco State College. There are nineteen ministers and 4,926 members. The episcopal and conference headquarters, and a branch of the METHODIST PUBLISHING HOUSE, are in San Francisco.

First A.M.E. Zion Church was one of the first Negro churches established in San Francisco—a very modest one, located on Stockton Street between Broadway and Pacific. The first pastor of the church was J. J. MOORE. Like many of our leaders, he also assumed civic leadership and made many friends who proved to be "friends indeed in our time of need." One such friend was Thomas Starr King, the leader of the anti-slavery movement in California, and pastor of the first Unitarian Church on Stockton Street.

Church membership was growing rapidly. In 1864, King and his members sold their Stockton Street building and property to the Zion Church. It was a friendly transaction. For many years the Zion Church was known as the "Starr King Methodist Church."

By 1864 Moore had not only established himself as a religious leader, but also as the first Negro teacher in the whole state. He was elected bishop in 1868.

In 1872 Hillary was appointed pastor. He legally changed the title of the church to A.M.E. Zion Church of San Francisco.

From 1870 to 1906 little material is available on the history of the church because of the 1906 earthquake and fire. There was nothing to be salvaged from the ashes—not even a record. During the following three years there was no building and no pastor.

A new building was erected but was heavily mortgaged. The holder of the second mortgage wanted to foreclose, but Mayor James Rolph, Jr. aided the church by loaning sufficient monies to cover the mortgage. Many times the people became discouraged, but they persevered until, at last, success was in sight.

In 1919 W. J. J. Byers was again appointed to the Church, and under his leadership a Sunday school, Christian Endeavor, and evening service were started. The membership began to grow.

In 1926 Edward J. Magruder began a fifteen-year pastorate. During this time First A.M.E. Zion Church became the most famous and prosperous on the West Coast.

L. Roy Bennett came as pastor in 1956, from Montgomery, Ala. Under his pastorate the members have erected a beautiful $200,000 edifice.

Glide Memorial Church is an evangelistic center composed of several congregations which reflect the pluralistic nature of the city. These congregations are action-oriented and gather around various issues which confront persons involved with urban living. Not all members of the congregations identify themselves as Christians or as churchmen but do share a concern for the religious or "meanings" dimension of urban living. Those members of the several congregations who do identify themselves as Methodists constitute the worshipping congregation.

The sanctuary of Glide Church is the scene of Youth A-Go-Go rock 'n roll concerts, political education sessions, and meetings of homophile groups, as well as a center of worship. Simultaneously, in other rooms, an interviewer may be recording the story of a person who alleges that he was beaten by police; a committee of professionals and troubled young adults may be seeking a viable program to enable them to become self-determining and productive citizens; a group of laymen and clergy may be struggling to articulate their theological position on an issue facing the city; an inter-cultural group may be disagreeing strongly about political strategy and the tension between self-interest and corporate responsibility. Senior citizens may be discussing international events, or a distraught unwed mother may be considering with her counselor whether or not she will have an abortion.

In 1929 ELIZABETH GLIDE established a trust in memory of her husband for the development of an evangelistic center in downtown San Francisco. Between 1929 and 1948 the life of the church centered around a pulpit ministry under the leadership of JULIAN C. MCPHEETERS. In 1962 Bishop DONALD H. TIPPETT appointed Lewis E. Durham to create an experimental center to discover new ways for the church to relate itself to urban culture. In the same year he called John V. Moore as pastor of Glide Memorial Church. From 1962 Glide Church, in cooperation with the Glide Urban Center, concentrated on meeting the needs of the residents of its neighborhood and on opening its facility to community concerns. From 1962 until 1966 Glide Church maintained a small, permanent congregation, while a large number of transients attended worship services. The present congregations function under the program of Glide Urban Center for the purpose of helping persons and groups to discover responsible ways of interacting and relating to the culture in which they live.

C. V. Anthony, Fifty Years. 1901.

California Christian Advocate.

Journal of the California-Nevada Conference.

General Minutes, UMC, 1970.

L. L. Loofbourow, In Search of God's Gold. 1950.

J. C. Simmons, Pacific Coast. 1886.

DON M. CHASE
DAVID H. BRADLEY
LEWIS E. DURHAM

SANGRAMPUR, Bihar (Bengal Conference) is a village in INDIA in which there is a Methodist church with most of its members from a Moslem background. It started in 1884 as a result of family prayers conducted by a British official, E. McLeod Smith, subdivisional officer at Pakaur. On Sunday mornings, he was accustomed to gather together his staff of servants and office assistants for a worship service. Among them was a Muslim clerk, and his conversion attracted much attention. A school was opened in his village, and eight persons confessed Christian faith and were baptized.

In 1886 nineteen new converts were enrolled. In 1888 the headquarters of government was changed and the Bengal Conference purchased the government buildings and twenty-one acres of land. Two orphanages were moved there from CALCUTTA. By 1891, the church had 130 local members, mostly from among Muslims. A number of Methodist ministers and teachers have come from among the children and grandchildren of these former Muslims. In 1897 an earthquake severely damaged the buildings which had been bought from the government.

In this general section of Bengal, along the borders of the line that now divides India and PAKISTAN, there are several villages in which Christian congregations consist mostly of converts from Islam. But Sangrampur has the only Methodist congregation in the region consisting mainly of converts from Islam or descendants of such converts.

J. WASKOM PICKETT

W. E. SANGSTER

SANGSTER, WILLIAM EDWIN (1900-1960), British Methodist, was born in London on June 5, 1900. He entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1922 and soon made his mark as a preacher. In 1939 he was appointed to the Westminster Central Hall in LONDON, where he became nationally known. He was elected president of the Methodist Conference in 1950, and in 1955 he took charge of the Home Mission Department; his many evangelistic schemes were cut short by illness; he had to retire in 1959, and died on May 24, 1960. He wrote much: Methodism Can Be Born Again (1938) and Methodism's Unfinished Task (1947);

The Path to Perfection (1943), which also obtained him a Ph.D. at London University; and a series of books on preaching: The Craft of Sermon Illustration (1946); The Craft of Sermon Construction (1949); and The Approach to Preaching (1951). His sermons and lectures proved very popular in the United States.

P. E. Sangster, Doctor Sangster. 1962.

JOHN KENT

SAN JOSE, CALIFORNIA, U.S.A. Methodism has served this area for over 120 years. The city is now one of the fastest growing of the state and nation. It is the county seat of Santa Clara County, which has close to a million people, and is located fifty miles south of SAN FRANCISCO. A Methodist society was first organized in San Jose in 1847 by the missionaries and is now the First United Methodist Church.

At the time of the organization of the CALIFORNIA CONFERENCE in 1851 San Jose reported 117 members. In 1857 it had become a station with seventy-five members and church property valued at $4,500. The Germans also organized an M.E. church which later merged with existing Methodist churches. The M.E. Church, South introduced services at an early period and in 1876 there were 796 members in the three churches.

In the great San Francisco earthquake of April 18, 1906 the First M.E. Church was so badly damaged that it had to be declared unsafe for use. GEORGE A. MILLER, who later became a bishop of Central America, was the pastor when the present edifice was constructed and dedicated in 1911. Distinguished pastors of this historic church, besides Bishop Miller, include WILLIAM L. "BILL" STIDGER, Frank Linder, Channing A. Richardson and C. B. Sylvester.

Methodism in San Jose has grown with the population. New churches have been built in the suburbs and outlying areas. Today there are ten churches in San Jose with a membership of 5,332. Recent mergers of the Latin American and Japanese Methodist churches have brought two Latin American and two Japanese churches into The United Methodist Church. Another new church was started in San Jose in 1968 in an area where a planned community is developing.

There is one FREE METHODIST CHURCH in San Jose, which recently deserted the downtown area for a suburban site and one small A.M.E. church located in the downtown area. The largest minority in San Jose is the Latin American people with 70,000 in the city and well over 100,000 in the county. The Negro population at present is less than one percent but growing.

Bishop DONALD H. TIPPETT, who retired in 1968 after twenty years of service in the San Francisco area, gave leadership to the development of The Methodist Church in San Jose and the Santa Clara Valley. San Jose District is one of the strongest districts of the Conference in numbers and financial strength. San Jose, First, has been a "mother" church in this growth.

DONALD A. GETTY

SANKEY, IRA DAVID (1840-1908), American evangelist and hymnologist, was born at Edinburg, Pa. As president of the Y.M.C.A. of New Castle, Pa., he attended the international convention of that body at Indianapolis, Ind., in 1870. There he met the noted evangelist, Dwight L. Moody, and began an association which lasted for many years.

As song leader Sankey traveled extensively with Moody through North America and Great Britain, conducting revival meetings. In later years he conducted such meetings by himself until stricken by blindness in 1903.

Many hymns of his own composition appeared in his compilations: Sacred Songs and Solos (1873); Gospel Hymns (1875) and Young People's Songs of Praise (1902). In 1906 there was published his autobiography, My Life and the Story of the Gospel Hymns.

Wheeler Preston, American Biographies. New York: Harper & Brothers, 1940. J. MARVIN RAST

SANTA ANA, CALIFORNIA, U.S.A. Methodism began in 1869, when W. H. Spurgeon bought land from the Spanish and established Santa Ana. Within months afterwards postwar soldiers drifted into the area. Some of them met one evening in the home of W. H. Titchenal and organized the M.E. Church, South. Four years later the M.E. Church began with eight members to establish their fellowship. For the next two years these two groups met in a school building, alternating Sundays for worship. In 1876 both purchased property and both put up white frame buildings. It was in one of these buildings later that Glen Martin built its first airplane.

By 1906 the Spurgeon Methodist Church had a red brick building in the center of town, while three blocks away the First Church (ME) members met in a red sandstone construction. Today these two churches are located about two miles apart, in new edifices less than ten years old, and are numbered among the strong Christian fellowships of the city. The red brick building of the Southern church is now a court room. One sits in the pew, still with its hymnal racks, wondering whether he shall receive grace from the pulpit on the left, or judgment from the bench on the right.

From these two mother groups have come other Methodist churches and causes. St. Luke Church, located in south Santa Ana, began as Richland Avenue in 1915, a mission church of First Methodist. A Latin American Church, named Gethsemane, also began as a mission church under the protective wing of First Church. Five other Methodist churches have sprung up adjacent to Santa Ana, mainly under the missionary zeal of these two original fellowships. And if you extend the radius ten miles, you would now find twenty growing Methodist churches in the area. There is also a strong GOODWILL INDUSTRIES organization in Santa Ana begun by the Methodists in 1924, and a thriving Salvation Army, with several FREE METHODIST fellowships, and an African Methodist.

Orange County, of which Santa Ana is the county seat town, has 40,000 Methodists. Within this number is a heavy concentration of the political and educational leadership of the cities. In this very rapidly growing part of southern California, Methodism is expanding and continuing to exert leadership.

First Church is located in the county seat of rapidly growing Orange County. Because of a long history of moral and spiritual leadership in the county, the congregation elected to remain in the center-city, near the civic center area, rather than relocate in the suburbs. Having completed in 1966 a ten-year building program, including the construction of a new sanctuary, the church is now concentrating on service projects in the inner city and is seeking to become an ever more vital laboratory for Christian life and mission.

In 1873 Will A. Knighten founded First Church, four years after the city of Santa Ana was established. On November 11 he wrote in his diary, "Went to Santa Ana for food. At night we had a class meeting. Six present. Prospects good." On November 29 he organized the First M.E. Church with eight charter members. At first the congregation met in a school building, in homes, and in Latimer Hall. Then in September 1878, during the pastorate of F. D. Bovard, the first property was purchased on the corner of Second and Main Street.

C. W. Tarr led the congregation in building the first church structure on the Main Street site in 1880. The church was incorporated in 1884, while A. L. Dearing was pastor. By 1899 the congregation had outgrown the first buildings on Second and Main, so the property on the corner of Sixth and Spurgeon Streets was purchased, during the pastorate of J. B. Green. He remained to guide the congregation in building a new sanctuary, which was dedicated by Bishop J. W. HAMILTON on Jan. 6, 1901.

First Church, which had earlier commenced ministries to the Mexican American population in the city, purchased property at the corner of First and Garfield in 1912, for the erection of a "Methodist Mexican Church" with a Spanish speaking ministry. This has continued close ties ever since with the sister church, ultimately named Gethsemane Methodist Church. In 1916 the Annual Conference met in Santa Ana, during the ministry of E. J. Inwood.

In 1929 the Asbury Building, a major educational unit, was constructed during the pastorate of George A. Warner, Sr., whose ministry during the depression years deepened the social conscience of the congregation. In 1941 the debt was paid off, with a prominent layman, W. A. Taylor, leading the mortgage burning ceremony. Alec C. Nichols was pastor in 1948, when the seventy-fifth anniversary of the church was celebrated. In 1966 the construction of a new sanctuary was completed, on the site where the former church structure had stood. This climaxed the building program carried on during the twelve-year pastorate of Bob Shuler, Jr.

Galal Gough was appointed pastor of First Church in 1967, together with G. Edward Carner. First Church continues developing special ministries to the inner city and among the ethnic minorities in Santa Ana. In 1970 it reported 1,868 members.

General Minutes, UMC, 1970.

GALAL GOUGH

SANTA CLARA VALLEY, CALIFORNIA, U.S.A. When the Spanish decided to occupy Alta (Upper) CALIFORNIA they established in SAN JOSE their first pueblo, a civilian community as distinguished from a military post (presidio) or a mission. Two missions, San Jose and Santa Clara, were near by.

When immigrants from the United States began to penetrate California, this valley was one of the first to attract them. In 1846 a Methodist exhorter, Adna Hecox, arrived and began to hold services, followed the next year by a local preacher, Elihu Anthony. The group they gathered was, with SAN FRANCISCO, the earliest continuing Protestant congregation in the state. In the next few years the churches at Santa Clara and San Jose became among the strongest of Methodist organizations. The UNIVERSITY OF THE PACIFIC was located here in 1850.

Santa Clara Valley has the highest concentration of United Methodist churches and membership in the CALIFORNIA-NEVADA CONFERENCE. First Church, Palo Alto, with its new 1-1/3 million dollar plant and 3,000 members, leads, but a dozen of the stronger churches in the Conference are near at hand. There are thirty Methodist churches in the Santa Clara Valley, with some 20,000 members.

LEON L. LOOFBOUROW

SANTA MARIA, Rio Grande do Sul, Brazil. Lar Metodista (Methodist Home) is a Methodist home for orphans and needy children. It was founded on June 24, 1939, under the inspiration and leadership of ADOLFO UNGARETTI and his wife, Dona Luiza Vurlod, who were its first directors.

The funds were mostly provided by the Methodist Women's Societies of the Second (Southern) Region. The original residence had a capacity for thirty children.

In 1955 a modern building was completed with capacity for seventy children and the supervisors. Two DEACONESSES and several other workers were appointed to care for the home. Attached to it is a primary school accredited by the state, which furnishes and pays for the teachers. The children help with the housework and care for their own farm vegetable gardens. Future plans include a trade school, the first unit of which—a printing shop—already operates and serves the home, the church, and the community.

World Outlook, May 1966.

EULA K. LONG

SANTA MONICA, CALIFORNIA, U.S.A. First Church was founded in 1876 in what was a small seaside resort near the not-then exploded metropolis of LOS ANGELES. It has grown into one of the five largest churches of the SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA-ARIZONA CONFERENCE and one of the three largest United Methodist congregations on the Pacific Coast. Sharing in the tremendous growth of the metropolitan area, the Santa Monica Church has become an urban church ministering to a community which has all the problems of expanding population, heavy scientific industrial concentration, high proportion of advanced level educational attainment, as well as "pockets of poverty," minority group ghettos, and political conservatism.

The University of California at Los Angeles is within walking distance. One aircraft concern has its main plant and headquarters here, with many members working also for two other aircraft plants in the community. The city is surrounded on three sides by Los Angeles, with the Pacific Ocean to the west.

A primary interest of the church is in the field of missions. In addition, the interest of young people has been enlisted for Christian service, with three of its young men being ordained at a recent annual conference session, while four other young people (including one young woman) were at the same time pursuing studies in Methodist theological schools. Their education has been helped in nearly every case by a "scholarship aid program" which has been in effect for a number of years in the church.

The church buildings include a sanctuary seating 900, church school facilities adequate for a splendid educational program, a dining room and social hall, plus a lovely chapel accommodating ninety persons. The slender spire, rising about 140 feet above the street, is a landmark in the entire community.

In 1970 the church reported 3,134 members, property valued at $1,407,731, and $240,844 raised for all purposes.

General Minutes, UMC, 1970.

NOEL C. LEROQUE

SANTA FE, NEW MEXICO, U.S.A. St. John's Church offers an impressive sight to visitors approaching on the LAS VEGAS highway especially at night. A tall lighted figure of Christ the Shepherd gleams in full stained-glass colors—an appropriate beacon for visitors to this city named in Spanish for the Holy Faith.

St. John's excellent plant, constructed in 1951 and 1965 of brick in contemporary architecture at a cost of nearly one million dollars, speaks eloquently of Methodism's growth in NEW MEXICO's capital city. It began in 1850, four years after the bloodless takeover from Mexico by General S. W. Kearny's forces, when E. C. Nicholson, of Independence, Mo., preached from I Corinthians 2:1-2 to a small congregation of Americans, most of them connected with the Army. The service was held in the oldest governmental building in the United States, the adobe Palace of the Governors, erected in 1609 by the Spanish conquerors. Three years later Nicholson briefly returned with Walter Hansen, a Spanish-speaking Swedish Methodist, and Benigno Cardenas. Nicholson and Hansen viewed prospects dimly, but Señor Cardenas, though vested by illness, stayed and on Nov. 20, 1853, preached in the plaza and surrendered his Roman Catholic credentials. But Methodist work lagged. In 1865 when the newly organized COLORADO CONFERENCE sent "Father" JOHN L. DYER, "the Snowshoe Itinerant," formerly a missionary in South America, the Santa Fe congregation largely consisted of Governor W. A. Pile, who had been a Methodist minister, his family and staff.

THOMAS HARWOOD of DENVER was appointed to "New Mexico" in 1870, but when Governor Pile and family left, Harwood was loathe to press missionary work because he thought to do so "would result in a denominational struggle for existence, for I found the Presbyterians had a hard struggle to maintain their work." Later in 1873 after a vain effort to locate a key to the locked Presbyterian church, he preached in the Army Chapel to sixteen persons. An insight into his beliefs and methods is given by his impressions of Santa Fe: "This old town, noted for her age and homeliness, still squats in her filth and the people in their sins. She may have a brighter day, but it must be when the dim candlelight of her Romish altars shall be removed and the bright sun of Protestant Christianity shall rise." Statistics for the New Mexico Mission of the Colorado Annual Conference in 1876 list Cimarron, Elizabethtown, Las Cruces, Manzana, Palomas, Peralta, Silver City, Socorro, Valverde, and Vemejo—but not Santa Fe. Perhaps the capital city was without a regular pastor till appointment in 1880 of H. H. Hall, who raised an adobe church on San Francisco Street.

It served until, after financial vicissitudes, a new structure was dedicated in 1906 on Don Gaspar. Growth in membership and support led to groundbreaking March 4, 1951, under pastorate of Earl M. Nowlin for the present structure on Las Vegas Highway and Cordova Road. It was completed and opened Feb. 7, 1954 with the pastor, Howard Bush, noting 402 in Sunday school, 750 at morning service giving an offering of $1,012, with 374 cars parked on church grounds. A place of honor is given to a large bell which hung in the 1880 edifice, and which bears the inscription: "Come When I Call—To Serve God All." At formal dedication ceremonies led by Bishop W. ANGE SMITH, Oct. 27, 1963, Roy L. Ward, the minister, could report 1,657 full members and 342 in preparation. In 1970 the church reported 1,800 members.

John L. Carpenter, St. John's Methodist Church, Founder's Day Program, Nov. 24, 1957. Reprinted in Service of Dedication, Oct. 27, 1963.

T. Harwood, New Mexico. 1908, 1910.

M. Simpson, Cyclopaedia. 1881.

LELAND D. CASE

SANTI, RICCARDO (1871-1961), and his sons EMANUELE (1904-), FABIO (1911-1956), and TEOFILO (1909-), were and are members of a remarkable family in ITALY, closely connected in the public interest with CASA MATERNA ORPHANAGE, which Riccardo Santi founded and which other members of the family have carried on.

RICCARDO SANTI

Riccardo Santi was orphaned at six years of age, and reared in a Methodist orphanage at Venice. As a boy he studied printing and later graduated from the Methodist theological seminary which had been established in Rome. He was ordained to the ministry in 1894. In 1900 he was married to Ersilia Bragaglia (1880-1956). She was a graduate of the Bologna Conservatory of Music. Riccardo held pastorates in Foggia, 1897; Bari, 1898-1899; Palermo, 1900-1902; Naples, 1903. Having occasion, as the son tells the story, to take two homeless children who were begging on the corner to his home, he became interested in this type of work from then on. Casa Matera under his leadership grew to become world-wide in its fame and through his sons it has continued to exert an enormously helpful influence in present day Italy.

Riccardo and his wife, Ersilia, were delegates to the M.E. GENERAL CONFERENCE in Springfield, Mass., U.S.A., in 1924; and also to that in Columbus, Ohio, in 1936. They were recommended to be selected as the European family of the year in 1951 by the Christian Advocate (Chicago).

Emanuele Santi became a minister, a teacher and a musician. For a time he was violinist for the Naples Symphony and he also had worked with his violin in Switzerland. On coming to America, he became director of the Conservatory of Music in Newburgh, N. Y. In 1935 he graduated from the Union Theological Seminary. He obtained his Ph.D. degree from Columbia University. Then he became a pastor in NEW YORK, serving a bilingual Methodist church in Yonkers for fifteen years; the Castle Heights Methodist at White Plains for five years. In 1956 he returned to Italy and became a co-director of Casa Matera and to this institution he has subsequently devoted his life. He has made frequent trips to interest the outside world in Casa Matera and visits America from time to time.

Fabio Santi, a lawyer, was a graduate of the University of Naples. He became a champion of the Methodists against Rome and Mussolini in the days of fascism. He served as director of Casa Matera from 1945 to 1956. His other activities and achievements included acting as mayor of Catholic Portici, and as leader in post-war reconstruction including the erection of a hospital. He also established a Scientific Lyseum (preparatory college), and was founder of a newspaper, Il Vesuvio. He was also president of Portici, a National Counselor, and a member of the Liberal Party of Italy.

TEOFILO SANTI

Teofilo Santi received the M.D. degree from the University of Naples, and was a graduate student at Padua in Berlin. He married Livia Lari (the daughter of a Baptist minister). Teofilo and Livia became co-directors of the Casa Matera in 1956. He served as Director, as well as Medical Director, of Casa Mia, and worked with the WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES in caring for Protestant and Orthodox people in refugee camps in Naples during the war months. Casa Mia is the only Protestant day center in Naples for the care of families living in the slums.

Besides Casa Matera and Casa Mia, Teofilo is responsible for the new Evangelical Hospital in Ponticelli. Before this hospital came into operation, there was a staff of Protestant doctors working in clinics located in Protestant Churches in Naples.

Riccardo Santì also had a daughter, Luisa, who graduated from Columbia University in New York. She is now an American citizen and lives in New York City.

The Christian Advocate (Chicago), Oct. 18, 1951.

Christian Science Monitor, July 22, 1955.

Cyril Davey, The Santi Story. London: Epworth Press, n.d.

Le Protestant, Sept. 15, 1958.

Michigan Christian Advocate, Sept. 12, 1963.

Voce Metodista, July 1951, July 15, 1953; July 15, 1956.

World Outlook, July 1949, April 1955, March 1964.

SANTIAGO, Chile, is the capital and largest city in CHILE, and the fourth largest in South America. It is 116 miles from Valparaíso, its seaport. It stands on a wide plain at an altitude of 1,796 feet, and is backed by the chain of the Andes. The city is served by international as well as national airlines.

There are fifteen Methodist churches and preaching points in the city, including an English-speaking church which has often been served by a Methodist pastor. (See also SANTIAGO COLLEGE and SWEET MEMORIAL INSTITUTE.)

SANTIAGO COLLEGE is an elementary and secondary school for girls in SANTIAGO, CHILE, founded by Methodists and one that enjoys high prestige over Chile. It was established in 1880 by IRA LaFETRA, one of the missionaries brought by Bishop WILLIAM TAYLOR to start a self-supporting school as a means of introducing the Methodist Church.

LaFetra arrived in Chile with a letter of presentation from the secretary of state of the United States for the president of Chile. He explained to the president and the secretary of state of Chile why he had come and asked their advice. Their reaction was favorable to such a degree that they decided to enroll their own daughters in the school when it began. Soon after this interview the doors of Santiago College were opened to girls of every creed and social level.

From its beginning the school was a success. In a letter written in 1880 LaFetra explained the philosophy of Santiago College: "No professor should teach a specific religious creed or dogma. Nevertheless, this should not be interpreted to exclude the inculcating of the virtues of piety, devotion, reverence, obedience and honesty."

In 1924, upon the visit of Señora Elisa de Migel, an ex-student residing in the United States, the school had outgrown its locale and was in serious need of repairs to the buildings. Señora Migel left Santiago with the firm purpose of building a new Santiago College. The money she gave for this purpose was matched in 1924 by the M.E. Church in the United States, making possible relocation of the school in 1928. By 1932 the new classrooms were ready for use on a commodious new campus, enclosed and guarded with walls as are all such schools in Latin America.

While it had been started as a mission enterprise, the school in 1928 was incorporated independently from the Board of Missions and became registered with the Board of Regents of the State of NEW YORK. In 1966 it received its own juridical personality from the Chilean government, and the board of trustees was organized in a way that gave more authority for decisions to be made locally.

From 1932 until 1959 the school was directed by Elizabeth Mason and grew from fewer than 300 students to 800. In 1966 there were 1,200 students enrolled from kindergarten through the secondary level.

Larry Jackson, "History of Santiago College." Unpublished ms. in custody of school, 1959. JOYCE HILL

SANTOS, ALMIR DOS SANTOS (1912-), bishop of the Methodist Church of Brazil, was born in Cabo Frio, state of Rio de Janeiro, on April 23, 1912. He received his B.A. degree from the INSTITUTO GRANBERY and his B.D. from its theological school. Later, he studied at EMORY UNIVERSITY in the United States, specializing in the rural church and the church and community courses. He also took special courses in clinical pastoral training at the State Hospital in Elgin, Ill.

On April 23, 1938, he married Laura Jesus dos Santos, and they had three sons—Edson, Carlos Alberto, and Carlos Wesley. He was ordained DEACON that year, and ELDER in 1941. His activities have included pastorates in the state of Minas Gerais, teaching practical theology at the Methodist seminary in Rudge Ramos, São Paulo, conducting pastoral clinics, editing a magazine for pastors, and pioneering in industrial evangelization in the city of São Paulo. He has written a book on Christian stewardship, Mordomia Cristã.

In 1963, he was elected general secretary of the Board of Social Action of the Methodist Church of Brazil, and led the church to a new consciousness of the importance of Christian witness in social concerns. This same interest raised him to the presidency of the Church and Society Commission of Latin American Churches, and to high office in the field of social action in the Confederation of Evangelical Churches of Brazil.

He was elected bishop in July 1965, by the General Conference of the Methodist Church of Brazil. His episcopal area comprises the states of Minas Gerais, Espírito Santo, Bahia, and supervision of the work in BRASILIA. His present episcopal headquarters are at Belo Horizonte, Minas Gerais.

EULA K. LONG

SAO PAULO, Brazil, is the largest city in BRAZIL, with a population of 4,098,000. It is an enterprising, modern metropolis in every way. The first Methodist church in São Paulo was organized on Feb. 10, 1884, by the American missionary, JAMES WILLIAM KOCER. The founding members were Giovanni and Clementina Bernini (Italians), a Mr. Bellinger (British), and BERNARDO DE MIRANDA, the Brazilian who became one of the country's first national preachers. The little congregation met first in the house of a Lutheran family, above a store on the Largo do Mercadinho (Square of the Little Market). They afterward met in several different places until Oct. 22, 1892, when the congregation established itself at Numbers 12 and 14, Largo do Arouche, the first property of the Methodist church in the city of São Paulo. There it remained for years.

In 1894, a new congregation started holding services on Rua Esperança, 15-B, the same location where the Methodist publishing house (IMPRESA METODISTA) was founded by J. W. WOLLING, and where the official organ was edited and printed. This group became, eventually, Central Methodist Church of São Paulo, whose beautiful sanctuary stands at 659 Rua da Liberdade. The church was built in 1920, under the pastorate of MICHAEL DICKIE, with donations raised in the city, matching an equal sum from a church in the United States. In 1920, the publishing house was installed behind the church on the grounds, and remained there until 1957, when it was moved to new quarters in suburban São Bernardo do Campo.

In 1960, Central Church, under Brazilian leadership, began an extensive building project—a five-storied structure to meet the needs of the church school, with a primary and high school educational unit, and offices for the accommodation of the various Church Boards. Presently, there are about eighty organized churches in this great city, and seventy Sunday schools with more than 6,000 pupils. Many churches have parsonages and full-time pastors; others are served by supply pastors and students from the near-by Seminary at Rudge Ramos. The three Methodist Boards—Evangelism, Christian Education, and Social Concerns—have their headquarters in a building adjoining the church. There are more than twenty chapels and halls for worship located in the suburbs. Many churches carry on parochial schools and adult literacy classes in their buildings, conduct clinics, and perform social services of various types. There is also a weekly program on television, supported by the church.

In Santo Amaro, located on one of the finest physical properties of the Methodist Church, is the INSTITUTO METODISTA, and also the Theological Seminary, FACULDADE DE TEOLOGIA.

Instituto Metodista Educacional, formerly the Escola Metodista, was founded in Ribeirão Preto, São Paulo, on Sept. 5, 1899, by Leonora Smith, with Mamie Fenley as assistant, both of the WOMEN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY (MES). Miss Smith had to finance the school out of her own meager salary, as Bishop EUGENE HENDRIX had warned that there would be no appropriation for it. This entailed a tremendous personal sacrifice. The school began in one room in the preacher's house, and was bitterly opposed by Catholics from the start.

In 1902-03, a severe yellow fever epidemic struck the city. Schools were closed and some public buildings transformed into hospitals. At this time, Misses Ada Parker and Willie Bowman of the school offered their services as nurses, and this so greatly impressed the public that a climate of admiration began to be manifested for the school. Rapid growth took place, and in 1914, the school was moved into a comfortable building in a good location. In 1949 religious education courses were offered, and with the sanction of the General Conference, this department was moved to Santo Amaro, São Paulo. The local church took charge of the school in Ribeirão Preto, and today it belongs to the Conference, and the principal is a Brazilian. It offers primary, high school, normal and business courses, and its enrollment is over 900.

J. L. Kennedy, Metodismo no Brasil. 1928. INNARD ROCHA
EULA K. LONG

SARASOTA, FLORIDA, U.S.A. First Church was organized in October 1891, by William Tresca, a young man who had recently graduated from EMORY UNIVERSITY. At that time Sarasota was only a small village, and a store room on Main Street was secured as a meeting place for the twelve charter members. Within a year the church members made plans to build a church, and found a lot costing $40 on the corner of Main Street and Pineapple Street.

This lot was bought by one of the members and deeded to the church, and upon it a very plain building was built. In 1894 additional funds were raised and a vestibule and steeple were added to the plain building.

Tresca served as pastor of this church three different times over a period of several years. Other pastors came and went about every two years, until Watt Smith came in 1921 and stayed six years.

In 1911 the church was offered $1600 for their lot, so they agreed to sell it and moved the church building a short distance down Pineapple Street; this place has remained the site of the church through the years. In 1913 a new church was built at a cost of $10,000, and this building remained the church sanctuary until 1955. Then it became the chapel.

The church membership steadily increased through the years; by 1950 nearly 1,000 people belonged to this church, and it became necessary to build a much larger sanctuary. Over a period of three years enough money was raised or pledged for the building of a $500,000 sanctuary. It was completed and the first service was held in the new sanctuary on Christmas Day, 1955. Five years later all indebtedness had been paid and the mortgage-burning ceremony took place. In 1970 the membership was 2,119.

ELIZABETH GARRETT BRAREN

METHODIST CHURCH IN SARAWAK

SARAWAK, formerly a British Colony on the north coast of Borneo, is now an integral part of independent MALAYSIA, a member of the United Nations. It has a coastline of about 400 miles, and an area of approximately 50,000 square miles. The capital is Kuching in the western corner. The population approaches 900,000, consisting chiefly of Sea Dyaks (Ibans), Chinese and Malays.

Two missionaries of the M.E. Church in Malaya, Benjamin F. West and H. L. E. Leuring, explored the Dyak (Iban) country of Sarawak in 1890. However, no formal Methodist approach was made before the turn of the century. In 1901 a large company of Christian Chinese, forced from their homes in CHINA by the Boxer Revolt and persecution, was permitted to settle in Sarawak. Bishop FRANK W. WARNE of INDIA, learning of the venture, changed his itinerary so as to accompany them. Many of the migrant Chinese were Methodists, their preachers leading them. Going with them from HONG KONG to Sarawak, Bishop Warne greatly aided in the settlement and the establishment of Methodist congregations in the new habitat. The following year Benjamin West visited them for a period. On his return and report, JAMES M. HOOVER was transferred from Penang, Malaya, in 1903, as the first Methodist missionary directly appointed to Sarawak. With Mrs. Hoover he headed the mission for over thirty years, until his death in 1935.

The work first developed among the Chinese. Hoover extended it to the Malays, whose language he spoke. In recent years the approach to the Dyaks (Ibans) has met with extraordinary success. The Woman's Division of the Board of Missions of The Methodist Church (U.S.A.) joined the effort in 1951. The present church membership is over 13,000, with an equal number of probationers, and a very large constituency. Evangelistic work is vigorous among the Hakka-speaking Chinese, and in the coastal towns from Bintulu eastward for 200 miles to the Brunei border.

Centers of work are: Kuching (the capital); Sibü (where the Hoover Memorial stands); Kapit (site of the important Christ Hospital serving over 20,000 patients annually); Bukit Lan (where a 400-acre farm provides agricultural training). Recently the Sarawak Iban Provisional Conference was formed, to give integrity to the great work among the Dyak peoples.

Ecumenical Methodism renders definite aid. The British Methodist Church supports several missionaries. The church in India provides an instructor in the theological seminary. A doctor and several nurses at Christ Hospital are from the PHILIPPINES, supported by Methodism there. Batak pastors from Sumatra (INDONESIA) work with the Bataks and Dyaks.

Barbara H. Lewis, Methodist Overseas Missions. 1960.

World Methodist Council, Handbook of Information, 1966-71.

World Parish, April 1966.

ARTHUR BRUCE MOSS

THE FIRST METHODIST CHURCH IN NORWAY

SARPSBORG, Norway, has the distinction of being the place where the first Methodist congregation in Norway was organized by Ole P. Petersen on Sept. 11, 1856. The first Methodist church was built there and consecrated on November 1, 1857.

Shortly after the New Year of 1854, Petersen, whose remarkable life is narrated elsewhere (see NORWAY), made a journey to revisit a prominent layman in the Norwegian state church, whom he had visited formerly when he had been home in Norway. The following conversation took place: "Are you the O.P. Petersen who was here about four years ago?" "Yes, I am." "Welcome home, I am happy to see you again. But now I have to ask you a question: I have heard that many requests were made for you to return to Norway, and that the Methodist Church in America has now sent you here to preach God's word to us. Is that really true?" Telling him that it was, the man then said, with tears in his eyes, "May God bless the Methodist Church in America!"

Up to then Petersen had resided in his native town of Fredrikstad when he was in Norway, and had from there visited many other places. On one of his visits to the neighboring town of Sarpsborg, a revival movement came into being there, and in view of the prevailing conditions, it became necessary for him to settle in Sarpsborg. He took over a house that was being built, and adapted it into a chapel. That was the first Methodist chapel in Norway.

EILERT BERNHARDT

SASNETT, WILLIAM JEREMIAH (1820-1865), American minister and educator of GEORGIA and ALABAMA, was born in Hancock County, Ga., on April 29, 1820. He graduated at Oglethorpe University in 1839, and studied law for a while, but abandoned law for the work of the ministry. In 1843 he was appointed to the first church built by Daniel Pratt in what is now Prattville, Ala., the church itself being a two-story frame building, the upper floor being used as a church, and the ground floor as a store. Sasnett was severely affected with rheumatism and found it impracticable to travel as a preacher, so in 1849 accepted the chair of English Literature in EMORY COLLEGE near Oxford, Ga. In 1858 he went to LA GRANGE Female College in Georgia, but the following year accepted the presidency of East Alabama College, then called the East Alabama Male College, at Auburn, Ala.—now an Alabama state institution widely known over the South as Auburn. Sasnett opened the college with the brightest of prospects, but within two years the Civil War broke out and the young men of the college were soon in military encampment. Being without students, the college closed with Sasnett remaining nominally its head. He "spent his time at his farm in Georgia 'superintending his large temporal interests, preaching the gospel and ministering to the needy in his neighborhood' until his last illness." "Keen of intellect, a great preacher, kind in heart, he was respected and beloved," states Marion Lazenby of him. Sasnett's scholarship was quite extensive as in 1853 he published a work on Progress; in 1860 a work on Discussions in Literature. Simpson says of him, "He was a powerful preacher, a great debater, and a devout Christian."

M. L. Lazenby, Alabama and West Florida, p. 344.

M. Simpson, Cyclopaedia. 1878.

N. B. H.

SASPORTAS, JOSEPH A. (? -1898), SOUTH CAROLINA minister and education leader of the M.E. Church. As butcher and commission merchant of CHARLESTON, S. C., he was a member of the Negro aristocracy in that city. He had been successful in business before emancipation and enjoyed a position of prestige. Along with Samuel Weston, of similar situation, he was influential in establishing Baker Theological Institute in Charleston in 1866. This institution was subsequently merged with CLAFLIN UNIVERSITY in 1871.

Sasportas, who was educated in the French private schools in Charleston, was influential in the establishing of Claflin University at Orangeburg, S. C., and served as trustee from its founding in 1869 until 1897.

In the brochure, The Role of Claflin College in Negro Life, appears this note regarding Sasportas: "A butcher and commission merchant; paid taxes on $6,700 worth of real estate, and 5 slaves before Emancipation (1861), a minister; preached to white and Negro congregations; served as Presiding Elder."

E. Horace Fitchett, "The Role of Claflin College in Negro Life in South Carolina," Journal of Negro Education, Winter 1943. J. MARVIN RAST

SATTERFIELD, JOHN CREIGHTON (1904-), American lawyer, was born at Port Gibson, Miss., on July 25, 1904. He was the son of Milling Marion and Laura Stevenson (Drake) Satterfield. He graduated at the Port Gibson Junior College, 1924, received the A.B. degree from MILLSAPS COLLEGE, 1926; the LL.B. from the University of Mississippi in 1929; and Montana State University gave him the LL.D. degree in 1961, as did Dalhousie University the next year; and also the S.J.D. from Suffolk University in 1962.

He was admitted to the MISSISSIPPI Bar in 1929, and since that time has practiced in JACKSON, and serves in that city on the official board of Galloway Memorial Church. He now has an office in Yazoo City, Miss., and is also in First Methodist Church there. He was a delegate to the SOUTHEASTERN JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCE of 1952, '56, '60, '64, and '68, where he took an active part in the deliberations of the body, frequently speaking upon matters at issue. He also was a member of the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1952, '60, '64, '66, '68, and '70, and took the floor repeatedly, especially in defense of the Jurisdictional system. He served the General Board of Social and Economic Relations from 1952-60, and upon the important Interjurisdictional Study Commission of 1960-64. He has always taken an active part in Mississippi public life, serving as a member of the House of Representatives of that state, 1928-32, chairman of its Constitutional Committee, and secretary of the Judiciary and Ways and Means Committees of the state. He was a member of the Board of Governors of the American Bar Association, 1956-59, and president, 1961-62, the only Mississippian ever to head this national organization. Previous to that he had been president of the Mississippi Bar. He resides in Yazoo City, keeping an office there, as well as in Jackson—the state capital.

Who's Who in America, Vol. 34.

Who's Who in the Methodist Church, 1966.

N. B. H.

SAUER, CHARLES AUGUST (1891-1972), American pastor, missionary and author of German and French ancestry, was born on June 27, 1891, near Wheelersburg, Ohio, the son of Christian August and Anna (Miller) Sauer. He attended OHIO WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, B.A., 1919; D.D.,

1958; and Ohio State University College of Education, M.A., 1928. He married the former Marguerite Suttles of Albion, Pa., on Aug. 17, 1920, and they had three sons.

Dr. Sauer, who was first engaged in the field of education, served during the first World War in the American Expeditionary Forces until February 1919. During the years 1921-32 he lived in Yeng Byen, KOREA, serving as missionary principal of the Mission High School there. From 1932-35 he was an instructor of farm engineering at the Konju Mission School. He was treasurer of the Korean Methodist Church in SEOUL, Korea, 1936-41, and again in 1946-50. During the interim of the second World War, 1942-46, he served as minister in the West Unity, Ohio, Methodist Church. He was treasurer for the National Christian Council Union Projects in Korea in 1950-62. In 1949-58 he returned to the field of education and his position of principal, working in the Korean Language School. From 1949 until 1962 he served as editor for the Korean edition of The Upper Room. Dr. Sauer wrote Korean Language for Beginners, 1925, and he revised it in 1950 and 1954; Chinese Characters for Beginners, 1930; A Pocket Story of John Wesley, 1967; and Beginner's Lessons in the Book of Genesis, written in the Korean language in 1938. During the year 1962 he was cited by the Minister of Defense in the Republic of Korea, and later that year he was awarded a Cultural Merit, which is the National Medal, by the President of the Republic of Korea. Dr. Sauer was a member of the OHIO ANNUAL CONFERENCE. He participated in the General Conference of the Korean Methodist Church in 1951, '54, '58, and '60, and served as a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of The Methodist Church in 1956. He acted as the editor for Korea in the Encyclopedia of World Methodism.

He died Sept. 13, 1972, at Ashley, Ohio.

Clyde Hissong, ed., Ohio Lives. Hopkinsville, Ky.: Historical Records Association, 1968. N. B. H.

SAULT STE. MARIE, MICHIGAN, U.S.A., located on the rapids of the Saint Mary's River in the Upper Peninsula of MICHIGAN, is the seat of Chippewa County government. The city is the third oldest settlement in the United States. A new International Bridge finished in November 1962, links the twin cities of Sault Ste. Marie and Ontario, CANADA.

Methodism began in Sault Ste. Marie in the summer of 1832, when five Indian missionaries led by John Sunday, came up from Canada. John Clarke was appointed as a missionary to the Indians and to soldiers at Fort Brady at the May 8, 1833 session of the NEW YORK CONFERENCE. By 1834 thirteen log homes, a log schoolhouse, and a missionary's home was constructed on a site now known as the Mission Creek area two miles below the Rapids. Methodism had little impact on the white population of Sault Ste. Marie until Isaac Johnstone was appointed there by the DETROIT CONFERENCE in 1873. The congregation grew rapidly, outgrowing two church buildings. The present stone building of Central Church was erected in 1893-94. The membership in 1970 was 800. The Algonquin Methodist Church was organized in 1900 and now has a membership of over 100. Central Church entertained the Detroit Conference in 1894 and in 1928.

Mary Casler, History of Methodism in Sault Ste. Marie. N.d. Minutes of the Detroit Conference.

J. H. Pitzel, Lights and Shades. 1883. VERLE J. CARSON

SAUNDERS, JOHN ROUZIE (1890-1956), American preacher and missionary to BRAZIL, was born in Middlesex County, Va., on Aug. 31, 1890. He received his B.A. from RANDOLPH-MACON COLLEGE in 1915, his M.S. from Princeton, and his B.D. from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1920. During the summer of 1918, he worked in Saskatchewan under the auspices of the United Church of Canada. In 1920 he was ordained by Bishop EUGENE R. HENDRIX and in 1921 sailed for Brazil. Bishop JOHN M. MOORE, then in charge of the work in Brazil, named him principal of the forthcoming PORTO ALEGRE college, a position he held from its start in rented quarters to the completion in 1925 of its two main buildings.

In July of that year, Saunders began definite pastoral work. In the same year, he married Sara Stout, who had come from Clarksville, Tenn., as a missionary of the M.E. Church, South. Saunders served both in the South and in the Central Brazil Conferences. In 1939, he was appointed to Curitiba, capital of the state of Paraná, where he founded the church with two members, and left it eight years later with a flourishing congregation and a fine property on which an adequate church was later built. He also served as district superintendent, as professor at the Methodist seminary then at Porto Alegre, and lastly in Campo Grande, Federal District, where he supervised the building of a fine parsonage.

Outside the ministry, Saunders made a valuable and unusual contribution to the state of Rio Grande do Sul, introducing at his own expense several pecan trees (hitherto unknown to the region). These he gave to the State Agricultural School and to a few private individuals. They have proved a new source of wealth to that state.

In 1945 Randolph-Macon College conferred on him the D.D. degree. After retirement in June 1956, Saunders served briefly as pastor of churches in Yorktown and Denbigh, Va. He died suddenly of a heart attack on Oct. 28, 1956. He was survived by his widow and by a son, John Van Dyke Saunders, who became director of Latin American Languages and Area Development Program at the University of Florida.

John Saunders was known and personally loved for his humble, kindly, and self-effacing spirit.

EULA K. LONG

SAUQUOIT, NEW YORK, U.S.A. The Sauquoit Church on the Willowvale charge, Mohawk District, is the oldest Methodist church building in continuous use in the present NORTHERN NEW YORK CONFERENCE.

FREEBORN GARRETSON held the first Methodist service in the community, then called Bethelville, in 1788, and the society was organized in 1792 by Jonathan Newman, the preacher in charge on the Otsego Circuit. A church building costing $950 was completed in July, 1801, and Bishop RICHARD WHATCOAT preached there, August 6. Bishop ASBURY preached in a grove near the church, June 21, 1807, and in 1811 the first annual conference within the bounds of the present Northern New York Conference was conducted in the church by Bishop MCKENDREE. Bishop ENOCH GEORGE preached during a second conference in the church in 1816. In 1826, the church had 399 members, its largest enrolment ever.

During the pastorate of Benajah Mason in 1842, the present brick church was erected, the membership then standing at 240. The building, constructed on the original lot and boasting the first bell in the region, was dedicated Dec. 21, 1842 with fifteen preachers present. Beginning in 1884, several bequests totaling $4,200 were made to a trust fund which has been helpful to the church. Bishop JOHN P. NEWMAN, grandson of the first pastor, spoke at the one hundredth anniversary of the church in 1892.

The church building was redecorated in 1872, and in 1959 an addition was constructed. On May 18, 1963, a historical pageant was presented with addresses by Bishops W. RALPH WARD and HERBERT WELCH, the latter then being 100 years old. In 1967, improvements costing over $10,000 were made and a legacy and gifts totaling nearly $12,000 were received.

In 1970, the Sauquoit Church reported 220 members, property valued at $105,000, and $9,308 raised for all purposes during the year.

General Minutes, MEC and UMC.

Edith M. Jones, History of Sauquoit Methodist Church (Type-script, 9 pp.).
JESSE A. EARL

SAVANNAH, GEORGIA, U.S.A. Methodism in Savannah has the heritage of the early work of JOHN and CHARLES WESLEY and GEORGE WHITEFIELD, though the Methodist movement was not established until some time later. The town was founded by General OGLETHORPE on Feb. 12, 1733. The plan of the settlement was carefully laid out by Oglethorpe, and the streets and squares in the old part of the city today follow the original plan. In 1736 John Wesley came to Savannah as pastor of the Anglican Church. He was succeeded in this office in 1738 by George Whitefield, who proceeded to found BETHESDA ORPHAN HOUSE. With Wesley came his brother, Charles, later famous as a hymn writer, and BENJAMIN INGHAM and CHARLES DELAMOTTE. Ingham is considered the founder of the first school in Savannah. Whitefield's great concern at Bethesda was for education. He later failed in his attempt to have the institution chartered as a college. While in Savannah John Wesley prepared what is considered to be one of the earliest English hymnals, Collection of Psalms and Hymns. This book was published in 1737 in CHARLESTON, S.C., for there were no printing facilities in GEORGIA at the time. Perhaps Savannah's greatest claim to fame is the fact that it is the only place in the New World where all three of early Methodism's greatest leaders, the Wesley brothers and Whitefield, lived and labored. A second claim to fame for Savannah is that it was on a nearby plantation in 1793 that Eli Whitney invented the cotton gin, an event that was to have tremendous effect on the development of the Southern life and economy.

Even though the great Methodist founders had lived in Savannah before Methodism became established as an effective movement, the Methodist Church had a difficult time getting established there. In 1790 HOPE HULL was appointed to the church but was driven away by a mob, as were other preachers later. JESSE LEE was able to form a class with four members in Savannah in 1807, but by this date AUGUSTA, Ga., already had a Methodist church almost ten years old. The first Methodist church building was erected in 1812 and was dedicated by Bishop ASBURY.

On his first visit to Savannah in 1793 Asbury made the following observations in his journal: "Tuesday, January 29, 1793. We reach Savannah. Next day I rode twelve miles along a fine, sandy road to view the ruins of Mr. Whitefield's Orphan House."

JOHN WESLEY STATUE, SAVANNAH, GEORGIA

A nine-foot bronze statue was unveiled in Savannah, Georgia, on Aug. 3, 1969, commemorating the ministry of John Wesley in Georgia. He was a missionary from the Church of England to Georgia, 1736-37. The monument was sponsored and paid for by local church subscriptions and support from historical and civic groups with the Savannah city officials giving great encouragement and support.

The statue depicts Wesley as a young clergyman of thirty-three years of age, as he was when he came to Georgia. The likeness was modeled after early portraits of Wesley. It stands in Reynolds Square on Abercorn Street near the Savannah River. It is directly adjacent to the spot where John Wesley had his house and garden after he came to America in 1736 with Oglethorpe. The chairman of the committee which sponsored the monument was James R. Webb, Jr., presently serving as pastor of St. Paul United Methodist Church in Columbus, Ga. The sculptor for the project was Marshall Daugherty of Macon, Ga.

Christ Church (Protestant Episcopal) had its beginning when General James Edward Oglethorpe landed at Savannah on Feb. 12, 1733, with 125 "sober, industrious, and moral persons" to found the colony of Georgia, for there accompanied them a minister of the Church of England, Henry Herbert. He had been chosen and sent out by the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts. This society was responsible for the sending, and in large part for the support, of the ministers of the Church of England in Georgia throughout the colonial period. Thus Christ Church began with the founding of the colony. In laying out the town a church lot was set apart, and Christ Church still stands on that spot.

Herbert left after a few months, and was followed by Samuel Quincy of Boston. In 1735 the Society appointed John Wesley as minister to Savannah. The church had not then been built and services were held in the General Building. A marker on the site commemorates Wesley's first service. In 1737 Wesley published his first hymnal for use here; this was also the first hymnal used anywhere in the Anglican Church. Also he anticipated the work of ROBERT RAIKES by fifty years in the founding of a SUNDAY SCHOOL. But his time in Savannah was not happy, for at that time he was a stickler for rules, and could not unbend for the needs of a pioneer congregation. He left almost in despair, but it was out of that despair that there came to him, as to Elijah at Mt. Horeb, the great experience at ALDESGATE.

Wesley was followed in 1738 by George Whitefield, who founded in Savannah, Bethesda, the oldest orphanage in the United States. Whitefield began the building of a church building which was completed under his successor in 1750. This church burned in 1796, a second church was pulled down in 1837, and the present building in Greek Revival style erected in 1838. On either side of the entrance is a bronze tablet, one to Wesley and one to Whitefield.

Christ Church took a leading part in the formation of the Diocese of Georgia in 1823, in the securing of a bishop, and in the establishing of churches throughout the state. The first two bishops were also, for part of their episcopate, rectors of Christ Church. Until 1956 the bishop's office was in Christ Church, which is still outstanding in the life of the community and the diocese. The church is open to visitors every day, and is especially glad to welcome visiting Methodists.

Trinity Church. It was 1790 before the name "Savannah Town" appeared for the first time in the minutes of the M.E. Church. Hope Hull was assigned as its first preacher, but he met with such violence and opposition that he soon left.

Savannah's lingering prejudice against Wesley and the strong anti-slavery stand taken by the GENERAL CONFERENCE made conditions so unfavorable for Methodism until, in 1806, Bishop Asbury refused to make an appointment for Savannah. Instead, he called for a volunteer and young SAMUEL DUNWOODY accepted the challenge. Dunwoody was determined to stay at any cost, so he taught school for his support.

In 1807 Dunwoody's work began to show a little life and at conference time he could report five white and seven colored members. James Russell was appointed to Savannah in 1812 and began building a house of worship known as Wesley Chapel. The building was completed in 1813 and could boast a congregation of thirty white and thirty-five colored members. From this beginning, Wesley Chapel rapidly became one of the best appointments in the state. The membership outgrew the original building twenty-five years after its completion, and plans were made for a new building. This first Wesley Chapel brought many Methodist immortals to Savannah to conduct their ministry. Among these were WILLIAM CAPERS, JAMES O. ANDREW, IGNATIUS A. FEW, and GEORGE FOSTER PIERCE.

In the Daily Georgian of Savannah, Feb. 11, 1848, there appeared the following article: "The corner stone of the new Methodist Church to be erected in St. James Square, will be laid on Monday next and an address delivered by the Reverend Preston, D.D. of the Independent Presbyterian Church."

The cornerstone was laid on Feb. 14, 1848, and the minutes show a congregation of 331 members, but the name Trinity does not appear until later. The third QUARTERLY CONFERENCE for the Savannah Station of the M.E. Church, South, was held at Trinity Church on Aug. 10, 1850. It can be assumed that the building had been completed and named by this time, two and a half years after the laying of the cornerstone. The building follows the Corinthian style of architecture and both interior and exterior remain essentially unchanged to this day.

Trinity was the site of the first meeting of the SOUTH GEORGIA ANNUAL CONFERENCE in 1867 after the decision was made to divide the state into two conferences, North and South. This historic church has been host to many annual conferences since that date.

Even during times of tragedy, Trinity continued to hold fast. Great yellow fever epidemics in 1854 and 1876 took a large number of her members. During the epidemic of 1876, Edward H. Myers, pastor of Trinity, was in BALTIMORE, Md., representing the M.E. Church, South, at a joint meeting with the M.E. Church, trying to adjust claims of the church over property issues. When news of the sickness in Savannah reached him, he rushed home to minister to the sick and dying. His unselfish service to his flock cost him his life one week after his return, when Myers and 193 others fell victim. During the War Between the States many of Trinity's sons left for the battlefield and in 1862 the minutes of the third quarterly conference show that only six members were present; the others were with the Confederate Army.

Trinity boasts the oldest continuous Sunday school in Savannah, being organized in 1822. The Savannah Morning News reported the sixty-seventh anniversary of the Trinity Sunday School in 1889 as follows:

It is older by five years than either the Presbyterian or the Baptist Sunday schools. Eighty-seven years ago these three denominations formed a Union Sunday School which was continued for twenty years. Trinity then withdrew and established a Sunday School of its own. Five years later the Baptists withdrew, and it was not until then that the Presbyterians and Baptists established Sunday Schools of their own.

Trinity is known as "The Mother Church of Savannah Methodism," having been instrumental in the establishment of ten other Methodist churches in the city of Savannah. The first of these "spiritual children" was born in 1866, and was adopted by the South Georgia Conference in 1868 as a project to build a church as a monument to John and Charles Wesley. Today this church is known as Wesley Monumental Church.

In 1921 Trinity numbered 1,044 members and by 1948, the membership had grown to almost 2,100. On Jan. 24 and 25, 1948, Trinity celebrated its Centennial Year with a special program led by ARTHUR J. MOORE, then presiding bishop of the ATLANTA, Ga. area; and W. E. SANGSTER, one of the outstanding leaders of the British Methodist Church. In 1970 Trinity reported 1,015 members.

Warren A. Candler Hospital was chartered by the Georgia Legislature in 1808 as the Savannah Poor House and Hospital, making it the second oldest institution of its kind in the United States. It was moved to its present site on Huntingdon Street in downtown Savannah in 1819.

The Savannah Hospital was deeded to the South Georgia Conference by the City of Savannah in 1931 and has been governed by a Board of Trustees approved by the Conference since then. It was renamed in honor of Bishop WARREN A. CANDLER, one of Methodism's and Georgia's most revered bishops.

Wesley Monumental Church is a monument to John and Charles Wesley. In 1849 Wesley Chapel was incorporated by an act of the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Georgia, along with Trinity Church and Andrew Chapel for Colored People (both in Savannah), with the same trustees for all three. Wesley Chapel faltered but was reorganized on Jan. 19, 1868, with fifty-four members. The first regular church meeting was held on Feb. 23, 1868, with Daniel D. Cox, junior preacher of Trinity Church, being the first pastor.

The South Georgia Annual Conference, meeting on Dec. 16-21, 1868, recognized the need for this church and turned the project over to the Board of Domestic Missions. It was in 1868 that the decision was made to make of this church a monument to the Wesleys, as was stated in the Annual Conference Minutes of that year:

Trinity Church purchased with the cash (from the Board of Domestic Missions) an unfinished edifice belonging to the Lutherans, completed handsomely the building, and it was dedicated to God . . . bearing as its title the honored and revered name of Wesley. This was a proper tribute of respect to that apostolic man whose early ministry was in this city. As the amazed spectator surveys the splendid Cathedral of St. Paul's, in London, his eyes read as follows: "Here lies the body of Sir Christopher Wren, the architect of this house. Do you ask for his monument, look around you." So, if you ask for the monument of Wesley, look around you.

WESLEY MEMORIAL CHURCH, SAVANNAH, GEORGIA

The idea of constructing a large church building did not come until 1875 when, under the pastoral leadership of A. A. Wynn, the name was officially changed from Wesley Church to Wesley Monumental Church. The 1875 session of the South Georgia Annual Conference approved the plans and adopted Wesley Monumental as a project for world Methodism. J. O. A. Clark was appointed in 1875 to the special task of raising funds for Wesley Monumental.

The cornerstone was laid in 1875 and the first services were held on March 31, 1890. It is a Gothic structure, patterned after Queen's Kirk in Amsterdam, Holland. Each one of the strained glass windows is dedicated to one of Methodism's historic personalities: FRANCIS ASBURY, THOMAS COKE, JOHN FLETCHER, SUSANNA WESLEY, JOSHUA SOULE, WILLIAM CAPERS, JAMES O. ANDREW, and others. The Wesley Window, in the rear of the sanctuary facing the pulpit, contains life sized busts of John and Charles Wesley. In the large circle at the top of the window is a globe representing the world, and across it is written Wesley's famous utterance, "The World is my Parish." Although the membership of the church in December of 1875 was only 283, the sanctuary was planned and built to seat well over 1,000, a true venture of faith.

Wesley Monumental has been the victim of two fires, the first in 1945 and the second in 1953; both were believed to have been caused by lightning. Following each fire, the Jewish congregation of Mickve Israel Temple (the oldest Reformed Jewish congregation in America), located across the street from Wesley Monumental, graciously allowed her fire-stricken neighbors to use the Temple's facilities. In 1927, the Mickve Israel Temple had caught fire and the congregation used Wesley Monumental for their services.

Several annual conference sessions have been held in this church. Notably, the South Georgia Annual Conference chose Wesley Monumental as the site of its 100th session in June of 1965. Other events of importance which took place here were the Aldersgate Bi-Centennial Celebration in May 1938 and the Mid-Century Convocation of the Southeastern Jurisdiction in 1950. Perhaps her most notable pastor was W. N. AINSWORTH (serving from 1906 to 1909, and from 1916 to 1918), who was elected to the episcopacy in 1918 and served for twenty years as a bishop.

In 1970 the church reported 1,601 members, property valued at almost $1,000,000, and $104,566 raised for all purposes.

General Minutes, UMC, 1970.

Wesleyan Christian Advocate, July 24, 1969.

GEORGE E. CLARY, JR.

FRANCIS BLAND TUCKER

W. ROBERT BOROM

WARREN UPTON CLARY, M.D.

SAVANNAH CONFERENCE (CJ). (See GEORGIA CONFERENCE (CJ)).

SBAFFI, EMANUELE (1883-1965), Italian leader, was born in ROME, ITALY, Jan. 17, 1883, the son of one of the first converts in the Wesleyan Mission there. He entered the ministry in 1905, and served as pastor in Calabria, Ticino (Swiss), Lucania, Lombardy, Naples, Florence, and Rome. He also directed the Theological School, and edited L'Evangalista. He served as Synod secretary, and on the outbreak of war in 1940, assumed the position of "Vice-Presidente" of the Wesleyan Church in Italy, as the English Chairman had to leave the country.

It was chiefly due to Emanuele Sbaffi's astuteness, courage and selfless leadership (at one stage he sold the house he had inherited from his father to pay the stipends of the ministers) that the Church survived the war. At the union of the Wesleyan and Episcopal Methodist work in 1946, he was elected the first "Presidente, Sovraindente Generale" of the "Chiesa Evangelica Metodista d'Italia," continuing by annual election in that office until he retired in 1958. He made an early study of John Henry Newman's theory of the evolution of dogma, and was a pioneer in the ecumenical movement in Italy.

R. KISSACK

THE PASTORS OF THE SBAFFI FAMILY
MARIO, PAOLO (SON OF MARIO),
EMANUELE, AURELIO, AND ALDO

SBAFFI, MARIO (1909-), Italian minister, was born Jan. 1, 1909, at Omegna, ITALY, the son of EMANUELE

SBAFFI. Trained under his father at Rome, he was accepted for the ministry in 1933. Fascist authorities cancelled his clerical immunity from military service because of his pacifist messages. He then served as medical orderly in the Italian navy. After the war he returned to La Spezia to rebuild with the labour of his congregation the war-destroyed church. In 1947 he moved to Rome, as minister of Via Firenze. He founded the Voce Metodista newspaper, and instituted the construction of "Ecumene," the Methodist Conference and Retreat centre at Velletri, with international student labour camps. In 1958 he was elected Chairman of the Italy District. He succeeded in making the Church capable of a life independent of the Methodist Conference of Great Britain, and when it was raised to the status of an autonomous conference on Oct. 4, 1962, he was elected the first President of the Italy Conference.

R. KISSACK

SCARRITT, NATHAN (1821-1890), American preacher and philanthropist for whom SCARRITT COLLEGE was named, was born near Edwardsville, Ill., April 14, 1821. He worked his way through MCKENDREE COLLEGE, and graduated valedictorian of his class in 1842. Later he received the M.A. degree from the University of Missouri and the D.D. degree from McKendree College.

After teaching school in ILLINOIS, Scarritt moved to Fayette, Mo., in 1845 to join his brother-in-law, William T. Lucky, in Howard High School. He was admitted to the MISSOURI CONFERENCE, M. E. Church, South, in 1846. From then until 1851 he was in the Indian Mission on Missouri's western border. He was principal of the Indian Manual Labor School at SHAWNEE MISSION from 1848 to 1851. Between the latter date and the outbreak of the Civil War he served pastorates in western Missouri. He was strongly opposed to secession, and stood forthrightly for the Union. After the War he discontinued ministerial work because of unsteady health and the demands of business ventures.

While at Shawnee Mission, Scarritt bought 200 acres of land near the new village of KANSAS CITY, Mo. This land became the site of present-day "down-town" Kansas City. The increase of land values as the village swiftly grew into a city made him a very wealthy man. He gave generously of his wealth to schools, churches and missions. He was a founder, benefactor and first president of CENTRAL METHODIST COLLEGE. To many churches and missions in western Missouri, particularly in and around Kansas City, he gave undetermined sums. His gift of $30,000 established Melrose Church, his family's church, and that of his son-in-law, Bishop EUGENE R. HENDRIX.

Nathan Scarritt was an early and consistent advocate of the reunion of the separated Methodist Churches. Thirty-six years after division he published a plan of union in the St. Louis Christian Advocate (Jan. 25, 1881), which in some respects was similar to the PLAN OF UNION ratified in 1939. He proposed three jurisdictions, North, South and West, each with its own GENERAL CONFERENCE, the election of its own bishops of equal status, the Church to be united in a General Council composed of all the bishops, general secretaries, clerical and lay delegates proportionately. Scarritt's plan did not contemplate the segregation of Negro conferences or churches. It was, however, too early for plans of union to materialize.

In 1888-90, when Miss BELLE BENNETT was urging the establishment of a training school for DEACONESSES, Scarritt proposed to give two large lots in Kansas City valued at $25,000 and $25,000 in cash if she would raise $50,000 in the churches of Southern Methodism. The offer was accepted. He died before the project was begun. His children honored his pledge and aided the enterprise. The school was named Scarritt Bible and Training School and was opened Sept. 14, 1892. To better serve the M.E. Church, South, and to meet raised educational and academic standards, the school was moved to NASHVILLE, Tenn., in 1924 and named Scarritt College.

Nathan Scarritt was a delegate to nearly every General Conference after 1870. He died while attending the session of 1890. The Journal of that session records the extent of his influence.

M. L. Gray, Missouri Methodism. 1907. FRANK C. TUCKER

SCARRITT COLLEGE TOWER

SCARRITT COLLEGE, Nashville, Tennessee, was established in Kansas City in 1892 as a training school for Christian workers. It was moved to NASHVILLE in 1924, and accepted the alumni of the Methodist Training School which operated in Nashville from 1907 to 1915. While the school honors a donor, NATHAN SCARRITT, MISS BELLE H. BENNETT is remembered as the one who secured the support of the Woman's Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, South. Through that organization Scarritt was able to erect the present campus.

The institution is part of the University Center where students may elect courses in VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY and Peabody College and utilize the Joint Universities

Library System. Ownership is vested in the GENERAL CONFERENCE.

Degrees offered are the B.A. and M.A. The governing board has fifty-six members nominated by the board of trustees and elected by the Board of Missions.

JOHN O. CROSS

FRANZ SCHAEFER

SCHAEFER, FRANZ WERNER (1921-), bishop of The United Methodist Church, Geneva Area, was born March 10, 1921, in Birsfelden, Basel, SWITZERLAND. He attended schools in his home town and studied at the Theological Seminary of the Basel Mission in Basel. In 1945 he was received on trial in the Switzerland Annual Conference. From 1947 to 1953 he served as Secretary of Scout work for the Swiss Conference and President of Methodist Men from 1958 to 1962. He was a member of the Board of Directors of the FRANKFURT Seminary from 1960 to 1966 and has been president of the Bethany Deaconess Order in ZURICH since 1962. He served as district superintendent of the West District of Switzerland from 1958 to 1966. In 1960 he attended the GENERAL CONFERENCE of The Methodist Church (U.S.A.) in DENVER, Colo. In 1961 he took part in the OSLO, Norway, and in 1966 in the LONDON, England, WORLD METHODIST CONFERENCE. During the special session of the CENTRAL AND SOUTHERN EUROPE CENTRAL CONFERENCE he was elected bishop of the GENEVA Area in Lausanne, Switzerland, on Sept. 2, 1966. He resides in Zurich. Bishop Schaefer married Heidi Niederhauser in 1951. They have five children, three boys and two girls.

N. B. H.

SCHAEFER, JOHN F. (1909-), American E.U.B. minister, was educated at NORTH CENTRAL COLLEGE, received the B.D. degree from EVANGELICAL THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, and continued graduate study at Union Theological Seminary, New York, where he was granted the S.T.M. degree. He enjoyed one year's fellowship study at the University of Tübingen, Germany, followed by pastorates in the ILLINOIS CONFERENCE for twenty years. He served four years as Professor of Practical Theology, Evangelical Theological Seminary. In 1959 he was elected to serve with the Board of MISSIONS as associate secretary, then became executive secretary of the World Division, before becoming the general secretary of the Board of Missions. He has made numerous visits to mission work in Asia, Africa and Latin America. He was a delegate to WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES, Fourth Assembly, at UPPSALA, Sweden in 1968. Mrs. Schaefer is the former Marian Lang, whose father served in the Illinois Conference for many years. The Schaefers have three sons: John, Paul and Mark.

In The United Methodist Church, Dr. Schaefer was elected Associate General Secretary, World Division of the Board of Missions. His membership is with the NORTHERN ILLINOIS CONFERENCE.

MINNIE WOLGEMATHE

SCHARER, CHARLES WESLEY (1875-1954), was a missionary of the M.E. Church in INDIA, 1904-26. During all but two years of that time he served in the Belgaum District, which was then in BOMBAY Province but is now in the linguistically aligned, Kanarese-speaking Mysore State. His missionary career was brought to an abrupt end by an accident in which his back was broken. He recovered sufficiently to serve churches in the SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA-ARIZONA CONFERENCE until 1946. Although he could not return to India, he retained his membership in the SOUTH INDIA CONFERENCE, and worked continuously to win support of American Christians in prayer, personnel, and finance for service projects in India.

Scharer was born in Toledo, Ohio, May 13, 1875. His wife, Elizabeth, was born in Spring Mountain, Ohio, Sept. 16, 1879. Both were graduates of Taylor University, Upland, Ind., an institution named for Bishop WILLIAM TAYLOR and established by his admirers to train missionaries. Throughout his years in India, Scharer was fervent in EVANGELISM, making contact with many groups not previously reached, and bringing many of them to the avowal of Christian faith and purpose. Mr. and Mrs. Scharer both died in Pasadena, Calif., in 1954, he on May 16, and she on August 24.

Journal of the South India Conference. J. WASKOM PICKETT

SCHAUB, FRIEDRICH (1855-1937), German-American minister and educator, was born at Lancaster, Wis., on June 21, 1855. He was graduated from the German-English College of Galena, Ill., in 1878 and received an M.A. in 1881. He was admitted to the Northwest German Annual Conference of the M.E. Church in 1878 and served churches in Iowa and ILLINOIS until 1883, when he became an instructor and a professor in 1887 at the German-English College. He was president of the college until 1893. After the college was moved to Charles City, Iowa, with its name changed, he again served as president (1898-1902). From 1902-1907 he was Superintendent of Schools for Floyd County, Iowa; then acting president of Charles City College (1911-1912) and professor of education (1907-1914). He received an honorary D.D. from Central Wesleyan College in 1907. When the Charles City College was merged with MORNINGSIDE COLLEGE, Sioux City, Iowa, in 1914, he became professor of biblical literature until his retirement in 1921. In 1922 he became principal of the Dorcas Institute, a training school for German Methodist DEACONESSES in CINCINNATI. He was the author of George Roth (1881), a biography of an early graduate of the Galena college.

P. F. Douglass, German Methodism, 1939.
Geschichte der Nordwest Deutschen Konferenz; Minutes of the Annual Conferences 1878-1937. LOUIS A. HASELMAYER

SCHELL, EDWIN AUSTIN (1923-), American clergyman and historian, was born in St. Louis, Mo., on Jan. 10, 1923. He was converted in 1945 and entered the BALTIMORE CONFERENCE (TMC) in 1951. He became president of the Conference Historical Society in 1958 and served until 1962, at which time he became the executive secretary of the society, having in charge the Lovely Lane Museum in BALTIMORE. He was the local chairman of the Methodist BICENTENNIAL celebration in Baltimore in 1966 and is a contributing editor of this encyclopedia.

Who's Who in The Methodist Church, 1966. N. B. H.

SCHELLHAMMER, EMIL (1904-), a minister and leader of German Methodism, was born April 5, 1904, at Friburg. He studied at Tübingen University and the Frankfurt Theological Seminary (PREDIGERSEMINAR) and was ordained ELDER in 1930. He served various circuits from 1926-38. In 1938 he went to Nuremberg, where he became second director of the Martha-Maria deaconess motherhouse and hospital, serving until 1951. He was on the Schwabach circuit from 1951-55, and then was district superintendent of Nuremberg District, 1955-58. He has been first director of Martha-Maria since 1958 and secretary of the South Germany Annual Conference sixteen times between 1935 and 1963. He was editor of the Methodist family magazine Der Evangelist (1951-59) and of a magazine for deaconesses, as well as contributor to several other periodicals. He was a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1960, author of books and booklets, teacher of ethics, psychology, and Old Testament at Nuremberg nursing school, president of the association of Methodist deaconess motherhouses in GERMANY and SWITZERLAND.

DIETER SACHMANN

SCHIELE, RUDOLF (1917-), German lay leader and businessman, was born Sept. 14, 1917, in BERLIN. Under Bishop J. W. E. SOMMER he organized the relief work of the Methodist Church in Germany in 1945 and served as its managing director until 1949. The "brother pfennig" (one pfennig a day from each member of the German Methodist Church) to serve certain relief projects was initiated by him. He was chiefly responsible for the founding of the Methodist Maennerdienst (men's service, i.e., lay activities) in Germany and the periodical for training church workers (Der Mitarbeiter). He is the lay leader of the Southwest Germany Annual Conference, delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of the Church, a member of the executive committee of the Methodist Church in Germany, and served on the board of trustees of the theological seminary in Frankfurt (Predigerseminar). He was chairman of the subcommittee for church institutions (schools, book concern, deaconess motherhouses), of the Joint Committee of the Methodist Church and the EVANGELISCHE GEMEINSCHAFT (E.U.B.

RUDOLF SCHIELE

Church) in Germany and Switzerland. He is also lay delegate to the Council of Methodist Central Conferences in Europe. He is an ordained lay preacher and resides in the Black Forest.

ALFRED KÄELBLE

SCHILLING, SYLVESTER PAUL (1904-), American scholar and educator, was born at Cumberland, Md., on Feb. 7, 1904, the son of Sylvester and Ida (Weber) Schilling. He received the B.S. degree from St. John's College in 1923; an A.M. from BOSTON UNIVERSITY, 1927; S.T.B. there in 1929, and Ph.D. in 1934. He did postgraduate work at Harvard in 1929-30, and at the University of Berlin, 1930-31. His wife was Mary Elizabeth Albright, and they were married on June 18, 1930. Their children are Robert A. and Paula C.

Dr. Schilling joined the BALTIMORE CONFERENCE (ME) in 1928 and was pastor in Vienna-Oakton, Va., 1932-33; in BALTIMORE, 1933-36; Prince Frederick, Md., 1936-40; and Brookland Church, WASHINGTON, D. C., 1940-45. At this time he became professor of Systematic Theology and Philosophy of Religion at WESTMINSTER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, serving there from 1945-53, at which time he went to Boston University and became professor of Systematic Theology in the School of Theology there, becoming in 1954 also chairman of the Division of Theological Studies of the Graduate School. He has been visiting lecturer in a number of schools, and is a fellow of the Society for Religion in Higher Education; a member of the American Theological Society (president 1968-69); of the American Philosophical Association; and of the American Academy of Religion.

He spent 1959-60 in research at the University of Heidelberg, supported by a Faculty Fellowship of the American Association of Theological Schools, and carried out further research at the University of Tübingen in 1966-67. He gave the Lowell Institute Lectures in theology in Boston in 1968. Following his retirement from Boston University, he served as visiting professor of Systematic Theology at Union Theological Seminary, MANILA, Philippines, in 1969-70. He has written Isaiah Speaks, 1958; Methodism and Society in Theological Perspective, 1960—this done for the Board of Social and Economic Relations of The Methodist Church as part of a four volume series issued at that time; Contemporary Continental Theologians, 1966 (paperback, 1969); God in an Age of Atheism, 1969. He has contributed significant articles to the Encyclopedia of World Methodism.

Who's Who in America, Vol. 34.

Who's Who in The Methodist Church, 1966.

N. B. H.

SCHISLER, JOHN QUINCY (1885-1967), American clergyman and educator, was born in Bono, Ark., on Oct. 15, 1885. He received the A.B. degree from HENDRIX COLLEGE and the B.D. from EMORY UNIVERSITY. He married Mary Irene Dodson in 1914, whom he survived by a number of years. He served as a pastor in the NORTH ARKANSAS CONFERENCE for several years and as conference Sunday School Secretary from 1918 to 1920. In 1920 he joined the staff of the General Sunday School Board, M. E. Church, South. For six years he was assistant superintendent of Teacher Training, and for four years superintendent of the Department of Leadership Training. In 1930 he became Secretary, Department of the Local Church in a newly organized General Board of Christian Education. In 1940 at the Union of American Methodism he became Executive Secretary, Division of the Local Church, General Board of Education where he served until retirement in 1955. He was the author of several books and booklets; among the best known were The Educational Work of the Small Church and Christian Teaching in the Churches. "No man in the history of American Methodism has had more influence on the educational program of the church than John Schisler. He was diligent and devoted; he was creative and imaginative; he was wise and incisive; he was broad and he was deep. He was a pioneer in many areas of Christian education, establishing programs in church recreation, in church camping, in family life, in audiovisuals, in volunteer service projects, in theological education cooperative enterprises, and many more. He was an early leader in the ecumenical movement, and helped to shape the International Council of Religious Education and to create the NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES of Christ in the U.S.A." (Bishop W. McFerrin Stowe). In 1958 he married Miss Freddie Henry. He died April 18, 1967.

WALTER N. VERNON

SCHISLER, WILLIAM RICHARD (1889-), American educator and lay missionary to BRAZIL, was born in Bono, Ark., on May 19, 1889. He graduated from HENDRIX COLLEGE in 1919; and in June 1920, married Frances Purcell, also a graduate of Hendrix. After teaching in the United States for a short period, Schisler was accepted by the Methodist Board of Missions for Brazil. He arrived there in July 1921.

As a layman and educator, his work was always with Methodist schools in the state of Rio Grande do Sul. His first appointment was as teacher to Instituto União, URUGUAIANA, then as principal through 1929. In 1930, he was appointed to the Passo Fundo Educational Institute, and was named its principal in 1933. This position he held until retirement in 1958, with the exception of one year when an emergency at União forced him to return there. During all these years, Frances Schisler served tirelessly in the local church, and in the school as teacher, dietitian, and manager of the boarding department.

The two outstanding characteristics of Schisler's administration were his close personal relationship with his students, and the intimate relationship he established between the faculty and students and the local church.

Schisler's long tenure and his influence on the students resulted in strong support of the school by alumni, city, and state officials. Today its graduates occupy important posts in the Methodist ministry and educational establishments, in government, professional, business, and industrial fields.

The Schislers retired in July 1958, to NASHVILLE, Tenn. Two years later, upon the earnest invitation of former students and friends of the institute, he returned for a visit, during which he was conspicuously honored by Roman Catholics, as well as Protestants, by Rotary and other civic groups, and named Honorary Citizen of Passo Fundo. The Schislers have three children, of whom two are in missionary work in Brazil—WILLIAM, JR., a pastor and for nineteen years editor of Methodist church publications; Nancy (Mrs. James E. Tims); and George. The Schislers presently live in ATLANTA, Ga.

EULA K. LONG

SCHISLER, WILLIAM RICHARD, JR. (1924-), missionary in BRAZIL of the Methodist Board of Missions, NEW YORK, was born in URUGUAIANA, Rio Grande do Sul, on May 5, 1924, hence his Brazilian citizenship. He graduated from the Instituto Educacional in Passo Fundo, then directed by his father; from VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY in 1947, with a B.A. degree; and from Yale Divinity School in 1952 with a B.D.

At a quadrennial Student Conference in 1950, at the University of Illinois, he met Edith Hume Long, daughter and granddaughter of missionaries in Brazil, and they were married on Aug. 25, 1951. Edith Long Schisler thus became the first third-generation missionary in that country. In 1952, they traveled to Brazil via Europe, where Schisler represented Brazil at the Faith and Order Conference in Lund, Norway.

In Brazil, Schisler was named editor of Cruz de Malta, the youth publication of the Methodist Church; and in 1955, editor-in-chief of all seven of the Church publications, a position he held until 1969. Throughout the years, he has been a speaker and counsellor at Youth Assemblies, and pastor and organizer of new congregations in the city of SÃO PAULO. While president of the Board of Trustees of the INSTITUTO METODISTA, he planned its modern chapel and developed its recent change into an Ecumenical Lay Institute.

During 1964 and 1965, Schisler worked closely with Dr. JOEL DE MELO, a prominent Methodist layman, in promoting an Evangelical radio station in São Paulo. He served a term as one of the presidents of the Christian-Jewish Fraternity, and worked closely with the Roman Catholics, speaking often in their churches.

At the 1965 General Conference of the Methodist Church of Brazil, he was one of four designated to prepare the new Liturgy Manual for use of the church in Brazil. He was also for a term on the Laity Commission of the WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES, which he represented in Rochester and NIGERIA. In 1969 Schisler asked for transfer to his home conference—the Second Region in South Brazil—and now serves as pastor in Passo Fundo, Rio Grande do Sul, and as district superintendent. The Schislers have four children.

EULA K. LONG

SCHNACKENBERG, CORT HENRY (1812-1880), NEW ZEALAND Methodist minister, was born at Wilmstedt, Hanover, GERMANY, in 1812. He came to New Zealand in 1839 and was engaged for some time as an agent for a SYDNEY firm to purchase flax and timber from the Maori people. At Kawhia, he came under the influence of JOHN WHITELEY. He was received as a catechist in 1844, and was sent to reestablish the Mokau Mission, where his influence spread among the Ngati-Maniapoto people, among whom he gathered congregations and established schools.

From 1857, when he was ordained after four years probation, until twenty-three years later, he labored among the Maoris and Europeans in the Kawhia, Aotea, and Raglan Circuits. This period included the tumultuous years of the Maori Wars.

Of a quiet, sincere, and earnest disposition, Cort Schnackenberg declined several offers to enter government service in order to fulfill his calling. Worn out with toil in an area embracing Raglan, Aotea, Waikato, Waipa, and Te Kopua, he died on the way to AUCKLAND seeking medical attention, on Aug. 10, 1880.

W. Morley, New Zealand. 1900.

WESLEY A. CHAMBERS

SCHOENHALS, LAWRENCE R. (1912-), vice-president of SEATTLE PACIFIC COLLEGE, was born at Brown City, Mich. He holds a diploma from the Fort Wayne Bible College, 1932. His degrees are: B.A., GREENVILLE COLLEGE, 1935; M.A., University of Michigan, 1938; Ph.D., University of Washington, 1955; Greenville College conferred the Mus.D. in 1962. He was director of the Music Departments at Central College, Kansas; Huntington College, Indiana, and Seattle Pacific College, Seattle, Washington for a total of twenty-nine years. He also served as Registrar and Dean of Administration at Seattle Pacific, where he has been Vice-President since 1964. Dr. Schoenhals was the Musical Director, FREE METHODIST world-wide broadcast, Light and Life Hour, 1945-66. He holds membership in Phi Delta Kappa, College Music Society, National Church Music Fellowship, and American Musicological Society. Dr. and Mrs. Schoenhals live in Seattle, Wash.

BYRON S. LAMSON

SCHOFIELD, CHARLES EDWIN (1894-1951), American minister and educator, was born on April 18, 1894 in Geneva, Neb. He received the A.B. degree from the University of Nebraska, and the S.T.B. from BOSTON UNIVERSITY. He married Nora Fullerton in 1919. He served as a pastor in NEBRASKA, COLORADO, and WYOMING before going to ILIFF SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY as president in 1934. In 1942 he became president of SOUTHWESTERN COLLEGE, Winfield, Kan. and in 1944 was appointed Editor of Adult Publications, Editorial Division, General Board of EDUCATION of The Methodist Church. He was the author of several books, best known of which were Aldersgate and After, We Methodists, and The Methodist Church. At the SOUTH CENTRAL JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCE in 1944 he received 102 votes for bishop (with 175 necessary to elect). He died in Nashville, Tenn.

WALTER N. VERNON

SCHOLZ, ERNST (1894-), German pastor, editor and free church leader, was born July 1, 1894, in BERLIN. After his studies at the Frankfurt Methodist Theological Seminary and at Vienna University, he became pastor in the Methodist Church in GERMANY, and for several years of the German Mission in LONDON, and of a circuit in Vienna. He was seven times a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of his church. For several times also he was a delegate to the WORLD METHODIST CONFERENCE meeting. In 1953 he was the recipient of the D.D. degree by UNION COLLEGE, Barbourville, W. Va., U.S.A. He became editor of a Christian education periodical and from 1959 to 1967 of the German Methodist weekly, Der Evangelist. He is well known as a member of the Evangelical Alliance and as a free-church ecumenical leader in Berlin. For two terms he served as district superintendent of West District, Northeast Germany Annual Conference. Now retired, he lives in Berlin.

KARL BEISIEGEL

SCHOLZ, LUISE E. (1890-), the wife of ERNST SCHOLZ, has been national president of the WOMAN'S SOCIETY OF CHRISTIAN SERVICE in AUSTRIA, 1924-33; president of W.S.C.S., Northeast Germany Annual Conference, 1934-48; treasurer of W.S.C.S. in GERMANY, 1936-46; president of W.S.C.S. in Germany 1946-69; president of the WORLD FEDERATION OF METHODIST WOMEN, 1956-61. She was a delegate to the World Assembly of the World Federation of Methodist Women, 1948-66, and also a delegate to seven European Methodist Consultative Conferences, 1939-66. She has been a member of the WORLD METHODIST COUNCIL, 1951-61. She was editor of the German Methodist Women's Magazine, 1949-68. She received the honorary L.H.D. degree in 1964.

KARL BEISIEGEL

SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY AT CLAREMONT, California, is a continuation of the Maclay College of Theology, founded in 1885 by the M.E. Church. In 1894, it was moved to the campus of the UNIVERSITY OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA, then a Methodist-related university, and in 1922 it became an integral part of the university. In 1946, it was accredited by the UNIVERSITY SENATE as a graduate and professional school for the education of ministers. A study of ministerial education made by the Division of Higher Education, Board of Education of The Methodist Church, recommended that the school be strengthened and prepared for larger service. In 1952, the university severed what fragile ties it had with The Methodist Church, but nevertheless, an effort was made to continue the school of theology at the university. When this became impossible, there was a move to a new site at Claremont, where a fifteen-acre campus had been secured. In 1960, buildings were completed; funds had been provided by a campaign in the SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA-ARIZONA CONFERENCE. Additional buildings have been constructed, and this school now possesses an excellent plant in an established educational center. It offers the degrees of Th.M. and Ph.D. in Religion. The governing board consists of thirty trustees, elected on nomination of the executive committee by a corporation responsible to the SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA-ARIZONA ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

JOHN O. GROSS

KARL SCHOU

SCHOU, KARL ("CARL") JENSEN (1841-1889), Danish Methodist pioneer, was born at Holstebro, DENMARK, on May 22, 1841. His parents were a watchmaker, Jens Christian Schou, and Christine Lund Schou. He became a watchmaker like his father, and a very skillful one. Carl Schou left Denmark in 1861 to go to America. Coming from a Christian home, in the new world he at once found his way to the Methodist Episcopal Church. In the beginning of his stay in the United States he went first to Perth Amboy, N.J., and a little later to the town of Lafayette, Ind. By now he had decided to give his whole life to God and the Church. The so-called CAMP MEETINGS were of great significance to him.

Carl Schou started his training at GARRETT BIBLICAL INSTITUTE in Evanston, Ill., in 1868. Two years later he married Ane Marie Moller from Kolding, Denmark, to whom he had become engaged before he left Denmark. In order to make both ends meet, he had to start a workshop for repairing watches, and this later grew to a real watch shop.

Having ended his training at Garrett, he was attached to NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY in Evanston as a teacher. In 1872 his young wife died, and in the same year he was appointed superintendent of the church in Denmark to replace CHRISTIAN WILLERUP.

Carl Schou arrived at COPENHAGEN on Jan. 31, 1873. For sixteen years thereafter he was at work in his own country, and they were very successful years for the young Methodist Church. Several church buildings were erected, and the number of congregations grew to sixteen. It has been said of Carl Schou that he was the real founder of the church in Denmark. He reduced the work to a system.

Carl Schou married once more in 1878, this time to Louise Ulrikke Eneman from Kalmar, SWEDEN. He died in Aarhus on an official visit on July 31, 1889.

Svend Johansen, Karl Schou, Superintendent i Metodistkirken. 1934. NIELS MANN

SCHRECKENGAST, ISAAC BUTLER (1864-1935), American preacher, college president and administrator, was born Oct. 5, 1864 near Danville, Iowa. His early education was received in the public schools of that community.

He enrolled at Iowa State College, Ames, Iowa in 1880, receiving the A.B. degree with honors in 1885. Feeling the call to the ministry, he joined the IOWA CONFERENCE and was ordained ELDER in 1887. In 1891 he entered BOSTON UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY, receiving the S.T.B. degree in 1894.

In 1906 he received the Ph.M. degree from Iowa State College, and in 1908 he was awarded the honorary D.D. from SIMPSON COLLEGE. Final academic honors came to him from NEBRASKA WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY in 1932 when, upon retiring he received the Lit.D. degree.

Following graduation from seminary, Schreckengast served Methodist Churches in West Liberty, Washington and BURLINGTON, Iowa with great distinction. His last pastorate was at First Church, University Place, LINCOLN, Neb., from which he was elected vice-chancellor and treasurer of Nebraska Wesleyan University in 1913, becoming Chancellor in 1917. During his first ten years of leadership, he raised $100,000 to pay off the school's indebtedness and led in a victorious campaign for a $1,000,000 endowment. During his years of leadership the Rachel Ann Lucas Library, Van Fleet Teacher's College and Magee Stadium were built.

He was a great preacher, beloved of his students for many years, having the largest weekly college PRAYER MEETING in the world. He led four delegations of NEBRASKA Methodists to GENERAL CONFERENCE and was often called "the second bishop of Nebraska," as he frequently took the bishop's place in church dedications and ceremonies. Schreckengast died Sept. 11, 1935 after a long illness and was buried in Lincoln, Neb.

Minutes of the Nebraska Conference, 1935.

Nebraska Wesleyan Alumni News. EVERETT E. JACKMAN

SCHULZ, EMIL (1905-), German Methodist, entered the ministry in 1930. After four years of theological training, he served circuit work mainly in BERLIN as a member of the Northeast Germany Annual Conference. After the Second World War he transferred to the Northwest Annual Conference. In 1945 he started his work at the Methodist deaconess motherhouse, Bethanien, in Hamburg. Besides pastoral and administrative work at the Hamburg Methodist Hospital he was four years district superintendent of the Hamburg District. He is presently director of the motherhouse Bethanien, including five hospitals with a total capacity of 410 beds; also he is engaged in organizing social work as carried on by 312 DEACONESSES in hospital work, in circuits, Methodist old-people's homes, and in two Methodist recreation homes; also he is involved in directing educational work in a training school for girls which leads up to various possibilities of occupational choices for women, though emphasizing the preparation for hospital work.

ERICH BAAS

SCHUTZ, WALTER (1893-1961), American E.U.B. missionary, was born to Sarah Bixler and Albert Schutz on a farm near Pandora, Ohio, Aug. 9, 1893. To finish his high school education he enrolled at Martin Boehm Academy, OTTERBEIN COLLEGE. After high school he stayed on and obtained his B.A. degree from Otterbein

College in 1921. From there he took graduate work in economics at Ohio State University, but feeling the need to enter church service he left these studies.

His educational program was interrupted with nearly two years military service in the Field Medical Supply Depot, Camp Sherman, Chillicothe, Ohio during World War I. On July 3, 1922 he was married to Edna Isabel Hooper of Bradford, Pa., a college classmate.

Together they were appointed by the UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST for service in SIERRA LEONE, sailing in May 1923. Although a layman he was often called upon to preach to the natives. His major task was to supervise the schools of the Temne tribe. On his first return to America he spent some months studying at Bonebrake (now UNITED) THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, Dayton, Ohio. On his second furlough he spent three years in study at the same school, graduating with the B.D. degree. Miami Conference, Church of the United Brethren in Christ, licensed him in 1926 and ordained him in 1929. In subsequent service in Sierra Leone he served as head of Albert Academy, supervising the schools supported by the Mission, and General Superintendent of United Brethren work. After twenty-eight years and because of his wife's health, they returned to the United States in 1951, when he became Director of Public Relations at United Seminary, Dayton, and later Treasurer. In this institution he served for ten years until his death.

In Sierra Leone Walter Schutz was editor of the Sierra Leone Outlook, a member of the Fourah Bay College Council, chairman of the United Christian Council, a member of the national Board of Education, and organized the Bo Conference (an ecumenical movement that had great influence upon the nation and the church). He believed that the missionary was not sent to Sierra Leone to hold jobs but to train the natives to take that responsibility. Much of the current indigenous nature of this mission may be traced to Walter Schutz.

Death came suddenly Jan. 28, 1961. His remains were placed in a cemetery at Pandora, Ohio, Feb. 2, 1961.

Donald W. Keller, "The Life of Dr. Walter Schutz." Ms. in Commission on Archives and History.

United News, United Theological Seminary, Dayton, O., March 1966. JOHN H. NESS, JR.

SCHWOPE (SCHWAB), BENEDICT (1730?-1810), a German Reformed minister who was probably born in GERMANY. The first real record of his life shows that in 1754 he was a member of the German Reformed Church, York, Pa. Later he moved to the Pipe Creek community near Westminster, Md., where in 1763, he was one of the elders of St. Benjamin's Church (Reformed). In 1771, the Reformed Coetus of ministers approved him for ordination.

In 1770-71, Schwope became involved in a congregational dispute among the members of the German Reformed church in BALTIMORE. John Christopher Faber, who also served St. Benjamin's Church, was the pastor. The members who were alienated from Faber turned to Schwope for leadership. They purchased land on Howard's Hill in Baltimore and organized an independent Reformed congregation with Schwope as pastor.

In 1772, JOSEPH PILMORE arrived in Baltimore to organize Methodist congregations. Pilmore lodged at the home of George Dagan, a vestryman in Schwope's church.

Schwoppe loaned his church for Pilmore's meetings, and the LOVELY LANE congregation, frequently referred to as the Mother Church of American Methodism, was organized.

The next year, wishing to follow the western migration, Schwoppe urged his friend PHILLIP WILLIAM OTTERBEIN, pastor in YORK, Pa., to succeed him in Baltimore. Otterbein refused on the ground that the congregation was guilty of several irregularities against the Coetus. During the succeeding year the invitation was repeated. This time Schwoppe asked another friend, FRANCIS ASBURY, to intercede, and in 1774 Otterbein accepted and assumed the pastorate.

Because of some delay in undertaking his western venture, Schwoppe continued for a time at St. Benjamin's Church. He and Otterbein were greatly influenced by the Methodist class meeting idea (ecclesiola in ecclesia), and under the influence of Asbury introduced it into the German Reformed churches of MARYLAND. There was a dearth of regular pastors among the German Reformed churches in Maryland, and the CLASS MEETINGS under CLASS LEADERS served to promote devotion and to maintain spiritual discipline in the church. Schwoppe served as the secretary, with Otterbein as chairman, of a small conference of Reformed ministers. In the semiannual meetings reports were received concerning the spiritual condition of the various classes. (A record of these conferences was written in the St. Benjamin's Church record for May 1774 to June 1776, while Schwoppe served as secretary.)

In 1792 Schwoppe helped to organize a German church in LEXINGTON, Ky., and during the same year he represented Lincoln County in the KENTUCKY Constitutional Convention.

Schwoppe married Susanna Welcker, date unknown, to which union eleven children were born. He died March 30, 1810 at the home of his son Jacob in Lincoln County, Ky.

There has been an unverified tradition in the BALTIMORE CONFERENCE of The Methodist Church that Benedict Schwoppe ordained ROBERT STRAWBRIDGE to the ministry.

Commission on Archives and History, Schwoppe File.

Joseph Henry Dubbs, Historic Manual of the Reformed Church in the United States. Lancaster, Pa., 1885.

Minutes and Letters of the Coetus of the German Reformed Congregation in Pennsylvania, 1749-1792. Philadelphia: Reformed Church Publication, 1903.

Paul E. Holdcraft, The Old Otterbein Church Story. Mimeo, 1960.

JOHN H. NESS, JR.

SCORE, JOHN NELSON RUSSELL (1896-1949), American preacher and college president, was born in a Methodist parsonage in White Church, Mo., on April 21, 1896. The name was originally "Scaar" or "Scarr," as his grandparents were from Scandinavia.

In preparation for the ministry his schooling included an A.B. degree from Scarritt-Morrisville College; B.D. from EMORY UNIVERSITY; and a Th.D. from the Pacific School of Religion in 1925. In recognition of his achievements, CENTENARY COLLEGE OF LOUISIANA conferred upon him the D.D. in 1931, and CENTRAL COLLEGE and SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIVERSITY conferred on him the LL.D. in 1943 and 1945 respectively.

Upon entering the ministry of the M.E. Church, South, he was ordained in 1917, and became an Army CHAPLAIN in World War I, with overseas assignment. He returned to pastoral duties at the close of the War, and served with marked effectiveness the following widely scattered congregations: Wynne, Ark.; Epworth University Church, BERKELEY, Calif.; St. Paul's Methodist Church, HOUSTON, Texas; First Methodist Church, FORT WORTH. From Fort Worth he moved to the presidency of SOUTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY in Texas, where he labored until his death in 1949.

A strong and colorful character, he was a born leader of men, and had the capacity for making strong friendships. He received a significant vote for bishop at the GENERAL CONFERENCE of his Church in 1938, the last General Conference of the Church, South, before union. At the UNITING CONFERENCE at Kansas City, Score was chosen to preach to the Conference on Sunday night at its great worship service, and preached a sermon in keeping with the occasion to an enormous audience.

Under special appointment in 1936, he was the Annual Conference preacher for CZECHOSLOVAKIA, POLAND, and BELGIUM, and on Exchange Commission the same year in Great Britain. He was a member of the General Conferences of his church in 1934, 1938; the Uniting Conference in 1939; and a delegate to the General Conferences of 1940 and 1944. He held the honor of Scholia in the American Academy of Political and Social Science.

Though wide awake and concerned in many areas, surely it was EDUCATION—in its broad sense—which claimed his chief interest and effort. During his day the Methodist Church was becoming so insistent upon a "trained ministry" that seminary graduation was all but required for Annual Conference membership. Neither he nor the Church pushed quite that far; but the ministry of The United Methodist Church today shows the influence of such an ideal.

Score is survived by his widow and one son, the son now serving as teacher in Southwestern University, Georgetown, Texas.

C. T. Howell, Prominent Personalities. 1945.

Journals, of the Central Texas Conference, 1950; of the Little Rock Conference, MES, 1913.

Who's Who in America. 1946-1947.

Who's Who in the Clergy. 1935-1936.

N. B. H.

SCOTLAND. Methodism in Scotland goes back to the earliest years of WESLEY's ministry, when in 1741 GEORGE WHITEFIELD visited the country. His preaching was in part responsible for the revival at Kilsyth and Cambuslang, which in turn helped to pave the way for Wesley's first visit in 1751 when, accompanied by CHRISTOPHER HOPPER, he paid a two-day visit to Edinburgh at the invitation of Captain Gallatin. Thereafter for the next forty years Wesley visited Scotland approximately every alternate spring, making in all twenty-two visits, and in that time there was hardly a town which did not see him more than once. Sporadic preaching was supplied by the Newcastle circuit; the first determined effort was made in 1759 by Hopper; and Scotland first appears in the stations in 1765, with four circuits, Aberdeen, Glasgow, Edinburgh, and Dundee. In that or the previous year the first chapel was erected in Scotland at Aberdeen, and in the next sixty years societies were founded and chapels built throughout the land, from Campbeltown in the southwest to Wick in the north. There was work in the Orkneys and Caithness from about 1824 to 1840. Most of these chapels were later closed, so that Scotland is littered with the remains of lost Methodist causes.

In the early years Wesley was involved in controversy with a leading Scots minister, John Erskine, who republished in 1765 one of Hervey's attacks on Wesley, Aspasio Vindicated. This led to the loss of many members, including some of the most influential, such as Lady WILLIELMA GLENORCHY, and Methodism in Scotland did not recover from the blow for twenty years. It was this plight which, among other reasons, led to Wesley's ordaining men for Scotland—eleven in all—between 1785 and 1788.

At Wesley's death there were 1,179 members of society in Scotland, and these rose to a peak of 3,786 in 1819; after that they declined until they reached 2,143 in 1856. A number of causes contributed to the decline—the scattered nature of the circuits, whose members saw the minister irregularly in a land where a settled ministry was accepted as the norm; and the building program of VALENTINE WARD, who was chairman of one or other of the Scottish districts for thirteen years and left Scottish Methodism with a legacy of debt which crippled or killed many societies. Ward was sanguine to a degree, so that, in one case, he bought for a society of thirty members a chapel holding thirteen hundred.

The work was often hard and unrewarding, many of the early preachers suffering almost unbelievable privations. Those who were most at home were naturally Scotsmen themselves, and Scottish Methodism produced a number of able men. Such were THOMAS RANKIN, ALEXANDER MATHER, DUNCAN MCALLUM and DUNCAN WRIGHT (both of whom preached in Gaelic as well as English) and Robert Dall, and the Moray Firth gave Methodism the scholarly GEORGE and JAMES FINDLAY.

All the other main branches of Methodism were represented in Scotland. The PRIMITIVE METHODISTS went to Edinburgh and the east from the Sunderland district, and from Carlisle to Glasgow, both in 1826. The METHODIST NEW CONNEXION had a society and chapel in Glasgow from 1814 for twenty years. The WESLEYAN METHODIST ASSOCIATION (and in due course the UNITED METHODIST FREE CHURCHES) were represented there from 1836. They were strengthened in 1857 by the accession of WESLEYAN REFORM SOCIETIES and lasted until 1884. The BIBLE CHRISTIANS had a society in Ayrshire for a short time from 1876.

The 1962 schedule of membership showed sixty-eight societies in Scotland with 12,809 members. Scottish Methodism is peculiar in that most of the stations are pastorates, and the church life reflects in many ways the Presbyterianism with which it is surrounded.

The SHETLAND ISLANDS, though geographically a part of Scotland, constitute a separate district.

W. F. Swift, Scotland. 1947.

OLIVER A. BECKERLEGGE

SCOTT, ISAAH BENJAMIN (1854-1931), American bishop, was born at Midway, Woodford County, Ky., Sept. 30, 1854, the son of Benjamin and Polly (Anderson) Scott. His father was of free African descent and was identified with the "underground railroad" before the Civil War. He attended private schools in Frankfort, Ky., CLARK COLLEGE in Atlanta, and won the A.B. (1880) and A.M. (1883) at Central Tennessee College in NASHVILLE. New Orleans University conferred on him the D.D. degree in 1893. He married Mattie J. Evans in May, 1881, and they had six children.

Scott was admitted on trial in the TENNESSEE CONFERENCE (ME) in 1880, was transferred to the TEXAS CONFERENCE in 1881, and was ordained DEACON in 1882 and ELDER in 1884. His appointments were: 1880, Nashville Circuit; 1881-82, Trinity, Houston; 1883, St. Paul's, Galveston; 1884-85, supernumerary, during which time he apparently taught at Prairie View State Normal and Industrial College; 1886, Ebenezer, Marshall; 1887-90, Marshall District; 1891-92, Houston District; 1893-96, president of WILEY COLLEGE; and 1896-1904, editor, South-western Christian Advocate.

During his presidency, Scott freed Wiley College of debt. A writer of force, he increased the circulation and influence of the Advocate. He was a delegate to five GENERAL CONFERENCES, 1888-1904, and a member of three ECUMENICAL CONFERENCES, 1891-1911. In 1904, he was elected missionary bishop for Africa and was assigned to Monrovia, LIBERIA. Well informed on the church and its work, he proved to be a skilful administrator. Retiring in 1916, he moved to Nashville, Tenn., where he died July 4, 1931. Interment was in Nashville.

F. D. Leete, Methodist Bishops. 1948.

National Cyclopaedia of American Biography.

Who's Who in America, Vol. 16.

JESSE A. EARL

SCOTT, JAMES (1835-1911), Wesleyan Methodist minister in SOUTH AFRICA, was the son of George Scott, a Methodist missionary in SWEDEN. He was born in STOCKHOLM on Sept. 14, 1835 and married Miss Helen Walker of Arbroath, SCOTLAND, on his twenty-fourth birthday.

Entering the ministry in 1859, he was immediately sent to King William's Town, South Africa. From 1861 to 1871 he labored at Thaba 'Nchu where he won the confidence of the African people and acquired a mastery of Tswana which later enabled him to serve on the Bible Translation Committee. Apart from eight years in England (1879-87) and short terms in Durban (1896-99) and Kimberley (1899-1903), he spent the remainder of his ministry in Bloemfontein, the capital of the Orange Free State (1871-79, 1887-96, 1903-09).

Scott was an important connexional figure: he served as Chairman of the Kimberley and Bloemfontein District (1888-96; 1899-1907) and Natal (1896-99); Secretary of Conference (1889-91); Ministerial Treasurer of the Supernumerary and Ministers' Widows Fund (1896-1909); and President of Conference (1892, 1897, and acting in 1898). But his greatest work was as pastor and administrator in Bloemfontein where he was father-in-God to the Methodist people and earned the respect of all sections of the community. He died on Nov. 18, 1911 and the pallbearers at his funeral included a Roman Catholic priest and a Jewish Rabbi.

Dictionary of South African Biography.

Minutes of the South African Conference, 1912.

D. G. L. CRAGG

SCOTT, JOHN (1792-1868), British Methodist, was born at Copmanthorpe, Nov. 16, 1792. He was the leading Wesleyan Methodist educationalist of the nineteenth century, having entered the ministry in 1811. As president of the Conference in 1843 he inspired the attempt to establish a Wesleyan day-school system; by the time of his death 671 Wesleyan day schools had been started. His influence was largely responsible for the refusal of the Wesleyan Church to join in the voluntary education movement between 1846-70. He did much to secure the building of the Wesleyan WESTMINSTER Teachers Training COLLEGE, 1849-51; he became principal of the college in 1851, holding the post until his death. He was again chosen president of the Conference in 1852: only four others were elected twice in the next eighty years. He died at Blackheath, on Jan. 10, 1868.

JOHN SCOTT

JOHN KENT

SCOTT, JOHN, JR. (1820-?), distinguished American M.P. minister, was a member of the PITTSBURGH ANNUAL CONFERENCE, a writer, able debater and presiding officer. He was born in Washington County, Pa., on Oct. 12, 1820, and united with the Pittsburgh M.P. Conference in 1842. He was the son of John Scott (1783-1833), an Irishman who was a Wesleyan Methodist. John Scott emigrated to America in 1819 and settled in Washington County, Pa. He became an active "reformer" in the Methodist Church and a subscriber to The Mutual Rights. John Scott, Jr., published The Missionary and Sunday School Journal from 1851 until 1854 and he edited The Methodist Recorder and Sunday school papers from 1864 until 1870. He was elected editor of The Recorder again around 1879 and held the position for many years. The Missionary and Sunday School Journal was published by the Board of Foreign Missions at Pittsburgh with Scott as editor. In 1858, he recommended to the Pittsburgh Conference that a M.P. school be opened at Sharpsburg; this school, known as the "Allegheny Seminary," was opened about 1860-1861 and was maintained until the establishment of ADRIAN COLLEGE.

Scott served as president of the GENERAL CONFERENCE of the Methodist Church (the northern and western conferences of the M.P. Church which had split in 1858 over slavery) in 1866. He was president of the Pittsburgh Conference in 1858 and 1870. For a number of years beginning in 1854 he was a member of nearly all the conventions and general conferences of his denomination. At the Convention of 1858 he was made chairman of the Board of Missions and the Commission on the Book Department. He advised the compilation of a new hymnal for the church. Among his published works are Fifty Years' Recollections in the Ministry and The Catechism of the History, Doctrine and Polity of the Methodist Protestant Church. The latter was referred to as "thoroughly evangelical, and written in the plain, easy and logical style of this eminent and venerable writer" by a committee of the General Conference of 1896. Scott published Pulpit Echoes (1870) and The Land of Sojourn; or, Sketches of Patriarchal Life and Times (1880). He received the D.D. degree from Washington College in Pennsylvania, in September 1860.

A. H. Bassett, Concise History. 1887.

T. H. Colhouer, Sketches of the Founders. 1880.

E. J. Drinkhouse, History of Methodist Reform. 1899.

Journal of the General Conference, MP, 1896.

The Methodist Protestant, May 16, 1928.

RALPH HARDEE RIVES

SCOTT, LEVI (1802-1882), American bishop, was born near Cantwell's Bridge, later Odessa, Del., on Oct. 11, 1802, of Methodist parentage; his father was for one year a member of the PHILADELPHIA CONFERENCE.

Levi Scott worked on a farm and in mechanical pursuits until 1822, when he was converted and determined to enter the ministry. He was licensed to preach in 1825 and was admitted into the Philadelphia Conference the following year. His appointments were successively Talbot, Dover, ST. GEORGE'S CHURCH in Philadelphia, and West Chester.

In 1832 his health made it necessary to take the supernumerary relation for one year, and then he resumed his work and served Kent, two years as presiding elder of the Delaware District, Franklin Street Church in Newark, two years at Ebenezer in Philadelphia, and St. Paul's in the same city. In 1840 he became principal of the Grammar School at DICKINSON COLLEGE and in 1843 he assumed the presidency of the college.

He was a member of all the GENERAL CONFERENCES from 1836 to 1852. In 1848 he became assistant BOOK AGENT in NEW YORK and was elected a bishop in 1852.

His episcopal assignments took him into all, or nearly all, of the states and territories in America. Soon after his election he went to Africa and visited all the missions there and presided at the conference in LIBERIA. In 1876 he preached the funeral of Bishop EDMUND S. JAMES and his sermon on that occasion was published in a booklet.

Bishop Scott suffered a paralytic stroke at the close of the General Conference of 1880, after which he could do little work. He died on July 13, 1882, at Odessa, Del., and was buried in the Old Union church yard there.

F. D. Leete, Methodist Bishops. 1948.

James Mitchell, The Life and Times of Levi Scott, D.D. New York: Phillips & Hunt, 1885.

M. Simpson, Cyclopaedia. 1878.

ELMER T. CLARK

SCOTT, ORANGE (1800-1847), American minister, abolitionist, and founder of the WESLEYAN METHODIST CHURCH, was born in Brookfield, Vt., on Feb. 13, 1800, the youngest of the eight children of Samuel and Lucy (Whitney) Scott. At twenty-one years of age he had only thirteen months of schooling. After a CAMP MEETING conversion at Barre, Vt., in September 1820, he joined the M.E. Church. Within a year he was made a CLASS LEADER and licensed exhorter. In 1822 he was received on trial in the NEW ENGLAND CONFERENCE.

Revivals marked his work in NEW HAMPSHIRE and MASSACHUSETTS churches. As presiding elder he served the Springfield District (1830-1834) and the Providence District (1834-1835). His reputation became so great that in 1832 the most influential Congregational Church in RHODE ISLAND asked him to accept its pastorate but he declined. Shortly afterwards public sentiment turned against him because of his public advocacy of the anti-slavery movement. Scott circulated 100 copies of Garrison's "Liberator" and worked for church action to destroy slavery. Although a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1832, it was not until 1836 that Scott, chairman of the New England delegation, revealed himself the champion of the anti-slavery forces. Undeterred by General Conference opposition to abolition he spent 1837 lecturing for the American Anti-Slavery Society; in 1838, finding other journals closed to "radicals," he published The Wesleyan Quarterly Review. At the General Conference of 1840 Scott and delegates from the New England and New Hampshire Conferences sought to restore to the Discipline the early Wesleyan doctrine concerning slavery; i.e. to hold or trade slaves is sinful. Failing, Scott and LUCIUS MATLOCK convened an anti-slavery convention in New York, criticizing the ineptness of the General Conference and organizing the American Wesleyan Anti-Slavery Society.

From 1836 to 1842, because of poor health and intense abolitionist activity, Scott was intermittently in the active and supernumerary relationship of the New England Conference. After transferring to the NEW HAMPSHIRE CONFERENCE in 1842, Scott withdrew from the M.E. Church to become the founder and first president of the Wesleyan Methodist Church, which opposed slavery and the authority of the episcopacy.

His wife, Amy Fletcher, died in 1835. On Oct. 6, 1835, he married Eliza Dearborn of Plymouth, N. H. Scott died of tuberculosis on July 31, 1847, in Newark, N. J. He is buried in Springfield, Mass.

R. M. Cameron, Methodism and Society. 1961.

J. Mudge, New England Conference. 1910.

M. Simpson, Cyclopaedia. 1878.

W. B. Sprague, Annals of the Pulpit. 1861. ERNEST R. CASE

SCOTT, ROLAND W. (1906-), is a graduate of ASBURY COLLEGE (B.A., 1927), ASBURY SEMINARY (B.D., 1930), and DREW SEMINARY (M.A., 1938). He served as a missionary in INDIA, 1930-56. He was first a pastor at Taylor Church in BOMBAY, and then for one year was superintendent of Bombay District. In 1932, he was married to Geraldine Lacy. They had become engaged while he was a seminary student. Geraldine died in Bombay in 1941, leaving her husband with two sons, the elder, David, now a missionary in India.

In 1944 Scott was elected principal of Woodstock School at Landour, Mussoorie, in North India. He served there with distinction until returning to America on furlough. During his furlough he earned the Ph.D. degree from Columbia University. In 1967 he was awarded an honorary D.D. degree by Asbury College.

Returning to India in 1948, he joined the staff of the National Christian Council as secretary for evangelism and theological education. He was popular with his colleagues and was heard with respect by all church and mission representatives.

In 1956, he began a new career as a home-base secretary, becoming secretary for Southern Asia and the Near East for the NATIONAL COUNCIL OF THE CHURCHES OF CHRIST in the U.S.A. In 1958 he was made executive secretary for Southern Asia, North Africa, and Europe for the Division of World Missions, Board of Missions (TMC). In 1960, he was promoted to the post of secretary for General Administration in the same division of the Methodist Board.

In response to a request from the WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES in 1962, he went to Geneva as secretary of the Division of World Missions and Evangelism, and two years later he became assistant to the General Secretary of the World Council of Churches. In the middle of 1965 he resigned to become professor of World Christianity at GARRETT THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

The Indian Witness.

The National Christian Council Review.

J. WASKOM PICKETT

SCOTT, SOLOMON T. (1790-1862), bishop of the A.M.E. ZION CHURCH, was born Aug. 20, 1790, in Smyrna, Del. He was converted there in 1830 and was licensed to preach the following year, beginning his ministry in his birthplace. He joined the conference June 25, 1834, and was ordained a DEACON evidently prior to this time, May 22, 1834. The only explanation which we can give to this strange state of affairs is that he was evidently used as a pastor prior to the convening of the annual conference and was therefore ordained a deacon so that he could be of greater service. He waited ten years, May 20, 1844, before he was given ELDER's orders. He was elected a bishop in May 1856. He died Jan. 4, 1862.

DAVID H. BRADLEY

SCOTT, THOMAS (1772-1856), pioneer American preacher, attorney and judge, was born of Scotch-Irish ancestry at Skypton, Allegany County, Md., Oct. 31, 1772. He married Catherine Wood of Lexington, Ky., May 10, 1796.

Scott joined the church before he was fourteen, was admitted on trial in the conference at Leesburg, Va., in April 1789, and was ordained DEACON in 1791 and ELDER in 1793. His appointments were: 1789, Gloucester Circuit assistant; 1790, Berkeley Circuit assistant; 1791, Stafford Circuit; 1792, Frederick Circuit; 1793, Ohio Circuit; and 1794, Danville (Ky.) Circuit. In the spring of 1795 he located because, as he later said, of dire necessity. However, because of the illness of the preacher assigned to the Lexington Circuit, Scott, at the request of the presiding elder, supplied that charge most of the succeeding year.

After his marriage, Scott clerked in a store for a time and then ran a tailor shop, his wife reading law to him while he worked. Then he studied law in Lexington and became prosecuting attorney in Fleming County. In 1801 he settled in Chillicothe, Ohio, at the suggestion of EDWARD TIFFIN, the first governor of the state (1803), who had been converted and joined the church under Scott's ministry in VIRGINIA eleven years before. Scott served as clerk for the Territorial legislature and in the same capacity for the state constitutional convention in 1802. At the first session of the state legislature, he was elected secretary of the senate, serving until 1809 when he was named as one of the judges on the state supreme court. In 1810 he became chief justice, serving until 1815 when he resigned because the pay was too low, the same reason for which he had left the Methodist itinerancy twenty years before. He resumed the practice of law, and was for sixteen years, 1829-45, the register of the United States Land Office at Chillicothe.

While an itinerant Scott kept a journal which has been preserved. Also, he compiled "Memoirs" which were published in the Western Christian Advocate, 1851-54. He said that if the M.E. Church had provided adequate financial support for its itinerants, he would have remained in the traveling connection all his life.

Scott was a man of intelligence, ability, and integrity. His contemporaries felt that he had superior qualifications for the bar, but some believed that his fitness for the ministry was possibly greater and they were confident that had he remained in the traveling connection he might have risen to high office in the church.

F. Asbury, Journal and Letters, 1958.

J. B. Finley, Sketches of Western Methodism, 1854.

National Cyclopaedia of American Biography.

J. S. Payton, Our Fathers Have Told Us, 1938. JESSE A. EARL

SCOTT, THOMAS J. (1835-1920) was a distinguished early Methodist missionary in INDIA. Born in New Alexandria, Ohio, graduate of OHIO WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, he first arrived in India, Jan. 20, 1863. He served at Budaun, United Provinces, for six years, and in BAREILLY for thirty-four years. After a few years of teaching in the theological seminary there he became principal. He was an Urdu scholar, and served on the BRITISH AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY Committee for the revision of the Urdu translation of the New Testament.

For many years he maintained, at little cost to himself, an offer to reward his students with a gift of one rupee for every mistake they noted in his use of Urdu.

He was the founder of the Indian Sunday School Union, and a prolific writer for evangelism and religious education. His published works included a book on logic, for which he was awarded a prize by the government of the Uttar Pradesh; a book on natural theology for which Christian publishing societies awarded him a prize; two volumes on Biblical theology written in English and Hindustani, and five volumes of a commentary on the Bible in Hindustani.

A list compiled after his death mentions twenty-one books he wrote. He was a Fellow of Allahabad University, a member of several learned societies, and of two committees appointed by the government of the United Provinces. He was twice elected a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE and twice a reserve delegate.

J. WASKOM PICKETT

SCRANTON, WILLIAM BENTON (1856-1922), American missionary to KOREA, was born in New Haven, Conn., on May 29, 1856. He graduated from the New York College of Physicians and Surgeons (Columbia University) in 1882, married Loulie Wyeth Arms, and took up private practice in Cleveland, Ohio.

Late in 1884 he answered a call for a doctor to go to Korea and was ordained by Bishop C. N. FOWLER under the missionary rule, and admitted to the NEW YORK EAST CONFERENCE. He sailed from SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 3, 1885, with his wife, his two-year-old daughter and his mother, Mrs. Mary F. Scranton, the first missionary appointed by the WOMEN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY to Korea. Also in the party were Dr. and Mrs. HENRY C. APPENZELLER.

Scranton reached SEOUL on May 4, 1885, and soon purchased a site for the Methodist mission adjoining the American Legation and the Duk-Soo Palace and began medical work. Later he opened two other medical centers in Seoul and during his missionary career acted as supervisor of the medical work of his mission in the capital city.

He was a versatile and vigorous administrator. He acted as secretary of the mission until his first furlough in 1891, and thereafter was superintendent of his mission except for furlough years until 1907. He was also active in Bible translation.

Administrative tasks became too strenuous and he resigned in June 1907 to take up private practice in Seoul, acting as medical adviser to the Chiksan and other mining companies. In 1917 he secured a medical practice in Kobe, JAPAN, where he died in March 1922. Inurnment was at Kasugano Cemetery in Kobe.

CHARLES A. SAUER

SCRANTON, PENNSYLVANIA, U.S.A., renowned in the past as the anthracite capital of the world, situated in the Pocono Mountains, is a city with a population of 102,294. It has long been the largest and most important urban area in northeastern PENNSYLVANIA. In 1818 a young Methodist itinerant, GEORGE PECK, was appointed to the Wyoming Circuit which included some twelve preaching appointments covering what is now Luzerne and Lackawanna Counties. It required riding the circuit in two weeks, or 136 miles on horseback. The only appointment apparently then within what is now the city of Scranton was at the home of Preserved Taylor, on the west bank of the Lackawanna River. In this early circuit, services were held in three churches, three school houses and six private homes. In 1820 Peck was appointed to the Canaan Circuit which included what is now Wayne County, a two weeks circuit with 223 members, twelve preaching places, but no church building anywhere. In 1831 Providence Chapel became one of the appointments on this circuit. This is now the Providence Church, the oldest Methodist organization in the city. As one of the classes of this appointment, there was organized in 1839 a class in Slocum Hollow, later known as Harrison. This was destined to become one of Methodism's outstanding congregations, now the Elm Park Church.

The Slocum Hollow class seems to have had good lay leadership and soon proposed that a church building be erected. The church building known as the "Village Chapel" was begun in 1841 upon a quarter of an acre plot of ground donated by the firm of Scranton, Grant and Co. With the erection of the "Village Chapel," the Slocum Hollow class became a station attached, along with Hyde Park, Dunmore and Blakely, to the Providence Circuit. It was continued in this manner until 1854 when it appears as a separate appointment in the minutes of the Annual Conference under the name "Scranton."

The Village Chapel soon became too small to accommodate the growing society and was donated to the German Methodists. Although the construction of a new building was commenced in the fall of 1855, by the summer of 1856 the basement had been sufficiently completed so that the congregation moved in. In 1856 George Peck, after serving many important appointments including a term as Editor of The Christian Advocate, and presiding elder of the Wyoming District, was appointed as pastor to the Scranton charge. The years that followed were plagued with financial difficulties for the slowly growing congregation.

It is difficult to ascertain the exact number of members in the early days, but apparently in 1855 there were 125 full members, and by 1864 only 144. The QUARTERLY CONFERENCE records show that church membership began to grow slowly after 1860, but by 1879 the membership numbered around 400. After 1872 the church grew more rapidly. The appointment then appeared in Conference Minutes as the "Adams Avenue" Church.

During the decade after 1880 the city of Scranton grew rapidly and became the third city in Pennsylvania. The Adams Avenue congregation kept pace with the growth of this city. At the Quarterly Conference held in 1887, the pastor, J. E. Price, reported that due to the large attendance in the Sunday school and the crowds that thronged the church services, a new church edifice should be constructed. The Quarterly Conference acted favorably and a committee was appointed to select a suitable site for the new church. On April 13, 1891 the lots of the Elm Park triangle were purchased from W. W. Scranton. Ground was broken for the new church on Sept. 8, 1891 by William Connell, who was president of the Board of Trustees, W. H. Pearce being pastor. The cornerstone of Elm Park Church was laid on April 23, 1892 with impressive services. The dedication of the new church was to commence Monday, Dec. 12, but on Saturday morning, Dec. 3, 1892 the church was completely destroyed by fire. An Official Board Meeting was immediately called the very same morning under the leadership of the presiding elder, M. S. Hard, and it was resolved to rebuild at once. Within a few days subscriptions were received for over $12,000. The work of rebuilding was pushed rapidly, but again on March 22, 1893 a second fire completely destroyed the walls of the building, leaving only the tower and the chimneys uninjured. However, the determination of the congregation prevailed, and the present structure was completed and an elaborate ten-day program of services was arranged for Dec. 7, 1893. The church building has continued to serve the Elm Park congregation to the present time.

For over a century Elm Park Church has occupied a unique position in northeastern Pennsylvania. For many years it had the largest membership of any Methodist Church in the WYOMING CONFERENCE. Since 1893 it has had the largest and most completely equipped church facilities of any church in the Conference, or of any other Protestant church in northeastern Pennsylvania. By reason of its large membership and adequate equipment and its able clerical and lay leadership, it has held a high place in religious circles throughout this region. During the period 1900-35, there was a consistent gain in membership. In 1935 the membership reported to Annual Conference was 2,512, and this number remained nearly constant until 1942 when a decline set in coincident with the decline of population in northeastern Pennsylvania. At the present time church membership numbers 1,319.

Included among its outstanding pastors have been such leaders as Joseph M. M. Gray, HENRY HITT CRANE, HAROLD C. CASE, and Benjamin L. Duval. Among its outstanding laymen the most prominent was the Honorable HENRY REED VAN DEUSEN, distinguished lawyer, who served as a member of the JUDICIAL COUNCIL of The Methodist Church during the first years of the Council. Elm Park Church continues to offer outstanding leadership to the Methodist churches of Wyoming Conference and the surrounding areas.

L. E. Bugbee, Wyoming Conference. 1952.
Henry Reed Van Deusen, Elm Park Historical Sketches. Scranton: Haddon Craftsmen, Inc., 1955. GEORGE R. AKERS

SCRIPPS, JOHN (1785-1865), American minister, was born in Bridewell Parish, England, Aug. 26, 1785. He arrived in BALTIMORE, Md., with his father's family on July 4, 1791. The family went to CAPE GIRARDEAU, Mo., then a village, in May 1809.

JESSE WALKER, the Methodist circuit rider, visited the Scripps family in 1810 and took the young man with him across the Big Swamp to NEW MADRID, where they established a church, the oldest operating society west of the Mississippi River. Scripps was licensed to preach, and in 1814 he was sent to supply the ILLINOIS circuit of the TENNESSEE CONFERENCE. He was admitted to the conference the following year and appointed to that circuit. He formed another circuit, called the Okaw, and served both, or extended his "three weeks circuit" to a "six weeks circuit."

In 1815 Scripps preached in Kaskasia, Ill., and St. Louis, Mo., both almost wholly Roman Catholic. At the close of the year the conference met at Shiloh on Scripps' circuit, and he went to Vincennes, Ind., to accompany the bishop to Shiloh and made entertainment arrangements for the conference members.

At the new MISSOURI CONFERENCE in 1816 he was sent to the Coldwater Circuit. He established an appointment in St. Louis and sold $300 worth of books on the circuit. His other appointments were: 1817-18, Boonslick Circuit in Central Missouri; 1818-19, Cape Girardeau; 1819-20, Boonslick; 1820-21, Blue River, Ind.; 1821-22, presiding elder of the Arkansas District; 1823, St. Louis; 1824, presiding elder of the Missouri District.

Scripps left the itinerary in 1825. When the conference was divided into Illinois and Missouri, he would not adhere to the Missouri Conference because of its stand on slavery. After this he married and went into business in Missouri. He removed to Rushville, Ill., in 1845. Here he owned and edited a local paper, engaged in business, lectured, preached, wrote, and was active in the local church. He died July 26, 1865.

Elmer T. Clark, One Hundred Years of New Madrid Methodism. New Madrid, the author, 1912.
A. M. Pennewell, Jesse Walker. 1958. ALMER PENNEWELL

SCRIPTURE PLAYING CARDS, or DRAW CARDS, were packs of printed or handwritten cards, with a scripture text on one side and on the other a verse or two of a hymn. They were advertised "for Divine amusement" by James Kenton in 1786, and were in use among Methodists, Moravians, and others, in the late eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. CHARLES WESLEY apparently encouraged their use, and specimens have survived in his handwriting. There is no evidence that JOHN WESLEY used them, though they were advertised as to be "had of Mr. Wesley's booksellers in Town and Country." RICHARD GREEN conjectures as to their use:

The cards were shuffled, and either the whole or part of the pack was dealt out to the assembled company. The trump, or turn-up card, in all probability, was first used. . . . It would be a starting point for conversation. Persons holding cards having passages of Scripture relating to the first would probably speak of them . . . ; the singing of verses of the hymns would vary the proceedings and give additional interest to them; and prayer would naturally follow. (Proc. W.H.S., i, 15-25).

There is evidence, however, that such cards were used for the less-edifying purpose of SORTILEGE. ADAM CLARKE roundly denounced the cards as "the drivellings of religious nonage, of piety in superannuation," dismissing them as a variant of "bibliomancy," or divination by "dipping into the Bible, taking passages of Scripture at hazard, and drawing indications thence concerning the present and future state of the soul." He added: "Thank God, these have never been very common among us, and are certainly not of Methodist growth."

Among the Moravians such cards were "drawn for purpose of guidance," and also used to convey good wishes on a birthday or other anniversary. It is possible that the cards originated with the Moravians, from whom Wesley derived his habit of selecting passages of Scripture at random and of deciding matters by lot.

Wesley Historical Society, Proceedings, i, iv, vii.

JOHN NEWTON

SEABRA, MERCÊDES COIMBRA DE (1893-), Brazilian leader, outstanding in the work of the Methodist women of BRAZIL, was born in RIO DE JANEIRO, Sept. 4, 1893, and reared as a strict Roman Catholic. At the age of nineteen she married Lauro Seabra, a devout Presbyterian businessman whose influence and Christian example led her to accepting the evangelical faith in January 1917, in the Presbyterian church in SÃO PAULO. They had one son, Newton.

When her husband was transferred to PORTO ALEGRE in the state of Rio Grande do Sul, they found no Presbyterian church, so in 1923 both joined the Methodist Church and became loyal, hard-working members. Both served in many capacities—Dona Mercêdes taught a young woman's class in the church school, and was active both in the local and the regional women's societies, and as president of the local society promoted the founding of a home for aged Methodist women, and a clinic for children in Porto Alegre. In the regional conference, she acted as corresponding secretary, treasurer, vice-president and president, during a period of almost forty years. In 1930 she was on the committee that founded Voz Missionaria, the Methodist women's magazine. She has given marked leadership to women in the Southern region of Brazil. She continues to reside in Porto Alegre.

Eula K. Long, Historico das Sociedades de Senhoras do Rio Grande do Sul. Porto Alegre: Typografia Esperanca, 1933.

EULA K. LONG

SEAGER, LAWRENCE HOOVER (1860-1937), bishop of the EVANGELICAL CHURCH in the United States, was born on a farm near Fremont, Ohio, on April 19, 1860. He received his college degree at North Western College (NORTH CENTRAL) in Naperville, Ill., in 1887, and his seminary degree at EVANGELICAL THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY the following year. From 1888 until 1897 he served pastorates in the OHIO CONFERENCE of the EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION. Beyond brief service as a presiding elder, Seager served his denomination as Assistant Editor of

Sunday School Literature and Editor of The Evangelical Herald (1901-1911), President of North Western College (1911-1915), and bishop (1915-1934). A man of large physical proportions and a unique capacity for friendship and leadership, Seager made his greatest contribution through his outstanding preaching ability. He died on Aug. 30, 1937, in LeMars, Iowa, survived by his widow (Mary Good Twigg, whom he married in 1896), and one son, Charles.

R. W. Albright, Evangelical Church. 1942.

The Evangelical Messenger, Sept. 11 and 18, 1937.

David Koss, "Bishops of the Evangelical Association, United Evangelical Church, and Evangelical Church." Ms.

K. JAMES STEIN

SEAMANDS, EARL ARNETT (1891-), came to INDIA as a missionary of the M.E. Church in 1919. He was a graduate of the college of civil engineering, University of Cincinnati. His appointments included the pastorate of the Richmond Town Church in Bangalore, the principalship of Industrial School at Kolar, the superintendency of five districts in the SOUTH INDIA CONFERENCE, and the executive secretaryship of the HYDERABAD AREA.

Seamands was born in LEXINGTON, Ky., lived as a boy in ARIZONA, married Yvonne Shields of PITTSBURGH, Pa., and was soundly converted in OHIO. His training as an engineer combined with his fervent evangelism and his skill in dealing with people to make him outstanding in his generation as a builder of churches and church members. Tireless in touring the villages and visiting in their homes those who showed a desire to learn what Jesus taught about, and loving God with all his mind, he established schools, gave personal attention to hundreds of church members, and fired many of them with zeal to win others to Christ. He promoted schools and hospitals, called for doctors and nurses, teachers and clerks, and above all for ministers of the Gospel. He drew plans for all kinds of buildings, engaged contractors, and supervised construction. Also he collected money in India and in America for these buildings and to maintain the institutions which they housed.

He helped 135 Indian congregations build churches. He made a number of shuttle trips to India, to collaborate with bishops, district superintendents, pastors, and local congregations in planning for new churches, parsonages, and schools.

His sons, John and David, became missionaries in India and, with impressive fluency in several languages and ability and zeal to match their father's, were notably successful. Because of family health problems, both have had to resign as missionaries. John is now professor of missions in ASBURY SEMINARY and David is a pastor.

J. WASKOM PICKETT

SEAMEN'S MISSION, British Methodist, was started by the Wesleyan Methodist Church in the LONDON docks in 1843. It was originally local in character, but in 1885 the Seamen's Chapel Circuit was formed; the Seamen's Rest was built, which is still used by seamen in the port of London. The mission started homes in other ports, such as Chatham, Devonport, and Pembroke docks, as well as at naval stations abroad.

K. Heasman, Evangelicals in Action. London, 1962.

NORMAN BURNS

SEARCH, GEORGE LEWIS (1871-1936), American minister and home missions executive, was born Dec. 7, 1871, at Cedarville, N. J. In 1881 the family moved to Merrill, Iowa. He was converted at age eleven. After attending business college he had several years successful experience in business. He then entered MORNINGSIDE COLLEGE, Sioux City, Iowa, to prepare for the ministry. He joined the NORTHWEST IOWA CONFERENCE in 1905.

He superintended the Wall Street Mission in Sioux City from 1903 to 1905. In 1906 he opened the Helping Hand Mission in downtown Sioux City. This grew rapidly into an effective rescue institution. It included a unique hotel erected to shelter farm laborers who travelled through the city while following the annual wheat harvest northward across the nation. This hotel became a hostel for all unattached needy men. The Mission continued to operate until 1960.

In 1920 Search became Auditor of the Board of Home Missions at PHILADELPHIA, Pa., and in 1922 became its Comptroller. His administration of the home mission funds was competent and effective. In 1933 he was incapacitated by a stroke and retired. He died July 15, 1936, and was buried at Monroeville, N. J.

Northwest Iowa Conference Minutes, 1936. FRANK C. BEAN

SEARCY, HUBERT FLOYD (1908-1971), American college president, was born at Skipperville, Ala., on July 2, 1908, the son of Duncan Alexander and Susan Elizabeth (Hulon) Searcy. He was educated at BIRMINGHAM-SOUTHERN COLLEGE, A.B., 1929; LL.D., 1942; DUKE UNIVERSITY, A.M., 1933; Ph.D., 1937. His wife was Christine Mason Quillian (daughter of W. F. QUILLIAN, Sr.), whom he married on Dec. 22, 1934, and their children are Jane Quillian, Susan Elizabeth, and Hubert Floyd, Jr. He was the assistant registrar of the Birmingham-Southern College, 1929-30; alumni secretary, 1930-32; occupied various positions in that college until in 1938 he was elected president of HUNTINGDON COLLEGE, Montgomery, Ala. He was a lay representative of the ALABAMA CONFERENCE of the M.E. Church, South, to the Uniting Conference in 1939; to the SOUTHEASTERN JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCE, 1940, '44, '48, '52, '56; to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of The Methodist Church, 1944 and 1956. He served as a member of the UNIVERSITY SENATE of The Methodist Church, 1940-65; and the chairman of the Alabama Committee on the selection of Rhodes Scholars, 1962-63. He retired from the presidency of Huntingdon College in 1968 and was elected chancellor for life.

He died April 14, 1971.

Who's Who in America, Vol. 34.

Who's Who in The Methodist Church, 1966.

N. B. H.

SEASHORE METHODIST ASSEMBLY (formerly Seashore Camp Ground), assembly grounds of the MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE, is located on the beach at Biloxi, Miss. It was established in 1870 by Methodists of the NEW ORLEANS District of the LOUISIANA CONFERENCE as a site for CAMP MEETINGS. The idea originated with William H. Foster, a lawyer and member of Felicity Street Church of New Orleans. He was assisted in the original plans by his pastor, John Matthews. The original property was purchased from J. H. Kellar, wealthy soap manufacturer of New Orleans. Adjoining acreage on the west was added later. It was dedicated as a camp meeting site in March 1872. From 1878-1921 the property was owned jointly by the New Orleans District of the Louisiana Conference, the Seashore District of the Mississippi Conference, and the Mobile District of the ALABAMA CONFERENCE. Title rested in the three above named Annual Conferences from 1921-1963. Since 1963 it has been owned solely by the Mississippi Conference. The original tract included land now occupied by Keesler Air Force Base.

This was the site of annual camp meetings for many years, the first one being held in June 1872. Among the great preachers who led the meetings from year to year were SAM JONES, Bishops MCTYEIRE, MARVIN, and KEENER. It was also the site of Seashore Divinity School, established in 1907, which after 1931 became known as the Mississippi Conference Pastors' School. The Tri-State EPWORTH LEAGUE Assembly met here annually from 1904-1922. A preparatory school for boys was operated on the grounds from 1912-1926. The present annual program includes the Mississippi Conference Pastors' School, WOMEN'S SOCIETY OF CHRISTIAN SERVICE School of Missions, and other church conferences of various purposes.

The Assembly now consists of two units: the Spiritual Center which includes Leggett Memorial Church, Frazer Hall, Arlean Hall, Stevens Cafeteria, Recreation Hall, Van Hook Hall, and the superintendent's home. Frazer Hall and Arlean Hall together provide accommodations for 165 visitors. Arlean Hall is owned by the Mississippi Conference W.S.C.S. The second unit is known as Seashore Manor, which contains 125 apartments for retired couples, opened in 1965. The entire tract now includes twenty-three acres.

J. A. LINDSEY

SEATON, JOHN LAWRENCE (1873-1961), American minister and college president, was born in Manchester, Iowa, on Jan. 25, 1873. He received an A.B. degree in 1898 from Upper Iowa University, and S.T.B. and Ph.D. degrees from BOSTON UNIVERSITY in 1901 and 1905 respectively. While a student he preached in churches in Iowa and MASSACHUSETTS. He was pastor of churches in Norwood, Mass., and Dubuque, Iowa, after receiving his theological degree and until 1904. It was that year that he became professor of psychology and Bible at DAKOTA WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, a post he held for ten years.

In 1914, Seaton became president of the College of the Pacific, San Jose, Calif.; in 1919 he became college secretary of the Board of EDUCATION, M.E. Church, and on May 15, 1924, he became the seventh president of ALBION COLLEGE, and held this position until June 30, 1945.

During Seaton's administration Albion College first attained national accreditation by the most significant accreditation bodies. Seaton was almost solely responsible in 1940 for obtaining Beta chapter of Michigan of Phi Beta Kappa for the college. College endowment rose from about $1,700,000 in 1924 to about $2,500,000 in 1945, and several buildings were constructed on the campus during the same period.

Seaton and Jessie Evans Davis of Maynard, Iowa, were married Aug. 27, 1900. They had one daughter, Mary (Mrs. John W. McDonald), at whose home Seaton died Jan. 28, 1961. Burial was in Riverside Cemetery, Albion, Mich.

R. Gildart, Albion College, 1835-1960, A History. N.p., n.d.

ROBERT GILDART

SEATTLE, WASHINGTON, U.S.A., is the metropolis of the Pacific Northwest and owes its founding largely to Methodist pioneers, as its first settlers, so far as can be ascertained, were all Methodists. Departing ILLINOIS in the early spring of 1851 by covered wagons, they traveled over the famous OREGON trail arriving in the Willamette Valley of western Oregon in August. Soon thereafter, three of their number went up into the Puget Sound country, then sparsely settled as compared with the Willamette Valley, to seek a likely place for the party to locate. Traveling north by canoe on Puget Sound, they went ashore on September 25 at what is now West Seattle. A tribe of Indians nearby was busily engaged in catching and smoking salmon. Its chief strode up the beach to bid them welcome. His name, Seattle!

Six weeks later, at dawn on November 13, in a pouring winter rain, the rest of the party, having come by schooner from Portland, were put ashore. All told they numbered twenty-four, twelve adults and twelve children. The children ranged in age from nine years to two months. The oldest man in the party was thirty-four. From them Seattle was born.

The first church established was a Methodist church. Its founder and first pastor was DAVID BLAINE who with his bride, Catherine, arrived in the late fall of 1853, having traveled from NEW YORK by way of PANAMA. Seattle was then a small settlement of thirty cabins and shacks rising amidst a straggling assemblage of stumps adjacent to the mud flats of the waterfront. Beyond stretched the primeval forest. On the first Sunday following his arrival, David Blaine conducted services in a boarding house at the corner of First and Cherry, and on that day, Dec. 4, 1853, established the First Methodist Church of Seattle with four charter members, one of them his wife Catherine. They rented the only quarters available for shelter, a two-room shack, one room on the ground floor and the other on the second floor, each 13 by 14 feet. Cracks between the boards were so wide—Catherine wrote to her well-to-do parents in upper New York State—that no windows were needed. Within two months after her arrival Catherine Blaine established the first school and became Seattle's first teacher. Housed in the "parsonage," the school enrolled fourteen children who attended five days a week.

Largely by his own efforts, David Blaine cleared the land and built the first church edifice and parsonage in Seattle. The parsonage was completed in 1854, the church dedicated in May 1855. A small incident reveals his character and ecclesiology. Paint was expensive and hard to get. No building in Seattle was painted. But Blaine believed that a building which carried the name of the Methodist Church should be representative of the best. So he painted the church white. For years it was known as the "White Church." He painted the parsonage to match. They were the only painted buildings in Seattle.

During the intervening years the church has built two new edifices, on each occasion moving a block or two up the hill from the waterfront. It grew and for several generations now it has ranked among the foremost. Its present membership of 3,366 ranks it with the First Methodist Church of GLENDALE, California, as one of the two largest Methodist churches on the West Coast. Two on its roll of distinguished pastors have been elected to the episcopacy: ADNA W. LEONARD in 1916 and J. RALPH MACEE in 1932.

In 1853 David Denny and Dexter Horton, two Methodist laymen, established the first merchandise firm in Seattle. In the shipment of goods from SAN FRANCISCO with which they opened business was a small safe which previously had suffered the misfortune of having its back removed by dynamite. However, since no one knew this but Denny and Horton, it served as a place of deposit for much of Seattle's currency. They issued deposit slips to all depositors, and ere long from that safe began Seattle's first financial institution, Seattle First National Bank, presently one of the nation's great banks with 118 branches in the Pacific Northwest.

The second Methodist minister to arrive in Seattle was DANIEL BAGLEY, a Methodist Protestant. He with his wife and family in 1860 drove into town with Seattle's first buggy. Following the Indian War of 1856 Seattle's population declined and only twenty families remained. Daniel Bagley resurrected the dreams and hopes of the first settlers and imbued the community with a new spirit of confidence.

Shortly after his arrival he led in the establishment of the University of Washington. The Territorial Legislature in 1861, wearied under repeated petitions from Seattle for the establishment of a university there, stipulated a series of conditions which Seattle would have to meet to get a university—conditions which neither the Legislature (nor the Seattle people for awhile) thought were possible. They had all reckoned without Daniel Bagley. He believed the Territory should have a university and that it should be in Seattle.

He persuaded three Methodist laymen to give ten acres for the university—one of the requirements; hired men to clear the land, paying them in land, two acres a day at $1.50 per acre; and then recruited saw mill operator Herman Yesler, Seattle's first industrialist, to saw the logs, taking his pay also in land. In short he met all conditions and was able to announce the opening of the Territorial University in Seattle on Nov. 4, 1861. The astonished Legislature traveled en masse to Seattle. There they found the campus and buildings ready, and surmounting all, a tall fir tree stripped of its boughs and bark, flying the Stars and Stripes.

The University now enrolls 30,000 students. The ten acres which were its first campus now are Seattle's most valuable business property, yielding the University more than $2,000,000 income annually.

Next, knowing the need for coal, Bagley led in the development of the Newcastle coal field near Seattle, a profitable venture which was most important for the economic development of Seattle. But first and last, Daniel Bagley was a minister of the Gospel and servant of his Lord. He gave nearly forty-five years of enterprise and dedicated life for and through the Methodist Church in Seattle.

Three M.P. churches were organized in Seattle. The first, known after the 1939 reunion as "Capitol Hill Methodist Church," was organized in 1865 by Daniel Bagley, who as told above later became the first president of the University of Washington. The PUGET SOUND CONFERENCE was separated from the OREGON CONFERENCE in 1884, and its first session held in Seattle, August 21-25 of that year. Bishop C. H. FOWLER presided.

The founding of the second M.E. Church in Seattle, the Battery Street Church, was announced at the 1884 session of the conference. Its first pastor was L. A. Banks, and its forty-five charter members formerly had been in First Church. At that time, A. Farrell was appointed to open Scandinavian work in the area. A Swedish congregation was organized that year, and in 1889 a Norwegian-Danish church was established.

Other Methodisms in Seattle and the outlying regions are: A.M.E. CHURCH, with three churches, having a total membership of 1,717 members, one church having 1,500; A.M.E. ZION has one congregation; C.M.E. has two churches with approximately 450 members; the EVANGELICAL METHODISTS have one church with approximately eighty members and two other churches in nearby communities whose statistics could not be obtained.

The FREE METHODISTS have thirteen churches—eight in Seattle proper and five in suburban areas, having a total membership of 2,168. They also have SEATTLE PACIFIC COLLEGE having approximately a 2,000 enrollment; the WESLEYAN METHODISTS have one church but have recently voted, it appears, to merge with other Wesleyan groups.

The United Methodist Church has twenty-five churches in Seattle with big Blaine Memorial among them, and the district itself listed 25,664 members in 1970.

First Church was the religious body in the city, being organized on Dec. 4, 1853 by David E. Blaine. The first membership consisted of four people: Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Denny, J. H. Nagle, and Catherine Blaine, the wife of the minister. The Blaines built their own home in 1854 and used it for services until the first building could be erected at Second and Columbia Streets in 1855.

In 1862, Daniel Bagley, a M.P. minister, filled the pulpit. He later became the founding Father of the University of Washington. In 1863, Nehemiah Doane was appointed to the pulpit and found a membership of six. In 1889, under the leadership of D. D. Campbell, the church moved to a new location at Third and Marion and erected a new building. In 1908 it made its third move to Fifth and Marion and erected the present building under the leadership of W. H. Reese.

Two pastors of this Church have been elected to the episcopacy: Adna Wright Leonard and J. Ralph Magee. E. Newton Moats started the plans for an expanded educational building in 1948-49, which was completed under the ministry of Cyrus E. Albertson. In 1960 a 250-apartment Retirement Home named Bayview Manor was erected by the Church on land given by the Charles Kinnear family. It is operated as one of the ministries of the Church. The Church has expanded its missionary giving to more than $70,000 per year, including specialized ministries in the Congo and in India. Located in the heart of the downtown portion of the city, First Church carries on programs of unusual evangelism with special ministries for the elderly, the broken family, the mentally retarded and the dispossessed. The Church owns and operates its own camp and provides a year-round program for all ages. In 1970 it reported 3,307 members.

University Temple Church stands adjacent to the campus of the University of Washington. It was organized in 1901 by Rial Benjamin, of the Methodist Evangelistic Union. The first Methodist sermon in the area was delivered in Payee's Hall, on Lake Union in 1892. A LADIES AID SOCIETY was organized in 1901. The first building was erected in 1903 by W. H. Leech, City Missionary. The edifice was valued at $25,000 and dedicated April 28, 1907, by H. C. Jennings. The parsonage was erected under the leadership of John M. Canse in 1910-14. The building was enlarged and rebuilt under the pastorate of A. H. Lathrop in 1918. A sanctuary costing $350,000 was dedicated Oct. 16, 1927 under the ministry of J. E. Crowther. Debt was removed in 1947. An educational unit costing $500,000 was erected in 1956 under the pastorate of Cecil Ristow. A new parsonage was acquired in 1961 under the pastorate of Lynn Corson.

This congregation cooperates with the WESLEY FOUNDATION, located on an adjoining lot, in ministering to more than 2,000 Methodist students enrolled in the University of Washington. In 1970 University Temple membership was 1,998. The W.S.C.S. had 350 members and contributed $2,952. Value of land and buildings, including parsonage, was $1,320,731. Total giving was $198,301.

UNIVERSITY TEMPLE, SEATTLE, WASHINGTON

Blaine letters in Methodist Archives, University of Puget Sound, Tacoma, Wash.

E. Howell, Northwest. 1966.

Journals of the Oregon, Puget Sound, and Pacific Northwest Conferences.

T. D. Yarnes, Oregon. 1957.

EVERETT W. PALMER
ERLE HOWELL

WEYER MEMORIAL LIBRARY,
SEATTLE PACIFIC COLLEGE, SEATTLE, WASHINGTON

SEATTLE PACIFIC COLLEGE, Seattle, Washington, was founded in 1891 as Seattle Seminary under the auspices of the FREE METHODIST CHURCH. College courses were introduced in 1910. The first baccalaureate degrees were conferred in 1915, and a graduate school was added in 1951. Full regional accreditation was received in 1936 and national accreditation at both the graduate and undergraduate levels in 1965. The main campus with nineteen major buildings is on the north slope of Queen Anne Hill in SEATTLE. The marine campus of more than 100 acres and thirty-two buildings is on Whidbey Island.

Seattle Pacific College affirms its position within the historical stream of Christian thought and practice. It maintains that education should lead to the transformation of the individual through faith in Jesus Christ, fulfilling the purpose of God in the fullest development of the individual personality. It contends that piety is no substitute for academic excellence but that excellence should advance equally on both levels.

Enrollment is about 3,000.

BYRON S. LAMSON

SECRETARIES, COUNCIL OF, was brought into existence in 1940 at the first meeting of the GENERAL CONFERENCE of The Methodist Church following the Uniting Conference. Its chief responsibility was to "promote the education and enlistment of the whole Church in its program of General Benevolences" (Discipline, 1940, Paragraph 843). The Secretaries in question were the executives of the general boards and AGENCIES of The Methodist Church, with special reference to those whose entire support depended upon the general benevolences of the Church. This Council of Secretaries as organized was directed to meet, to educate, and to enlist the Church in its total benevolence giving. The Secretaries were also to "coordinate their educational and promotional activities in order to avoid duplication" (Ibid., Paragraph 844).

As time went on, the Council of Secretaries itself found that in order to correlate better the work of the various agencies, there should be a careful study made of all the responsibilities in this field held by the several agencies, and also of their relation to each other. As a result of this, a study commission was appointed by the 1948 General Conference which reported at the 1952 General Conference and made many recommendations for the better organization—in some cases a rather thorough reorganization—of the boards and agencies of the Church. The 1952 Conference removed from the Council of Secretaries the responsibility for promoting World Service, and created a new Commission on Promotion and Cultivation to take this over. This represented a change from what had been during the first twelve years of the life of the Council of Secretaries, for the Promotion of World Service then was its major theme. Beginning in 1952, however, the emphasis upon the task of the Council of Secretaries as outlined by the Discipline was "to consider matters of common interest and cooperation among the several general boards and agencies of the church." It was to "report annually to the Council of Bishops and to the Council on World Service and Finance" (Discipline, 1952, Paragraph 1598).

Pursuant to this, the Council of Secretaries during the last years of The Methodist Church, became a strong executive body. It had much to do with planning ahead the general program of the Church, and was thought by many to exert more power than the COUNCIL OF BISHOPS in directing such ongoing program. Men of commanding leadership were usually elected to be executives in the different boards and agencies, and these men together exerted great influence, especially when their collective will and judgment was expressed in matters having to do with the ongoing of the Church.

In The United Methodist Church, the Council of Secretaries was continued by the Uniting Conference of 1968, but as was the case with other promotional agencies of the former Methodist Church, these in The United Methodist Church were largely pulled into the orbit of the PROGRAM COUNCIL, which itself is a new organization in American Methodism. The exact function of the Council of Secretaries under and in the work of the Program Council in The United Methodist Church has not as yet been clearly defined. The general purpose, however, of this organization remains what it has been all along—a general supervisory relationship to the program of each agency and board, and their cooperation in the life of the general church itself.

Disciplines, TMC, 1940-64; UMC, 1968. Paragraph 1413

N. B. H.

SEDER, CHRISTIAN LEWIS (1830-1862), American Evangelical minister and casualty of an Indian massacre, was born July 29, 1830, in Hanover, GERMANY. At age sixteen he migrated to WISCONSIN in the United States and joined the Fox River Mission in 1854. The spirit of the founders in planting the EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION from east to west, was still remarkably evident. Lewis Seder caught this spirit when he traveled with the Wisconsin circuit riders to the ILLINOIS CONFERENCE in 1856, received his license to preach, witnessed the organization of the Wisconsin Conference, and immediate action to establish a mission in MINNESOTA.

When the move was made in 1860 to form a conference out of the growing fields in Minnesota and those in IOWA, Seder volunteered for service among the frontiersmen of this new venture. In 1862 he was appointed to New Ulm, a newly established mission along the Minnesota River. Sunday, August 17, was a joyous day with his congregations near Redwood Falls beyond the Sioux Agency. However a warning reached them of an impending outbreak of the Sioux, whose savage instinct had been aroused by the laxity of government agents in fulfilling agreements. "Monday morning, August 18, massacres were begun at the Sioux Agency, murdering and destroying everything as they went." Seder headed a "mournful procession" of his congregation toward Ft. Ridgely to find refuge.

That day, homeward bound, Seder was fired upon by an Indian rebel, his dying body thrown out and his conveyance driven away. So he died Aug. 18, 1862 and became much more famous in the church as a martyr than he had been as a circuit rider.

The Evangelical Messenger, Vol. 15, 1862.

G. Fritsche, Die Evangelische Gemeinschaft in Wisconsin, 1840-1920. Published by Wisconsin Conference, n.d.

A. Stapleton, Evangelical Association. 1896.

—, Flashlights. 1908.

Albert H. Utzinger, History of the Minnesota Conference, Evangelical Association. Cleveland, O.: Evangelical Press, 1922.

ROY B. LEEDY

SEDDON, NATHAN RICHARD (1901-1950), NEW ZEALAND layman, was born and educated in Wellington. As a young man he entered the hardware trade and in 1932 purchased a hardware business of his own. He stood unsuccessfully for the Wellington mayoralty (1947) and as a Labour candidate for Parliament (1949). He became a member of the Wellington Education Board, and after a time, its chairman. He was also a member of the boards of governors of both Wellington College and Wellington Technical College.

An enthusiastic Bible class leader, he served for a number of years on the national executive of the Bible Class Movement, for a time serving as secretary, then as president. He was a regular representative to the annual Methodist conference and was frequently consulted about policy matters. He was also deeply interested in Y.M.C.A. work.

The New Zealand Methodist Times, July 1, 1950.

L. R. M. GILMORE

SEE, A. N. (1840-1925), American pioneer preacher and one of the presiding elders at the beginning of the NORTHWEST KANSAS CONFERENCE in 1882, was born in Chautauqua County, N. Y., on June 28, 1840. His higher education consisted of rather brief periods at ALLEGHENY COLLEGE and CORNELL COLLEGE. He served in the Union Army and later taught school under the Freedmen's Bureau when he joined the GEORGIA CONFERENCE (ME) in 1867.

He married Cynthia Northrup on Nov. 18, 1863. They had one son, James N. See. His first wife died in 1902 and he remarried in 1913.

This colorful figure served in the UPPER IOWA CONFERENCE and in the KANSAS CONFERENCE before the founding of the Northwest Kansas Conference. Thrice a presiding elder, he wrote, printed and bound his Autobiography as he neared the end of his long life. This salty account gives the flavor of an era as well as insight into its author. He sums up his travels on the Ellsworth District (1901-07) as 100,000 miles in six years—75,000 by rails and 25,000 by private conveyance.

He died at Ransom, Kan., and was buried in Salina.

Minutes of the Northwest Kansas Conference. 1925.

Oakley Graphic, Jan. 12, 1967.

A. N. See, Autobiography. N.p., 1919-21. INA TURNER GRAY

SEIDENSPINNER, CLARENCE ALFRED (1904-1967), American pastor, lecturer, and authority upon worship, was born on Feb. 15, 1904, at Kiel, Wis., the son of Alfred and Elsie (Shultz) Seidenspinner. He married Dorothy Benallack on June 11, 1927, and their children were Gilbert and Roberta. He received the B.S. degree from NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY in 1925, the B.D. from GARRETT BIBLICAL INSTITUTE in 1928, and the D.D. from LAWRENCE COLLEGE in 1943.

Joining the WISCONSIN CONFERENCE, he served at Oconomowoc, 1929; Ripon, 1937; and then went to the First Church, Racine, Wis., where he continued as pastor from 1940 until his death in 1967. He was a member of the Committee on Ministerial Qualifications and of the Board of Education of his Conference. His special field was literature and worship, and he was a special lecturer in contemporary literature and worship at Garrett Theological Seminary. He was called into consultative service by the Commission on WORSHIP of The Methodist Church a number of times, and wrote Form and Freedom in Worship, 1940; Our Duelling Place, 1940; Great Protestant Festivals, 1952; Give God a Chance, 1953; Progress Through Prayer, 1955; and A Protestant Primer, 1947. He served for twelve years as chairman of the Commission on WORLD SERVICE AND FINANCE for his conference. He contributed to The Christian Century, The Christian Advocate, and various religious publications and became quite well known as an authority on church worship. He died in Racine, Wis. on Sept. 15, 1967.

C. T. Howell, Prominent Personalities. 1945.

N. B. H.

SELBY, JAMES ALFRED (1865-1940), American minister, was born near Easton, W. Va., the son of William and Sophia Selby. He was graduated from WESTMINSTER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY in 1889 and was ordained a minister of the WEST VIRGINIA CONFERENCE of the M.P. Church. Greenville College in Tennessee conferred on him the D.D. degree in 1904.

He served for sixteen years as pastor in the Muskingum Conference in OHIO, having successively served Wellsville, Cambridge and Mt. Vernon, Ohio. While pastor at Mt. Vernon he was elected president of the Conference. At the close of this term he returned to the West Virginia Conference and served Bethany Church, Parkersburg, until he was again elected president of the Conference. He was elected to ten sessions of the GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M.P. Church, was a member of the Board of Home Missions, and a member of the Executive Committee of the General Conference. He remained in the active ministry until 1939 and died in Parkersburg, W. Va., Dec. 2, 1940.

FRANK L. SHAFFER

C. C. SELCMAN

SELCMAN, CHARLES CLAUDE (1874-1958), American bishop and author, was born Oct. 13, 1874, in Savannah, Mo., and died March 27, 1958, in Dallas, Texas, where he was buried. He was the son of Isaac Henry and Josephine Smith Selcman. His educational training was at CENTRAL COLLEGE, Fayette, Mo., from which he also held honorary degrees, as well as from the University of Southern California and KENTUCKY WESLEYAN. The LL.D. degree was conferred upon him by Austin College, Sherman, Texas (1924). CENTENARY COLLEGE in Shreveport, La. (1923); Baylor University at Waco, Texas (1933); SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIVERSITY (1939).

Upon entering the ministry he was on rural charges for four years, including social service work at Kingdom House in St. Louis, Mo., and later in New Orleans. He was pastor of Trinity Auditorium, an institutional church in Los Angeles, Calif. (1913-1920), First Methodist, Dallas, Texas (1920-1923). In 1918 he served with the Y.M.C.A. in the United States, England, and France, during World War I. In 1923 he became President of Southern Methodist University, which place he held until he was elected bishop in 1935.

On April 27, 1899, he was married to Bessie Kyle Beckner, who died in 1944. To that union were born two children, Francis A. Selcman and Sarah Josephine (Mrs. D. W. Forbes). He later married Mrs. Mabel White Mason of California.

The GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1922 established a General Board of HOSPITALS AND HOMES, and elected Selcman secretary. Soon afterwards he founded the Golden Cross Society, a church-wide movement for work of the church's healing ministry. The Methodist Hospital in Dallas was the birthplace of that society.

For the first six years of his service in the episcopacy, Bishop Selcman was in charge of the work of OKLAHOMA and ARKANSAS, and later in North Texas. In addition to the oversight of his episcopal area, he served as president of the General Board of EVANGELISM of The Methodist Church, to which he gave wide and creative leadership.

Bishop Selcman was Field Secretary of the War Work Commission of the M.E. Church, South (1918); a delegate to the World Conference on Faith and Order at Lausanne, Switzerland (1927), and in Edinburgh, Scotland (1937). In 1933 he was elected by the five Texas Conferences to plan for the 100th anniversary of Texas Methodism (1936). He was a member of Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity; a 33d degree Mason and Red Crown of Constantine.

He was author of the following volumes: Christ or Chaos (1923); The Challenge of Citizenship (1933); Methodist Primer (1947, revised in 1953); Christian Nurture in the Home (1948); The Methodist First Reader (1956).

C. T. Howell, Prominent Personalities. 1945.

Journal of the North Texas Conference, 1958.

Who's Who in America.

Mrs. JOHN H. WARNICK

SELF, DAVID WILSON (1919-), American layman and educator, was born in Leighton, Ala., Oct. 10, 1919, to James T. and Lucy (Childers) Self. He received the B.S. (1942) and M.A. (1946) degrees from the University of Alabama and the Ed.D. degree (1965) from Columbia University. He was married to Helen Frances Huckabee, March 15, 1944.

For a year Mr. Self served as teacher and athletic coach, Brookwood, Ala. He was assistant principal, Greenville (Ala.) High School, 1947-49; principal, Frisco City (Ala.) High School, 1949-50; principal, Greenville High School, 1950-55; superintendent, Butler County (Ala.) Schools, 1955-58; superintendent, Phoenix City (Ala.) Schools, 1958-65, and Associate Professor of School Administration, University of Alabama, 1965-69. He has continued as General Secretary of the General Board of the LAITY, United Methodist Church, since 1969.

Mr. Self served as Conference Director, METHODIST MEN, 1957-64; member, General Board of Education, 1962-68 and secretary of the Division of Local Church, 1964-68; chairman, ALABAMA-WEST FLORIDA CONFERENCE Board of Education, 1964-68; delegate to GENERAL and JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCES, 1964.

Who's Who in The Methodist Church, 1966.

JOHN H. NESS, JR.

SELINA, COUNTESS OF HUNTINGDON. (See HUNTINGDON, COUNTESS OF.)

SELLEW, WALTER ASHBELL (1844-1929), American pastor, educator and bishop of the FREE METHODIST CHURCH, was born of Quaker parentage, at Gowanda, N. Y. He spent two years in Oberlin College when Charles G. Finney was president, and was graduated at Dartmouth, A.B., 1866; M.A. 1869. Converted in his senior year, he joined the Presbyterian Church, and later the Free Methodist Church. After studying law a year, he entered the ministry. He was principal of SPRING ARBOR SEMINARY in MICHIGAN. He founded Gerry Seminary, GERRY, N.Y., in 1884, serving as its principal. He spent ten years as pastor and district elder in New York and Pennsylvania.

In 1895 he was elected bishop and served eight consecutive terms until his death in 1929. He was instrumental in founding the Old People's Home in Gerry, N. Y., and served as president of the General Missionary

Board for many years. He was the author of Clara Lef-fingwell, A Missionary, and The Obligations of Civilization to Christianity. He was an able administrator and preacher extraordinary, and one of the best known and loved leaders of his church.

BYRON S. LAMSON

SELLON, WALTER (1715-1792), British Anglican, a protégé of the COUNTESS OF HUNTINGDON, and for a time vicar of Ashby-de-la-Zouch, was one of JOHN WESLEY's principal supporters in the Calvinistic controversy of 1770 onward, along with JOHN FLETCHER and THOMAS OLIVERS. He had made a special study of John Goodwin's Arminian writings, and answered both AUGUSTUS TOPLADY and Elisha Coles. His last parish was at Ledsham, Yorkshire.

A. SKEVINGTON WOOD

SELLS, JAMES WILLIAM (1897-), American minister and church official, was born at Atchison, Kan., June 27, 1897, son of James LeGrande and Clara (Hull) Sells.

He was graduated with the A.B. degree from MILLSAPS COLLEGE in 1929. LAGRANGE COLLEGE awarded him the LL.D. degree in 1955, and EMORY UNIVERSITY awarded him the D.D. degree in 1964.

In 1925 he was admitted on trial into the MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE, M.E. Church, South. He was received in full connection and ordained DEACON in 1927, and was ordained ELDER in 1929.

He served as supply pastor in Taylorsville, 1920-21; Georgetown, 1921-23; Pascagoula, 1925-29; Summit, 1929-30; Ocean Springs, 1930-32; Forest, 1932-36; Court Street Church, Hattiesburg, 1936-40; Crystal Springs, 1940-44 (all in Mississippi).

He was field secretary of Whitworth-Millsaps College, 1930; executive secretary, SEASHORE METHODIST ASSEMBLY, Biloxi, Miss., 1930-32, and of Mississippi Rural Life Council, JACKSON, 1945. In the period 1945-52, he was extension secretary of the SOUTHEASTERN JURISDICTIONAL Council, ATLANTA, Ga., and in 1952 was made executive secretary of that Council.

In 1945 he became director of the Joint Radio Committee and director and producer of the Methodist Series, the Protestant Hour, Atlanta. In 1947 he was secretary of the National Methodist Rural Life Conference, Lincoln, Nebr. He has since 1959 been executive director of the Institute of Communicative Arts, Atlanta. He served as director of the Protestant Radio and Television Center, Atlanta, and of the Hinton Rural Life Center, Inc., Hayesville, N. C. He served with the United States Navy, 1917-18. Since 1944 he has been Rural Church Editor of the Progressive Farmer Magazine.

On Jan. 21, 1921, he was married to Vera Maude Britt. They had a daughter, Shirley Jeanne (Mrs. Robert Adams), deceased 1955.

A luncheon was given by the Southeastern Jurisdictional Council on Oct. 20, 1970 honoring Dr. and Mrs. Sells for "a quarter of a century of service" with all the episcopal leaders of the Southern Conferences and many others present.

Who's Who in The Methodist Church, 1966. J. MARVIN RAST

SELMA, ALABAMA, U.S.A. Methodist Children's Home, a multiple service agency of the NORTH ALABAMA and ALABAMA-WEST FLORIDA CONFERENCES of The United Methodist Church, is a home for orphans which was authorized by resolutions passed in regular sessions of the North Alabama and Alabama Conferences of the then M.E. Church, South, in 1889. Alabama Methodist Orphanage was in consequence opened in Summerfield, Ala., and the first child was admitted in September 1890. The orphanage was chartered and its board of directors incorporated by act of the ALABAMA legislature in February 1891.

To expand its facilities, the orphanage moved to Selma in 1911, having purchased the building and grounds of Selma Military Institute. Additional property was purchased in the 1920's to permit further expansion.

As the years passed, changing concepts in child welfare revealed the needs of neglected children from homes broken by desertion, crime, illness, and poverty. Responding to changing needs the orphanage in 1939 became the Methodist Children's Home, and directors and staff envisioned a broader concept of care for homeless children.

From this vision came the first Methodist Children's Village in the South—ten handsome, commodious, brick cottages constructed from 1948-51. Each cottage is "home" to ten or twelve children who live there with a housemother. Life in the cottages is as nearly like normal family life as possible. To become involved in community life, the children attend the Selma schools where they participate in campus activities. They also attend Sunday school and worship services in Selma United Methodist churches.

The Home's multiple service program encompasses group care of the Children's Village; foster homes which accommodate pre-school age children, and youngsters with special needs; Family Aid which provides limited financial assistance in special cases; and scholarships (made possible by a Living Memorial Fund) for worthy students to attend college or vocational schools.

Max E. Livingston, The Methodist Children's Home—Pioneer and Leader in Services to Children. Pamphlet, 1955.

RICHARD I. KIRKLAND

SEMINARIO CESAR DACORSO FILHO, Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. This recently founded Bible school is located on the campus of COLEGIO BENNETT, and its purpose is to prepare lay preachers of the First Region of the Methodist Church of BRAZIL. Originally called the "Asbury Institute," and founded in 1960, the name was changed in 1966 to honor the first Brazilian bishop by that name, who died that year. The director is Fred Maitland.

WILLIAM R. SCHISLER, JR.

SENEY, GEORGE INGRAHAM (1826-1893), American banker and philanthropist, son of Robert and Jane (Ingraham) Seney, was born May 12, 1826, at Astoria, N.Y. He was educated at WESLEYAN and New York Universities, graduating from the latter. His father, a Methodist preacher who had graduated at Columbia College, desired a college education for his son and sent him to Wesleyan University, but financial circumstances compelled a change to a local university. Seney's first position was that of paying teller in the Metropolitan Bank, NEW YORK. His ability was quickly recognized and he soon rose to its presidency. He took an important part in railroad financing, particularly of the Nickel Plate and the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia lines. During the Grant-Ward episode in Wall Street in 1884, the bank was forced to close its doors. Seney turned over to the bank his personal fortune, costly residence and art collection so that the bank's depositors were paid in full. He later retrieved the larger part of his fortune.

JAMES M. BUCKLEY said that Seney's philanthropies began long before he was wealthy, for as a young man with an income of less than $5,000 a year, he then gave away more than one-fifth of it annually. Among his larger gifts were the following: Wesleyan University, $500,000; ENORY COLLEGE, $100,000; WESLEYAN FEMALE COLLEGE of Macon, Ga., $250,000 for its main building and for the LOVICK PIERCE Professorship; BROOKLYN METHODIST HOSPITAL, $410,000 toward its founding; Long Island Historical Society, $100,000; Mamaroneck Methodist Church, $75,000; Metropolitan Art Museum, numerous paintings and art treasures under the guidance of Samuel Putnam Avery. During his lifetime, his gifts are estimated at more than $2,000,000.

Seney was a trustee of the Metropolitan Art Museum, of Wesleyan University, and was one of the Managers of the M.E. Board of Missions. In 1890, he headed the subscription list for erection of the Washington Memorial Arch. In 1849, he was married to Phoebe Moser, of a well known Brooklyn family. To them were born three sons and six daughters.

Seney died April 7, 1893 in New York City.

Dictionary of American Biography. HENRY L. LAMBDIN

SEOUL, Korea, a city of over 4,000,000, is the capital and largest city in South KOREA. It is the intellectual, political, commercial, and social center of the country.

Methodists cooperate with other agencies in the Christian Literature Society, which publishes and distributes much of the literature used in Protestant churches and schools in Korea; in the Korean National Christian Council, and in the Committee on Mass Communications, as well as the Korea Bible Society.

Among the Methodist institutions in Seoul are the Tai Wha Christian Community Center, which was organized in 1919; Wyatt Baby Fold, which was opened in 1953; Home of Peaceful Rest, for retired women Christian workers, which was established in 1948; Jensen Memorial Student Center, opened in 1960; and Angels Haven, a home for 138 boys picked up off the streets of Seoul.

Ewha Girls' Junior and Senior High School was established in 1886 as the first school for girls in Korea. The present enrolment is 3,680. EWHA UNIVERSITY grew from this school and is now on a separate campus.

Pai Chai High School, Korea's pioneer school in modern education, had its beginning in a class in English started by HENRY C. APPENZELER in August 1885. In June 1886, the King of Korea recognized the school by naming it Pai Chai Hak Dang, or Hall for Training Useful Men. Being the first attempt to teach the common branches of learning instead of Chinese classics, it is recognized as the beginning of modern education in Korea. In 1887 Pai Chai Hall, a one-story brick building, became the first foreign style school building in Korea. Pai Chai's English language trained students were in such great demand in the government and business world as interpreters, teachers, and writers, that it was not until 1908 that a class was graduated. Among the many outstanding leaders to come from the school was Syngman Rhee, first President of the Republic of Korea. Among successors to Appenzeller were D. A. Bunker, Hugh H. Cynn, and Henry D. Appenzeller, son of the founder. Ranking among the foremost of Korea's high schools, the junior and senior schools enroll nearly 3,000 boys.

Pai Wha Girls' High School was founded in 1898 by the Woman's Missionary Council of the M.E. Church, South. The present enrolment is 2,386.

Methodist Theological Seminary resulted as a merger in 1929 of the Union Methodist Theological Seminary and the Union Methodist Bible Training School, projects

BISHOP HERBERT WELCH MEMORIAL CHAPEL, THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, SEOUL, KOREA

METHODIST CHURCH,
WEST DISTRICT, SEOUL, KOREA

of both the M.E. and M.E. Church, South. The seminary received its charter as a four-year college in the spring of 1959. Present enrollment is 163.

YONSEI UNIVERSITY is supported by The United Methodist Church in cooperation with other Boards. SEVERANCE HOSPITAL, recognized in 1905, has been rebuilt on the Yonsei University campus with funds from The United Methodist Church and other cooperating agencies.

Among the new outreaches of the church in Seoul is that of providing two full-time Christian women workers and a half-time minister to work with patients in the government hospital which is affiliated with Seoul National University. Another area is concern for Christian witness among prisoners in the police stations and in government reformatories. Another outreach is the Service Men's Center.

Project Handbook: Overseas Missions, 1969.

CHARLES A. SAUER

SESQUICENTENNIAL OF AMERICAN METHODISM.

Definite plans for the Sesquicentennial Celebration of 1934 began officially as early as 1928. At this time Methodist branches elected Commissions to plan for the observance. A joint Commission was then formed, made up of representatives of the M.P., M.E., South, and M.E. Churches.

The officers of the Joint Commission which developed the program for the Celebration in BALTIMORE, Md., Oct. 10-14, 1934, as published in the souvenir booklet were: Chairman—Bishop EDWIN H. HUGHES, Washington, D.C. (M.E.); First Vice President—Hon. D. C. Roper, Washington, D.C. (M.E., South); Second Vice President—John H. Baker, Baltimore, Md. (M.P.); Secretary—Alfred H. Backus, Indianapolis, Ind. (M.E.); Assistant Secretary—NOLAN B. HARMON, Jr., Baltimore, Md. (M.E., South); and Treasurer—John H. Race, New York, N.Y. (M.E.). There were also various Commission members representing the M.E., the PRIMITIVE METHODIST, the M.E., South, the M.P., and the FREE METHODIST Churches.

The Celebration in Baltimore brought a multitude of delegates and visitors together for a five-day observance. This was not only significant in recognizing 150 years of American Methodism, but was also unique in the bearing which the observance had upon the proposed union of three branches of Methodism. In addition to the central celebration at Baltimore, annual conferences and local churches observed the Sesquicentennial. All through the churches there were indications of hope that in the plan and program of the observances, there might be, as a practical result, a union of American Methodists by at least the year 1944. Was it a matter of coincidence that the Sesquicentennial observance occurred as the Commissioners of three branches of American Methodism were developing a PLAN OF UNION?

The 150th anniversary celebration began in Baltimore, Md., on Wednesday morning, Oct. 10, 1934, with a Communion Service in the Scottish Rite Temple. Addresses of welcome were given by Albert C. Ritchie, Governor of Maryland; Howard W. Jackson, Mayor of Baltimore; and Ross W. Sanderson, Federation of Churches of Baltimore.

Thursday was designated as "One Day Union" with Bishop WILLIAM F. McDOWELL, presiding. Addresses were given by Bishops JOHN M. MOORE and FREDERICK D. LEETE. A union meeting was held of the Boards of Bishops and GENERAL CONFERENCE Executives of the M.P. Church with Bishop EDWIN H. HUGHES presiding. T. Albert Moore from the United Church of Canada was present. Others who participated in this historic day of observance included JOHN C. BROOMFIELD, T. FERRIER HULME of England, JOHN R. MOTT, Bishop EDWIN D. MOUZON, and S. PARKES CADMAN, who gave the evening address entitled "United Methodism in Protestantism."

Friday saw a three-fold program in separate sessions for delegates, women, and young people. The delegates' meeting saw Hon. Daniel C. Roper presiding in the morning and Bishop John M. Moore in the afternoon. Various areas of Methodist interest and influence were presented by outstanding personalities. Areas such as journalism, education, social contributions, and theology were subjects of addresses. The evening was climaxed by the historical pageant entitled "The Spreading Flame," written and directed by Harold A. Ehrensperger. The pageant was repeated on Saturday afternoon and evening.

Saturday morning the delegates met for an "Evangelistic Session" with Bishop Frederick D. Leete, presiding. Addresses were given by CLOVIS C. CHAPPELL and MERTON S. RICE. Probably one of the most significant presentations of the Celebration was the summary by Bishop Edwin H. Hughes, entitled "The Past and Future of Methodism."

Saturday afternoon a pilgrimage was conducted to Sam's Creek, Carroll County, Md., made famous by the early ministry of ROBERT STRAWBRIDGE. Here a dedicatory service was held, addressed by T. Ferrier Hulme. A memorial was unveiled at this historic site by Mrs. Laura Dempster Gronmeyer, great-granddaughter of Robert Strawbridge, commemorating the 150th anniversary of the organization of the M.E. Church in America.

The closing day, Sunday, found "preaching in all churches (Methodist) by bishops and delegates at both morning and evening services." A nation-wide broadcast at 3:00 p.m. was a truly historic climax.

Before the Celebration closed, a resolution was adopted by the delegates which read, "We desire to say to the Methodists of our land that the time has fully come for us to move forward in one body. Only so shall we keep faith with our fathers, and only so can we keep faith with our children." The Sesquicentennial was more than an observance of past history. It forecast the future!

JOHN HOON

SESSIONS, CLEO CARL (1909-), American pastor, educator, and administrator, was born at Altus, Okla., May 23, 1909, the son of Don E. and Ada (Harvey) Sessions. He was educated at SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIVERSITY receiving the B.S., B.D. and J.D. degrees, and TEXAS WESLEYAN COLLEGE gave him the D.D. degree in 1954. His wife was Maurine Doughty, whom he married on June 5, 1932. He joined the CENTRAL TEXAS CONFERENCE in 1936 and for the next few years served a number of pastorates, including Herring Avenue Church, Waco, 1944-48; Central Church, Brownwood, 1948-51; and then for six years was superintendent of the Gatesville District. He became pastor of the Central Church, Fort Worth, 1957-60, and then the superintendent of the Cleburne District in the Central Texas Conference in 1960. He has been a member of the GENERAL CONFERENCES of 1956 and 1964 and of the JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCE, 1956, '60, and '64. He was appointed a trustee of Harris Hospital, Fort Worth in 1964 and of Southern Methodist University in 1960. In 1966 he was sent to the large Polytechnic Methodist Church, which has a close relationship to Texas Wesleyan College nearby.

Who's Who in The Methodist Church, 1966.

SEVEN GOLDEN CANDLESTICKS is a name in China mission work that originated in 1869 following a dramatic ordination service in Foochow, conducted by Bishop CALVIN KINGSLEY. Various annual conferences in the United States had then agreed to accept seven qualified Chinese pastors of the Foochow area as "ministers in absentia" and had authorized their ordination, four as both DEACONS and ELDERS, and three as deacons.

Mrs. Stephen L. Baldwin, in describing them in The Missionary Advocate of September 1870, called them the "Seven Golden Candlesticks," and that name stuck. In 1877 Bishop ISAAC W. WILEY organized the Foochow Annual Conference, and six of them were all transferred in, to become charter members of the new conference. (Lin Ching-ting had died the preceding May.)

The four elders were the Confucian scholar Sia Sek-ong, the two Hu brothers, Hu Yong-mi and Hu Bo-mi, and Lin Ching-ting. Sia became the leading preacher of the Conference and was the delegate to the 1880 GENERAL CONFERENCE. He refused to take any mission subsidy on his salary, so that non-Christians could not accuse him of "preaching for rice." Hu Yong-mi had already suffered much for his faith, when as pastor of the East Street Church in 1864, a mob had torn down the building, beaten him, insulted his wife and sister, and destroyed all their furniture. Mrs. Baldwin said of him, "His sermons, especially since his ordination, when he seemed to receive a fresh baptism of the Spirit, have been full of power." Lin, the only Hinghwa-speaking man of the seven, had been an opium smoker and "a partaker in every kind of sin." Mrs. Baldwin wrote, "Bold, eloquent, and full of zeal, yet hasty, impulsive and determined, we have been wont to call him our Peter, as we have termed Hu Yong-mi and Sia Sek-ong our beloved Johns." He, too, had seen persecution; at one time he received a thousand stripes on his bare back.

The three deacons were Li Yu-mi, a converted blacksmith, who used to keep his Bible open beside his anvil and study it between strokes; Hu Sing-mi, a younger brother of the two Hus who had already had an opportunity to study in America; and Yeh Ing-guang, who as a poor boy, almost a beggar, had been admitted to the mission boarding school, and after graduation had become a preacher.

The children and grandchildren of these seven continued the ministry handed down to them. Hu King-eng, daughter of Hu Yong-mi, became the first woman doctor in the Foochow area, serving in the mission hospital for women until the Nationalist riots of 1927. Other members of the Hu family to serve the church were Hu Sie-guang, for many years the treasurer and bookkeeper of the mission, and Dr. Doris Hsu, professor in Hwanan College and more recently in NEBRASKA WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY. Lin T'ien-ho, grandson of Lin Ching-ting, has been for forty years field secretary of the AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY and the China Bible House.

W. C. Barclay, History of Missions. 1957.

W. N. Lacy, China. 1948.

FRANCIS P. JONES

SEVERANCE UNION MEDICAL COLLEGE and HOSPITAL, Seoul, Korea, derived its name from the L. H. Severance family of Cleveland, Ohio, as they donated funds to erect the first modern hospital in KOREA under the direction of a Presbyterian missionary, O. R. Avison. This hospital (1904) and the medical college (1906) has gained the support of all Presbyterian and Methodist mission bodies working in Korea.

During the Korean War, buildings and equipment were more than eighty percent destroyed. Some of the buildings were rehabilitated under grants from the United Board of Christian Higher Education in Asia, and from various mission boards. However the need for a larger site led to the development of a new medical center on the Yonsei University campus. (See YONSEI UNIVERSITY.)

CHARLES A. SAUER

SEWARD, WILLIAM (1702-1740), the first Methodist preacher to die at the hands of a mob, came from a wealthy family from Badsey, Worcestershire. One brother, Thomas, was an Anglican clergyman; another, Benjamin, became a Methodist. After ten years' work for LONDON charity schools, in 1738 William was converted by the preaching of CHARLES WESLEY, from whom he was later estranged by his zeal for Calvinism. William accompanied GEORGE WHITEFIELD to GEORGIA in 1739, returning to Britain in 1740 to raise funds for the Orphan House. While on a tour of South Wales with HOWELL HARRIS, he was roughly handled by mobs at Newport, Carleon and Monmouth, and was partially blinded. On Oct. 22, 1740, while preaching at Hay, he received a fatal blow on the head from a large stone. He is buried at Cusop, close by.

Wesley Historical Society, Proceedings, xvii.

JOHN A. VICKERS

SEWARD, ALASKA, U.S.A. Jesse Lee Home. The WOMAN'S HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY of the M.E. Church acquired land and contracted with Sheldon Jackson, the Government Agent for Education in ALASKA, to build an Industrial Home and School as early as 1890, but the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1892 closed all Methodist work in Alaska.

Jesse Lee Home had its real beginning in Unalaska, Alaska in 1895, when Agnes Louisa Soule, a granddaughter of Bishop JOSHUA SOULE, arrived there, the first woman missionary to be sent to Alaska by the Woman's Home Missionary Society.

Miss Soule was to teach in the government school but immediately found need to make a home for some fifteen girls. The next year upon her appeal the Society in VERMONT sent her a helper and they made a home for thirty girls.

In 1898 she returned to Vermont on furlough and was married to A. W. NEWHALL. Together they returned to Unalaska and their life work. A new building was erected, boys were admitted, and a hospital provided.

The Methodist women of Vermont named the mission "Jesse Lee Home" to honor the early New England minister and evangelist.

Due to the influenza epidemic in Nome in 1919, many homeless children became the responsibility of the Methodist Church. New buildings were necessary. The Woman's Home Missionary Society decided to build a complete new home in Seward and bring all the children there. Newhall finished twenty-seven years of work and went on to Point Barrow in 1925.

R. V. B. Dunlap supervised building the new home and was the first Superintendent at Seward. The two buildings were only partially completed when the children and staff from Unalaska arrived there in 1925.

Charles T. Hatten became Superintendent in 1926. The children attended public school and community activities, and in 1931 the first Jesse Lee children graduated from high school in Alaska; before this they had gone to the states for high school and further education.

Harold Newton became Superintendent in 1938. War came soon after and the children were evacuated. The army took over the buildings. After the war the home was reopened and continues to serve Alaska children.

"I lived in Jesse Lee Home," is a proud statement of Alaskans from Ketchikan to the Arctic.

Seattle Times, April 12, 1959.

CHARLES T. HATTEN

SEWELL, W. E. (1869-1941), an American missionary to CUBA, was born in Gadsden, Crockett County, Tenn., Jan. 23, 1869. His parents were Robert Allen and Nannie L. Folis Sewell. In his youth he was converted and attended HENDRIX COLLEGE in ARKANSAS. In 1890 he joined the MEMPHIS CONFERENCE and after teaching for two years in JACKSON, Tenn., he married one of his pupils, Lula Smith, 1896.

After transferring to the ARKANSAS CONFERENCE and serving there at Perryville for two years, he and his wife were accepted for missionary work in Cuba in 1898, being one of the first American missionaries at the close of the Spanish-American War. For the thirteen years that he served in Cuba he was supported by a loyal layman, a lumberman, from Hattiesburg, Miss., W. S. F. Tatum.

For health reasons he retired from Cuba and from 1913 to 1919 served three pastorates in the Memphis Conference. From 1919 to 1925 he was superintendent of Latin work in TAMPA. Transferring to FLORIDA, he served four pastorates in the FLORIDA CONFERENCE until his retirement in 1936. He died Feb. 12, 1941.

In Cuba he was noted for his personal interest in others and his name was always mentioned with devotion. It was said of him, "he always looked for the good in others."

GARFIELD EVANS

SEXSMITH, EDGAR ADGATE (1875-1959), American M.P. minister, was born in Clark County, Mo., Feb. 19, 1875. He was the son of John and Mary B. Sexsmith. After high school he attended a business college in Kahoka, Mo., and received his training for the ministry at WESTMINSTER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

He joined the North Missouri Conference after his graduation from the Seminary in 1900 and was ordained the following year. In 1907 he was transferred to the MARYLAND CONFERENCE of the M.P. Church, where he served until his retirement in 1947.

In 1923 he became secretary of the Board of Young People's Work. He was Church Extension Superintendent of the Maryland Conference, 1926-28. His pastorate at Chestertown, Md., spanned six years, 1928-34. In 1934 he was elected president of the Maryland Conference, serving until unification in 1939. He was a member of three GENERAL CONFERENCES of the M.P. Church, and was a delegate at the historic UNITING CONFERENCE held at KANSAS CITY, Mo., in 1939.

Sexsmith died in Baltimore, Md., Nov. 2, 1959.

Minutes of the Baltimore Conference, 1960. PAUL E. KEEDY

SEXTON, GEORGE SAMUEL (1867-1937), American preacher and educator, was born in Middleburg, Tenn., June 10, 1867. He was convinced at an early age that he must be a preacher, so he worked his way through college and joined the LITTLE ROCK CONFERENCE in 1887. For ten years he served churches in the Little Rock Conference; and in 1897, for reasons of health, he transferred to the NORTH TEXAS CONFERENCE, where he served with distinction for seven years. In 1904, he was transferred to the TEXAS CONFERENCE and stationed at Central Church, Galveston. In 1906, he was sent to HOUSTON, Texas, where he was instrumental in building St. Paul's Church which, in its day, was one of the finest church buildings in Methodism.

During 1910 he served as Assistant Secretary of the Board of Church Extension of the M.E. Church South. He was called from this job to act as Field Secretary of the Washington City Church Commission, which was responsible for erecting a representative Methodist church in our nation's capital. He succeeded in a wonderful way in this task, and today the great Mt. Vernon Place Church in WASHINGTON, D. C., is a monument to his labors. In 1915 Sexton transferred to the LOUISIANA CONFERENCE, where he was to achieve his greatest distinction. For five years he was pastor of the great First Church of SHREVEPORT, La., and then he was elected President of CENTENARY COLLEGE OF LOUISIANA, where he served for eleven years. When he became President of Centenary, it was a struggling little college with a student body of only forty-three students. Eleven years later it had a student body of more than 1,000, and the endowment had grown from $90,000 to nearly $2,000,000. His wide service received the recognition it merited in honorary degrees conferred by a number of colleges, among them being a D.D. from KENTUCKY WESLEYAN COLLEGE and the LL.D. from Centenary College and from SOUTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY of Georgetown, Texas.

After eleven very fruitful years at Centenary College, he was appointed the presiding elder of the Shreveport District of Louisiana Conference, in which office he served four years. He never lost his love for Centenary College, so after years in the presiding eldership, he was appointed Director of Public Relations for Centenary but he did not live long after this appointment. He died on July 4, 1937, before he achieved all of his dreams for Centenary College.

J. HENRY BOWDON, SR.

SEYBERT, JOHN (1791-1860), American minister and pioneer bishop of the EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION, was born near Manheim, Pa., July 7, 1791. In 1804 his parents joined the followers of JACOB ALBRIGHT, founder of the Evangelical Association. After a remarkable conversion on June 21, 1810, John Seybert united with the Albright People at Manheim. He entered the ministry in 1820 and became an ardent builder and first bishop of the church Albright founded.

Seybert's diaries (eighteen volumes) yield these amazing figures: 175,000 miles (horseback, 1820-1842; one-horse wagon, 1843-1860); and 46,000 pastoral visits. He saw the church grow from one to eight conferences. On the eve of an epochal era of expansion in the late 1830's, he as a bachelor minister declared his desire to be found at the front. In 1838, organized missionary societies arose through his inspiration. He was president of the parent society when elected bishop in 1839. Forthwith he directed the attention of his workers to the German settlements of the Northwest Territory. With the dearth of German reading material in the west, Bishop Seybert in 1842 loaded his wagon at the publishing house in New Berlin, Pa., with an order of 23,725 volumes, charged to his account, and delivered these books to ministers in Ohio and westward.

JOHN SEYBERT

The fruitage of Seybert's labor was in evidence throughout the church in his time. From New York to Iowa his wagon carried him and his books. His journeys ended at a revival meeting appointment at a church near Flat Rock, Ohio, Jan. 4, 1860, and he was buried in the church cemetery.

R. B. Leedy, Evangelical Church in Ohio. 1959.

W. W. Orwig, Evangelical Association. 1858.

S. P. Spreng, John Seybert. 1888.

ROY B. LEEDY

SEYMOUR, CONNECTICUT, U.S.A. Seymour Church is one of the oldest congregations in America. JESSE LEE, the "Methodist Apostle to New England," received his appointment to that region at the Conference in 1789. As an itinerant, he made several stops in the town of Derby, Conn. His first visit there occurred on March 19, 1791. John and Ruth Coe of the Chusetown section of the Derby township (later to be separated from Derby and called Seymour) were eager listeners, and asked Lee to preach in their community. This he did nearly three months later on June 9, 1791, in the Coe home. A class was formed, and it was organized as a Society in 1797. Bishop FRANCIS ASBURY records his visit to Derby on Aug. 19, 1793.

The little society met in various homes, the Bell School, and the Congregational Church. FREEBORN CARRETTSON presided over the first QUARTERLY CONFERENCE in the Congregational Church in 1803.

After paying the sum of forty dollars, the Methodist Society took possession of the Congregational Church property in September 1818. The building was small and poorly constructed, and a new structure was erected in 1847. It was in the basement of that wooden Gothic structure that the first town meeting of Seymour, formerly Chusetown, was held on June 24, 1850. The bill in the state legislature to create Seymour as a separate town from Derby was submitted by Sylvester Smith (1807-1893). He was a local preacher and a paper manufacturer who later served as pastor of several churches in the NEW YORK EAST CONFERENCE.

Continued growth in the town and the church created the need for more space. In 1892 a large sanctuary was added to the building in the form of a modified Akron style plant. This arrangement served well, with several changes in the interior, until 1960 when an extensive renovation was undertaken. W. C. Sharpe, a member of the church and the editor of the Seymour Record, compiled the history of the church in the latter part of the nineteenth century.

W. C. Sharpe, Annals of the Seymour M. E. Church. 1885.

LOWELL B. JOHNSON

JOHN SHACKFORD

SHACKFORD, JOHN WALTER (1878-1969), American minister and General Secretary of the SUNDAY SCHOOL Board, M. E. Church, South, was born Jan. 10, 1878 at Walkerton, Va. Educated at RANDOLPH-MACON COLLEGE (A.B. with Phi Beta Kappa, 1900), and VANDERBILT (B.D., 1903), he was awarded the honorary D.D. by the former institution in 1912. After working three years with the Board of Missions in NASHVILLE, Shackford served nine years as a pastor in VIRGINIA, including Broad Street Church, RICHMOND (1913-15). In 1915 he became superintendent of teacher training in the General Sunday School Board at Nashville, and at the 1922 GENERAL CONFERENCE was elected General Secretary of that Board. In 1930 when the General Conference largely on his recommendation merged the EPWORTH LEAGUE, EDUCATION, and Sunday School Boards to form the General Board of Education with three divisions, Shackford, believing the top offices should go to new men, returned to the pastorate.

During the next fifteen years he served two pastorates in NORTH CAROLINA and two in SOUTH CAROLINA and had a five-year term on the Rock Hill (S. C.) District. In 1945 he transferred to Virginia, served five years as pastor of Chestnut Avenue Church, NEWPORT NEWS, and retired in 1950 at the age of seventy-two.

Shackford was a pioneer and builder in the field of religious education. As secretary of the young people's department of the Board of Missions (1903-06), he developed a plan for a department of missionary education in that Board which was adopted by the 1906 General Conference. Soon after entering the pastorate, Shackford saw the need of a denominational program for promoting effective adult Bible study. Encouraged by the General Sunday School Board at Nashville, he drafted a plan which was adopted by the 1910 General Conference, thus creating the Wesley Bible Class movement in the church.

In his fifteen years with the General Sunday School Board Shackford furnished creative leadership when the time was ripe for noteworthy advances in the field of religious education. His intensely promoted teacher training program was widely regarded as the best in American Protestantism. He created a new set of text materials for use in the training schools, organized children's, youth, and adult divisions in the General Board at Nashville, and persuaded church colleges to establish chairs of religious education. Also, he was influential in the founding of the International Council of Religious Education.

For several years in the 1920's Shackford drew the fire of the fundamentalists from within and without his denomination. They correctly perceived that under his leadership the literature published by the General Sunday School Board was slanted away from what Shackford called "biblicism" and toward a more liberal interpretation of the Bible. Some annual conferences adopted resolutions demanding Shackford's resignation. Contrary to the advice of some church leaders who supported him, Shackford declined to try to appease his opponents. When he was re-elected General Secretary of the Sunday School Board by the 1926 General Conference, the opposition gradually faded.

Shackford's hymn, "O Thou Who Art the Shepherd," is included in the 1964 edition of The Methodist Hymnal. He published three books: The Program of the Christian Religion, 1917; Education in the Christian Religion, 1931; and Jesus and Social Redemption, 1940. He died Oct. 15, 1969, and was buried at Waynesville, N. C.

Elmore Brown, The Struggle for Trained Leaders, the Story of John W. Shackford's Early Efforts to Provide Trained Teachers in the Church. Nashville: Parthenon Press, 1966.

ALBEA GODBOLD

SHADFORD, GEORGE (1739-1816), was born near Kirtlington in Lindsey, Lincolnshire, on Jan. 19, 1739. He was the son of a shopkeeper, and as a youth joined the militia. Brought up an Anglican, he was much troubled about his spiritual life, was impressed by Methodist preaching, and converted in a farmhouse service in May 1762. He began to preach in the Epworth Circuit, and JOHN WESLEY asked him to become an itinerant in 1768. At the LEEDS Conference of 1772 he heard Captain THOMAS WEBB exhort the preachers to volunteer for service in America;

GEORGE SHADFORD

he and THOMAS RANKIN were impressed and offered to go. At the end of March 1773, John Wesley wrote to him: "The time is arrived for you to embark for America. You must go down to Bristol, where you will meet with Thomas Rankin, Captain Webb, and his wife. I let you loose, George, on the great continent of America. Publish your message in the open face of the sun, and do all the good you can." (Letters, vol. vi, p. 23.)

He travelled widely in America, preaching in NEW YORK, PHILADELPHIA and the southern states. When the War of Independence began, he decided that he must return to England, saying to Asbury, "I may have a call to go, and you to stay." He had done a great work in America, and on his return was sent to Epworth in 1778. John Wesley admired him, and he was one of the preachers named in the DEED OF DECLARATION. He superannuated in 1791, and lived for many years in Frome, in Somerset, where he died on March 11, 1816.

G. E. LONG

SHAFFER, CORNELIUS THADDEUS (1847-1919), American bishop of the A.M.E. CHURCH, was born in Troy, Ohio, on Jan. 3, 1847. He was a graduate of Berea College in KENTUCKY and held an M.D. from Jefferson Medical College in PHILADELPHIA, Pa. Shaffer was converted in 1860, licensed to preach in 1867, admitted into the Kentucky Annual Conference in 1870, ordained a DEACON in 1872 and an ELDER in 1874. He was a pastor and presiding elder in Kentucky, OHIO, NEW YORK and PENNSYLVANIA, and a General Officer (First Secretary-Treasurer of the Church Extension Society) during 1892-1900, before being elected bishop in 1900. He served in LIBERIA, West Africa, and in the western and south-western United States. In his day he was the only bishop in the denomination who was also a practicing physician.

R. R. Wright, The Bishops. 1963.

GRANT SHOCKLEY

SHAFI, ELIJAH DANIEL MOHAMMAD (1906-1965) and WINNIE M. JOHN (1906-1965). Shafi was born Aug. 14, 1906, at Ludhiana (now East Punjab, INDIA) in a Muslim Sunni family. His mother was a close friend of Edith Brown, a greatly loved missionary in the Ludhiana Christian Medical College. An earnest search for peace led him to Daniel, a Christian "Sadhu" (an itinerant evangelist). Elijah added Daniel to his own name, and wandered far and wide in India till Daniel died. Then Shafi went to the United Presbyterian Seminary in Gujranwala, Punjab (now Pakistan), graduating in 1929. He was ordained in 1932, and married Winnie M. John on Oct. 3, 1933.

From 1932 to 1942 he was in charge of the home for Muslim converts in Lahore, known as St. Andrews Brotherhood, supported by a group of Lahore Christians. From 1942 to 1962 he was pastor of Lahore Central Methodist Church, during six years of which time he was also Superintendent of Lahore District. In 1962 he was sent to Drigh Road Church, Karachi, as pastor of the Church and for part of the time also Superintendent of the Karachi District; for the last two years he was made full-time Superintendent. On Dec. 22, 1965, returning to Karachi in a car, a motor truck wrecked the car in a head-on collision, killing four of the occupants—Elijah, Winnie and her two relatives.

Elijah was scrupulously honest, courageous in upholding the right, candid in expressing his opinions. He was ministerial delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1956. That year he had one semester study time in Union Seminary, New York City. In 1961-2 a year's study in the London College of Bible and Missions, CANADA, earned for him the degree of B.R.E.

Winnie M. John, born Jan. 22, 1906, taught in Queen Mary's School, Lahore, for thirty-two years, being head of the Primary Department the last few years. She retired before he was transferred, and accompanied him to Karachi. They had five sons. Although having a full teaching load in Queen Mary's and supervising home activities, she was indefatigable in church activities, superintending district village schools, teaching a Sunday school class, pushing the adult literacy program, and president of the W.S.C.S. Both Elijah and Winnie were delegates to the CENTRAL CONFERENCE of 1956 in Lucknow. Both were also representatives of the Karachi Conference to the Methodist Consultation in Port Dickson, MALAYA in 1963. She was expecting to attend the Assembly in London in 1966 of the WORLD FEDERATION of METHODIST WOMEN. Her keen, active mind made her a leader in group discussions. Her winsome, clear speaking was persuasive. She was a devoted wife, a faithful efficient mother, an ardent worker for the Church, a devoted servant of her Lord.

CLEMENT D. ROCKEY

SHAH, YAQUB, an early minister in INDIA, was converted at Shahjahanpur at the age of eighteen. He was then totally illiterate, and almost every conceivable external obstacle to progress was piled up on the road before him. But he had a good mind and a strong body and, overcoming all obstacles, became a minister of the Methodist Church and an unusually successful pastor and evangelist. Two of his sons became ministers, one being a college graduate. A grandson, ALFRED J. SHAW, became a bishop of The United Methodist Church.

J. WASKOM PICKETT

SHANGHAI, China. Moore Memorial Methodist Church, the largest church of the denomination in CHINA, was named for a little girl whose parents gave as a memorial to her the first contribution of funds. It was for many years the center of M.E. Church, South, ministry in Shanghai.

In 1946, when SIDNEY R. ANDERSON was its last missionary director, Moore Church had 1,500 members; and the Sunday school enrolled 700 pupils in seven departments. It had a day school of 200 from the poorest sections of the city; and its seven-day-a-week program included a nursery school, a Tuesday evening Bible class, a Thursday evening Mandarin class, a summer vacation Bible school, a school for teaching literacy, summer camps and conferences, a young women's volunteer band, physical education classes, and other educational and service organizations. Built "like a Gothic church of an American city," Moore Church was considered the largest and most diversified church in the Far East. When Shanghai was taken over by the Japanese in 1941, most of the church's ministries were continued under Chinese leadership. After 1949, when the Communist government was established, the church was able to maintain some of its activities, at least until the Red Guard "cultural revolution" in 1966, when according to reports all religious activities were banned.

W. W. REID

SHANGLE, H. S. (1856-1951), American preacher of the M.E. Church, South and noted leader in the state of OREGON, was born in VIRGINIA. He grew up in east Tennessee, was educated in private schools and VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY. He joined the SOUTHWEST MISSOURI CONFERENCE of his denomination in 1882. He was married to the youngest daughter of Rev. F. M. Paine at Altus, Ark., in 1884 and transferred to Oregon in 1890, being stationed at Albany.

In the Northwest, Shangle served churches in PORTLAND, SPOKANE, and WALLA WALLA, was twenty-five years a presiding elder and eight years a college president. He served as conference secretary of education, and conference missionary secretary.

Shangle was five times elected to GENERAL CONFERENCE. After his retirement in 1938 he wrote a short history of the M.E. Church, South, in Oregon.

With Methodist Union in 1939, Shangle became a member of the OREGON CONFERENCE of The Methodist Church. He died in Portland, Aug. 6, 1951.

Minutes of the Oregon Conference.

H. S. Shangle, Historical Sketch of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South in Oregon: 1855-1939 N.p., n.d.

ERLE HOWELL

SHANNON, MARY ESTELLE (1880-), was principal of the ISABELLA THOBURN COLLEGE in LUCKNOW, 1925-39. She was born April 6, 1880, in Winfield, Iowa, was educated through high school in the academy of Cooper College, Moundsville, Mo., and to the B.A. degree level at BAKER UNIVERSITY, Baldwin, Kan. She taught for six years in Cooper Academy, and for two years in public schools in MISSOURI.

In 1909, she went to BURMA as a missionary of the Methodist WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY. There she served as principal of the Methodist Girls' High School until 1923, when she proceeded on furlough. In 1924, she obtained a Master's degree from BOSTON UNIVERSITY and was elected principal of the Woman's College, Lucknow. She was the fifth successive American Methodist to hold that office, and had it longer than any previous incumbent. Throughout her administration the college moved forward steadily, acquiring new buildings and equipment, strengthening its faculty, developing new service programs, and training Indian women. She was tall, handsome, dignified, and reserved, but gracious.

Baker University granted her the honorary LL.D. degree, and the government of India awarded her the Kaiser-i-Hind gold medal for distinguished public service. She retired from the college principalship in 1939 and from work as a Methodist missionary in 1941, but from her home in TOPEKA, Kan., she continued to serve the church in many capacities for a decade and a half. She now lives in the home for retired missionaries at Robincroft, PASADENA, Calif.

M. A. Dimmitt, Isabella Thoburn College. 1933.

J. N. Hollister, Southern Asia. 1956. J. WASKOM PICKETT

SHANNON, PAUL E. V. (1898-1957), American pastor, conference superintendent, and bishop of the E.U.B. Church, was born March 25, 1898, in Mountville, Pa., to Rev. and Mrs. A. L. Shannon, both of whom died when Paul was a young boy. After graduating from LEBANON VALLEY COLLEGE (A.B. 1918), he continued his studies in Bonebrake (now UNITED) THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, graduating with the B.D. degree. In 1937 he was honored with the D.D. degree by Lebanon Valley College.

He was married in 1919 to Josephine S. Mathias (1896-1931), and they became the parents of two children. Shannon's second marriage was to Katherine Higgins in 1932. Two children were born to this union.

Pastorates served by Shannon included: Hillsdale-Falmouth, Pa.; Veedersburg, Ind.; Fairview, Dayton, O.; Liberty Heights, BALTIMORE, Md.; Dallastown, Pa.; and First Church, YORK, Pa. Between pastorates he served as Field Representative of Bonebrake (United) Theological Seminary. From his York pastorate (1935-1948) he was elected to the superintendency of the E.U.B. PENNSYLVANIA CONFERENCE, a position he held with distinction. In connection with his pastorates and administrative positions he served on many denominational and interdenominational boards, as well as with civic groups. Fraternally he was a Royal Arch and Knight Templar Mason.

Upon the death of Bishop DAVID T. GREGORY in 1957, Shannon was chosen by mail ballot to the office of bishop, with the East Central District as his diocese.

Following his presiding over the sessions of WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA CONFERENCE in 1957, Bishop Shannon returned to his home in York, Pa., to prepare for moving to the center of his new assignment. While conducting a dedicatory service during this interim he was fatally stricken, his death occurring several days later, May 23, 1957. Interment was in the Home Cemetery, Dallastown, Pa.

Journal of the General Conference, EUB, 1958.

Minutes of the Pennsylvania Conference, EUB, 1957.

PAUL E. HOLDCRAFT

SHAPLAND, RICHARD HENRY BOWDEN (1877-1937), British Methodist minister, entered the ministry of the UNITED METHODIST FREE CHURCHES in 1900, a few years before the denomination became part of the amalgamated UNITED METHODIST CHURCH of Britain. He gained a great reputation as a pastor and a deeply thoughtful preacher, especially during fourteen years at Burton-on-Trent, and in 1929 was elected President of the United Methodist Church. He was much admired in the wider church after METHODIST UNION in 1932, but failing health compelled his retirement in 1935, followed by his death in his sixtieth year.

FRANK BAKER

SHARON, MISSISSIPPI, U.S.A., the county seat of Madison County, was in early days one of the most influential small communities in the State so far as Methodism was concerned. The Sharon Methodist Church, which gave its name to the community, was established in 1835, when Orsamus L. Nash was presiding elder of the Choctaw District and John Ira Ellis Byrd was pastor of the Madison Circuit. Dr. Birdsong Minter, a physician and local preacher, deeded to the church sixty-two acres of land for a church, cemetery, parsonage and district parsonage. This was the second Methodist parsonage in MISSISSIPPI and the first district parsonage. The town was incorporated in 1838.

Sharon Female College was established in 1837 as a union enterprise of several denominations, but by 1854 it had become a Methodist institution. Madison College was established as a school for boys in 1851 by Thomas C. Thornton, who was in his early ministry pastor of LOVELY LANE in BALTIMORE, MARYLAND. Both schools continued until some years after the Civil War. JAMES W. LAMBUTH and Bishop CHARLES B. GALLOWAY both taught in Madison College, the former shortly before going to CHINA as a missionary in 1854.

Many eminent Methodists are buried in the Sharon cemetery, including Dr. Thornton and the parents of Dr. J. M. Sullivan of MILLSAPS COLLEGE, who was for twenty-five years lay leader of the MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The present Sharon church was dedicated on May 15, 1892, by Warren C. Black. Church school rooms were added in 1951. The membership is small but the workers carry on the tradition of their fathers.

Early Methodist preachers at Sharon, in addition to J. I. E. Byrd, include WILLIAM H. WATKINS, Andrew T. M. Fly, Washington Ford, P. B. Bailey, Bradford Frazee, James MacLennan, Asbury Davidson, Frances H. McShann, J. B. Daughtry, James H. Laney, JOHN P. RICHMOND, Henderson H. Montgomery, George C. Light, James H. Merrill, Josiah M. Pugh, William M. Curtiss, and Samuel W. Speer, all these before the Civil War.

W. B. Jones, Mississippi Conference. 1951.

J. B. CAIN

SHAW, ALEXANDER PRESTON (1879-1966), was born in Abbeville, Miss., the fourth child among seven. Both his father, Duncan Preston Shaw, and his mother, Maria Petty Shaw, were former slaves and fully grown at the time of Emancipation. He was reared in a Christian home and was taught to observe the Christian virtues of honesty, truth and self-reliance and to be trustworthy at all times.

He attended, in his early boyhood, classes taught in church buildings. The equipment and instruction were both inadequate but by diligent study, under the most difficult circumstances, he obtained a primary and some grammar school training. In 1893 he entered RUST COLLEGE in the fifth grade, Rust having departments from the fifth grade through college, and here he received his A.B. degree in 1902. His professional training was received at GAMMON THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY in ATLANTA, where he received his B.D. degree in 1906. He did further study in theology at BOSTON UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY. Later in his career, Boston University gave him the honorary D.D. degree. Gammon Seminary also conferred an honorary degree upon him.

It was while at Gammon that he met Lottye B. Simon, a member of an outstanding Atlanta family, whom he married. From this union there were three sons and three daughters.

Young Shaw early felt the call to preach but hesitated to answer the call, feeling that a father and brother, Beverly, in the ministry sufficed, especially as both seemed unusually gifted. But the death of his favorite sister set him to thinking seriously about this call. He often talked about the experience that brought about his decision to preach. It seemed that this song came into his mind during the night, "Tell It Out Among the People That the Lord Is King." "He felt," he said, "that he must be a part of that telling." He was ordained a deacon at Boston University School of Theology in 1907 by Bishop GOODSELL and an elder at Warren Methodist Church, PITTSBURGH, 1910, by Bishop WARREN.

He began his public career as pastor in the WASHINGTON ANNUAL CONFERENCE. He became a full member in 1908 and served several appointments, one of which was at Winchester, Va., where the parsonage was a one and a half story building. Shaw, being six feet four inches tall, was unable to stand erect in any room on the second floor. He was transferred, after a few years, to the LITTLE ROCK CONFERENCE and served for two years as the minister of Wesley Church, LITTLE ROCK, where much of his congregation was made up of students of PHILANDER SMITH COLLEGE. After two very successful years, he was transferred to the CALIFORNIA CONFERENCE and stationed at Wesley Church, LOS ANGELES, where he had a glorious pastorate for fourteen years. In 1928 he was elected editor of the Southwestern Advocate with office in NEW ORLEANS. He served very successfully in this office for eight years. In 1936 he was elected a bishop in the M. E. Church at GENERAL CONFERENCE meeting at Columbus, Ohio. He was assigned to New Orleans area where he served for one quadrennium. In 1940 he was transferred to the BALTIMORE area where he served in an outstanding way, particularly in the field of evangelism and liquidation of mortgages on churches. He retired in 1952 but was called back into service in 1953 at the death of Bishop R. N. BROOKS and served the New Orleans area until 1956.

He wrote frequently and helpfully. Among his writings are: Christianizing Race Relations, 1928; Thy Kingdom Come—four sermons published in a brochure in 1944; a sermon, Strength Measured by Weakness in the American Pulpit Series, published by Abingdon, 1946; and two brochures, The Spirit of Abraham Lincoln and What Must the Negro Do To Be Saved. In the latter brochure he emphasized the fact that he must himself achieve and prove himself taking advantage of available opportunities; and not to depend upon special concessions. His position in this article was much commented upon. This last was published as an article in Religion In Life.

He was a man filled with "the milk of human kindness." He could sense the hurt in the human heart and there was always the sympathetic response. In the College of Bishops, as well as in the COUNCIL OF BISHOPS, he was one of the Nestors. Bishop Shaw died March 7, 1966, was buried March 12, 1966, following services in Holman Church, Los Angeles.

EDGAR A. LOVE

A. J. SHAW

SHAW, ALFRED JACOB (1906-), is the eighth bishop elected by the CENTRAL CONFERENCE OF SOUTHERN ASIA. His election took place on January 1, 1965. He is a third-generation Christian and a third-generation Methodist minister.

Bishop Shaw was born at Unao, Uttar Pradesh, INDIA, Oct. 1, 1906. His father, Samuel Jacob Shaw, was the preacher-in-charge of the Unao Circuit near North India's industrial metropolis of Kanpur; his mother was Halina (Solomon). His undergraduate studies were in the LUCKNOW CHRISTIAN COLLEGE. He obtained the M.A. degree from Lucknow University and was made a Licentiate of Teaching by the University of Allahabad. He was ordained DEACON in 1944 and ELDER in 1947 in the LUCKNOW ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

He married Evelyn Michael on April 27, 1934, and their children were Alfred Inderkumar, Renuka Evelyn (dec. 1959), and Samuel Ajitkumar.

He was an instructor in Lucknow Christian College and warden of the largest hostel (1932-1948) and principal of the Centennial Higher Secondary School (associated with the Lucknow Christian College) from 1949 to 1957. From 1946 to 1948, and from 1950 to 1962, he edited the Indian Witness, official English language weekly of the Methodist Church in India. In 1957 he became pastor of Central Methodist Church in Lucknow, one of the most influential Methodist churches in India. In 1962 he was made secretary of the Central Conference Council of Christian Education. Like three previous bishops elected from positions in Lucknow, he was assigned to the BOMBAY area.

Journals of the Lucknow Conference and the Central Conference of Southern Asia.

Who's Who in the Methodist Church, 1966.

J. WASKOM PICKETT

SHAW, ANNA HOWARD (1847-1919), ordained American M.P. minister, lecturer for the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, physician, and vigorous national leader in the woman suffrage movement, was born in Newcastle-on-Tyne, England, on Feb. 14, 1847. She came to the United States as a child and spent her early years on the MICHIGAN frontier. At the age of twenty-four she was converted to Methodism, and despite family opposition decided to become a minister, an almost unheard of vocation for women in that period. She worked her way through ALBION COLLEGE, where she graduated in 1875, and through BOSTON UNIVERSITY THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY where she was the only woman in her class, and where, although a licensed preacher, she was denied the financial exemptions accorded male students who also were licensed preachers. She then served as pastor of two MASSACHUSETTS parishes in the M.E. Church, but when that denomination refused to ordain her, Anna Shaw sought ordination in the M.P. Church, and on Oct. 12, 1880, became the first woman to be ordained in that denomination. Appalled by the sickness she observed in the Boston slums, she studied medicine at BOSTON UNIVERSITY and received an M.D. degree in 1885. She became a devoted friend of Susan B. Anthony and an active supporter of the woman's suffrage movement, to which cause she devoted her great oratorical powers. Her enthusiasm for this cause may be seen in the fact that during a two-week period in 1892 she traveled 7,000 miles and gave twenty lectures. In 1902 she succeeded Carrie Chapman Catt as president of the National American Woman Suffrage Association. She retired from this position in 1915, and during World War I served as chairman of the Women's Committee of the Council of National Defense.

Dr. Shaw was noted for her keen sense of humor. In a speech given in RALEIGH, N. C., in 1915, she declared: "God had to make some women foolish to match the men." Her speeches stressed the democracy of Christianity and argued that woman's "highest glory was not motherhood but womanhood." She was considered by Mrs. Catt and Nettie Rogers Shuler as a "master orator" who "stood unchallenged throughout her career as the greatest orator among women the world has ever known." She was the author of The Story of a Pioneer which was published in 1915.

When, in 1919, the Nineteenth Amendment to the American Constitution was passed, and women were urged to register and vote in the forthcoming elections, much of the credit for the successful completion of the woman suffrage movement could be traced to the dynamic influence of Dr. Shaw.

William N. Brigrance and Marie Hochmuth, History and Criticism of American Public Address. New York, 1955-60.
Carrie Chapman Catt and Nettie R. Shuler, Woman Suffrage and Politics. New York, 1926.

Aileen S. Kraditor, The Ideas of the Woman Suffrage Movement, 1890-1920. New York, 1965.

National Cyclopaedia of American Biography. New York, 1917.
Elizabeth Taylor, "The Woman Suffrage Movement in North Carolina," The North Carolina Historical Review, January and April 1961.

RALPH HARDEE RIVES

SHAW, BARNABAS (1788-1857), pioneer Wesleyan Methodist missionary in southern Africa, was born near HULL in Yorkshire, England, on April 12, 1788, and was the son of a yeoman farmer, Thomas Shaw. The Missionary Committee sent Barnabas Shaw to the Cape of Good Hope in 1816, in response to an appeal from Methodist soldiers stationed in the colony. Earlier attempts to place a minister at the Cape had been thwarted by opposition from the authorities and Shaw was forbidden to preach. He also met with opposition from the clergy of the Anglican and Dutch Reformed Churches. But his own vocation was always primarily a missionary one and he determined to go northwards, beyond the boundaries of the colony, into Namaqualand. Leaving the Cape in September 1816, he and his wife established the first Methodist mission station in southern Africa at Leliefontein (Lilyfontein) in Namaqualand.

BARNABAS SHAW

The Namaquas were a Hottentot people, primitive and simple. The mission station was cut off from Cape Town by mountains and rough, wild country. Shaw and his wife were both seriously ill soon after their arrival and one of their children died. But in spite of the hardships and with the help of a "native assistant," Jacob Links, the mission was soon firmly established.

Shaw became, as the number of Methodist ministers and missionaries increased, virtually a general superintendent or elder statesman of South African missions. He encouraged and directed the expansion of missionary work. He was for a long period chairman of the district. He was constantly advising the Missionary Committee in England on policy, strategy and stationing. He was a firm believer in discipline, critical of London Missionary Society men because they seemed to him too casual and undisciplined, and was often criticized himself by other Methodist missionaries as something of a tyrant.

So ardent was Shaw for the expansion of missions in the West that there was considerable tension, at one time, between himself and his namesake, WILLIAM SHAW, in the eastern Cape. Barnabas Shaw maintained that his colleague was an impractical visionary, expanding missions in the East at a foolish and improvident rate, and using men and money that might have been better employed in extending the Namaqua mission.

On his removal to the Cape in 1826 Shaw ministered chiefly in the village of Wynberg, now a suburb of Cape Town. He continued to concern himself with the colored people and with missions to the heathen. His heart was, perhaps, still in the north and with the frontier missions and he continued to advise the "home" committee on planning and expansion. Administrative and financial matters, nevertheless, occupied a good deal of his time.

In 1837 Shaw returned to England on account of his health and the education of his children, but in 1843 he was again back at the Cape, bringing with him his son, B. J. Shaw, to join him in the work. This time he was stationed at Stellenbosch, some little way inland from Cape Town. He seems rapidly to have become ill and infirm, but he retained much of his vigor of mind and was still full of plans for extending the work of the Church. In emergencies Shaw returned to Cape Town, took over control of the district, and showed himself able still to display a remarkable grasp of affairs. But his powers were plainly failing. He retired in 1854 and died on June 21, 1857.

Dictionary of South African Biography.

L. A. Hewson, South Africa. 1950.

J. Du Plessis, A History of Christian Missions in South Africa. London, 1911 (reprint, Cape Town, 1965).

B. Shaw, South Africa. 1841.

J. Whiteside, South Africa. 1906.

Celia Sadler, ed., Never a Young Man—Extracts from the Letters and Journals of the Rev. William Shaw. Cape Town, 1967. P. B. HINCHLIFF

SHAW, HARRY (1872-1952), American layman, was born Feb. 15, 1872, the son of Joshua and Emily West Shaw. He attended Fairmont State College and West Virginia University, where he received B.A. and LL.B. degrees. Admitted to the bar in Marion County, W. Va., he was appointed Judge of the Circuit Court from 1928-1937. He served as president of the Board of Education of his district, as a member of the City Council of Fairmont, as member of the House of Delegates of WEST VIRGINIA, and as a member of the Draft Board in both World Wars.

As a churchman he was elected to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M. P. Church from 1912-1936, the UNITING CONFERENCE of 1939, and the General Conference of The Methodist Church in 1940. He was trustee of the WEST VIRGINIA CONFERENCE, served on the Legal Committee of the Uniting Conference, was a delegate to, and member of, the Executive Committee of the ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE, 1921 and 1931, and a member of the Ecumenical Methodist Council, Western Section. Shaw died in October, 1952, and was buried in Fairmont, W. Va.

FRANK L. SHAFFER

HERBERT BELL SHAW

SHAW, HERBERT BELL (1908-), American bishop of the A.M.E. ZION CHURCH, born at Wilmington, N.C., the son of John Henry and Lummie Virginia (Hodges) Shaw.

He was converted at St. Luke Church, Wilmington, N. C., June 13, 1920. He preached his trial sermon on July 12, 1927, was ordained DEACON, May 10, 1928, in Washington, D. C. and an ELDER, Nov. 15, 1930. He served the following churches: Bowen's Chapel, St. Andrews, Price Memorial in NORTH CAROLINA. He was elected and consecrated a bishop by the General Conference of his church, May 1952, at BROOKLYN, N. Y., and since has had charge of the eastern North Carolina area and SOUTH CAROLINA, as well as the Bahamas.

He holds the B.A., B.D., and D.D. degrees. He married Sept. 1, 1931. He has two children: John Herbert and Maria A. He has served as chairman of the Committee on Social Service and Harriet Tubman Foundation; Vice President, WORLD METHODIST COUNCIL, and was a delegate to the World Methodist Conference, Oslo, Norway; LAKE JUNALUSKA, N. C.; and LONDON, England.

Minutes of the General Conference, AMEZ, 1952.

DAVID H. BRADLEY

SHAW, JAMES, an Englishman who came to INDIA with the army and was serving as a Scripture reader when he met and heard WILLIAM TAYLOR. He decided promptly to become a Methodist. At the first QUARTERLY CONFERENCE in BOMBAY he applied for and was given a local preacher's license. He resigned his army appointment to become a full-time itinerant minister. He was ordained on Jan. 30, 1874, both as DEACON and ELDER, by Bishop M. C. HARRIS, who had been deputed by the COUNCIL of BISHOPS as official visitor to INDIA that year. Shaw served churches in Bangalore, HYDERABAD, Lahore, and Quetta, and assisted many of his fellow ministers in revival services.

J. N. Hollister, Southern Asia. 1956.

J. E. Scott, Southern Asia. 1906. J. WASKOM PICKETT

SHAW, JOHN KNOX (1800-1858), American preacher and founder of the PENNINGTON SCHOOL (Seminary) at Pennington, N. J., was born in the town of Newton-Hamilton in the south of County Armagh, IRELAND, April 10, 1800. His parents were Presbyterian.

John was brought to America in his mother's arms. After a six week's voyage they landed in Portsmouth, N. H., and went to Washington, Cambridge Co., N. Y., where the elder Shaw purchased a farm to care for his wife and five children. The children studied in country schools which were supplemented by private tutors. They seem to have been specially solicitous on behalf of John for whom they hoped for a college education, but this did not come to pass.

In his sixteenth year he left home "to seek his fortune." He was modestly successful at selling books but in seven months returned home where an attack of remittent fever brought him to death's door. Shaw always believed that his life was prolonged in answer to the "fervent, effectual prayer" of his mother.

In a little while he accepted the position of teacher at White Plains, N. Y., where he came in contact with the Methodists and joined the church. When he finished his engagement he went to Bloomfield, N. J., to take a like position. He united with the Methodist society in nearby Belleville and soon moved from CLASS LEADER to EXHORTER and in 1824 to LOCAL PREACHER. On April 14, 1925, at the PHILADELPHIA CONFERENCE, he was received on trial and was appointed to Hamburg (N.J.) Circuit. In succeeding years he served the following charges: Asbury Circuit, Paterson, Essex Circuit, Staten Island Circuit, New Providence Circuit, Long Branch Circuit, Pennington, Swedesboro Circuit, Camden, Mount Holly and Burlington. He was presiding elder of the Camden District, 1845-48 and of the Trenton District, 1849-52. Other churches that followed were: Franklin Street, Newark, Morristown and Warren Street, Newark.

It was while John Knox Shaw was serving the church at Pennington that the Annual Conference took action to found an academy. The committee proposed that the locality successful in raising the most money for the enterprise should receive the school. Shaw took this as a great challenge and canvassed the state, gathering together a sum of $5,000. The conference voted to found the school and it was incorporated as the Pennington Seminary in 1839. John Knox Shaw was in fact the real founder, though he never served officially at the school. His good works are memorialized in the beautiful Shaw Memorial Chapel at what is now The Pennington School.

In 1857 he went to Warren Street Church, Newark, where he found a new society of seventy members and a church edifice in the process of erection. The funds of the trustees were exhausted; the congregation had already given liberally. So day by day he plodded the streets soliciting funds. The drain on his strength brought back his old malady and he died on Oct. 4, 1858. His funeral was the first service in that sacred edifice which had cost him his life to erect. He was laid to rest in Evergreen Cemetery, Morristown, N. J.

CHARLES R. SMYTH

WILLIAM SHAW

SHAW, WILLIAM (1798-1872), Wesleyan missionary in SOUTH AFRICA, was born in Glasgow, SCOTLAND, on Dec. 8, 1798. In 1819 he was appointed chaplain to the Sephton Party of British Settlers and accepted as a missionary by the Wesleyan METHODIST MISSIONARY SOCIETY. He settled at Salem, near Grahamstown, Cape Colony, in July 1820. Although his official responsibility was limited to his own party, Shaw became pastor to the entire settlement which was almost without clergymen. He travelled widely establishing societies and Sunday schools, recruiting LOCAL PREACHERS and caring impartially for members of all denominations. Under his supervision, an increasing staff of Wesleyan ministers established societies in nearly every village in the Eastern Province. By 1860 there were twenty-two ministers and forty-four European chapels, besides a considerable work among the Cape Colored and Africans.

Within a year of his arrival at Salem, Shaw was planning a chain of missions among the tribes between the colonial frontier and Natal. His aim was to establish stations about thirty miles apart, so that assistance and companionship would be near at hand, and to place missionaries with all the major chiefs. The main features of the scheme were realized within a decade: Wesleyville was established in 1823; by 1830 there were six missions; and in subsequent years the number was further increased. As a result of warfare, financial stringency, a shortage of manpower and the iron grip of tribalism, immediate results were less grandiose than the vision. But strategically the scheme was a great success and laid the foundations of the strong Methodist work which later developed in the Transkei.

Less successful were Shaw's plans for education. His proposal for a teacher training center—the Watson Institution—was approved in 1834. However, instead of concentrating upon a central school, it was decided in 1838 to open branches on every mission. This decentralization combined with the lack of funds and trained staff to doom the venture, and many years were to pass before the Wesleyans had an efficient educational programme. Nevertheless, Shaw encouraged the Colonial Government to provide for African education, and co-operated fully with Governor Sir George Grey who established four industrial schools on Wesleyan stations in 1855.

After a visit to England between 1833 and 1837, Shaw returned as General Superintendent of Wesleyan Missions in South East Africa. This brought him added responsibilities in the Bechuana District (Orange Free State) and, after 1842, in Natal. Constant travel and the burden of oversight and administration eventually undermined his health.

A missionary of Shaw's stature could not avoid a measure of political involvement. His relationships with successive governors and local officials were generally cordial, and he often approached them about policy on the frontier and beyond. He occupied a unique position in that he was a highly-respected member of the settler community and the friend and adviser of several African chiefs. This gave him a breadth of outlook and sympathy which was denied either the humanitarian or the settler extremists. His views are open to criticism in detail but were generally characterized by a desire to be just to all parties. The exact extent of his influence in government circles is difficult to assess but it was not inconceivable.

After the death of his first wife (Ann Maw—married Dec. 31, 1817; died July 6, 1854), Shaw was taken seriously ill. He returned to England in 1856 and married a widow, Mrs. Ogle, on March 12, 1857. It was his desire to return in 1860 and to inaugurate a South African Conference, but the missionary committee rejected his proposals. He therefore settled in England where he served as Chairman of the Bristol and York Districts and was elected President of CONFERENCE in 1865. After his retirement in 1869 he edited The Watchman and served on the missionary and education committees of the Conference. He died in London on Dec. 4, 1872.

Vision, ability and evangelical zeal blended in William

Shaw to produce a man who has every right to be termed the Father of South African Methodism.

W. B. Boyce, Memoir of the Rev. W. Shaw. London, 1874.
Dictionary of South African Biography.
Journal of the Methodist Historical Society of South Africa, October 1954, March 1955, October 1960, April 1961.
 W. Shaw, Story of My Mission. 1872.
 J. Whiteside, South Africa. 1906.

D. G. L. CRAGG

SHAW, WILLIAM E. (1869-1947), American pastor, missions executive and college president, was born at Preston, Minn. He was educated for his life work at Moore's Hill College, Indiana, and at CARRETT BIBLICAL INSTITUTE. From 1889 to 1896 he was an instructor at UNION COLLEGE, Kentucky, serving also for a time as vice-president. Joining the CENTRAL ILLINOIS CONFERENCE, he served pastorates until 1932, when he became PEORIA district superintendent. He had been pastor for twenty-two years of First Church, Peoria, the largest in membership in the conference and in the NORTH CENTRAL JURISDICTION, leading the church in building their large new edifice.

Shaw was a member of the commission which organized the Korean Methodist Church in 1930. The 1936 GENERAL CONFERENCE (ME) elected him Executive Secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions. He was a delegate to each General Conference from 1916 to 1940. He was a valued member of the boards of Methodist Hospital, Peoria; WESLEY FOUNDATION, University of Illinois; and ILLINOIS WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, serving over thirty years on each. Wesleyan called him to be its president in 1940 when it launched a ten-year expansion program. His ability to lead and inspire others helped overcome an emergency caused by destruction of the main building by fire in 1943. The new academic building bears his name. Shaw died on the way to the train, coming home from an alumni meeting in Chicago, the only president to die while in office.

Journal of the Illinois Conference, 1947.

Elmo Scott Watson, The Illinois Wesleyan Story, 1850-1950.
 Bloomington, 1950.

HENRY G. NYLIN

SHAW, WILLIAM EARL (1890-1967), missionary and U.S. Army chaplain in Korea, was born in CHICAGO, Ill., Aug. 22, 1890. He graduated from OHIO WESLEYAN, 1916, Columbia University, M.A. 1921, BOSTON UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY, 1927. He was awarded the honorary D.D. degree by Ohio Wesleyan in 1950. He served as a U.S. Army chaplain in Europe in 1918.

As missionary in Korea 1921-1941, he served as district superintendent and for a time concurrently as mission treasurer. He was Director of Religious Activities, Ohio Wesleyan University, 1942-1945, missionary to the PHILIPPINES, 1945-1947, and missionary to Korea 1947-1961, where he served in administration, and as director of the Methodist Preachers Refresher Institute at Taejon and as Professor of New Testament in the Taejon Methodist Seminary.

After the Communist invasion of June 1950, he served for one year as U.S. Army Chaplain, acting as liaison with the Republic of Korea Armed Forces and was instrumental in organizing the Korean Chaplain's Corps. An only son William Hamilton Shaw, USNR, who also volunteered for service in Korea, was a member of the MacArthur landing party at Inchon, and was killed near SEOUL, September 1950. Shaw retired in 1961, and died on Oct. 5, 1967, in Los Altos, Calif. Inurnment was beside the grave of his son in the Foreign Cemetery, Seoul, Korea.

CHARLES A. SAUER

SHAWBURY INSTITUTION, in the Tsitsa River Valley, Transkei, SOUTH AFRICA, forms part of a mission which was located on its present site by W. H. Garner in 1843. The first step was taken in its development as an educational center when C. White built a school room in 1858. In 1878 W. S. Davis opened a Training Institution for girls, while a day school for boys also developed gradually. The work suffered a great setback as a result of the Mpondomise Rebellion in 1880 but the years that followed witnessed encouraging progress. William Mears, who was governor of the Institution from 1906 to 1935, combined enthusiasm for education with a practical knowledge of carpentry and building and was responsible for impressive developments at the Institution and in the surrounding Circuit. He was ably assisted by Mrs. E. C. Hobden who was principal of the school for a great part of this period. Male students were admitted after the introduction of secondary education at the close of Mr. Mears' governorship, and new teacher-training courses were initiated in the time of A. H. Briggs (1939-46). The schools were taken over by the Government in 1956 in terms of the Bantu Education Act (1953) but the church has hitherto retained control of the hostels.

J. Whiteside, South Africa. 1906.

David Wilson, Shawbury, the Story of a Mission, 1843-1943.
 N.p., n.d.

G. MEARS

SHEAT, LAURA LOUISA BLANCHE (?-1954), NEW ZEALAND laywoman, spent her early years in Nelson, where her father, Alfred Sheat, was a local preacher and circuit official. She graduated, M.A. with honors, at Auckland University College and had a distinguished career as a secondary school teacher. She achieved her widest influence during her twenty-five years at Auckland Girls' Grammar School.

She was actively associated with the Student Christian Movement and was an honored member of the Methodist Church at Mount Albert (Auckland), to which district she retired to care for her aged mother. She died on Oct. 18, 1954.

New Zealand Methodist Times, Nov. 13, 1954.

L. R. M. GILMORE

SHEBBEAR COLLEGE, British BIBLE CHRISTIAN school, now Methodist, was founded at Prospect House, Shebbear, North Devon, by SAMUEL and MARY O'BRYAN THORNE, 1829, and adopted by the connection in 1841 to provide education for ministerial candidates and sons of itinerant preachers. Under the governorship of JAMES THORNE (1844-70) and headmastership of THOMAS RUDDLE (1864-1909), the school gained a high reputation throughout the West and produced many missionaries and men of distinction. Ruddle's Christian education was continued by John Rounsefel (1909-33), a classical scholar, greatly loved by the people. The school is still linked with circuit life through Lake Chapel services.

Richard Pyke, The Story of Shebbear College. London, 1953.
 ALYN W. G. COURT

SHEETS (SCHUTZ), HERMAN J. (1883-1936), was one of many American missionaries from German-speaking Methodist churches who have served with zeal and devotion in INDIA. His first appointment was to Terhoot (Juzaggarpur) in Bihar in 1906. He married Grace Bills, Dec. 2, 1908. His appointments included superintendent of Ballia District (LUCKNOW CONFERENCE), 1916-18, and Bijnor District (North India Conference), 1919-22, professor of New Testament and vice-principal of Bareilly Theological Seminary, 1923-34; and professor of New Testament Interpretation in Leonard Theological College, 1934-35. He was elected principal of Leonard and installed on Nov. 5, 1935. The following August he died at Mussoorie, India. During the First World War he changed his surname from Schutz to Sheets.

He was editor of a supplement to the Methodist Discipline for Southern Asia and joint editor of a Bible dictionary in Hindi. He was a popular preacher in English, Hindi, Urdu, and German.

B. T. Badley, Southern Asia. 1931. J. WASKOM PICKETT

SHEFFEY, ROBERT AYERS (1820-1902), American evangelist and prophet of prayer, was born in Ivanhoe, Wythe County, Va. He was the son of Henry and Margaret (White) Sheffey, of a highly respected Presbyterian family.

Converted Jan. 9, 1839, in a revival meeting at Abington, Va., he joined the M.E. Church. Sheffey studied at EMORY and HENRY COLLEGE, 1839-40. He lost no time in taking up the duties of an itinerant Methodist preacher. However, his biographer never refers to any license to preach, ordination, conference relation, or pastorate. Somewhat like John the Baptist and the eccentric LORENZO DOW, Brother Sheffey traveled as a local evangelist over fourteen counties of southwestern VIRGINIA and southern WEST VIRGINIA, known and loved by the people. He lived in the saddle and carried a sheepskin on which he knelt to pray in the woods, and almost everywhere else.

Honest, sincere, courteous, childlike, Brother Sheffey was odd, peculiar, eccentric, and unique. His success in the conversion of thousands was due to his character, love for people, and his power in prayer rather than through his sermons. However, he had a thorough knowledge of the Bible. One of his common expressions was: "If you keep the heart right and the skin clean, you won't have need for lawyers, doctors, and penitentiaries."

Several doctors once gave a young man up to die of typhoid fever. Brother Sheffey immediately began to pray for his recovery. He went to the boy's mother and advised her not to worry; the son would recover. In a very brief time the lad was well and became a leading lawyer in southwest Virginia.

Robert A. Sheffey was at home in revivals and CAMP MEETINGS, singing and praying. He hated sham. On one occasion he was present at a revival meeting with several dignified preachers where no enthusiasm had been aroused. Finally Sheffey was called on to pray. He prayed: "Lord, I am sure that the devil is here, and I want you to take him by the nape of the neck, and take him to the edge of the cliff out here and kick him off." The brethren wilted but the meeting soon became a revival with power.

Mercer County History says: "The Rev. Robert Sheffey, a noted divine of that time (when Athens had the first saloon in Mercer County, West Virginia), prayed that the saloon be closed and a shoe and harness shop take its place and that really happened." In 1957 Athens did not have even a beer joint but more than a majority of the adult population had college degrees.

Sheffey lived among the people and these gave him what he needed. After the death of his first wife, Elizabeth Swecker, he married Eliza W. Stafford and they had one son, Edward, who became a prominent businessman and Methodist in Lynchburg, Va. Often Brother Sheffey would be away from home a month at a time, leaving the care of his wife and son to Providence. Mrs. Sheffey never murmured at her husband's absences. Sometimes he would ride home and talk to her as in their courting days and leave for an appointment without dismounting. Edward said once: "Uncle John thinks you ought to stay home more." Father Sheffey said: "Son, Uncle John doesn't know which way the rats run."

He died in Staffordsville, Va., Aug. 30, 1902. The presiding elder said to a full house at his funeral: "No one has so projected his life on the hearts of the masses as Sheffey has in southwestern Virginia and southern West Virginia."

W. S. Barbery, Brother Sheffey. Privately published, Barbery, Bluefield, W. Va., n.d.
McCormick, The Story of Mercer County. Charleston Printing Co., 1957. JESSE A. EARL

SHEFFIELD, England, Horace Walpole once described Sheffield as "one of the foulest towns in England in the most charming situation." An appropriate description at the time, but a libel now. Sheffield, built in the valleys, where four small rivers flow into the Don (thus providing the power for the early cutlers and grinders), is the center of the English steel and cutlery industry and has always been a famous stronghold of radicalism in religion and politics.

Methodism was introduced to Sheffield in 1738 through David Taylor, who had been converted by BENJAMIN INGHAM of the Oxford HOLY CLUB. One of Taylor's early converts was JOHN BENNET, who married GRACE MURRAY. Early meetinghouses (the first was opened in Cheney Square in 1741) were wrecked by the mob, who in 1745 suspected the Methodists of Jacobite sympathies. The famous Conference hymn, "And are we yet alive," derives from one riot when CHARLES WESLEY nearly lost his life. The home of Mr. and Mrs. Woodhouse for a time had two licenses, one for the sale of drink and the other for dissenting worship. When the preacher arrived, Mrs. Woodhouse used to summon the flock by suspending a white sheet from a tree.

The early society was torn by controversy between Arminian and Calvinist, which EDWARD PERRONET, the first superintendent, appointed in 1749, failed to control. However, as his circuit reached from Huddersfield to Leicester this is not surprising. The society was subsequently placed under THOMAS OLIVERS, and he secured in 1757 the erection of the Mulberry Street Meeting House, which served as headquarters of the small society for twenty-five years. Sarah Moore was one of the early members of a chapel still torn by dissensions, which were exacerbated by Thomas Bryant, an itinerant who claimed ordination from the wandering Greek bishop ERASMUS. Bryant took half the society with him to Scotland Street in 1764, which later had ALEXANDER KILHAM as one of its ministers and became the headquarters of the METHODIST NEW CONNEXION in Sheffield.

JOHN WESLEY himself visited Sheffield over forty times. Once on July 15, 1779, he preached in Paradise Square "to the largest congregation I ever saw on a week day." (Journal, vol. vi, p. 244.) The early Sheffield society was not wealthy, though James Bonnet, its benefactor, was a man of some means; Thomas Boulsover, the inventor of the famous old Sheffield plate, was an adherent; and James Vickers, who patented "Britannia Metal," also joined, and once had a tub of bullock blood tipped over him to cool his enthusiasm.

The first notable chapel was opened in 1780 in Norfolk Street, which was a hallowed center for more than a century; Carver Street, a fine example of early Methodist architecture, followed it in 1805. One of the circuit's itinerants, William Jenkins, was its architect. Laymen like Henry Longden, Thomas Holy, and James Vickers were active in the circuit, which numbered among its itinerants such notables as ALEXANDER MATHER, JOSEPH BENSON, ROBERT NEWTON, JABEZ BUNTING, THOMAS JACKSON, and, later, W. M. PUNSHON. All the three leaders of the Reform agitation of the 1850's, SAMUEL DUNN, WILLIAM GRIFFITH, and JAMES EVERETT, were at some time stationed in Sheffield. The town was in fact a notable center of liberal Methodism; the Protestant Methodists (see WESLEYAN METHODIST ASSOCIATION) had a chapel in Surrey Street (1831), which was the venue of the first Wesleyan Association Assembly. The Reformers later in 1861 built Hanover Chapel, which soon gathered a congregation of energetic shopkeepers, manufacturers, and artisans. In 1859 the WESLEYAN REFORM UNION was created, centered on Sheffield. PRIMITIVE METHODISM grew only slowly; the first minister was Jeremiah Gilbert, who came in 1819. His first plan was headed "The Sheffield Circuit of the People called Primitive Methodists, known also by the name of Ranters." This connection boomed after 1851 and reached further down into the social strata than any other group; its large chapels were Bethel (1835), and Petre (sic) Street (1869). Meanwhile the Wesleys expanded, building the large Park (1831) and Brunswick (1834) Chapels. However it is noteworthy that only one more chapel was built between 1835 and 1865—a measure of havoc wrought by the internal divisions of Methodism.

Wesleyanism revived, however, and between 1867 and 1900 erected twenty-eight chapels, mostly sizable. An observer in 1875 stated that

Carver Street had an excellent congregation, both in quality and quantity, particularly the former; . . . last season it had the Mayor and the Master Cutler within a few pews of each other. In the main the congregation consists of members of the middle classes, with merchants, manufacturers and professional gentlemen. (Graham)

Of Brunswick Chapel similar observations are made, with the footnote,

There was a considerable admixture of the working classes and the poor were also present, though not in great numbers. I noticed several uncushioned benches for the poor. There were very few of them and none at all in the free, attic gallery. (Ibid.)

Continually the middle classes moved into the growing suburban areas of western and northern Sheffield; and chapels like the Park, in the older areas, were left denuded of leadership when other more select, Gothic-type churches, like Victoria (1861) were built for the people in the suburban villas.

In education, Sheffield Wesleyanism was notable for the opening in 1838 of the Wesleyan Proprietary Grammar School (later to be called Wesley College) of which SAMUEL D. WADDY was the most famous governor. In 1904 this college became the King Edward VII Grammar School, and passed into the hands of the local secular education authority.

Although the membership of all the Methodist groups increased, it hardly kept pace with the increase in population from 14,000 in 1736 to 135,000 in 1851 and 381,000 in 1901. New churches built after 1900 have tended to be in the areas of residential growth on the west and north of the city. The FORWARD MOVEMENT, however, influenced Sheffield greatly. Norfolk Street was replaced in 1908 by the Victoria Hall, which still has one of the largest congregations in Yorkshire, and its ministers have included E. BENSON PERKINS and William Wallace. In an effort to penetrate the world of industrial man in the east end of Sheffield, Attercliffe Hall was opened in 1927, but the experiment failed and the hall is now defunct. At Methodist Union (1932) some attempt was made to rationalize the untidy congeries of churches left as a Victorian legacy. Each circuit was given a segment of urban, suburban, and rural Sheffield. In 1965 the seven circuits in the city had 10,535 members. Strong and vigorous churches are to be found in the suburban areas, and a renovation scheme is in progress at the Victoria Hall, but it must be admitted that the gulf between the church and the mass of the population is greater than at any time since the days of John Wesley.

J. Everett, Wesleyan Methodism in Sheffield, 1823.

J. J. Graham, A History of Wesleyan Methodism in Sheffield Park, 1914.

Methodist Conference Handbook, 1940, 1951.

W. Parkes, Thomas Bryant, 1965.

T. A. Seed, Norfolk Street Wesleyan Chapel, Sheffield, 1907.

M. Walton, Sheffield—Its Story and Its Achievement, 1952. Wesleyan Conference Handbook, 1922.

E. R. Wickham, Church and People in an Industrial City, 1957. J. M. TURNER

SHELDON, HENRY CLAY (1845-1928), American church historian, theologian, and teacher, who for forty-six years was Professor of Church History and Systematic Theology in BOSTON UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY. He was born in Martinsburg, N. Y., on March 12, 1845, and graduated from Yale University in 1867. At the Boston University School of Theology, he was graduated in 1871, and spent a short time in the Methodist pastorate (1871-74). After a brief study in Europe, he assumed the chair above mentioned in the Boston University School of Theology, and from 1875 until his retirement in 1921, he earned for himself wide renown as an instructor, philosopher, and author. His History of Christian Doctrine (2 volumes, 1886), gained wide use in important circles and was translated into other languages, including Japanese. His five-volume History of the Christian Church (1894) established itself as a work of authoritative reference in ecclesiastical circles. He also wrote A History of Unbelief in the Nineteenth Century, 1907; A Fourfold Test of Mormonism, 1914; Studies in Recent Adventism, 1915; Theosophy and New Thought, 1916; The Mystery Religions and the New Testament, 1918; Pantheistic Dilem- mas and Other Essays in Philosophy and Religion, 1920; and The Essentials of Christianity, 1922.

His students remember his classroom lectures as both formal, and informal, and it was said that no question was ever asked in class, but that he gave an answer.

Sheldon died on Aug. 4, 1928, and was buried in Newton Cemetery, Mass.

DANIEL MARSH

SHELDON, MARTHA A. (1860-1912), was a medical missionary to INDIA, appointed by the WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY of the M. E. Church. Daughter of a Congregational pastor, she graduated from the University of Minnesota and the School of Medicine of BOSTON UNIVERSITY. She arrived in India in 1889, and was assigned to evangelistic work in Moradabad.

In 1893 she was transferred to Pithoragarh in Eastern Kumaun. Ever eager to live sacrificially and to serve those in most need, she moved on to Bhot, and established an outpost among the nomadic Bhotiya people. There she lived in very primitive conditions, far removed from the comforts of her girlhood, and from the rewards generally available to physicians and surgeons.

With British women, Annie Budden, at first, and Eva Browne, later, she lived in Dharchula during the winter and in Sirkha in the summer. These were not so much homes as they were bases from which these intrepid women moved into more remote areas, searching out needy people to whom they could bear witness of the love of God by word and deed. Among the converts were Hindus, Shokas, Humlis, and at least one Tibetan woman. Dr. Sheldon made a number of trips into Tibet, and established cordial relations with officials and the general public.

Her service to health and evangelism included healing by medicine and surgery, and the prevention of disease by improving sanitation and enriching diet. She planted fruit trees, grew her own vegetables, distributed vegetable seeds, and planted Kentucky bluegrass on mountain slopes. She lived as nearly as she could like the people about her, eager to set an example of frugality combined with proper diet.

She learned something of the language of that part of Tibet, said to differ considerably from the language around Lhasa. Her journeys into Tibet from India were made against the advice of India's officials and with no escort or protection from human sources. She died at Dharchula, Oct. 18, 1912, and is buried there.

Eva C. M. Browne, The Life of Dr. Martha A. Sheldon. N.d. J. N. Hollister, Southern Asia. 1956. J. WASKOM PICKETT

SHELLABEAR, NAOMI RUTH (-), went to JAVA as a missionary under the WOMEN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY of the M.E. Church in 1909. She was first stationed in Batavia (Djakarta) and later transferred to Tuitenzorg (Bogor). There she served as principal of the Bible Woman's Training School. This school was later known as "Baitany" and continued to do effective work in the training of Bible Women for work in the church centers in Java until the Methodist Mission withdrew from that island in 1927.

While home on furlough in 1922-23 she studied in DREW THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY in Madison, N. J. While in that school she was married to William G. Shellabear, a former missionary in MALAYA, then serving as a professor of missions in Drew Seminary. Mrs. Shellabear, being an able student in the Malay language, was able to give her husband valued assistance in teaching that language to missionaries both in Drew Seminary and also in the Kennedy School of Missions in Hartford Theological Seminary where he served as professor of Missions and Oriental Languages for several years prior to his retirement.

Since the death of her husband, Mrs. Shellabear has continued to live in a retirement home in Hartford, Conn.

SHELTON, CHARLES ELDRED (1859-1940). American educator and college president, was born in Mt. Pleasant, Iowa on June 16, 1859, the son of Orville Clarkson Shelton of the IOWA ANNUAL CONFERENCE of the M.E. Church. He was graduated from IOWA WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY in 1879 and received an M.A. in 1881. Admitted to the bar in 1880, he entered upon educational missionary work in BRAZIL under Bishop WILLIAM TAYLOR from 1880 to 1882, establishing schools at Bernambuce and Bahia. Upon his return to Iowa, he was a school principal in Agency, 1882-84 and DeWitt, 1885-89, with a period of law practice in Mt. Pleasant, 1884-85. He served on the faculty of the Western Normal College, Shenandoah, Iowa, 1889-92 and of Lincoln Normal University, Nebraska, 1892-93. After a term as superintendent of schools in Burlington, Iowa, 1893-99, he became president of SIMPSON COLLEGE, Indianola, Iowa, an institution of the DES MOINES ANNUAL CONFERENCE, from 1899-1910. Shelton's administration put special emphasis upon the Normal Program and Jubilee Financial Campaign (1905-10). His leadership was recognized by his presidency of the Iowa State Education Association in 1902 and by his receiving an honorary LL.D. from Iowa Wesleyan in the same year. He was the author of several textbooks on physical culture and mathematics and served as a local preacher of the Des Moines Conference.

Shelton married Julia Woodward and later Fannie Rosemond. Upon his retirement from Simpson College, he became supply for the Mt. Lake Park Summer Resort and Assemblies, MARYLAND, as well as engaging in European travel and study. He died in Mt. Lake Park on May 13, 1940.

Iowa Wesleyan College Archives.

Minutes of the Des Moines Annual Conference, 1899-1910. Who Was Who in America 1897-1942.

LOUIS A. HASELMAYER

SHENANDOAH COLLEGE and SHENANDOAH CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC, Winchester, Virginia, are, respectively, a junior college and a four-year, degree-granting institution specializing in music. Although they share the same academic and residence facilities, they are governed by two separately incorporated boards of trustees and administered by one president and his administrative staff.

Founded by A. P. Funkhouser as a private school in Dayton, Va., in 1875, and chartered in 1876, Shenandoah Seminary was taken over by the CHURCH OF THE UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST in 1887. It became two separate institutions in 1937, the same year that the Conservatory was admitted to the accredited list of the National Association of Schools of Music.

In 1947, the College was accredited by the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools; and in 1960, both institutions moved to their present location as a consequence of close and fruitful relationships between leaders of the VIRGINIA CONFERENCE of The Evangelical United Brethren Church and leaders of Winchester and Frederick County, Va. Since that move, both institutions have grown in size, fiscal stability, and academic quality.

The Governing Body consists of forty-one trustees elected by the Virginia Conference. Present statistics are: Library, 15,000 volumes; total enrollment, 600; administrative staff, four; College faculty members, forty; The Conservatory, seventeen; campus acreage, forty-two; number of buildings, seven; value of physical plant, $2,404,713; endowment, $125,000; current income, $949,519.

Clarence H. Connor, "A Study of the Functions of Shenandoah College and Shenandoah Conservatory of Music." Unpublished dissertation, University of Virginia, 1955.

Abram Paul Funkhouser and Oren F. Morton, History of the Church of the United Brethren in Christ of the Virginia Conference. Dayton, Va.: the conference, 1921.

David F. Glover, Pictorial History of the Virginia Conference. 1965.

Yearbook of the E.U.B. Church, 1967. BRUCE C. SOUDERS

SHENT, WILLIAM (?-1787), British barber and wig-maker, was the first to welcome the Methodist preachers to LEEDS. He became a leader of the society that met at his shop in Briggate and took the initiative in the building of the "Old Boggart House" chapel in 1751. From 1745 he traveled as a "half- itinerant," chiefly in Yorkshire and Lincolnshire; but the effect on his business caused him to locate in 1753. Later he succumbed to intemperance and was expelled from membership. Though restored through the championship of WESLEY, who employed him for a time at the BOOK ROOM in LONDON, he died in 1787, "a melancholy instance of human instability," says JOHN PAWSON.

Wesley's Letter Concerning William Shent. A notable letter written by John Wesley was responsible for the restoration of William Shent, as is noted above. This letter, Bishop EDWIN D. MOUZON of American Methodism once said, was "the best thing I think Wesley ever wrote." Here follows the letter:

London, January 11, 1779.

I have a few questions which I desire may be proposed to the Society at Keighley.

Who was the occasion of the Methodist preachers first setting foot in Leeds? William Shent.

Who received John Nelson into his house at his first coming thither? William Shent.

Who was it that invited me and received me when I came? William Shent.

Who was it that stood by me while I preached in the street with stones flying on every side? William Shent.

Who was it that bore the storm of persecution for the whole town and stemmed it at the peril of his life? William Shent.

Whose word did God bless for many years in an eminent manner? William Shent's.

By whom were many children now in paradise begotten in the Lord and many now alive? William Shent.

Who is he that is ready now to be broken up and turned into the street? William Shent.

And does nobody care for this? William Shent fell into sin and was publicly expelled the Society; but must he be also starved? Must he with his grey hairs and all his children be without a place to lay his head? Can you suffer this? O tell it not in Gath! Where is gratitude? Where is compassion? Where is Christianity? Where is humanity? Where is concern for the cause of God? Who is a wise man among you? Who is concerned for the gospel? Who has put on bowels of mercy? Let him arise and exert himself in this matter. You here all arise as one man and roll away the reproach. Let us set him on his feet once more. It may save both him and his family. But what we do, let it be done quickly.—I am, dear brethren,

Your affectionate brother
J. Wesley

CHARLES WESLEY wrote to his brother on April 23, this year, "I shall be happy to hear you have saved poor William Shent."

J. W. Laycock, Methodist Heroes. 1909. JOHN A. VICKERS

SHEPARD, WILLIAM ORVILLE (1862-1931), American bishop, was born at Sterling (near Rock Falls), Ill., April 11, 1862. His ancestors were early pioneers who struggled with the wilderness from the NEW YORK and PENNSYLVANIA line to INDIANA and ILLINOIS. He became self-supporting from the age of seventeen. His parents were connected with the Christian Church, and when he was converted his father refused to aid him in preparing to preach. It was a struggle, but Shepard was graduated from Jennings Seminary (Aurora, Ill.), DEPAUW UNIVERSITY, A.B., 1885; S.T.B., 1886; then A.M., 1888; D.D., 1896; LL.D., 1912; SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY, Ph.D., 1895 (hon. D.D. and LL.D.).

Shepard was ordained and joined the ROCK RIVER CONFERENCE in 1886, and his pastorates were: Blue Island, Elgin (First Church), Rockford (Court Street), Chicago (Oakland), Evanston, and Englewood (Chicago), all in Illinois, 1886-1909; district superintendent of the Chicago Northern District, 1909-12. Elected bishop in 1912, his episcopal areas were: Kansas City, Kansas, 1912-16; Wichita, Kansas, 1916-20; and Portland, Oregon, 1920-28, which Area included Washington, Oregon, Idaho, and Alaska. In 1928 Bishop Shepard was assigned to Paris, France, his area embracing France, Spain, Italy, Yugoslavia, Bulgaria, North Africa, Madeira Islands and Liberia. He made trips to South America, 1916, to Europe, 1920, to make a post-war survey of conditions and needs; and to South Africa, 1924. Twice he penetrated the Congo region by ox cart and on foot.

He married Emily Odell Aug. 15, 1883. They had four sons, William Odell, Chester Orville, Warren Vincent, and Mark. His book, Oakland Sermons, had charm, humor, and spiritual food.

Bishop Shepard had exceptional forensic talent. He was quick on the trigger on moral questions and a loyal and tireless worker. A successful preacher and effective missionary, he had a pleasing personality and made and held friends. A wide reader in the field of theology, philosophy, and science, he was interested in music and the arts. Bishop Shepard died in Paris, Nov. 30, 1931, and was buried in Mt. Hope, Chicago.

F. D. Leete, Methodist Bishops. 1948.
National Cyclopaedia of American Biography.
Who's Who in America.

JESSE A. EARL

SHEPHERDSON, HAROLD URQUHART (1903-), Australian minister, was born in Bunbury, Western AUSTRALIA, a member of a dedicated Christian family. He was appointed as a missionary in 1927. He married Isabella Gray and was accepted to Milingimbi, North

HAROLD SHEPHERDSON

Australia to work among the Aborigines of Arnhem Land. For fifteen years he served there and then founded the Elcho Island Mission in 1942. This is situated about 300 air miles from Darwin. He early recognized the need for the mobility which air travel provides in the vast area of Arnhem Land covering 37,000 square miles, so in May 1936, he flew his first plane from Adelaide to Darwin. He is known affectionately as "Sheppie," but among the Aborigines he is "Bapa" or Father.

It was early realized that Elcho needed an industry to provide an occupation and income for its residents. Three areas have been developed: (a) agriculture, producing food for the mission; (b) timber, cypress logs cut on the mainland are towed to Elcho to be milled; (c) fishing, fish not needed on Elcho are frozen and flown to Darwin for sale.

Sheppie regularly leaves the established missions for the nine lonely outposts where he is the only known white man. He gathers groups together for worship after the preliminaries of exchange trading have been transacted.

For the fifty years of their married life, the Shepherdsons have dedicated themselves to their unique ministry.

AUSTRALIAN EDITORIAL COMMITTEE

SHERIDAN, JARRETT MITCHELL (1851-1929), American Methodist Protestant minister, was born near Lutherville, Md., Sept. 20, 1851. He taught school for four years and was admitted into the MARYLAND CONFERENCE in 1875. He was married in 1881 to Matilda Warfield Ridgely.

He served in the pastorate until 1907, when he became President of the Maryland Conference, serving in that office for five years. He was elected Superintendent of Church Extension of the Maryland Conference and then became Executive Secretary of the denominational Board of Home Missions. In 1928 the Boards of Foreign Missions and Home Missions were merged into one Board of Missions, whereupon he returned to the church extension work of the Maryland Conference. On his death, Jan. 17, 1929, he was buried at Union Chapel, Md.

JAMES H. STRAUGHN

SHERLOCK, HUGH BRAHAM (1905-), president of the METHODIST CHURCH OF THE CARIBBEAN AND THE AMERICAS, is the son of Terrence Manderson and Adina

HUGH SHERLOCK

Trotter Sherlock, and was born in JAMAICA on March 21, 1905. He was educated at the Calabar High School, and at Caenwood (Methodist) Theological College, graduating there in 1932.

He married Thelma Coole on Dec. 18, 1942, and they have two children. Dr. Sherlock was with the Jamaica Civil Service, 1923-29, and then became a minister and was ordained in the Methodist Church in 1937. He served as minister in Turks Island in the Jamaica District, 1932-37, minister of the Ocho Rios Circuit, 1937-40; founder and director of Boys' Town, Kingston, 1940-56; chairman of the Jamaica Methodist District, 1956-66; chairman of the Board of Management of the St. Andrew High School; also the Excelsior High School, Morant Bay High School, York Castle High School. He was also chairman of the Board of Management of the Jamaica Youth Corps, 1955-65, and served as a Justice of the Peace in Jamaica. He has been honored with the decoration of Officer of the Most Excellent Order of the British Empire, 1954; and the recipient of the Freedom of the City of Kingston, 1955; and a United Nations Fellowship, 1954. He composed the Jamaica National Anthem in 1962.

He was vice president of the WORLD METHODIST COUNCIL, 1966-71, and acted as host for the Jamaica Methodists when the executive committee of the World Methodist Council met there in October 1964. He has been awarded Jamaica's Highest Citizen's Award, a Badge of Honour and Certificate of Merit, 1967.

Since his induction as President of the Methodist Church in the Caribbean and the Americas in 1967, he has resided in ANTIGUA, where that Church's headquarters are located.

EDWIN TAYLOR

SHERMAN, IRA EDICK (1914-), a missionary to CUBA and ARGENTINA, was born to Ira and Bessie Edick Sherman in Westville (Westford), N. Y., Feb. 1, 1914. After graduating from high school he obtained the A.B. degree from Hartwick College, Oneonta, N. Y., 1935. He obtained the B.D. degree from BOSTON UNIVERSITY in 1938 and the same year joined the WYOMING ANNUAL CONFERENCE. After serving pastorates in that Conference, he transferred to ROCK RIVER CONFERENCE and obtained the M.A. degree from NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY, 1947.

In 1938 he was married to Edith Elizabeth Batty, of Ware, Mass. Their three children are Arnold, a missionary in PERU, Catherine Elizabeth and Harold Dean.

Sherman and his wife were accepted as missionaries in Cuba in 1950 and served churches in the Isle of Pines, Guantanamo, and Cardenas. In 1960, because of communism in Cuba, they were transferred to Argentina where he has served pastoral charges in ROSARIO and BUENOS AIRES. He is also editor of Pampa Breezes.

GARFIELD EVANS

O. L. SHERMAN

SHERMAN, ODIE LEE (1897-), American bishop of the A.M.E. CHURCH, was born in Jacksonville, Texas. He received the A.B. degree from SHORTER COLLEGE in ARKANSAS. Later he was awarded honorary degrees from both Shorter College and WILBERFORCE UNIVERSITY. He was ordained DEACON in 1923 and ELDER in 1925, pastored in Arkansas and served as a presiding elder for almost twenty-seven years before being elected to the episcopacy in 1956. He resides at Waco, Texas and presides over the work of the Tenth Episcopal Area District comprising seven annual conferences in the state of Texas.

R. R. Wright, The Bishops. 1963.

GRANT S. SHOCKLEY

SHETLAND ISLES. The first Shetland Methodist was John Nicolson (1790-1828). In his teens he left his home near Aith, serving in the Napoleonic Wars in the Royal Artillery. While stationed at the Tower of London in 1810, he was won for Christ by a Methodist fellow soldier. Nicolson became an EXHORTER in the London East Circuit. His wife's unfaithfulness and his own ill health led him to return to the Shetlands in about 1820. He traveled from place to place, mostly in the West Mainland, found shelter and support where he could, and gathered a Methodist society of about twenty members, with many more hearers. The Gruting Manse was built in 1922 as his memorial.

Nicolson in time wrote to the president of the Wesleyan Conference and the Missionary Committee asking that regular preachers be appointed to the Shetlands. After a personal investigation in June and July, 1822, Daniel McAllum reported on the destitute religious state of many of the 22,000 islanders, whose needs could not be met by the 12 ministers of the Established Church, each with several parishes and faced with difficult terrain; an aged Independent minister with a scattered flock of 150; and a Baptist lay preacher with a congregation of about 45.

In September, 1822, the first Methodist preachers arrived. John Raby, a Lancastrian, had served seven years in the West Indies; his two-year ministry was concentrated on the North Isles. The younger man, SAMUEL DUNN, was in his fourth year on trial. A fervent Cornishman, a typical revivalist and controversialist, later prolific in producing books and pamphlets, Dunn accepted great hardship as he traveled the Shetland mainland and nearby islands. He won support for Methodism but gained himself several enemies. Just before his three-year term in Shetland ended, a small-scale pamphlet war broke out, with Dunn at the center of the dispute. "Methodism will never thrive in Shetland," wrote A Calm Observer: "The reflecting portion of the people looks upon Methodism as a combination of arrogance, fanaticism, and unscriptural self-righteousness. Their chapels will soon be exposed for sale, and Messrs. Dunn, Lewis and Co. be released from their protracted and self-created martyrdom."

Despite such anonymous criticism, despite an aggrieved ex-Wesleyan, and Presbyterian and Baptist suspicion, and despite Dunn's turbulence, these were times of optimism and expansion. By 1832, membership rose to fourteen hundred, with fourteen chapels and several other preaching places, and six ministers. A highly respectable Shetlander named his child after Dunn. This success came not simply because Methodist theology and ethos were more attractive; it was the fact that the preachers were not Scots, and that their confident, vigorous activity was guided by ADAM CLARKE, who raised funds for the support of the preachers and the chapels, and ensured that many destitute people received practical aid. "The clothing I send, you are to divide with the most necessitous," urged Dr. Clarke in 1827, "whether they be Methodists or not. In this, let there be no respect of persons." Clarke took a personal interest in the Shetland Mission from the start, visiting the islands in 1826 and 1828; the Adam Clarke Memorial Church, Lerwick, built in 1870, replaced a chapel built there in 1824. "Since Dr. Clarke's death the mission has rather drooped," admitted James Catton, appointed chairman that very year, 1832. In seven years the membership fell by half. It seemed possible that, like the shortlived work in ORKNEY (1834-41, with never more than 200 members), Shetland Methodism would collapse. By 1845, however, the former level was regained, the Presbyterian disruption of 1843 adding 250 members to the Walls Circuit for a few years. The highest peak was reached in 1866, when there were over 2,000 members, 22 chapels, 5 circuits; and here an important factor was the guidance of John Stephenson, father of THOMAS B. STEPHENSON, who from 1849 revived the role of Clarke. He was followed by James Loutit and various Home Mission secretaries: the work still relies on Home Mission grants. The virtual isolation of this smallest British Methodist District and difficulties of travel encouraged, until recent years, distinctive features which modern pressures have not wholly removed.

In some communities a total indifference to denominational ties can be seen to have led the way to a more widespread interchurch activity. The only Methodist day school was in North Roe (1858-72), but Sunday schools, Bible classes, and more recently youth clubs and fellowships have made valuable contributions to community life. Family traditions are strong. In Fair Isles, for instance, the Wilson family, which pioneered the work, has provided three generations of LOCAL PREACHERS to maintain it. Shetland-born ministers include William Goudie (1857-1922) and his brother James (1861-1934). Sons of a Channerville local preacher, both were missionaries in India, the former being secretary of the Wesleyan Missionary Society at the time of its centenary, and president-elect at the time of his death. From 1870 onward, the decline from emigration and other causes was countered by revivalist tactics; gains were conserved by a locally recruited lay agency. This held the membership at around sixteen hundred until 1910, followed by a steady drop to about eight hundred in 1966. Even so, despite social factors which in Shetland as much as elsewhere in Britain work against the Church, one Shetlander in twenty is still a Methodist member.

HAROLD R. BOWES

SHETTLES, ELIJAH LEROY (1852-1940), American minister, editor, author, and book-collector, was born in Pontotoc County, Miss., March 22, 1852. His parents, Abner and Caroline Browning Shettles, were natives of SOUTH CAROLINA.

His parents had very little of material things, and it became necessary for the son to work on a farm, and at times in a store. He later taught school, although endowed with little formal training at that time. In his account, Recollections of a Long Life (1935), the details of his life are graphically related. When he was almost forty years of age, he united with the Methodist Church; the QUARTERLY CONFERENCE granted him LOCAL PREACHER'S license, and the TEXAS CONFERENCE admitted him on trial and assigned him to a circuit. In the seventeen years spent in the pastorate, there was a period of four years at Bryan, Texas, and later at Pittsburg, Texas, in each of which places he erected churches.

During his pastorate at Galveston, Texas, he married Mrs. Lillie Letts.

His Conference appointments were: Alum Creek (1892); Galveston West End (1893-1894); McKee Street, Houston (1895); 24th Street, Austin (1896 and 1899); Hempstead and Waller in 1897; Eagle Lake (1898); Bryan Station (1900-1903); Pittsburg Station (1904-1905); San Augustine District (1906); Calvert-Marlin District (1908-1910); Cameron Station (1911); Houston (1912); Navasota (1913-1916); Richmond Station (1917); Brenham District (1918-1921), all in Texas. He retired from the ministry in 1921, and devoted the rest of his life to collecting volumes on Methodist history, which books were placed at SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIVERSITY and Texas University at Austin.

When MACUM PHELAN prepared to write a history of Texas Methodism, he conferred with Shettles, who gave him much historical material for the proposed history. Shettles was the Associate Editor of The Texas Methodist Historical Quarterly (published from July 1909 through January 1911).

He died on May 28, 1940, in Austin, Texas, and was buried in that city.

Journal of the Texas Conference, 1940.

O. W. Nail, Southwest Texas Conference, 1958.

E. L. Shettles, The Recollections of a Long Life. Austin, 1935. Southwestern Christian Advocate, June 6, 1940.

MRS. JOHN H. WARNICK

SHILLINGTON, THOMAS AVERELL (1800-1874), Irish layman, followed his father, Thomas Shillington, Sr., in the commercial life of Portadown in the north of IRELAND. He was CLASS LEADER, circuit STEWARD, served on district committees, and was in the forefront of the movement to increase lay responsibility in connexional affairs. For many years he was treasurer of the Chapel Fund, and was active in the foundation both of the Wesleyan Connexional School at Dublin (see WESLEY COLLEGE, Dublin), and METHODIST COLLEGE, Belfast.

In all this he followed and developed his father's tradition of lay service to Methodism. The father had been Chairman of the Dungannon Committee, a group of dedicated laymen who preserved the legal control over connexional property for the official Methodist Conference at the time of the secession of the PRIMITIVE Wesleyan METHODISTS. This attitude was taken despite Shillington's friendship for ADAM AVERELL.

Thomas Averell Shillington also had a tradition of service to the local community. In local government he had a position equivalent to that of Mayor today, and in 1865 became a member of the Senate of the then Queen's University of Ireland. So admired and trusted was his personal integrity and fairness, that he was often called upon to act as a mediator by those in dispute.

John Dwyer, Christian Thoroughness: A Memorial Sketch of Thomas Averell Shillington. 1875. FREDERICK JEFFERY

SHILOH CHURCH, near Pittsburg Landing, Hardin County, Tenn., is located in Shiloh National Park. According to a deed dated Oct. 29, 1852, John J. Ellis donated four acres of land to the M. E. Church, South. A one-room log church twenty-four by thirty feet was soon erected under the leadership of Jack Wolfe, a Methodist preacher.

The Civil War Battle of Shiloh was fought in the vicinity of the church, April 6-7, 1862, with Generals U. S. GRANT and Albert Sidney Johnston as the opposing commanders. Following the battle the Union soldiers either burned the church or used its timbers to repair roads heavily damaged by rain.

During the 1870's a sort of arbor with puncheon seats covered with boards was constructed on the church site and used for worship services. In 1881 a frame church somewhat larger than the original building was erected on the old rock foundation. In 1929 the basement of a new rock and brick church was constructed; because of the economic depression the building was not completed until 1949. It was dedicated, Aug. 31, 1952.

In 1971 Shiloh and Christ Church formed the Christ Church charge in the Cookeville District, TENNESSEE CONFERENCE. Shiloh reported sixty-six members, property valued at $21,300, and $1,893 raised for all purposes during the year.

Church History, McNairy-Hardin Group Ministry. (Pamphlet). March, 1968.

M. A. Milligan, Seeing Shiloh, 1862 and Today. (Leaflet from Library of Congress.)

Minutes of the Tennessee Conference, 1971. ALBEA GODBOLD

SHINKLE, AMOS (1818-1892), American layman of great influence in KENTUCKY Methodism, was born Aug. 18, 1818, in Brown County, Ohio. In 1846 he moved from Ohio to Covington, Ky., and was a leading citizen of that city until his death in 1892. His influence was greatly felt in both Covington and CINCINNATI, Ohio. His chief contribution to these two cities was the building of the suspension bridge across the Ohio River to connect them.

For many years Shinkle was the best-known layman of the M.E. Church in Kentucky. After the formation of the KENTUCKY CONFERENCE of the M.E. Church in 1866, he became an aggressive leader and helped to build churches and further the work of the conference. For many years Union M.E. Church in Covington, his home church, was one of the outstanding churches of Methodism and was served by many distinguished ministers. Shinkle, through his gifts toward the building of new churches on a matching basis, expedited the church extension program of the M.E. Church in Kentucky.

Shinkle's chief interest, however, was the establishment of a pension fund for retired ministers. Through his initial gifts, this was made possible, and he was named the first treasurer of the fund and was its largest benefactor. He was a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1872—the first one to which lay members were admitted—and was elected to membership in each of the five successive General Conferences.

The home he built for himself and his family was the largest and most elaborate in all northern Kentucky. Some years after his death in 1892, his family donated it to the SALVATION ARMY, and it now forms the nucleus for the institution known as Booth Hospital of Covington, Ky.

JOHN O. GROSS

SHINN, ASA (1781-1853), American preacher, was the chief polemical writer for the liberals in the constitutional controversy that raged in the M.E. Church in the 1820's. After the rupture of the Church, in 1828, Shinn went with the METHODIST PROTESTANTS where he gave large leadership to that new denomination during its initial years.

This son of Quaker parents was born in NEW JERSEY and brought as a child to the mountain wilds of western VIRGINIA, where, by 1795, we find the family residing in Harrison County on the west fork of the Monongahela River. Asa was converted in a Methodist meeting in 1799, the year of the organization of the Little Kanawha Circuit in that region, and in 1801 was admitted as a preacher in the BALTIMORE CONFERENCE.

He spent his ministry in the territory of the PITTSBURGH CONFERENCE. When the Conference was organized in 1825, he was named presiding elder on the Pittsburgh District. Though he never had the opportunity of attending school, by self-education he made himself a master of English. He was the chief contributor to the Mutual Rights, the organ of the "reformers" in the constitutional controversy in the M.E. Church, where he wrote under the pen name of Bartimeus. In 1813 he published his Essay on the Plan of Salvation, and in 1840 a work on The Benevolence and Rectitude of the Supreme Being. It was Asa Shinn who argued the appeal of the expelled preachers Dorsey and Pool before the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1828. Withdrawing from the M.E. Church after the rejection of that appeal, he led in the organizing of the Methodist Protestant Church. He was President of the first western Conference of the "Reformers" at CINCINNATI in 1829, the first President of the Pittsburgh Conference of the M.P. Church in 1833, and in 1838 and 1842 he served as President of the General Conference of the M.P. Church. The lingering effects of a kick in the head by a horse in his youth caused him to lapse into insanity four times in 1813, 1819, 1828, and 1843 until his death.

T. H. Colhouer, Sketches of the Founders. 1880.

The Mutual Rights.

M. Simpson, Cyclopaedia. 1878.

W. G. Smeltzer, Headwaters of the Ohio. 1951.

W. GUY SMELTZER

SHIPLEY, DAVID CLARK (1907-), American educator, theologian and professor of historical theology at the METHODIST THEOLOGICAL SCHOOL at Delaware, Ohio, was born at McKeesport, Pa., on March 26, 1907, and was educated at ASBURY COLLEGE, the UNIVERSITY of SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA, and received the Ph.D. degree from Yale in 1942. He did post graduate work in Cambridge, England. Dr. Shipley joined the SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA-ARIZONA CONFERENCE in 1929, and served as pastor for four years. He then went to the University of California at Los Angeles (1933-36) and then to Yale, 1936-37. He became professor of historical theology at GARRETT THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, 1945-55; professor of Christian ethics and historical theology at SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIVERSITY, Dallas, 1955-60; and the professor of theology at the Methodist Theological School in Ohio at Delaware in 1960.

Dr. Shipley has delivered several series of lectures at various universities and colleges, has served on the Commission on Ecumenical Consultation for the Methodist Church, is a consultant on the editorial board of the Library of Protestant Thought, Oxford University Press; a member of the American Theological Society; of the American Society of Church History, and other learned bodies. He has contributed to the Encyclopaedia Britannica, the Westminster Dictionary of Christian Education, The History of American Methodism, and articles to various professional journals. He continues to teach in the Methodist Theological School, Delaware, Ohio.

Who's Who in The Methodist Church, 1966.

N. B. H.

SHIPLEY, RICHARD LARKIN (1879-1947), American minister and editor of the M.P. CHURCH, was born at BALTIMORE, Md., June 10, 1879. In 1903 he graduated from the WESTMINSTER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY and united with the MARYLAND CONFERENCE. He married Cora Belle Roberts.

Until 1932 he served important pastorates and in that year was elected editor of The Methodist Protestant-Recorder at Baltimore. This periodical was discontinued on the Union of American Methodism in 1939. Shipley then became pastor of the West Baltimore Church, which he served until his sudden death on Nov. 25, 1947. He was interred in Woodlawn Cemetery at Baltimore.

JAMES H. STRAUGHN

SHIPP, ALBERT MICAIAH (1819-1887), American minister, university professor, college president, Seminary dean, church historian, was born in Stokes County, N. C., Jan. 15, 1819.

He was graduated from the University of North Carolina, A.B., 1840; subsequently that institution conferred upon him the LL.D. degree. He was awarded the D.D. degree by RANDOLPH-MACON COLLEGE.

The SOUTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE of 1851 elected him to the first regular Board of Trustees of WOFFORD COLLEGE. At the first meeting of the Board in 1853, he was absent but was elected to the chair of English Literature. He declined acceptance, choosing to remain as Professor of History in the University of North Carolina.

At the Wofford College commencement of 1859, the first president, WILLIAM M. WIGHTMAN, resigned, and Shipp was elected president. In this position he served with distinction for the ensuing sixteen years—through the dark days of the Civil War until 1875. He succeeded in increasing the endowment of the College to $200,000 before the ill fortunes of the War virtually dissolved the holdings. A commencement program of 1868 notes that President Shipp, who was known for his scholarly attainments, delivered in Latin the farewell address to the graduating class.

Before coming to Wofford College, during the years 1840-49, Shipp had served as an itinerant Methodist minister, serving on circuits, on stations, as presiding elder, and for two and a half years as President of GREENSBORO Female COLLEGE; and from 1849 to 1859 he was Professor of French, History, and Literature at the University of North Carolina.

Leaving Wofford in 1875, he went to VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY, Nashville, Tenn., where for ten years he was Professor of Exegetical Theology (three years Dean of the Theological Faculty, and three years Vice Chancellor of Vanderbilt University). He resigned in 1885 and retired to his home, Rose Hill, near Cheraw, S. C.

In December 1876, the South Carolina Conference requested Shipp to write the history of Methodism in South Carolina. This he did, stipulating that any profits from the work, Methodism in South Carolina, go to the benefit of aged preachers. He was a delegate from the South Carolina Conference to the GENERAL CONFERENCES of the M.E. Church, South, 1848-1886.

Shipp and his wife, who was Mary Gillespie of Rose Hill Plantation, Marlboro County, are buried in the Gillespie Cemetery near Wallace, S. C.

An elegant, modern dormitory, Shipp Hall, was formally opened in his memory on the Wofford College Campus on Oct. 26, 1963.

D. D. Wallace, Wofford College. 1951. J. MARVIN RAST

SHIPSTONE, EVA (1915-), is the ninth principal, and the fourth Indian, to head ISABELLA THOBURN COLLEGE. She is a product of Methodism in India, being a member of the British Methodist Church. She was educated in the Lal Bagh Girls' School and Isabella Thoburn College, both founded by the Methodist Episcopal pioneer ISABELLA THOBURN. Dr. Shipstone earned a Master's degree at BOSTON UNIVERSITY and a Ph.D. degree at Harvard University.

She was born in LUCKNOW on Dec. 23, 1915. Her father was on the faculty of LUCKNOW CHRISTIAN COLLEGE, of which he was a graduate. In the principalship she succeeded Dr. Evangeline M. Thillyampalam, an Anglican born in Ceylon, although Methodism in India contributed heavily to her education.

She came to Isabella Thoburn as a freshman, graduated with an excellent record and returned as a teacher of biology. She took a Master of Science degree from Allahabad University and a Ph.D. degree from Columbia, and, after fifteen years as principal of colleges in CEYLON and five years in North India, she returned to Isabella Thoburn as principal in 1955 following the death of Dr. SARAH CHAKKO.

Like all her predecessors except for Miss Thoburn herself, Dr. Shipstone had been a member of the faculty of the college before she became principal. But she was the first principal born in Uttar Pradesh, the large state of which Lucknow is the capital. Two of her sisters are also graduates of Isabella Thoburn College, and both have served as teachers in girls' high schools.

In 1966 Dr. Shipstone was awarded honorary degrees by GOUCHER and RANDOLPH-MACON COLLEGES.

M. A. Dimmitt, Isabella Thoburn College. 1963.

J. WASKOM PICKETT

SHIRKEY, ALBERT PATTERSON (1904-), American minister and city pastor, was born at Staunton, Va., on Jan. 8, 1904. He was educated at RANDOLPH-MACON COLLEGE and at the Theological Seminary at Richmond, Va. Trinity University granted him the D.D. degree in 1943 and AMERICAN UNIVERSITY in 1954, ASBURY the LL.D. in 1966. He married Leona Lauck on June 21, 1929, and they have three sons. He first joined the VIRGINIA CONFERENCE in 1928, and served for a time as pastor of Branch Memorial Church in RICHMOND, 1927-31; Pace Memorial in the same city, 1931-35; and then transferred to the BALTIMORE CONFERENCE where he was sent to Asbury Church in WASHINGTON, D.C., 1935-38. He was then transferred to the great Travis Park Church in SAN ANTONIO, Texas, where he served from 1938-49; then to St. Paul's Church, HOUSTON, Texas, 1949-50. He then came back to the Baltimore Conference and was stationed at the Mount Vernon Place Church in Washington, where he served from 1950 until his retirement in June 1969. Dr. Shirkey has been president of the Board of Christian SOCIAL CONCERNS of his conference; of its Board of EVANGELISM, 1956-64; was a delegate to the WORLD METHODIST CONFERENCE in Oslo in 1961; the president of the Greater Washington Ministerial Union, 1952-54, and of the Greater Washington Area Council of Churches, 1955-57; a member of the executive council of the Methodist Commission on CHAPLAINS, 1956-64, and also a member of the National Council of Chaplains; and was a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCES of 1940, '44, '48, and '60. He was a member of the President's Committee on Juvenile Delinquency and also a member of the President's Inaugural Committee, 1957; the Commission on Alcohol Studies; the co-chairman of the National Conference of Christians and Jews in Washington, and a director of the GOODWILL INDUSTRIES in the same city. He has also served as vice-president of the Board of Sibley Memorial Hospital; trustee of American University and of Asbury College, and upon the Board of Governors of WESLEY THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY. He has also been an organizer and director of World Brotherhood through the Church, Strasbourg, France and Hattenheim, Germany, 1950-51. He has written The Lord is My Shepherd, 1963, and Meditations on the Lord's Prayer, 1964. Other publications include Wings for the Soul (Poems, 1966) and Love Never Fails (meditations, 1967). He continues to reside in Washington, D.C.

Who's Who in America, Vol. 34.

Who's Who in The Methodist Church, 1966.

N. B. H.

SHIRLEY, FRANCES (1702-1778), Anglican Evangelical, an aunt of Lady SELINA HUNTINGDON, was one of the court beauties in the reign of George I. From 1749 she actively supported the work of the revival and opened her house at Twickenham for preaching. She was the patroness of JAMES HERVEY and a correspondent of GEORGE WHITEFIELD.

A. SKEVINGTON WOOD

SHIRLEY, WALTER (1726-1786), British Evangelical Anglican of the eighteenth century, was brother of the cruel Earl of Ferrers, Cousin to SELINA LADY HUNTINGDON, he had been a typical hunting parson, but appears to have changed his ways. He was converted under HENRY VENN, though HENRY MOORE claimed that part of the influence came from JOHN WESLEY. Shirley became rector of Loughrea, in Galway, IRELAND, and was an evangelical preacher who had to face opposition from the Bishop of Clonfert.

Shirley's chief historical significance is in connection with the controversy to which he gave his name. The 1770 Methodist CONFERENCE had taken stock of its relation to Calvinism, and had sought to define more closely the statement made at the 1744 Conference that "we have leaned too much towards Calvinism." It was emphasized that there was a place for faithfulness in Christian living: "We ought steadily to assert . . . that if a man is not faithful in the unrighteous mammon, God will not give him the true riches." Further, the maxim that "a man is to do nothing in order to justification" was labeled as being false; it being shown that loving obedience to God must be the characteristic of the Christian.

The attack on these propositions from the Calvinistic side was led by Shirley, who wrote a circular letter proposing that at the time of Wesley's 1771 Conference, which was to be held at BRISTOL, a rival meeting should be held. The plan was that the members of this rival meeting should then demand from Wesley's Conference the recantation of the 1770 Minutes. The 1771 Conference was, Wesley wryly remarked, better attended than usual because of the excitement. On Thursday, Aug. 8, 1771, Shirley attended with nine or ten others. After two hours of discussion it was Wesley's belief that "they were satisfied that we were not so dreadful heretics as they imagined, but were tolerably sound in the faith." An account supposed to be from Shirley's own hand acknowledged that he had been too hasty in his judgment of Wesley's sentiments. The controversy continued for some time longer, however, being taken up by such writers as AUGUSTUS TOPLADY, and while it reflected a genuine disagreement between Calvinist and Arminian, it pointed also to the extreme difficulty of drawing up a formulation of belief in the area of theology.

B. J. N. GALLIERS

SHOEMAKER, ESTHER (1901-), a missionary of The Methodist Church, served in INDIA from 1927 to 1966. She was born in Norristown, Pa., Aug. 25, 1901. She was nurtured in the Friends' Church. She holds the B.A. degree from Wilson College at Chambersburg, Pa., the M.D. degree from Indiana University, and the diploma from the National Board of Medical Examiners. She had many contacts with Methodism during her years of study, and in 1926 she joined the M.E. Church in Chambersburg. She went to India as a missionary in 1927 and was appointed to the Ellen Thoburn Cowan Hospital in Kolar, Mysore State, South India.

This hospital was established in memory of Ellen Thoburn Cowan's work as a home-base secretary of the WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY. Mrs. Cowan was a sister of Bishop JAMES THOBURN and of ISABELLA THOBURN. The hospital became Dr. Shoemaker's home and work center, and remained so throughout her forty years of notable service.

She was soon recognized as an able hospital administrator. In 1928, she was named as a Methodist representative on the managing committee of the Christian Medical College at Vellore, and except during furloughs, she served in that position until 1963. For some years she was on the executive committee of the college council.

She was active in her local church and in the SOUTH INDIA ANNUAL CONFERENCE. She was official correspondent of the South India Woman's Conference for twenty-five years, was on the executive board and interim committee for many years, was once delegate to the CENTRAL CONFERENCE, and frequently represented the Methodist Church in interdenominational gatherings including the triennial meeting of the National Christian Council of India. She was secretary of the Central Conference Council on Medical Work for twenty years, and for more than half of that time was also secretary of the medical scholarship committee. Her influence helped many able young people to commit themselves to the healing ministry and to prepare for it.

J. N. Hollister, Southern Asia. 1956.

J. WASKOM PICKETT

SHOEMAKER COLLEGE, Scott County, Virginia, was established in 1844 with funds left by James L. Shumaker, a businessman of Estelville, the present Gate City, Va. After many years the buildings were transferred to the county and became a public school. The endowment funds were given to EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE.

SHOOK, JACOB (1749-1832), early American layman, was born in PENNSYLVANIA and went with his father to Burke County, N. C. After serving in the Revolution he settled in 1786 at the present town of Clyde in Haywood County, N. C., where he is said to have built the first frame house in the county. The house still stands, considerably enlarged, and a road marker has been erected there. The attic room where the first Methodist society in the county met has been preserved with pulpit and chair.

On Nov. 30, 1810, Bishop ASBURY, Bishop MCKENDREE, John McGee and HENRY BOEHM crossed the aboriginal

Cataloochee Trail from east TENNESSEE to western NORTH CAROLINA and stayed all night at "Vater Shuck's."

To commemorate this trip road markers have been erected by the State, the route has been designated and marked as the ASBURY TRAIL, and the Boy Scouts of America have established the Asbury Trail Award and confer a medal on Scouts who hike the rugged way followed by Bishop Asbury.

Jacob Shook died about 1832 and bequeathed a tract of land at Clyde for a CAMP MEETING site. The appointment was long called Camp Ground. It is now Louisa Chapel, named for Shook's unmarried granddaughter. It is the successor of the society organized by SAMUEL EDNEY in the Shook home and bears the date of 1798. There are numerous Shook descendants in the area today.

F. Asbury, Journal and Letters. 1958.

W. L. Grissom, North Carolina. 1905. LOUISE L. QUEEN

ROY H. SHORT

SHORT, ROY HUNTER (1902-), American clergyman and bishop, was born in LOUISVILLE, Ky., on Oct. 19, 1902, the son of Jesse Peters and Minnie (Badders) Short.

He received the following degrees: University of Louisville, A.B., 1924; Louisville Presbyterian Seminary, B.D., 1927, and Th.M., 1929; KENTUCKY WESLEYAN (Winchester, Ky., now located at Owensboro), D.D., 1939; FLORIDA SOUTHERN COLLEGE, LL.D., 1949; TENNESSEE WESLEYAN, Litt.D., 1957; EMORY UNIVERSITY, D.D., 1957; EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE, D.Cn.L., 1957.

Roy Hunter Short married Louise Clay Baird of Jeffersonville, Ind. on Sept. 1, 1926. They have three children, Hunter Baird, Murray Malcolm, and Riley Phillips.

He was ordained to the ministry in 1921 and joined the LOUISVILLE CONFERENCE. His KENTUCKY pastorates included Jefferson Circuit, 1921-22; Mt. Holly and Mill Creek, 1922-26; Oakdale Church, Louisville, 1926-28; Marcus Lindsey Church, Louisville, 1928-30; Greenville, 1930-35; superintendent, Elizabethtown (Kentucky) District, 1935-37; superintendent, Louisville (Kentucky) District, 1937-41; pastor, St. Paul Church, Louisville, 1941-44.

He was chairman of the denomination's 1956-60 emphasis on the local church. This was a program to strengthen and expand the more than 39,000 Methodist churches in the United States. He was a member of the Bishops Committee of Nine on 1960-64 quadrennial program.

Bishop Short was secretary of the COUNCIL OF BISHOPS of The Methodist Church, 1956-68; president, College of Bishops of the Methodist Southeastern Jurisdiction, 1957-58; chairman, Joint Committee on Christian Education in Foreign Fields, 1956-64; chairman, Methodist Interboard Commission on the Local Church, 1956-64; member, Methodist Co-ordinating Council, president of the Board of Missions, 1964-68, and has been a member of the Board of Publication. He was a member of the GENERAL CONFERENCES of 1938, '40, '44, and '48, and of the Uniting Conference of 1939.

He is a trustee of LAKE JUNALUSKA (North Carolina) Methodist Assembly; Emory University; and was president of the Board of Trustees, SCARRITT COLLEGE, 1953-64. He was made a Kentucky Colonel by Governor Lawrence Wetherby in 1951.

Bishop Short was the editor of The Upper Room, an interdenominational devotional guide published by the Methodist General Board of Evangelism, 1944-48. He is the author of Your Church and You (a membership manual for Methodist boys and girls), 1943; Evangelistic Preaching; Evangelism Through the Local Church, September, 1956; My Great Redeemer's Praise, 1957; and One Witness in One World, the study book for the 1964-68 quadrennium.

He was elected bishop in June 1948, and assigned to the JACKSONVILLE (Florida) Area. From 1952 to 1964, he served the NASHVILLE (Tennessee) Area, and in 1964 he was appointed to the Louisville (Kentucky) Area where he administers the work of the Louisville and Kentucky Annual Conferences, comprising more than 1,000 churches with a total membership of approximately 200,000.

Who's Who in America, Vol. 34.

Who's Who in The Methodist Church, 1966.

N. B. H.

SHORT CREEK CHURCH, located two miles southwest of West Liberty, is the oldest church in Ohio County, W. Va. From around 1785 to 1807, the society met in the home of John Spahr, who settled in the area about 1770. Wilson Lee, a member of the Christmas Conference and a flame of fire, was pastor in 1785. Members were obliged to carry their arms to worship to protect them from a sudden onset of the savages who yet provided the country.

Bishop FRANCIS ASBURY preached "to a crowd at John Spahr's in 1803," and on Aug. 23, 1807, Asbury wrote: "I preached in an excellent stone meeting house on Short Creek to about one thousand souls." In 1809 WILLIAM MCKENDREE, the first native bishop, dedicated the church, whose building had galleries and port holes resembling a fort.

RICHARD WHATCOAT, later bishop, was presiding elder over the Ohio Circuit in 1788. Henry Willis, the first man ordained by Asbury, was presiding elder in 1789. He was the traveling companion of Francis Asbury and JESSE LEE. Thomas Scott was pastor in 1793. After his marriage the salary was only $128 and Scott left the ministry and became the first Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Ohio.

A wonder of the early ministry, VALENTINE COOK, the most distinguished alumnus of COKEBURY COLLEGE, was presiding elder in 1796 and 1797. He is credited with introducing the mourner's bench in CAMP MEETINGS.

John Spahr's son-in-law, gifted Jacob Young, was pastor in 1810 (and in 1830-31). One camp meeting had about fifty tents and forty wagons. The meeting was annoyed by rowdies selling liquor. When they would not listen to reason, Young took a strong man and a hammer with him, and knocked the heads out of the casks and spilled the whiskey.

GEORGE BROWN, one of the founders of the M.P. Church, was pastor in 1820. His predecessor, the eloquent John Waterman, was driven out of Wheeling by a proslavery mob headed by one Noah Zane. One of Brown's sermons converted Zane, and he had Brown to sign the emancipation papers of two of his slaves.

L. L. HAMLINE (later bishop) was pastor in 1830. The circuit's membership was 602. Alexander Campbell heard Hamline preach and agreed with his doctrine.

The present two-story brick church, valued at $50,500, was built under L. H. Jordan, in 1872. Jordan was one of the founders of WEST VIRGINIA WESLEYAN COLLEGE. With 162 members in 1965, Short Creek, probably, has been the best open-country church in the State for more than a century and a half.

F. Asbury, Journal and Letters. 1958.

George Brown, Recollections of an Itinerant Life. Cincinnati: R. W. Carrol and Co., 1866.

Journal of the West Virginia Conference.

J. Young, Autobiography. 1857.

JESSE A. EARL

SHORTER, JAMES ALEXANDER (1817-1887), American pioneer missionary to the Southwest, was born in WASHINGTON, D.C., on Feb. 14, 1817. After becoming a barber in PHILADELPHIA, Pa., he went west to Galena, Ill., to practice his trade. He was converted in 1839 and united with the M.E. Church there and after that year he returned to the east, became an A.M.E. in Bethel Church, Philadelphia, returned to Washington, D.C., was admitted to the Baltimore Conference in 1846, ordained deacon in 1848 and elder in 1850. Following an itinerancy of twenty-two years, Shorter was elected to the bishopric. While in this office he organized African Methodism in the southwest into the following annual conferences: Tennessee (September 1878), Mississippi (October 1868), Texas (October 1868), Kansas (1876).

R. R. Wright, The Bishops. 1963.

GRANT S. SHOCKLEY

SHORTER COLLEGE, North Little Rock, Arkansas, was founded by the Arkansas Annual Conference in the Bethel A.M.E. Church, LITTLE ROCK, in 1886, and called Bethel University. In 1887 the name was changed to Bethel Institute and in 1892 it was again renamed Shorter University and chartered in that name on May 18, 1894, at its present location in North Little Rock.

In 1903 its charter was amended to rename it Shorter College as it is now known. Flipper College, an A.M.E. school founded in 1917 at Talihina, Okla., was merged with Shorter in 1942. The Thomas H. Jackson Theological Seminary is located on the campus of Shorter College.

GRANT S. SHOCKLEY

SHOWERS, JOHN BALMER (1879-1962), American E.U.B. bishop, publisher, editor, seminary professor, and pastor, was born Sept. 29, 1879, near Paris, Ontario, CANADA. The son of Joseph Smith and Margaret (Morrow) Showers, he was reared in a devout home and first preached as a high school boy when his minister father became ill. After his early education in Canada, Balmer graduated from LEBANON VALLEY COLLEGE (A.B., 1907), and Bonebrake (later UNITED) THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY (B.D., 1910). Licensed to preach by his local church in 1898 and by Ontario Conference, CHURCH OF THE UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST, in 1899, he was ordained by Erie Conference, Sept. 7, 1902. He filled several pastorates: Dechard Circuit (1900-3) and Bradford Station (1903-4) in Pennsylvania, Westfield College (1906-7) in ILLINOIS, and Belmont Mission in OHIO (1908-10). On April 11, 1911, he married Justina Lorenz.

From 1910-26 Showers served as professor of New Testament Literature and Interpretation at Bonebrake Theological Seminary. Post-graduate study was carried out at Chicago (1910-11) and Berlin (1911-12) Universities and on a research venture to the Near East (1922). Beginning in 1926 he turned to denominational publishing interests, serving as associate editor of the Religious Telescope (1926-33), associate publishing agent (1931-33), and finally as publisher of The Otterbein Press (1933-45). The GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1945 elected him to the episcopacy and he was assigned to be bishop first of the Eastern Area and then of the North Central Area. From 1954-62, he lived as bishop emeritus in Dayton, Ohio, where he died on Sept. 25, 1962.

Dayton Daily News, Sept. 26, 1962.

Dayton Journal Herald, Sept. 26, 1962.

Koontz and Roush, The Bishops. 1950. DONALD K. GORRELL

SHOWERS, JUSTINA LORENZ (1885-), American E.U.B. church woman, was born Jan. 4, 1885 in DAYTON, Ohio, the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. E. S. LORENZ, best known as the founder of the Lorenz Publishing Company, publishers of church music.

Following her graduation from Bryn Mawr College, Bryn Mawr, Pa., she served briefly as the secretary of Young Women's Work of the Women's Missionary Association, UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST. On April 11, 1911, she married J. BALMER SHOWERS, professor at Bonebrake (now UNITED) THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY in Dayton, Ohio, later publisher of The Otterbein Press, and then bishop of the Church.

Mrs. Showers is known best for her capable leadership in the women's work of the conference and the General Church (Trustee, WMA, 1921-46; President, WMA, 1941-46; President, Women's Society of World Service, 1947-55; President Emeritus, WSW); also for her leadership in the YWCA, having served as president of the Dayton YWCA for a number of years, and for her gracious hospitality. Their home was always "a home away from home" to missionaries and their children, a number of the latter living in the home during high school and college days. Many conferences and general meetings have been held in this home. In recent years their home has become Mission Manor for missionaries on furlough, Mrs. Showers maintaining only her apartment.

MARY McLANACHAN

SHREVEPORT, LOUISIANA, U.S.A., is the strongest Methodist center in LOUISIANA. In 1839 Shreveport was incorporated under a charter granted by the Louisiana Legislature; and on March 24 of that same year Bishop Leonidas K. Polk, Missionary Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church, came by boat from Ft. Smith, Ark., to conduct the first recorded religious service in English in the Shreveport area. This was the beginning of Protestantism in northern Louisiana. In 1845 the M.E. Church, South began in Shreveport. Since there were not enough Methodist men to form a board of STEWARDS, a Baptist layman was borrowed to complete the organization. At a cost of $1,000, a Methodist building was erected. It was a small frame structure about thirty-five by forty feet on Market and Fannin Streets. For the next thirty-nine years, this was the only building of the Methodist denomination. It was enlarged from time to time.

In 1847 Robert J. Harp was appointed as the first regular Methodist pastor in Shreveport. This minister is remembered by a beautiful memorial window in First Church, now one of the ten largest churches of the entire denomination. Not much progress followed for the next twenty years because of the tension preceding and during the War Between the States.

After the war disappointment, sorrow, and poverty were the mood for the next five years, climaxed by the ravages of yellow fever which in 1874 took some twenty percent of the members of the struggling group. At no time were there more than 100 members. By 1881, however, the enrollment had climbed to 250, and the need for expansion was felt. To this end, lots were purchased at the head of Texas Street, and a building estimated at $30,000 was planned and built. On this same location, First Church now serves its vast membership.

The Lakeview Church, which has had numerous locations, is the second church in point of history, but it has never been as strong as either Noel Memorial or Mangum Memorial, the latter named for a young pastor who died of pneumonia contracted in an effort to drain the leaking basement of the church. Another early church bears the name of a distinguished minister of the LOUISIANA CONFERENCE, Wynn Memorial, for ROBERT H. WYNN. In 1970 there were 15,589 Methodists in fifteen churches in Shreveport, and the growth is steady.

The only M.E. Churches ever in the area were Negro bodies. Three very fine groups have existed for many years—St. Paul's, St. James, and Fairfield. They have had to move their locations more than once because of the pressure of an expanding city, but they came out well in the transactions.

Outstanding in Shreveport is Methodism's great college, CENTENARY, which has the distinction of being the oldest college west of the Mississippi River. It was moved from Jackson, La., to the present site in 1908, where it continues to grow and expand.

In this community the influence of the Methodist Church far exceeds its numerical strength, and one can easily detect the work of early and late leaders in its life and spirit.

Broadmoor Church is a family church of suburbia with one of the largest church school attendances of Louisiana Methodism.

The church began Sept. 12, 1939, meeting first on the campus of Centenary College in its old chapel. After several years there, the "triangle" where the present buildings reside became the site of the first building, a two-story fellowship hall and classrooms. A sanctuary was later added and then a three-story educational unit.

Construction now anticipated will double the present education square-footage, providing a multi-use building to seat and serve 780 persons at a meal and a complete youth facility. Four lots for parking have recently been concreted and constructed.

In 1970 Broadmoor Church reported 2,760 members, and property valued at $1,423,148.

First Church has had its origin and general development told in the above account. Its location at the head of Texas Street gives it a unique and commanding position. In 1881, the congregation having increased in membership to 250, purchased its present site for $2,700, and set about building a new church. This was completed in 1889. By 1913 this building proved inadequate and was replaced by the structure now standing.

As the city expanded, Methodism kept pace. The parent church, growing steadily stronger, assisted small congregations in outlying sections. Dedicated ministers, three of whom became bishops—LINUS PARKER, W. ANGIE SMITH and DANA DAWSON—have served First Church. With the assistance of three associates and staff, the church continues to progress. Television and radio broadcasts help to extend its influence. World Service giving far exceeds askings and special missionary projects are sponsored each year at home and abroad. A plan of voluntary proportionate giving, initiated in 1955, has been adopted as the permanent stewardship plan, replacing former canvassing of the membership. Greatly increased facilities have become necessary in recent years in order to serve a 1970 membership of 4,506. With the purchase and gift of surrounding property for parking areas and additional buildings, including the Dana Dawson Educational Building, completed in 1940; and Couch Chapel and the Activities Building in 1964, the value of the complete physical plant is in excess of $3,250,000.

Noel Memorial Church started in 1906 with thirteen charter members, and was the third Methodist church to be established in the fast growing city. The thirteen members met in a small cottage which was owned by J. S. Noel, Sr., located in a section of town where many homes were being built and the population was increasing. The membership grew rapidly. Bishop SETH WARD appointed R. J. Harp as the first minister to the church, which was then usually called "Shreveport City Mission." or sometimes Creswell Street Church. Mr. Noel, being a dedicated Christian and having faith in the growth of the church, decided to build a church which would be adequate for years to come. In 1911 he and his wife had the building started as a memorial to their son, J. S. Noel, Jr., who had met an untimely death.

In February 1913, approximately 300 members moved from the little frame house, which was only a block away, to the new brick building typical of the architecture of that day. The community and the membership of the church continued to grow until in 1924 there were over 1,000 members. In 1925 a fire of unknown origin completely destroyed the interior of the building. Although it was a sad time for the congregation, the loyal members by sacrificial giving, in addition to the insurance carried on the church, made possible the restoration of the building exactly as it had been in the beginning.

Expansion continued until more facilities became a necessity. A building for children's classes was completed in 1941. Before many years this was still inadequate and an activities building, with space for the youth department, offices, a large recreation area and a dining hall to seat some 600 persons was built. The C. W. Lane family, descendants of J. S. Noel, built a memorial chapel to Addie Noel Lane. The chapel completed the attractive appearance of the additions to the original church building. In 1943 Noel Memorial Methodist Church Library was established, and was the first church library in Shreveport. Mrs. Annie T. Munday, who was responsible in cooperation with the WOMAN'S SOCIETY OF CHRISTIAN SERVICE in establishing the library, helped other Methodist churches to establish their own. At this writing there are more than 7,000 volumes on the library shelves. Today the church has more than tripled its missionary efforts within the past few years, making its outreach felt in many parts of the world. The membership of the church at this time is 2,643.

Robert Cashman, A History of the First Methodist Church in Shreveport, Louisiana (1845-1961). N.d.

R. H. Harper, Louisiana. 1949.

W. W. Holmes, A Brief History of the Methodist Church in Shreveport up to 1926. N.d.

Mrs. John L. Scales, Jr., A Short History of First Methodist Church, Shreveport, Louisiana, 1939. N.d.

JOLLY B. HARPER

MRS. T. HALLER JACKSON

SAM NADER

SHREWSBURY, WILLIAM J. (1795-1866). British missionary pioneer, was born at Deal, England. In 1815 he offered for overseas work, being appointed to the WEST INDIES. During pre-emancipation period he served in Tortola, Grenada, and Barbados for nine years, facing great difficulty and suffering constant persecution. In Barbados his house and church were both pulled down, and he narrowly escaped martyrdom. Returning to Britain in 1826 he was immediately appointed to South America, where he did pioneer work until 1836. He began new work in Southeast Africa and founded the Butterworth Station in Kaffirland. He died at Manchester in February, 1866.

R. Shrewsbury, Memorials of Rev. W. J. Shrewsbury. London, 1856.

CYRIL J. DAVEY

SHRINES, LANDMARKS, and SITES of The United Methodist Church, U.S.A. A Methodist Historic Shrine is a site or a structure which has been officially designated as a "Historic Shrine" by the GENERAL CONFERENCE. To qualify for this recognition the site or structure must have been so linked with significant events or outstanding personalities in the origin and development of The United Methodist Church or its antecedents, as to have distinctive historical interest and value for the denomination as a whole, as contrasted with local and regional historical significance, and it must have features which invite and justify pilgrimages.

At the time of union in 1968, The Methodist Church had twelve official Historic Shrines: JOHN STREET CHURCH, New York City; ST. GEORGE'S CHURCH, Philadelphia; BARRATT'S CHAPEL, near Frederica, Del.; ROBERT STRAWBRIDGE'S LOG HOUSE, near New Windsor, Md.; GREEN HILL HOUSE, Louisville, N. C.; ST. SIMON'S ISLAND, Brunswick, Ga.; EDWARD COX HOUSE, Bluff City, Tenn.; WYANDOT INDIAN MISSION, Upper Sandusky, Ohio; REHOBETH CHURCH, near Union, W. Va.; Old McKENDREE CHAPEL, Jackson, Mo.; ACUFF'S CHAPEL, Highway 11-W between

SHRINE MARKER ERECTED AT ST. GEORGE'S IS SIMILAR TO MARKER ERECTED AT ALL SHRINES

Blountville and Kingsport, Tenn.; and the OLD STONE CHURCH Site and Cemetery, Leesburg, Va. The E.U.B. Church had two historic shrines: OTTERBEIN CHURCH, Baltimore; and ALBRIGHT MEMORIAL CHAPEL, Kleinfeltersville, Pa. The 1970 General Conference named WHITAKER'S CHAPEL, near Enfield, N. C., as the fifteenth Historic Shrine.

The Discipline of The United Methodist Church provides that before a site or a structure can be designated as a Historic Shrine by the General Conference, it must first have been officially named a Historic Site by a Jurisdictional or an Annual Conference, and its claims for meriting the status of a Historic Shrine must have been reviewed by the General Commission on Archives and History with such recommendation as that Commission deems proper to the General Conference.

Historic Landmarks: A Methodist Historic Landmark is a site or a structure which has been officially designated as a "Historic Landmark" by the General Conference. The qualifications for a Historic Landmark are the same as those for Historic Shrines in every particular, except that this term is applied to important sites and structures which have little remaining in the way of monuments to invite pilgrimage. Prior to union in 1968, no sites or structures had been designated as Historic Landmarks. The 1970 General Conference named McMAHAN'S CHAPEL in Texas, METHODIST HOSPITAL in Brooklyn, N. Y., and the site of LOVELY LANE CHAPEL, Baltimore, as the first Historic Landmarks.

Historic Sites, Jurisdictional and Annual Conferences may designate as Historic Sites any sites or structures within their boundaries which have been related to significant events and important personalities in the origin and development of The United Methodist Church or its antecedents. The president of the Commission on Archives and History of the conference making such a designation is required to advise the General Commission on Archives and History which keeps a register of all Historic Sites and supplies numbered markers for them.

Discipline, UMC, 1968.

ALBEA GODBOLD

SHUCK, DANIEL (1827-1900), American United Brethren bishop, was born Jan. 16, 1827. His father, John Shuck, was a devout Lutheran and good Bible student; his mother, born in GERMANY, migrated to America and early in life joined the UNITED BRETHREN Church in Harrison County, Ind.

Educated in the county schools, Daniel Shuck entered Indiana University for one year. Friends and even the bishop of his area discouraged further education preparatory to entering the ministry, an unfortunate trend of the church in that day.

At the age of seventeen he joined the INDIANA CONFERENCE, Church of the United Brethren in Christ, and for fifteen years, except for the one year in the university, he served circuits in INDIANA and KENTUCKY. He married Harriet B. Cannady, March 11, 1847.

His major interests were in education and missions. In 1858 he was sent to Missouri where the controversies on slavery and secret orders were rife. He served with distinction until 1861, when the GENERAL CONFERENCE elected him bishop and assigned him to the new episcopal district being opened on the Pacific Coast. A. W. DRURY, historian, wrote, "Bishop Shuck was missionary, circuit preacher, presiding elder and bishop all together or one after another." After two quadrenniums the General Conference discontinued this area as an episcopal district. He took up work again in Indiana Conference, but soon returned to the Pacific Coast to assist in promoting the work there. He played a large part in establishing San Joaquin Valley College at Woodbridge, Calif., becoming in 1879 its first president and a trustee for the institution over many years.

Although he signed the minority report on secret orders in the 1889 General Conference, he was one of two who refused to leave the denomination in the subsequent division. He died Nov. 2, 1900, and was buried in the cemetery at Woodbridge, Calif.

A. W. Drury, History of the UB. 1924.

Koontz and Roush, The Bishops. 1950.

H. A. Thompson, Our Bishops. 1889. JOHN H. NESS, SR.

SHUEY, WILLIAM J. (1827-1920), American United Brethren leader, missionary and administrator, was born in Miamisburg, Ohio, Feb. 9, 1827, to Adam and Hannah (Alley) Shuey. After pursuing his studies in the common schools of Montgomery and Clark Counties (OHIO), he entered the Ohio Conference high school, a Methodist institution in Springfield, Ohio. Converted at the age of sixteen, he soon thereafter set his mind and heart to the Christian ministry which service began at nineteen years of age, serving as a junior preacher on a large circuit embracing DAYTON, Ohio. He joined Miami Conference of the UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST in 1848, serving the following appointments: Lewisburg Circuit; First Church, Cincinnati; and First Church, Dayton. For three years he also was presiding elder.

In 1855 he, along with D. K. FLICKINGER and D. C. KUMLER, became the first United Brethren missionaries to SIERRA LEONE. When Kumler became ill, Shuey returned with him to America. He became assistant Publishing Agent in 1864 and two years later the sole Agent, which position he served with distinction until his retirement in 1897. Following this he served four years as business manager of the Union Biblical Seminary (now UNITED THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY). It had been largely through the instrumentality of Shuey that this seminary was founded in 1871 and located in Dayton, Ohio. Bishop MATHEWS said of Shuey: "His commanding leadership was conspicuous. He possessed rare mental power and a self-reliance that made him a formidable and successful leader. He had few peers, if any, in our church." During the period of litigation, when the Church faced division by the withdrawal of the UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST (Old CONSTITUTION), Shuey's management of the Publishing House and its finances enabled the Church to come through the period with little adverse effect. Legal assistance was made available to local churches, annual conferences, and general church agencies.

William J. Shuey died Feb. 21, 1920, and was buried in Dayton, Ohio.

The Evangel, May 1920.

Religious Telescope, March 6, 1920.

D. B. Shuey, History of the Shuey Family in America. Galion, O.: the author, 1919. JOHN H. NESS, SR.

SHULER, ROBERT P. ("Bob") (1880-1965), American preacher and evangelist, and crusader for public and private morality, was born in Grayson County, Va., on Aug. 4, 1880, and was educated at ENORY and HENRY, which later gave him the D.D. degree in 1932, as ASBURY COLLEGE had done in 1928. He married Nelle Reeves, and they had eight children.

He began his ministry at Pocahontas, Va., in 1902, and entered the HOLSTON CONFERENCE on trial in 1903. After serving churches in VIRGINIA and TENNESSEE, in 1906 he went to TEXAS, where he held pastorates in four of the conferences of the M.E. Church, South. In 1920 he transferred to the PACIFIC CONFERENCE and began a ministry at Trinity Church in LOS ANGELES, serving there until his retirement in 1953. Under Shuler's leadership Trinity Church became the largest church in Southern Methodism on the Pacific Coast, and its men's organization the largest in the denomination. Before unification Shuler was a strong leader of Southern Methodism.

He was a member of the GENERAL CONFERENCE (MES) of 1918, '22, '26, '34, '38, taking a strong part in each of these where the issue of unification was debated, as he was heavily against it. He spoke strongly against the admission of women to the traveling ministry, especially in a notable debate in the General Conference of 1934.

"Bob" Shuler was one of the most powerful voices for fundamentalism in Methodism, both before and after unification. His magazine abounded with attacks on modernism, especially during the climactic days of the Scopes Trial in 1925 in Dayton, Tenn. He likewise was engaged in many struggles in the realm of social action. He periodically attacked the low state of morals in the movie colony in Hollywood, Calif., and, particularly in the 1920's and 1930's sought better municipal government for Los Angeles. He was a leader in the Prohibition movement, and in 1932 polled 564,000 votes in CALIFORNIA for U. S. Senator on the Prohibition ticket. For several years in Los Angeles he operated his own radio station, KGEF, which served as a major vehicle to express his views.

Shuler opposed unification in 1924-1925, mainly because of the jurisdictional proposal, but in 1939 when union came, he supported it wholeheartedly. After unification he continued to be in opposition to many of the actions of the reorganized SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CONFERENCE because of his increasing conservatism on social issues. He declared in 1957 that "personal heart-warming salvation has too much been swallowed up in the Social Gospel."

He edited Bob Shuler's Magazine, and the Fundamen- talist, besides The Methodist Challenge, and was the author of a number of books and pamphlets, including What New Doctrine Is This? and Some Dogs I Have Known.

He died Sept. 11, 1965.

C. T. Howell, Prominent Personalities. 1945.

E. D. Jervey, Southern California and Arizona. 1960.

Thacker, "The Methodist Church in Southern California in Relation to the 'Social Gospel,' 1928-1941." Unpublished dissertation, University of Southern California.

EDWARD D. JERVEY

SHUMAKER, EDWARD S. (1867-1929), American preacher and reformer, the son of David W. and Sarah Ann (Seitz) Shumaker, was born July 20, 1867, at Greenville, Ohio. Later the family moved to Effingham County, Ill. He was a local preacher when he enrolled at DEPAUW UNIVERSITY in 1889. He was admitted into the NORTHWEST INDIANA CONFERENCE in 1890. His leadership against the liquor traffic in Williamsport attracted national attention. In 1903 he became field agent for the INDIANA Anti-saloon League. In 1907 he became its superintendent. His leadership helped to outlaw beverage alcohol in Indiana. Indiana's organization became a national figure. DePauw University gave him a D.D. degree. After national prohibition was adopted political persecution arose and he was a martyr to the cause for which he gave his life. He married Lena Truax in 1895. She died two years later. In 1900 he married Flora Hollinger. Five children blessed their home. He died Oct. 25, 1929, at his Indianapolis home.

J. J. Detzler, Northwest Indiana Conference. 1953.

Who Was Who in America.

W. D. ARCHIBALD

JOHN WESLEY SHUNGU

SHUNGU, JOHN WESLEY (1917-), African bishop of The United Methodist Church, was born in Onalua, CONGO, on Oct. 8, 1917, the eldest of sixteen children, and the son of Ndjadiyu Utshudiangandu and Kama (Elena) Shungu. He received his primary schooling at Tunda Methodist School and became a student teacher until 1935. He also attended the Wembo Nyama Bible School, 1938, and until 1943 he served as a local preacher at Tunda, Methodist mission district and station. In that year, 1943, he entered the Old Umtali Schooling and Theological School which he attended for five years. On June 7, 1936, he was united in marriage to Louise Lutshumba and their children are Henriette (Mrs. Daniel Kikumba), Denise (Mrs. Dimandja), Daniel, Catherine, John, Philipp, Davis, Armand, Mathias, Christine, Christophe, Cyrille, and Louise.

John Wesley Shungu was admitted on trial into the Central Congo Conference, 1942; ordained deacon, 1948; and elder in 1952. His pastorates have included in the Congo: Matapa, 1939-42; Tunda, 1942-43; professor of Old Testament and New Testament, Wembo Nyama Bible School, 1949-54; superintendent of Wembo Nyama District, 1954-60; director of the Lodja Bible School, and also pastor in Lodja, 1960-64. He was elected bishop by the CENTRAL CONFERENCE, Mulungvishi, Katanga, Congo, on Sept. 1, 1964, and has served the Congo Area, Luluabourg since that time and was included as a member of the COUNCIL OF BISHOPS.

Bishop Shungu has been the delegate to the Africa Central Conference in 1948, '52, '56, '60, and '64; to the GENERAL CONFERENCES of 1952 and '56; to the INTERNATIONAL MISSIONARY CONFERENCE in Germany, 1952; to the WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES, New Delhi, India, 1961; to the consultation Board of Missions, 1952; to the Latin American consultations, 1962; Asian Consultation, 1963; member of the Evangelist Mission to America, 1959; legal representative (since 1960) and treasurer of the Women's Division of Christian Service as field treasurer, 1961-64. He received the D.D. from ASBURY THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY in 1964.

He is the author of New Testament Otetela Bible Concordance, 1940; translator and compiler: How to Pray, 1949; Temperance, 1951; and History of Christian Church, 1952.

Who's Who in the Methodist Church, 1966.

N. B. H.

SHY, PETER RANDOLPH (1898-), thirtieth bishop of the C.M.E. CHURCH, was born on May 10, 1898, at Kelly, Ga. He holds a B.A. degree from PAINE COLLEGE, and M.A. degrees from Fisk University and Columbia University. He was ordained DEACON in 1921 and ELDER in 1925. For ten years he was a professor at MILES COLLEGE, and from 1940 to 1948 was academic dean of LANE COLLEGE. He has served churches in ALABAMA and TENNESSEE. In 1958, he was elected to the office of bishop in the C.M.E. Church.

Harris and Patterson, C.M.E. Church. 1965.

Ethel L. Williams, Biographical Directory of Negro Ministers. New York: Scarecrow Press, 1965.

RALPH G. GAY

SIERRA LEONE is a West African state, with an area of 27,925 square miles and a population (1968 estimate) of 2,475,000, belonging to some fourteen main ethnic groups. The capital, Freetown, has one of the finest natural harbors in Africa. Land for a settlement of free Negroes (the so-called "Black Poor") was purchased in 1787 on behalf of some British philanthropists. The settlement did not prosper, but was re-formed in 1792 on the basis of some 1,100 Negroes who had fought for Britain in the American War of Independence and had subsequently been unsuccessfully transplanted to Nova Scotia. In 1800 the population was augmented by "Maroons" captured in the Slave Wars in JAMAICA. In 1808 the London Directors of this "Province of Freedom" (who included WILLIAM WILBERFORCE and other members of the Clapham Evangelical circle) ceded the colony to the British Crown. In the same year the act abolishing the Slave Trade came into force, and thereafter British warships intercepted vessels carrying slaves. These "recaptives" were brought into Freetown, and they and their descendants became the principal element in the colony, marked by western education and dress, earnest Christian profession, and a "Creole" (more precisely "Krio") culture fusing western and African elements. They travelled widely as traders and missionaries throughout West Africa and were responsible for the first introduction of many areas to Christianity. The Colony acquired additional territory on several occasions in the nineteenth century, and in 1896 a British Protectorate brought the frontiers to approximately their present position. One result was the gradual movement of large numbers of hinterland peoples to Freetown and the old Colony villages. Sierra Leone became independent in 1961.

The settlers of 1792 were Christians, mostly of evangelical outlook, and they included Methodists who formed their own society, 200 strong. They corresponded with the British CONFERENCE asking for an itinerant, but not until 1811, when THOMAS COKE sent out GEORGE WARREN and three schoolmasters, was the request granted. Warren found the whole apparatus of Methodist organization and discipline already in progress. He died within eight months, and his successors quarrelled with the Freetown society, until in 1821 the superintendent declared it dissolved. Thereafter it maintained a separate existence until 1861, bringing many Maroons and recaptives under Christian influence. The Maroons formed a separate congregation and leased it to the Wesleyan mission, but this relationship was severed by 1835. Recaptives, feeling themselves treated as inferiors in the Settler chapel, formed their own West African Methodist Church, under the leadership of a notable preacher, Anthony O'Connor, in 1844.

By mid-century, therefore, the Colony had four separate Methodist connexions. The Settler and Maroon churches, representing small communities, were eventually subsumed, but the mission-supported Wesleyan Methodists, and the entirely independent West African Methodists, each spread in Freetown and the Colony villages. In 1859 the West African Methodists amalgamated with the (English) UNITED METHODIST FREE CHURCHES, and accepted a missionary superintendent. New work begun in the Mende area of the hinterland showed encouraging results, but never recovered from the so-called "Hut Tax War" of 1898. The union of Methodist churches in Britain in 1932 brought the two Methodist churches in Sierra Leone together for a short time, but by 1934 the West African Methodist Church reemerged under its old name. It now has about 2,000 full members.

The Wesleyan Mission formed a base for the mission in GAMBIA, and Wesleyan emigrants were the point of contact for the Yoruba mission in NIGERIA and many other places of Christian expansion. Attempts in the hinterland, however, did not prosper until the operations in Mende country began in the 1930's. These accelerated work on a Mende Bible (published 1959) and include a well-known hospital at Segbwema. The Wesleyans early had an educated indigenous ministry (a Sierra Leonean, Charles Knight, was Chairman in the 1870's). An autonomous Sierra Leone Conference, with two districts, was established in 1967. The membership in 1968 was 8,163.

with a total community something more than twice that number and some 400 places of worship.

The WESLEYAN METHODIST CHURCH of America sent missionaries to the northwest part of the hinterland, its first overseas field, in 1889. Its work (in Limba, Temne and Loko country) has remained small, but influential. An autonomous conference was established in 1940: membership is about 2,300.

Part of the COUNTESS OF HUNTINGDON'S Connexion in the Colony affiliated to the A.M.E. CHURCH U.S.A. in 1887, and expanded under a series of colorful leaders. Its present constituency, however, is probably less than 1,000.

The United Methodist Conference represents a work which goes back to 1841 when the Mendi Mission was established in Sherbro, following public interest in the United States in the Amistad incident. In 1846 the work was subsumed into that of the American Missionary Association, and in 1883 handed to the UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST. With over 11,000 full members, mostly in the Mende, Sherbro and Kono areas, the United Methodists are now the largest Christian body in the country.

The Church of the United Brethren in Christ, which in time became a component part of The United Methodist Church in America, early showed a concern for Africa. On Jan. 1, 1854, the Mission Board of that Church voted "to establish a mission station on the Big Boom River in the interior of Africa at an early period."

W. J. SHUEY, D. K. FLICKINGER and D. C. KUMLER, M.D.—all of them ministers of the Miami Conference (UB)—set sail from New York, Jan. 23, 1855 and after a tedious thirty-four day voyage the vessel put in at Freetown, Sierra Leone, Africa. A mission site was selected at Mo Kelli, 120 miles south of Freetown, but the selection was unfortunate and three years later the work was re-located at Shenge, sixty miles southeast of Freetown. During the first decade seven missionaries were sent to Africa: at the close of seven years the only fruit of the mission were two Negro youths.

From 1855 to 1869 the mission confronted crisis after crisis. Two of the first three missionaries soon returned to America: the third remained for fourteen months before he returned. Upon his departure the new mission was served by J. A. Williams, a Negro from Freetown. As the toll in terms of broken health and lives lost mounted, there was a question of keeping on, but it was resolved that the work should be continued with renewed efforts.

In December 1870, the Board sent to Sierra Leone, JOSEPH GOMER and his wife, Negroes from DAYTON, Ohio. Their service in the mission covering twenty-two years was most fruitful. Others came to aid them. In 1877 Miss Emily Beeken, the first missionary sent out by the Women's Missionary Association, arrived at Rotifunk. The episcopal address to GENERAL CONFERENCE in 1897 conveyed a note of victory: "After more than forty years of toil and trial, our missionaries are beginning to see the dawn of a glorious day in Africa." But the British colonial government in endeavoring to suppress slavery, cannibalism and witchcraft had aroused the deep anger of some of the natives. The latter in 1898 rose without warning to exterminate the white men. More than a thousand persons died before this mob madness subsided and among the dead were seven of the missionaries supported by the Women's Missionary Association.

However new missionaries volunteered to return to the places of despoliation and United Brethren in America gave generously to rebuild what had been so wantonly destroyed. Education programs have played a great role in this mission. In addition to the numerous congregational schools, the Albert Academy (for boys) and Harford School for Girls have had a distinguished career. The medical program of the mission, operating through dispensaries, a hospital, and a new eye clinic, has achieved signal results. However, as always evangelistic work is the fundamental concern of the mission. In 1967 thirty-six missionary personnel helped to forward the mission of the church in this area.

L. L. Berry, Century of Missions. 1942.

G. H. and M. L. Clarke, The American Wesleyan Mission of Sierra Leone. Marion, Ind., 1940.

G. J. Cumming, ed., Studies in Church History. Cambridge, 1970.

Findlay and Holdsworth, Wesleyan Meth. Miss. Soc. 1922.

D. K. Flickinger, History of the . . . Missions among the Shesbo and Mendi Tribes. Dayton, O.: 1885.

C. Fyfe, A History of Sierra Leone. London: Oxford University Press, 1962.

Journal of Religion in Africa, No. 3, 1970.

C. Marke, The Origins of Wesleyan Methodism in Sierra Leone. London, 1913.

Sierra Leone Bulletin of Religion. 1961.

W. Vivian, Mendiland Memories. London, n.d. A. F. WALLS
LOIS MILLER

FERDINAND SIGG

SIGG, FERDINAND (1902-1965), Swiss publisher, bishop and distinguished ecumenist, was born on March 22, 1902, the son of a carpenter in Thalwil near Zurich, SWITZERLAND. He was initially trained a banker and administrator. Then he was called to the ministry and trained in Frankfurt Methodist Theological Seminary (1924-27). After one year in the pastorate, chiefly amongst laborers, Bishop JOHN L. NUELSEN appointed him his secretary. This proved providential, for the Bishop opened his eyes to ecumenical life as well as to church administration. Sigg was elected general manager of the Methodist Publishing House in Zurich and served in this new capacity from 1936-55. Up to his last day he was a member both of the Swiss Association of Publishers and of the Federation of Swiss Protestant Publishers.

When Sigg took over, the publishing house was in bad shape. He completely reorganized the publishing department and the printing shop and proved an outstanding businessman and publisher. Within one year he took over a second publishing house, to serve particularly in the field of ecumenical life. He was a man of vision. As editor he was responsible for the Swiss Methodist periodical on missionary life and affairs (1933-53) and the weekly Schweizer Evangelist (1940-65).

As a Christian businessman he belonged to that leading group of Bolderm Academy (near Zurich) which devoted itself to businessmen's retreats. But it would be a grave mistake to think of him only in such a capacity. He was a good theologian, and—in every sphere of life—a pastor of men and women. His intensive study in the fields of psychology and sociology enabled him to communicate in the thoughtforms of modern man. He was a superb speaker and writer. But he knew the danger of a merely verbal message, and that is why he joined emphatically in more than one relief project, such as the Swiss protestant action "Bread for Brothers."

On Oct. 17, 1954, Ferdinand Sigg was consecrated bishop of the Central and Southern Europe Central Conference at BRUSSELS, BELGIUM. During the war he had already shouldered responsible tasks when Bishop NuelSEN retired. He was president of the Swiss Annual Conference and later fellow worker of Bishops PAUL N. GARNER and ARTHUR J. MOORE. The GENEVA Area is in itself an "ecumenical compendium," including territories with Protestant or prevailing Roman Catholic church life, reaching into East European countries with the official ideology of dialectical materialism and Moslem North Africa. A Swiss state churchman said of him that "the world was his parish." Often a delegate to GENERAL CONFERENCE before becoming a bishop, he was, after 1955, a member of the Executive Committee of the WORLD METHODIST COUNCIL.

Strangely enough, Ferdinand Sigg had learned little about the ecumenical movement in Seminary. As secretary to John L. NuelSEN he not only found literature about Stockholm and Lausanne, but he also shared in the work of the European Relief Center and met Adolf Keller, to whom he became deeply devoted as a friend. NuelSEN undoubtedly introduced his secretary to ecumenical involvement but with the advice of keeping true to the Methodist heritage and of sharing its contribution in ecumenical conferences.

In 1933 he became a member of the Swiss Protestant Youth Conference, which he represented in 1936 at the Geneva International Youth Conference. In 1944, as the President of the Swiss Methodist Mission Board, he became a delegate to the newly founded Swiss Protestant Missionary Council whose President he was from 1957 onward. He represented this Council both at Willingen (IMC, 1952) and at GHANA (1959). He attended the World Conferences at Amsterdam, Evanston and New Delhi and was one of the founders and presidents of the new European Conference of Churches.

In 1953 his wife Alice, his equal in devotion and as a leader, died. Bishop Sigg died Oct. 27, 1965, and was buried in Fluntern Cemetery, Zurich, on Nov. 1. Following burial, a memorial service was held in the Fraumünster in Zurich.

C. ERNST SOMMER

SILVA, ALFREDO HENRIQUE DA (1872-1950), Portuguese minister and educator, was born at Oporto, Jan.

18, 1872, the son of an Army officer who died while Alfredo was a baby. Brought up by widowed mother as a strict Roman Catholic, he received his early education at a Primary School run by Jesuits, where he gained a prize for memorizing the "Catechism against Protestantism," which later he saw to be so full of lies and perversions that it furthered his conversion, which took place in the Methodist church of Mirante, Oporto, built by R. H. MORETON.

Against much maternal opposition, sometimes physical, da Silva persisted in his adherence to the Methodists, and in his late teens was appointed teacher in the Day School opened by Moreton. Some little time later he entered the Methodist ministry, being the first Methodist to be ordained, in November 1898, in the Iberian Peninsula. In due course he succeeded Robert H. Moreton as superintendent of the Portuguese Methodist Church, which office he held till his retirement in 1948. He was a teacher, and later, until 1942, Director, of the Oporto Industrial and Commercial Institute.

Alfredo da Silva was the founder in PORTUGAL of the Y.M.C.A.; he inaugurated the Oporto Y.M.C.A. in a dependency of the Mirante Methodist Church in 1894, and was its President, both there and later in its own building in Oporto, for twenty-five years, as well as its President Emeritus until his death. One of this organization's first activities was to set up evening classes for laboring and office workers; in this, as in many other fields, Alfredo da Silva pioneered the way later followed by others. He helped organize Y.M.C.A. activity for Portuguese troops in France and elsewhere during the first World War. As a member of the Oporto City Council he helped reorganize the sanitation of the city and also organize the remodelling of its electric tramway system. For his efforts in organizing food distribution in the difficult days which came at the end of World War I, he was awarded the "Ordem de Cristo" by the Portuguese Government. He also presided over the Commission which received the visit of gratitude of the French Government to Oporto headed by Marechal Joffre.

To help further the reform of Technical School teaching in Portugal, he visited, for study purpose, RIO DE JANEIRO and other foreign cities. He worked and travelled much in the cause of peace and reconciliation, being representative for Portugal to the Churches International Alliance for Peace and Brotherhood. For thirty-seven years he edited the weekly Amigos da Infancia. He left little published material, aside from some articles, some hymns and translations, and some pamphlets, including one on the slave traffic against which he labored effectively—"The Monster of Slavery"—a collection of articles which appeared in the Lisbon newspaper O Seculo. He was editor for some years of the Methodist monthly O Portugal Evangelico, on which he also worked with his ministerial colleague and friend, J. Antonio Fernandes. He is buried in the Agramonte Cemetery, Oporto.

ALBERT ASPEY

SILVA, JOÃO PARAHYBA DARONCH DA (1931-), Brazilian Protestant leader, was born in Carazinho, state of Rio Grande do Sul, on Jan. 8, 1931. After graduation from the Instituto Educacional de Passo Fundo (Methodist), he attended the theological seminary in Rudge Ramos, São Paulo, from which he received the B.D. degree in 1953. He was ordained deacon in 1954 and elder in 1956.

Silva married Neyde Terezinha on May 23, 1959. They have two children, João Marcos and Susana Denise.

After serving several pastorates, including Piracicaba and Ribeirão Preto, he was elected Executive Secretary for Social Action in 1964 at the General Conference of the Methodist Church of BRAZIL. In this capacity, he was sent in 1965 as Brazil's delegate to El Tabo, Chile, to the Latin American Conference on Theological Studies. He has since been made president of the Brazilian branch of I.S.A.L. (Church and State in Latin America), and a member of the Centro Dom Vital (a Catholic lay movement). He has published one book, The Church, Body of Christ.

Parahyba Silva is frequently interviewed by newspapers and secular magazines as interpreter of the Protestant point of view on social questions affecting the nation.

EULA K. LONG

SILVA, JUVENAL ERNESTO DA (1907-), Brazilian preacher and chaplain in the armed forces of BRAZIL, was born in São Roque, state of São Paulo, on June 20, 1907. His mother was a faithful member of the Baptist Church, but the father was not an evangelical and strongly opposed his wife's religion and her attendance at services.

When Silva was sixteen, the family moved to Santo Amaro, now a part of the city of SÃO PAULO. There he worked in a factory by the side of ISNARD ROCHA, who later also became a Methodist preacher. He began attending services in the Methodist church, which he joined on Dec. 24, 1924, on profession of faith. Feeling called to the ministry, he studied and prepared himself for entrance to INSTITUTO CRANBURY, though he had to continue work at the factory.

His mother, very ill before dying, asked her husband to help Silva in his studies as she wanted him to become a preacher. This he promised; and her Christian witness at death so impressed the unbelieving husband that he turned from his violent opposition to the church, yet remained indifferent to its mission. Years later, when Silva became a preacher, he had the joy of receiving into the church his own father.

Silva entered Cranbury in 1927, and graduated both in the scientific and theological courses in 1935. In 1936, he married Carmen de Oliveira, by whom he had one son. He was ordained both deacon and elder by Bishop CESAR DACORSO. In 1937, in addition to pastorates, he was Secretary of Christian Education for the Second Region of the church. In 1941, he received a scholarship to study in the United States, but was forced to return in 1942 because of the outbreak of the Second World War. For the next two years, he served as chaplain at Cranbury Instituto and later he became chaplain to the Brazilian Armed Services, then acting in ITALY. Near the front, he had more than one narrow escape from death.

Returning to Brazil, he remained in the military chaplaincy, where he was promoted to captain. He settled in RIO DE JANEIRO, and did excellent work among military men and in the surrounding Protestant churches. His wife Carmen died in 1963. After her death, Silva returned to his native state, São Paulo, to live in Sirocaba near his son's family.

ISNARD ROCHA

OSWALDO DA SILVA

SILVA, OSWALDO DIAS DA (1922-), bishop of the Methodist Church of BRAZIL, was born in Birigui, state of São Paulo, on May 31, 1922. He came of a Methodist family, his grandfather, Etéocle Afini, having been a preacher. Bishop Silva received his primary and high school education in Birigui, after which he graduated from the Methodist theological seminary in Rudge Ramos, São Paulo. He married Maria da Penha and they have five children—Poliana, Lígia, Oswaldo, Hélio, and Rosa Helena.

He was ordained DEACON in 1946 and ELDER in 1948. He has held pastorates in various cities in the states of Rio Grande do Sul and São Paulo; has served as a District Superintendent and as secretary of the Regional (area) Board of Missions. While pastor of Central Church in PORTO ALEGRE, Rio Grande do Sul, he helped the Woman's Society found the Lar da Velhice, a Methodist home for the aged in that city.

He was elected bishop by the ninth General Conference of the Methodist Church in Brazil, in July 1965. His field, the Fifth Region, comprises the states of Goiás, Mato Grosso, and Western São Paulo. The present episcopal residence is in Campinas, São Paulo.

EULA K. LONG

SILVEIRA, GUARACY (1893-1953), Brazilian preacher and writer, descendant of a family distinguished in law and politics, was born in Franca, state of São Paulo, on Sept. 27, 1893. After studying in Catholic primary schools (he was reared a traditional Catholic), he went to INSTITUTO GRANBERY, from which he received his B.S. degree in Science and Letters. He was converted while there, and joined the Methodist church, and decided to enter the ministry. In 1920, he was ordained DEACON, and in 1921 ordained ELDER by Bishop JOHN M. MOORE. From 1915 to 1938, he served as pastor of both rural and large city churches, including Piracicaba and Central Methodist Church in SÃO PAULO. At various times, he served as presiding elder.

Guaracy Silveira was editor of the official Methodist weekly, Expositor Cristão, for two terms (1930-34 and 1938-42); and in 1937 was presiding officer of the Central Brazil Annual Conference, in the absence of a bishop. He was a leading figure in the movement for autonomy of the Methodist church in BRAZIL; a member of the committee which drew up its constitution, and presiding officer of the first session of its first General Conference. He was also the first General Secretary of the Board of Missions; the first Protestant army CHAPLAIN, serving with the São Paulo troops during the 1932 revolution; and the first Protestant congressman in the legislature of Brazil, to which he was elected in 1933. During his 1945-50 term, he signed two Brazilian constitutions.

A writer, a poet, and teacher, Guaracy Silveira was the author of numerous articles in both religious and secular papers; and of several books, religious, fictional, and political in nature. Among these were Lutero, Loyola e o Totalitarismo, and O Evangelho, Patrologia e Rasao (The Gospel, Patristics, and Reasoning).

He married Etelvina Crem, a descendant of German immigrants to Brazil, who had been converted by early Methodist missionaries. All their children have distinguished themselves professionally, and are active in the Methodist Church.

Guaracy Silveira died on Aug. 5, 1953.

PAULO GUARACY SILVEIRA

SILVER, MABEL IRENE (1902-1972), American E.U.B. medical missionary to SIERRA LEONE, WEST Africa, was born in BALTIMORE, Md., March 23, 1902. She graduated from LEBANON VALLEY COLLEGE in 1925 with a B.S. degree, and from the University of Maryland School of Medicine in 1929, the only woman in the class.

She received the Diploma in Tropical Medicine and Hygiene from the University of London in the spring of 1932, and from there went to Sierra Leone to serve as a medical missionary of the UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST. All but two years (1933-35), when she served in Taiama, were spent in Rotifunk. During her thirty years of service the dispensary developed into a small hospital, known as the Hatfield-Archer Hospital. Thousands of patients were treated, and dozens of young men and women trained to serve as medical assistants.

She received in June 1953 the high honor of being included in the Queen's Coronation Honor List as a Member of the British Empire.

Returning to the United States in 1962, she became a staff physician at the Rosewood State Hospital, Baltimore, until final retirement in 1970.

In 1971, at a special ceremony to honor her at the Sierra Leone Embassy in Washington, she was presented a citation from Sierra Leone's Prime Minister Siaka P. Stevens. In making the presentation Ambassador to the United States Dr. John Akar said, "She cared for the bodies of our countrymen and their souls with a judicious blend of medicine and prayer."

She died April 2, 1972.

ESTHER L. MCGILL

SILVER SPRING, MARYLAND, U.S.A. Marvin Memorial Church is located in a suburban community which affords little comparison to the rural atmosphere of ninety-six years ago, when in September 1872 a small group of devoted Christians founded the first church at Four Corners.

The very early history of organization could not be located, but both members and non-members had the desire to have a house of God in the area where people might come to worship. The land for the new church was donated by Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Clark and Mr. and Mrs.

George N. Beale, none of whom was a member of the Methodist faith.

While the church was being built, services were held in an old barn which was situated across the Intersection from the present church site. The men of the community provided the foundation by hauling logs. Carpenters were hired to build above ground, and the little white church, recently torn down, was completed in October 1872.

The church was first known as Wesley Chapel M.E. Church, South, and Paul Haddaway was the first pastor. Members walked, rode horseback, or drove in horse and buggy to get to church. Sometimes they passed through toll gates located at Georgia Avenue, Dale Drive, White Oak and Ednor. The toll charge was one cent per mile for one trip to church, and toll was required for the return trip also.

In 1941 it became necessary to disband the Marvin Church at Independence Avenue and Tenth Street S.E., WASHINGTON, D.C. Four Corners Church received the principal cash gift, the altar rail, pulpit furniture, pews, pipe organ and other supplies. A new location adjacent to the old property was bought for $30,000.

Four Corners Church was on a circuit with Lay Hill and Colesville, Md. Divine worship was so arranged that on one Sunday services were held in the morning and the next Sunday services were held in the afternoon. Four Corners became a station church in 1942.

The ground breaking for the new sanctuary was held Nov. 4, 1945 at which time the membership had grown to approximately 500 members. In 1970 Marvin Memorial reported a total full membership of 1,592.

Maryland Living, August 18, 1968. MRS. MARY MILSTEAD

SIMMONDS, JOSEPH HENRY (1845-1936), New Zealand Methodist minister, was the second minister of that church to be born there in Nelson. He entered the ministry in 1869 and served the church with distinction and ability for fifty-four years. Three years were spent as a missionary in FIJI, then twenty-one years in important New Zealand circuits, where in a fresh and scholarly presentation of the Gospel, he influenced many young men toward the Christian ministry.

For fifteen years (1896-1911) he was governor of the theological college, and for twenty-eight years principal of Wesley College (Paerata), in which position he secured the present splendid site and formulated the scheme to blend Maori, Pacific island, and European boys in a secondary school. In 1895 he was president of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference.

He was a member, for several years, of the AUCKLAND University Council. He made valuable contributions to afforestation. His book, Trees From Other Lands: Eucalypts in New Zealand, has become a standard work. He contributed many articles to the Journal of Agriculture and to other periodicals.

He was a man of kindly spirit and of the highest ideals.

New Zealand Methodist Conference Minutes, 1937.

WILLIAM T. BLIGHT

SIMMONS, JAMES (1792-1873), a bishop of the A.M.E. Zion Church, was born Dec. 3, 1792, in Accomac County, Va. He was converted in early life and joined the conference May 19, 1832. A year later he was ordained a DEACON, May 18, 1833, and on the same day was given ELDER's orders. He was elected bishop May 24, 1856, and died Nov. 25, 1873.

DAVID H. BRADLEY

SIMMONS, JOHN C. (1827-1906), American pioneer minister and writer, was born at Jackson, Butts County, Ga., May 26, 1827. He and ALEXANDER WYNN, his co-worker in CALIFORNIA, were licensed to preach in August 1848, in a log church built by Simmons' father on their farm. He was educated at EMORY COLLEGE, Oxford, Ga. He and his brother, William A., answered the missionary call to California, arriving at SAN FRANCISCO in February 1852. On June 28, 1853, he married Margaret Campbell, daughter of Judge Charles Campbell. His appointments included: Grass Valley, 1852; Stockton, 1853; Mariposa, 1856; SAN JOSE, 1858; presiding elder, SAN FRANCISCO District, 1859; SACRAMENTO, 1861; Professor, English Literature, Pacific Methodist College, 1866-1869; Conference Sunday School Agent, 1870; presiding elder, SAN FRANCISCO District, 1871; Santa Clara District, 1873; Agent, Pacific Methodist College, 1877; Dixon, 1878; SAN FRANCISCO, 1881; organized a church at Oakland, 1882; Chico, 1883; Colusa, 1887; President, Pacific Methodist College, 1890; Salinas, 1891; Lincoln, 1895; presiding elder, Merced District, 1896; Modesto, 1898. He was a delegate to the ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE in London, England, 1901. He was superannuated in 1902 and then served Salinas, 1903-1906.

He was the author of: Southern Methodism on the Pacific Coast, 1886; The Kingdom and Coming of Christ, 1891; The Saint and His Savior, 1896; My Trip to the Orient, 1902.

Simmons died April 21, 1906, after hearing that the earthquake and fire had destroyed many churches and left hundreds of friends homeless.

H. M. DuBose, History, 1916.

Minutes of the Pacific Conference.

J. C. Simmons, Pacific Coast, 1886.

PEARL S. SWEET

SIMON, JOHN SMITH (1843-1933), British Methodist historian, was born at Glasgow on June 25, 1843. He entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1863; was elected to the LEGAL HUNDRED in 1895, and president of the Wesleyan Conference in 1907. He was principal of Didsbury Theological College from 1901-13. Trained originally as a lawyer, he was an authority on Methodist law and discipline as well as on Methodist history in the eighteenth century. The extraordinary fruit of his retirement was his learned biography of JOHN WESLEY, published in five volumes between 1921 and 1934. He had laid the foundation for this work in his Farnley Lecture of 1907, The Revival of Religion in England in the Eighteenth Century. The later works were: John Wesley, and the Religious Societies (1921); John Wesley and the Methodist Societies (1923); John Wesley and the Advance of Methodism (1925); John Wesley, the Master Builder (1927); and John Wesley, the Last Phase (1934) completed by his son-in-law A. W. HARRISON. Simon died in his sleep on June 28, 1933.

JOHN KENT

SIMONS, GEORGE ALBERT (1874-1952), American minister and superintendent, was born at Laporte, Ind., on March 19, 1874, the son of George Henry and Otilie

GEORGE A. SIMONS

Schultz Simons. He was a graduate of BALDWIN-WALLACE COLLEGE, of New York University, and DREW THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, with an A.B., B.D., A.M., and D.D. degrees. He entered the ministry in 1899, and served several charges in his own land until he was appointed as superintendent of the FINLAND and St. Petersburg Mission Conference in 1907-11. He was superintendent-treasurer of the RUSSIA Mission, 1911-21; the RUSSIA Mission Conference and Baltic Mission, 1921-24; the Baltic and Slavic Mission Conference, 1924-28.

He became director of the Ministers' Training Institute in Riga, Latvia, in 1923-27. He was a delegate to the M.E. GENERAL CONFERENCES in 1912 and 1920. He became editor and publisher of Christiansky Pobornik (Russia Christian Advocate) and of the Baltic and Slavic Bulletin. During the First World War he was chairman of the American Red Cross Committee in Russia, and a member of the board of the American Hospital for Wounded Russian Soldiers in Petrograd. He had to leave Petrograd in October of 1918 following the revolution there.

He accompanied a commission of the M.E. Church during the summer of 1919, visiting various European countries, and supervised distribution of relief supplies sent by the M.E. Church to Finland, Russia, etc., during the winter of 1920.

Simons was decorated by the Finnish Government, the Russian Red Cross, Estonian Red Cross, and the Latvian government. He wrote many Methodist books, pamphlets, and tracts in Russian while he lived in Europe. Unmarried, his sister Otilie accompanied him to Russia. His mother died in their home in St. Petersburg (now Leningrad), and was buried there in 1913. Simons returned to the United States where he served several charges, even until his death in Glendale, N. Y. in 1952.

L. A. Marshall, American Pioneer in Russia. 1928.
Nya Budbäraren (Finland), Sept. 1, 1952.

MANSFIELD HURTIG

SIMPSON, DAVID (1745-1799), English clergyman, was born Oct. 12, 1745, near Northallerton, Yorkshire, and educated at St. John's College, CAMBRIDGE. He was converted about 1767 by means of the unitarian Theophilus Lindsey. Ordained deacon (1769) and priest (1771) in the Church of England, after two brief curacies in the south of England he came to Macclesfield. The earnestness of his preaching at St. Michael's Church there earned him the title of "Methodist," and his opponents succeeded in having him deprived of his curacy. In 1779 he was appointed the first incumbent of the newly-consecrated Christ Church, Macclesfield, where he remained for twenty years. Christ Church was founded by Charles Roe (1715-81), who had strong Methodist sympathies. (His niece, HESTER ANN ROE, married Wesley's preacher JAMES ROGERS.) WESLEY was welcomed to the pulpit and behind the communion rail of Simpson's church, and Simpson in his turn preached for Wesley and on at least one occasion (in 1784) attended the Methodist CONFERENCE. Another of Wesley's colleagues, BRIAN BURY COLLINS, obtained his title as curate to Simpson, and thus was enabled to secure ordination as a clergyman. Wesley had a strong Methodist cause at Macclesfield, and Simpson's presence there secured close cooperation between church and society. Simpson was a prolific writer, whose publications included the following: A Collection of Psalms and Hymns and Spiritual Songs: for the use of Christians of every denomination (1776); The Happiness of Dying in the Lord: with an Apology for the Methodists (1784: a sermon on the death of James Rogers' first wife, with a lengthy defence of Methodism); A Discourse on Beneficence, and the wonderful remunerations of Divine Providence to charitable men: with a great variety of examples (1789: the examples include John Wesley); and his most frequently reprinted work, first published in 1797, A Plea for Religion and the Sacred Writings. Simpson died March 24, 1799, and was buried at Christ Church, Macclesfield.

Dictionary of National Biography.

FRANK BAKER

SIMPSON, JAMES (1873-1938), Canadian local preacher and temperance lecturer, leading labor figure, and first socialist mayor of Toronto, was born in Lancashire, England, Dec. 14, 1873, and came to Canada at the age of fourteen. He shortly became a "printer's devil," but with the formation of The Toronto Daily Star, joined its staff and for many years was its city hall reporter. Maintaining his membership in the typographical union, he rose from presidency of the local union to presidency of the Toronto Trades and Labor Council, finally becoming vice-president of the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada.

Familiarity with city politics led to a similar ascent from membership in the Toronto Board of Education in 1905 to its chairmanship in 1910. He was elected a controller on the city council in 1914 by the highest vote ever given a candidate up to that time. A socialist from his early years, he first contested the mayoralty of Toronto as a socialist candidate in 1908, and was prominent thereafter in efforts to organize a labour-socialist party in Canada, especially the Independent Labour Party in Ontario (1916), the Canadian Labour Party (1921), and the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation (1933). The breadth of his activities did not always endear him to some of his early fellow-socialists. In 1910 he was expelled from the Social Democratic Party for refusing to divulge confidential material of the Royal Commission on Industrial Training and Technical Education, of which he was a member. He not only led several strikes, but he also participated in numerous arbitrations of major labor disputes. He represented Canadian labor at several international gatherings, perhaps the most dramatic being the International Socialist Congress in Vienna, in the first days of the war of 1914-18. He toured Europe as a government appointee on various labor and education commissions, and lectured internationally on behalf of Prohibition. From 1916-22 he promoted these causes through a newspaper, The Industrial Banner, of which he was editor and publisher.

Simpson maintained throughout an active life within the Methodist and United Churches, and in interdenominational organizations such as Christian Endeavor, the Lord's Day Alliance, the Dominion Prohibition Alliance, and the Social Service Council of Canada, of which he was for some time a vice-president. He was approached by the Methodist General Superintendent, S. D. CHOWN, to take on a post as interpreter of church to labor and labor to church; and although Chown's plan was blocked, Simpson remained the most accessible labor leader of his time to the members of the Department of Evangelism and Social Service, a fact which, in particular, cut some of the losses of the church in the printers' strike of 1921, in which the large Methodist Publishing House was deeply involved. It was out of this long history of activities in social reform on a broad front that he gathered the support which brought him regular election to the Toronto Board of Control after 1930 and in election as mayor of Toronto in 1935. He was defeated, however, in 1936; and two years later, recovering from a lengthy illness, died in a motor accident.

Canadian Forum, November, 1938.

H. J. Morgan, Canadian Men and Women of the Time. Toronto, 1912.

Toronto Globe, January 2, 1935.

A. R. ALLEN

SIMPSON, JOHN DIXON (1858-1921), American minister, was born in Bradford, Coosa County, Ala., April 22, 1858. His parents moved to Prattville, Ala., where he received his elementary and high school education. He was licensed to preach in 1877. In 1878 he was admitted on trial into the ALABAMA CONFERENCE, and appointed to the Rimbert Hill charge. In 1879 he was married to Hortense Wilson of Mobile, Ala., to which union were born two children, John and Hortense. He was ordained DEACON by Bishop McTYEIRE at Pensacola, Fla., in 1880, and two years later, at Troy, Ala., he was ordained ELDER. He transferred to the NORTH ALABAMA CONFERENCE in 1883. Later he attended Southern University, at Greensboro, Ala., where he graduated in 1887. In the North Alabama Conference he served as pastor, presiding elder, and college president with distinction, serving the Florence, Decatur, Tuscaloosa, and Birmingham Districts.

Simpson was called to the presidency of BIRMINGHAM-SOUTHERN COLLEGE in 1910, where he served until 1916. In 1911, a vacancy having occurred on the Birmingham District, he was appointed to serve the district until Conference, in connection with the presidency of the college. In 1916 he was appointed as pastor of First Church of Athens. In November 1918, he became pastor of First Church, Woodlawn, in the Birmingham District.

He died June 18, 1921, and was buried in the Oak Hill Cemetery, Birmingham, Ala.

C. FRED COOPER

SIMPSON, JOHN FISHER (1887-1963), American educational leader and editor of the Texas Christian Advocate, was born at Utopia, Texas, March 24, 1887, son of John Harper and Fannie (Fisher) Simpson. He married Grace Willard, Dec. 21, 1910, and they had one daughter, Catherine (Mrs. William T. Meyers). He was educated at SOUTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY, A.B., 1909; D.D., 1933; University of Texas, M.A., 1930; VANDERBILT, B.D., 1924; graduate study, University of Chicago and Union Seminary, New York. He was received in the TEXAS CONFERENCE in 1909, and transferred to the SOUTHWEST TEXAS CONFERENCE in 1911. His appointments included: Giddings, Texas, 1909-10; student, Vanderbilt, 1911-12; Miles, Texas, 1912; Sherwood Circuit, Texas, 1913; Potett Circuit, Texas, 1914; San Benito, Texas, 1915; Cuero district, 1922; executive secretary, Board of Education, Southwest Texas Conference, 1924-30; Director, Leadership Education, General Board of Education (MES), 1930-39, and The Methodist Church, 1939-45; Minister of Education, Travis Park Church, SAN ANTONIO, Texas, 1948-49; Editor of the Texas Christian Advocate, 1949-59, when he retired with fifty years of service. He was a member of GENERAL CONFERENCES of 1930, 1938, and UNITING CONFERENCE, 1939. He was the author of The Workers Conference, 1943. He died July 19, 1963, and is buried in Rose Hill Cemetery, Ft. Worth, Texas.

C. T. Howell, Prominent Personalities. 1945.

Journal of the Southwest Texas Conference, 1964.

O. W. Nail, Texas Methodism. 1961. J. DANIEL BARRON

MATTHEW SIMPSON

SIMPSON, MATTHEW (1811-1884), a strong and commanding American bishop, was born at Cadiz, Ohio, on June 2, 1811. He spent two months at MADISON COLLEGE in Unionville, Pa., and then studied medicine under Dr. James McBean of Cadiz and qualified as a practitioner.

In 1834 he joined the PITTSBURGH CONFERENCE of the M.E. Church on trial and was sent to the Cadiz circuit, then to PITTSBURGH, and then to Williamsport. In 1837 he became Professor of Natural Science in ALLEGHENY COLLEGE and in 1839 he was elected President of Indiana Asbury University (later DEPAUW UNIVERSITY). Here he remained for nine years, declining during the period the presidency of NORTHWESTERN, DICKINSON and WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY.

He was a member of the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1844 which adopted the PLAN OF SEPARATION resulting in the formation of the M.E. Church, South. He was an outstanding anti-slavery advocate. At the General Conference of 1848 he spoke against receiving LOVICK PIERCE as a fraternal delegate from the southern Church and was the author of the resolution which repudiated the Plan of Separation. The adoption of this resolution led to an appeal to law and the U. S. Supreme Court upheld the southern position.

In 1848 Simpson became editor of the Western Christian Advocate and through its columns he carried on an energetic anti-slavery crusade. He was elected a bishop in 1852.

In 1857 he was fraternal delegate to the British and Irish Conferences and to the Evangelical Alliance in BERLIN. From Europe he proceeded to the Holy Land. He was elected president of GARRETT THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY in 1859, and while he moved from Pittsburgh to EVANSTON, Ill., he devoted little time to the affairs of the Seminary.

Simpson knew Abraham Lincoln and when the latter became President the bishop plunged deeply into politics. He attempted to secure the appointment of Methodists to national offices and was successful to a considerable degree. Then he took up another project.

He and his colleague, Bishop AMES, secured from Secretary of War Stanton an order instructing the Union Generals to place at Simpson's disposal all of the conquered churches of the M.E. Church, South. The bishop seized McKendree Church in NASHVILLE, Tenn., the present Church Street Church in KNOXVILLE, and others in TENNESSEE, LOUISIANA and elsewhere. It seems that Lincoln was not aware of this action and apparently did not approve of it, since he countermanded an order to turn over a Southern Presbyterian Church in ST. LOUIS to the northern branch of that denomination. On the death of Lincoln the bishop visited President Andrew Johnson, and while disliking the new President, he thought Johnson would "be harder on the South" than his predecessor. In this he was mistaken, for Johnson demanded that Simpson return McKendree Church to its owners. The bishop delayed two months but finally complied. Simpson warmly favored the impeachment of the President.

In 1863 Simpson moved to PHILADELPHIA where some laymen gave him a home. During the whole course of the war he delivered addresses favorable to the Northern cause. He attended the opening of the Sanitary Fair at Philadelphia in 1864 at the request of Lincoln, and his speech on that occasion denounced the Southern leaders. On the death of Lincoln the bishop preached his funeral at the White House and also at Springfield where the slain President was buried.

Simpson was the author of A Hundred Years of Methodism, Lectures on Preaching, and Cyclopaedia of Methodism. He died at Philadelphia on June 18, 1884.

R. D. Clark, Matthew Simpson. 1956.

G. R. Crooks, Matthew Simpson. 1890.

Dictionary of American Biography.

Simpson Manuscripts in the Library of Congress.

E. M. Wood, Matthew Simpson. 1909. ELMER T. CLARK

SIMPSON, WILLIAM (1812-1864), American circuit rider, was born Jan. 22, 1812, in Huntingdon County, Pa., and joined the M.E. Church in 1832. Emigrating to Centerville, St. Joseph Co., Mich. (1833), he served as CLASS LEADER and received an EXHORTER's license in 1836, soon after removing to Hennepin, Ill., where Presiding Elder John Sinclair employed him to travel Bureau Circuit. Transferred to Bloomington Circuit on April 2, 1837, he received a preacher's license and, joining the ILLINOIS CONFERENCE (Sept. 27, 1837), was assigned to Helena Circuit, Wisconsin Territory. He served Bellevue Circuit in 1838 and Prairie Du Chien, Wis., in 1839.

When the Illinois Conference was divided (1840), Simpson became a ROCK RIVER CONFERENCE itinerant, assigned successively to Lancaster (1840), Hamilton Grove (1841), Ft. Madison (1842), and West Point (1843). He married Nancy Range on Feb. 22, 1842.

An original member of the IOWA CONFERENCE, this pioneer Iowa preacher served Mt. Pleasant (1844-45), Pleasant Valley (1846-47), and Cedar (1848-49), before traveling as Council Bluffs missionary in 1850 and 1851, organizing a circuit and forming several societies. Leaving the Council Bluffs Mission with 240 members, Simpson after preaching at Brighton (1852) and Ft. Madison (1853), was presiding elder of Montezuma District in 1854 and of Oskaloosa District in 1855-58. He was reserve delegate to GENERAL CONFERENCE, 1856 and 1860. After serving New London and Agency City, he was assigned to Marshall (now Wayland), Iowa, where he died Feb. 22, 1864.

A. W. Haines, Makers of Iowa Methodism. 1900.

Minutes of the Annual Conferences of the M.E. Church, 1837-1864.

E. H. Waring, Iowa Conference. 1910.

Yearbook of the Iowa Conference, 1844-1864.

MARTIN L. GREER

SIMPSON COLLEGE, Indianola, Iowa, was established as Indianola Male and Female Seminary in 1860. The name was changed to Simpson Centenary College in 1867, honoring Bishop MATTHEW SIMPSON of the M.E. Church. The present name was taken in 1884. A gift of $100,000 from Mrs. HENRY PFEIFFER in 1942 sparked a building program for the college which has resulted in the erection of fifteen new buildings. The Gardner Covles Foundation gave $176,000 for the Carver Science Hall, and $200,000 for the million-dollar Dunn Library. Carver Science Hall is perhaps the only building erected on a preponderantly white campus to honor a Negro.

George Washington Carver, the distinguished Negro scientist, had his first two years of college work at Simpson College. Degrees offered are the B.A. and B.M. (Music). The governing board has forty-three members, seven ex officio, three elected by alumni, all confirmed by the South Iowa Annual Conference.

JOHN O. GROSS

SIMS, DAVID HENRY (1886-1965), American bishop of the A.M.E. CHURCH, was born in Alabama, on July 18, 1886. He received the A.B. degrees from Georgia State and Oberlin College (Ohio); the B.D. degree from the Oberlin Graduate School of Theology; and the A.M. degree from the University of Chicago. He was later awarded honorary degrees by MORRIS BROWN COLLEGE in Georgia, Allen University in South Carolina and WILBERFORCE UNIVERSITY in Ohio. Following his ordination as DEACON and ELDER, he served as pastor in OHIO, RHODE ISLAND and SOUTH CAROLINA. In 1924 he was elected to the presidency of Allen University, in which position he remained until his elevation to the episcopacy in 1932. The author of several books and articles, he resided at PHILADELPHIA, Pa., and was assigned to the writing of Methodist history and polity until the time of his death in 1965.

R. R. Wright, The Bishops. 1963. GRANT S. SHOCKLEY

SINGAPORE is an island with an area of 225 square miles, linked to the mainland (Malay Peninsula) by a railroad and automotive causeway, separated from Sumatra and Bat (INDONESIA) by a narrow strait. Having been an integral part of MALAYSIA (constituted in September 1963), Singapore became an independent nation in September 1965, and at that time was admitted to the United Nations as a sovereign state. Population is 1,987,900 (1968 estimate), of which Chinese are seventy-five percent, Malays twelve percent, with smaller groups from INDIA and PAKISTAN, together with Eurasians and Europeans. The city of Singapore sprawls around and behind a very important harbor, the world's fifth port and the largest trans-shipping center in Southeast Asia.

The name Singapore is an Anglicised form of the Sanskrit term meaning "Lion City." Tradition has it that during the early Moslem invasions of India, a group of Sikhs of the Singh (lion) clan fled by sea, around CEYLON, down the Straits of Malacca, to the tiny island at the southern extremity of the Malay Peninsula, a scant forty miles above the Equator. There they landed, building a small settlement which they called Singapore. However that may be, the island and its fishing community had been known by that name for centuries before British influence became dominant in the early 1800's.

Decades of contention with Dutch, French and Portuguese colonial interests had passed when Sir Stamford Raffles secured a treaty in 1819 from the Sultan of Johore (Malay peninsula) in favor of the East India Company of Great Britain. This instrument assured to Britain free access for shipping, with rights of development and other significant political and commercial privileges. The subsequent history of Singapore until World War II paralleled that of the Malay States on the peninsula. Singapore became a Crown Colony, while the States gained the status of Protectorates under the hereditary Sultans.

Singapore's superb harbor and the narrow strait between it and Sumatra to the southwest, is a veritable nexus of the oceans. Any ship bound from Europe or Africa for a port on the east coast of Asia, or in the adjacent island groups, or vice versa, must pass through Singapore.

After Pearl Harbor and the destruction of all Allied naval power and merchant shipping between India, AUSTRALIA and the Western Pacific, Japanese ground and air forces swarmed southward along the Malay Peninsula. Resources of tin, rubber, grain producing areas, fell to them. But the ultimate objective was Singapore, for, with that strategic central port in hand, India might be attacked by a pincers—by sea around Ceylon, by land across northern BURMA. Singapore fell without a siege, its strong defenses having been constructed against naval and not land attack. After the defeat of Japan, British sovereignty was restored, the Federation of Malaysia was established and autonomy achieved. A wearisome and costly struggle against communist infiltration and sabotage has practically eliminated that menace.

As a national entity, Singapore is geographically one of the smallest of independent states. However, the wealth is very great, and the strategic position for commerce and either peace or war, is almost unparalleled. The viability of the new nation will rest primarily upon its internal strength in terms of racial harmony, political leadership and success in development.

Methodist mission work was instituted at Singapore on Feb. 7, 1885, upon the arrival of WILLIAM F. OLDHAM and JAMES M. THOBURN, under appointment of the SOUTH INDIA ANNUAL CONFERENCE. In later years these two were to become bishops, outstanding leaders of the missionary enterprise of the M.E. Church. Oldham promptly established a congregation, at first including Chinese, Tamils, Eurasians and English. The QUARTERLY CONFERENCE was formally organized in a few weeks. The first church building was erected before the end of the year on land granted by the municipality. The Chinese colony, deeply interested in education, provided several thousand dollars for a school. The Tamils quickly developed their own congregation and school. Miss Sophia Blackmore of Australia, destined to give forty years of service in Malaya, was sent by the Minneapolis Branch of the WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY, arriving in July 1887. Record of the development of the work throughout Malaya, with Singapore as the center, will be found in articles entitled, INDONESIA, MALAYSIA, SARAWAK.

Methodism has made an outstanding contribution to education in Singapore. An Anglo-Chinese school was founded in 1886, with Bishop William F. Oldham as its first principal, and two other schools had been opened by 1888. By 1963, there were thirteen Methodist schools with a total enrollment of 9,739. These schools use English as a medium of instruction. They are, in principle, inter-racial, but over ninety percent of the students are Chinese. The church is also responsible for one Tamil-language and two Chinese-language schools. All Methodist schools in Singapore receive government grants.

A small printing-plant was established at Singapore in the early years of the mission. Across the decades it has grown until the Singapore Methodist Publishing House of today is the most influential Christian press in the entire island world. Wide-ranging and immense quantities of material have been issued, not alone for Methodist institutions, but equally for the uses of many other civic, cultural and denominational agencies. The impact of the printed pages, bearing this imprint, is incalculable.

The recent rapid political shifts in no way alter the central strategic, determinative role of Singapore for all Southeast Asia.

A new organizational alignment in world Methodism occurred when the autonomous Methodist Church in Malaysia and Singapore was organized on Aug. 9, 1968. Singapore is of dominant influence in the new Church. Singapore is involved in the Singapore-Malaya Annual Conference, the Malaya Chinese Annual Conference and the Tamil Provisional Annual Conference. Bishop YAP KIM HAO, the first bishop of the new autonomous Church, presides over the Church with his headquarters in Singapore. There are twenty-four Methodist congregations at the last reporting in the two districts of the two annual conferences, largely in Singapore, and these have a total of 6,440 members. Services are held in nine different languages: English, eleven; Tamil, four; Malay, three; Hokkien, four; Punjabi, Hinghwa, Foochow, Cantonese, Hakka, one each. These churches are served by sixteen ordained ministers and six supply pastors. A number of new churches have been built in recent years including Christ, Trinity, Pentecost and Barker Road.

Trinity College, 7 Mount Sophia, Singapore is operated by the Methodists in cooperation with the Anglicans, English, Presbyterians, and since 1962, with the Lutherans. This is a four-year theological college for both English and Chinese-speaking candidates for Christian work. Students come from all over Southeast Asia: HONG KONG (Chinese), PHILIPPINES (Filipinos), INDONESIA (Indonesians and Chinese), PAKISTAN (Pakistanis), Singapore/MALAYSIA (Chinese Indians). The majority of students are Methodist but four other churches are represented: Presbyterian, Congregational, Anglican, Lutheran (both American and Swedish branches). Dr. Timothy Chow, principal since 1968, came from the Chinese mainland to Hong Kong and was District Superintendent of the Methodist Church, Hong Kong (British Methodist).

Headquarters for the new Church are on Coleman Street, Singapore, where the bishop is housed, also the treasurer of the Church, and other officers of the general Church. There is also a Book Room established there.

Ho Seng Ong, Methodist Schools in Malaysia. Petaling Jaya, Malaysia: Board of Education, Malaya Conference, 1964.

ARTHUR BRUCE MOSS

SINGH, ASHOKE B. (1904-), lay leader of Southern Asia, was named after the famous Indian King Asoka, who reigned 272-232 B.C. He was born in Bengal, and became an A.B. of Calcutta University about 1925, where he also received the M.A. degree. His special interests have been education and social concerns. For almost twenty years he taught in various high schools, some of which he organized. In 1945 he married Dolly Burge.

In 1949 Singh became principal of Collins Institute, a Methodist institution, a Bengali high school in Calcutta. He continues as principal of Collins, and is also the secretary of its board of governors. He is chairman of the board of governors of Mount Hermon High School in Darjeeling, and also of Champahati Bengali Girls' High School. He is secretary of the managing committees of Kutipara Rural High School, and of Ushagram High School, Asansol, another Methodist institution.

Singh serves the Methodist Church in Southern Asia as vice-president of the Board of Lay Activities; member of its all-India committees, interim committee, and of the executive board. In the BENGAL CONFERENCE he is lay leader. He was a lay delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1952, 1956, 1960, 1966, and to the CENTRAL CONFERENCES OF INDIA in 1952, 1956, 1960, and 1964.

He is a member of the Christian Burial Board of Calcutta and of several other groups interested in social service. He is a staunch nationalist but is quoted as saying, "I am a great admirer of the American way of life."

CLEMENT D. ROCKEY

SINGH, LILAVATI 1867-1909), an Indian Methodist, was principal-elect of the ISABELLA THOBURN COLLEGE when she died in Chicago in May 1909. For thirty years she was connected with ISABELLA THOBURN, and her school and college.

Coming to the school as a small girl, Ethel Raphael (as she was then known) was at first indifferent, but later she became extraordinarily responsive to Miss Thoburn's efforts.

Under the influence of Miss Thoburn's school, she came to the conviction that her father had made a mistake when he changed his name at the time of his conversion. She adopted the surname that he had renounced, and for her personal name she chose Lilavati, a popular Indian name which she thought suitable for an Indian Christian.

Within a year of completing high school, she found that her father had selected a husband for her. She insisted that she was not ready to marry and must continue her education. Her father insisted that he would spend no more money for her study. An aunt provided some help, but met misfortune and could not continue. Lilavati sold some jewelry that relatives had given her. Miss Thoburn wanted her to stay on, and promised that she personally would obtain the necessary funds.

Lilavati, with a Mrs. Chakerbatty and her daughter Shorati, was the first of Miss Thoburn's girls to complete the high school course. All were devout Christians, and all made notable contributions to the education of women in North India.

Four years later Miss Singh graduated from the University of Calcutta and began teaching Persian and English in the college. In 1896, she stood second in Allahabad University among candidates for the M.A. degree.

In March 1899, Miss Thoburn went to America in search of funds for the college and soon cabled for Miss Singh to join her. This she did in August. She proved to be a very capable public speaker. She addressed the Ecumenical Missionary Conference in New York in April 1900. After hearing that address, former president Benjamin Harrison remarked, "If I had given a million dollars to foreign missions I should count it wisely invested, if it had led only to the conversion of that woman."

The two ladies returned to India in June and entered a year of recurring crises and perpetual strain. Bishop E. W. PARKER died in June 1901, after a long illness. In September Miss Thoburn died of cholera after less than twenty-four hours of illness. Miss Singh took over many of Miss Thoburn's responsibilities and was a tower of strength to the new principal. In 1903 Miss Singh was elected vice-principal of the college.

In 1908 she went again to America to represent the college in church gatherings and for advance study. Following her plea to the general executive of the WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY, money was appropriated for a much-needed classroom building. In that year, for health reasons, FLORENCE NICHOLS resigned as principal and Miss Singh was elected as her successor. RUTH ROBINSON was asked to serve until Miss Singh could finish her duties in America and return to India.

Then tragedy struck. Miss Singh died in Chicago in 1909. Thus ended an era. The case for the education of Indian women had been proved and the Methodist Church, through a succession of heroic women, had made a historic record.

M. A. Dimmitt, Isabella Thoburn College. 1963.

J. N. Hollister, Southern Asia. 1956.

J. M. Thoburn, Isabella Thoburn. 1903. J. WASKOM PICKETT

SINGH, MANGAL (1902-), Indian bishop, was the fourth citizen of India elected to the Methodist episcopacy, and the first Methodist bishop born in the Himalayan mountain area. He was elected by the CENTRAL CONFERENCE of Southern Asia at LUCKNOW in October 1956, and was assigned to the BOMBAY Area. In 1964, on the retirement of SHOT KUMAR MONDOL, he was assigned to the Delhi area.

Bishop Singh was born on Dec. 31, 1902, in the remote village of Thalain in the District of Garhwal, accessible then only by walking or on a sure-footed mountain pony. During the lifetime of his great-grandparents the district was a part of NEPAL. It was ceded to the East India Company in 1816. The Methodist Church began work in Garhwal in 1865 with JAMES MILLS THORBURN as the first missionary. Another Methodist pioneer, JAMES H. MESSMORE, baptized the young lad and PRESTON S. HYDE sponsored his education in the Mission School at Pauri. He was influenced strongly by two other missionaries, both of Scandinavian origin, HARRY HANSON WEEKS and HARRY A. HANSON.

His father, Chandar Singh, is remembered as a devout man, opposed to idolatry and favorable to the Church but not a member thereof. He was called "an unbaptized Christian." Mangal Singh was not the first convert of the village but was the first to leave the village to study in the Boarding School, and the first local resident to conduct public worship services, and to bear witness to Christ Jesus as Lord and Saviour.

The future bishop made rapid progress in school, several times receiving double promotion. After two years in College he became a teacher in a Mission School, took training as a teacher, and was invited to join the Government Educational Service, but chose instead to work through the Church and to become a minister of the Word and the Sacraments. He won a Bachelor's degree from Agra University, and then passed the course of study for the ministry in the NORTH INDIA CONFERENCE. His appointments included Supervisor of Hostels in Ramsey High School at Almora; Superintendent, BAREILLY District; Delhi Area Promotional Secretary for the Advance for Christ; and Pastor of Christ Church, Delhi. In 1948 he represented North India Annual Conference in the GENERAL CONFERENCE of The Methodist Church. He then received a Crusade for Christ scholarship for advanced study and the next year received a Master's degree in Education from the UNIVERSITY OF DENVER. In 1956 he represented the Delhi Annual Conference in the General Conference and his election as bishop took place in the Central Conference of that year. In 1933 he married Violet Thomson, daughter of George B. Thomson, a fellow Garhwali minister. They have two sons and two daughters. A daughter is married to a son of Bishop A. J. SHAW of the Bombay Area.

The Indian Witness files.

Who's Who in The Methodist Church, 1966.

J. WASKOM PICKETT

SINGH, MASIH CHARAN (1884-1964), was a highly respected, hardworking minister of the Methodist Church in INDIA. He was born in Moradabad, Dec. 26, 1884, the elder of two sons of Ram Singh, an ordained local preacher. He was a student in the Methodist Boys' School at Cawnpore (now Kanpur), and passed the Allahabad University matriculation examination in the first division in 1907. He went to the United States and studied at Moore's Hill College, Indiana, where he was graduated with a B.A. degree. Returning to India, he served as manager of the boys' hostel of the Cawnpore school for a year, and then joined the faculty of LUCKNOW CHRISTIAN COLLEGE.

He did much preaching and was invited to become pastor of the Central Methodist Church at LUCKNOW, then the premier Indian-language Methodist Church in India. He joined the LUCKNOW ANNUAL CONFERENCE and was ordained DEACON and ELDER Dec. 19, 1921.

After four years in the pastorate he began a long career as district superintendent, serving in the Arrah, Cawnpore, Ballia, Lucknow, and Gonda districts. For sixteen years he was simultaneously superintendent of a district and pastor of Central Church, where he preached to a congregation that included members of the faculties of Lucknow University and of the Lucknow Christian and ISABELLA THORBURN COLLEGES.

Twice he represented his Annual Conference in the GENERAL CONFERENCE, and ten times in the CENTRAL CONFERENCE. He was conference treasurer for ten years and chairman of his Conference relations committee for twelve years. For fifteen months he edited Kaukab-i-Hind, the official Methodist weekly periodical in Urdu. He served on the Lucknow Christian College, Isabella Thorburn College, and Leonard Theological College boards of trustees and on the United Provinces Christian Council and the North India Christian Book and Tract Society. He was in demand as a preacher in interdenominational conventions. Despite his many exacting tasks, he translated a number of English hymns into Urdu, and, most surprisingly, prepared a monumental concordance of the Bible in Urdu. When he had worked on the Old Testament for nearly four years, he learned that a new translation was soon to be published. That made a completely fresh start necessary. He turned to work on the New Testament, and when a comprehensive concordance had been completed, went back to work on the Old Testament with the new translation. For over seventeen years he devoted many hours of every week to this self-imposed task, for which he received no monetary payment. But he was rewarded with the gratitude of the Indian Church and a sense of duty faithfully done. The 1,331-page work was published in 1959 by the LUCKNOW PUBLISHING HOUSE.

He was awarded an honorary D.D. degree by EVANSVILLE COLLEGE in 1948. He was married to Daisy Lilavati Childs, June 12, 1916. She was a lay delegate to the General Conference of 1936. Singh died at his home in Lucknow, Feb. 27, 1964, and is buried there.

Minutes of the Northwest India Conference, 1912-20; and of the Lucknow Conference, 1921-49.

Minutes of the Central Conference of Southern Asia.

J. WASKOM PICKETT

SIOUX FALLS, SOUTH DAKOTA, U.S.A., now the largest city in the state, was founded in 1856 and incorporated as a city in 1883.

Sioux Falls has three colleges: Augustana, Sioux Falls, and Netleton. There is also the North American Baptist Seminary and Pettigrew Museum.

Thomas Cuthbert, a local Methodist preacher, was the first appointed pastor in Sioux Falls and organized the First Methodist Church in 1871. An Englishman, he settled across Sioux River southeast of the city. His circuit included Canton, Beloit, and Hudson. Cuthbert continued to serve smaller circuits in the Sioux Valley until his death in 1905. First Church was built in 1873 under J. W. Rigby.

It served also as a parsonage. A second building was erected in 1878 under William Fielder and dedicated in 1881 by LEWIS HARTSOUGH. The third building was erected in 1890. In 1913 the present building was dedicated. An educational building and chapel were added in 1957.

Wesley Church was organized in 1890. In 1950 Asbury Church was founded. The youngest church, Hilltop Heights, was organized in 1958 with thirty-five charter members and had 226 members in 1969.

Early records state: "There were no cliques or factions . . . There were only three churches in Sioux Falls, the Congregational, Methodist, and Episcopal . . . All were called upon to contribute to each other's welfare . . . The first church bell was secured by the Methodist church people, aided by the members of other churches and by citizens generally. By mutual agreement of the churches, services were held by each at the same hour, and it was distinctly understood by the donors of this bell that it should ring out not only for the benefit of all the churches, but on other important occasions."

In January of 1964, forty-two churches cooperated in the National Christian Teaching Mission, which was highlighted by a city-wide religious census. First Methodist Church led out in this effort.

There is a FREE METHODIST CHURCH and a WESLEYAN METHODIST CHURCH in Sioux Falls.

Sioux Falls had five United Methodist Churches (1970) with a combined membership of 5,006. First Church is the oldest and largest—3,026 members—with the most impressive building.

First Church was organized in 1871. Its first meeting place was an old government barracks. From this inauspicious beginning the church has grown to a membership in 1970 of 3,026. Not only has the church had a history of continued growth in membership, but it has been instrumental in establishing two other congregations in the city of Sioux Falls. It has also demonstrated a vital sense of missionary interest and in recent years it has consistently ranked among the first twenty churches in the United States in Advance Special giving. In 1963 it ranked tenth. One of the Advance Special projects was the erection of the high school building at the American Institute in La Paz, Bolivia. Other Advance Special projects include the support of a missionary couple in India. The church has also contributed seven young men to the ministry. Over 1,300 students are enrolled in the Church School. Additional Methodist churches are being planned in Sioux Falls.

General Minutes, UM, 1970.

M. D. Smith, South Dakota. 1965.

JESSE A. EARL
ARNOLD HERBST

SIoux INdIAN MISSION. In the spring of 1837 Methodism came to Minnesota under the leadership of ALFRED BRUNSON of Prairie du Chien. Arriving at Fort Snelling with the purpose of establishing missions among Indians, it was learned that Chief Little Crow of Kaposia, a Sioux (Dakota) band of twelve lodges and consisting of about 200 souls, located about eight miles below the fort on the west side of the Mississippi on what is now South St. Paul, was willing to have a mission established in his village.

Perhaps Little Crow was following his father's philosophy, who, on his deathbed appointed his son his successor as Chief and admonished him, "Teach your people to be honest and laborious, and adopt such of the habits of the whites as will be fitted for their change of circumstances, and above all be industrious and sober and make yourself beloved and respected by the white people."

David King, who had come to Minnesota with Brunson, organized the first class at Kaposia consisting of John Holton, leader, and wife, Sarah, Jacob and Margaret Fahlstrom, Taylor and Eliz Randolph, and Martha and William Brown. This mission was strengthened in October by the addition of T. W. Pope and James C. Whiteford as teachers and preachers and the Hiram DeLap family as farmer and housekeeper. A successful school was operated by King, except that the migratory habits of the Indians were a decided drawback. When in school, however, the children showed capacity for learning.

Due to illness, Brunson was succeeded in 1839 by Benjamin T. Kavanaugh, who brought his brother William with him. Upon arrival at Kaposia he found the mission in confusion due to difficulty between missionaries, subsequently including himself, and Indian Chiefs. Kaposia was left by Kavanaugh in the hands of David King as he moved across the river to RED ROCK.

In 1840 the first Methodist church in Minnesota was organized at Kaposia with whites, half-bloods and Indians as members: David King, preacher, John Holton, class leader, Mary Holton, J. W. Simpson, James Thompson (interpreter), Mrs. Thompson, Jacob and Margaret Fahlstrom and children Nancy, Jane and Sally, Hep-per, Ha-pa, Chah-tee-k-kah, Hanah Taliaferro, Elizabeth Williams, Mr. and Mrs. Randolph, Mary McClaire, Susan Bassett, Tah-she-nah-sah-pak, We-no-nan-zhee, Anna Prevost, Mux-zah-ton-kah, Mak-cah-pee-wee, Chasta, We-oh-wasta, Hap-pah Baldwin, Eliza Gonwell, Susan Mozho, Angelina Ozhee, Edmund Brizett, Mary Taliaferro, and Mr. Bush.

Kaposia Mission was closed in 1852 when the Sioux were moved by treaty to a reservation along the upper Minnesota River.

E. F. Baumhofer, Trails in Minnesota. 1966.

Doane Robinson, History of Dakota or Sioux Indians. State Department of History, South Dakota, 1904.

LEROY H. KLAUS

SIPPRELL, WILFORD JAMES (1866-1952), Canadian Methodist and United Church of Canada minister and educator, was born in Oxford County, Ontario, on Sept. 12, 1866. In 1888 he was licensed as a LOCAL PREACHER; in 1890 he was accepted as a probationer for the ministry. Ordained in 1895, he was stationed at Norwich Avenue Church in Woodstock, Ontario.

In 1897 he was appointed to the principalship of Columbia Methodist College in New Westminster, the first degree-conferring institution in British Columbia. He filled this office with distinction until 1911. The next two years were given to travel and study in Europe and Britain. Returning to CANADA, he served Mount Pleasant Church in Vancouver for seven years and Metropolitan Church in Victoria for ten. Then he spent another year in Europe and the Holy Land.

Sipprell represented British Columbia at the ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE in TORONTO in 1911, and at a similar gathering in 1921 in LONDON, England. He was a member of each of the Canadian Methodist General Conferences from 1906 until the inaugural council of The United Church of Canada in 1925, and of all succeeding General Councils until 1934, the year of his retirement. For fourteen years thereafter he was active in preaching, traveling, and fundraising, especially for the pension fund of the church. He died on Dec. 28, 1952, in Victoria.

G. H. Cornish, Cyclopaedia of Methodism. 1903.

Records of British Columbia Conference. W. P. BUNT

SITES, NATHAN (1830-1895), pioneer CHINA missionary, was born near Belleville, Ohio. He became a carpenter and worked his way through OHIO WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, graduating in 1859. That same year he was admitted on trial in the NORTH OHIO CONFERENCE, and in the following year, after hearing R. S. MACLAY tell of the work in Foochow, volunteered for appointment to China. He arrived in Foochow in September 1861, to begin a ministry of thirty-four years.

His first language teacher was a Confucian scholar, a Sia Sek-ong, who was converted and became one of Foochow's outstanding preachers (see SEVEN GOLD CANDLESTICKS).

He was the most indefatigable of the missionaries in constant travel from city to city, preaching the gospel. Mintsing, Futsing, Hinghwa, Yenping—these were only a few of the populous centers in which he laid firm foundations for the Christian church. In 1879 he was mobbed and severely beaten in Yenping, but after his wounds were healed he continued his work with unabated zeal. As STEPHEN BALDWIN said of him, "He delighted to go into new places to preach the Gospel where it had never before been preached."

Nathan Sites died in 1895, just after completing a series of New Year meetings in Liutu.

W. C. Barclay, History of Missions. 1957.

W. N. Lacy, China. 1948.

S. Moore Sites, Nathan Sites, an Epic of the East. New York: Revell, 1912.

FRANCIS P. JONES

SKEVINGTON, JOHN (1814-1845), NEW ZEALAND Methodist minister, was born at Sherwood, Nottingham, England. With other Wesleyan Mission reinforcements he came out to join the New Zealand Mission staff in the ship "Triton" in 1840. Staying in Hobart, Tasmania, he worked with the Bush Mission among the Aborigines, and later assisted at Wesleydale, Geelong, until directed by the Wesleyan Missionary Society to proceed to New Zealand.

There he was set the task of commencing the mission at Waingongoro (later known as Taranaki South), where his territory stretched from Oeo to Waitotara on the west coast of the North Island. Among a people recently released from slavery, he labored effectively for three years. Visiting Auckland for the district meeting, he died suddenly during the evening service in the old High Street Church on Sept. 21, 1845. His ministry in New Zealand lasted but three years.

W. Morley, New Zealand. 1900.

WESLEY A. CHAMBERS

SKILLINGTON, JAMES EDGAR (1878-1965), American minister and parliamentarian, was born in Breezewood, Pa., Dec. 2, 1878. He was educated at Williamsport Dickinson Seminary, DICKINSON COLLEGE (A.B. 1905, M.A. 1910, D.D. 1922) and DREW THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

He was admitted into the CENTRAL PENNSYLVANIA CONFERENCE of the M.E. Church in 1901 and spent his entire ministerial career of sixty-four years in its membership. Sixty of these years were spent as supply pastor, pastor and district superintendent. For decades he filled the leading pulpits with distinction and gained universal recognition, not only for his eloquence, but also as the outstanding ministerial leader of the Conference. His memberships on conference boards were numerous and important, including those of the Home for Children, Home for the Aged, LYCOMING COLLEGE, Board of Education, Board of Ministerial Training and Trustees of the Annual Conference, of which he was president for almost twenty-five years.

Skillington was a member of each GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M.E. Church and The Methodist Church from 1924 to 1952, and headed his conference delegation at each of these from 1928 to 1948, including the UNITING CONFERENCE and the related JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCES. He was universally recognized as a skilled parliamentarian and was a member of the Committee on Rules of the respective General Conferences from 1936 to 1952. His judgments and interpretations of the Discipline, or on parliamentary situations, were usually accepted by the officers of General and Annual Conferences as authoritative. He was a member of the World Service Commission of the M.E. Church from 1924 to 1940, and of the COUNCIL ON WORLD SERVICE AND FINANCE of The Methodist Church from 1940 to 1952.

The Discipline required his retirement at age seventy-two but he continued to serve as a supply pastor on a circuit near his home for six more years. He died at Roaring Spring, Pa., on May 1, 1965.

The Altoona Mirror, Altoona, Pa., May 2, 1965.

C. T. Howell, Prominent Personalities. 1945.

Journal of the Central Pennsylvania Conference, 1965.

CHARLES F. BERKHEIMER

SLADE, EDMOND B. (1839-1919), American United Brethren minister, was born Oct. 1, 1839, the sixth of eleven children, near DAYTON, Ohio. His father was a woolen manufacturer, and Edmond assisted him in this work until his fourteenth year, when the family moved to a farm near Troy, Ohio. Soon thereafter the mother died. Young Slade was converted in 1856 and felt called to preach. Since he had promised to stay with the family until his twenty-first birthday, he delayed the answer to his call. During the Civil War he was sergeant in Company G, Tenth Indiana Infantry, the family having moved to Fountain County, Ind.

In 1863 Slade married a young widow, Mrs. Deborah Johnson, and together they raised three children. In 1869 the family moved to Potawatomi County, Kan., and joined the UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST. Slade still felt a call to the ministry, but imagined that he couldn't measure up to the requirements without suitable education. He promised God however that his first son would enter the ministry. When death took the elder boy Slade yielded himself unconditionally to God.

Edmond joined the Northeast Kansas Conference, Church of the United Brethren in Christ. He remained a member until his death. After serving several pastorates he was elected presiding elder in 1881, living in Lecompton, Kan., seat of Lane University. The Slades soon became good friends of college youth, opening their home for lodging. Among their circle of friends were Ida Elizabeth Stover and David J. Eisenhower, students at Lane, married on Sept. 23, 1885. One of their sons, Dwight, became the thirty-fourth president of the United States.

In prayer, Edmond Slade would lose himself completely in ecstasy and wander all over the church on his knees, stopping to lay his hands on some particular person's head while praying. If preaching and someone entered the church late, as much as fifteen minutes, he would stop and begin again.

After twelve years as presiding elder, Slade became field agent for Lane University and later served seven years as local agent for Campbell College, another United Brethren school. When Campbell College merged with Kansas City University in 1913, Slade and his wife moved to the Baker Home for ministers near Puento, Calif., where they lived together until his death, Sept. 23, 1919. He was buried at Pomona, Calif.

Religious Telescope, Nov. 8 and Dec. 13, 1919.

JOHN H. NESS, JR.

EUGENE SLATER

SLADE, JOHN (1790-1854), American preacher, was born in SOUTH CAROLINA. He has been called the "Father of Florida Methodism." However, he was not the first minister to be appointed to the FLORIDA frontier after it was taken over from Spain. His name and that of his brother, Frederick Slade, appear on a petition dated Jan. 25, 1814, signed by 105 patriots, asking that the "Republic of East Florida" be admitted into the United States. It is quite possible that he may have been a "local preacher" and worked among the "patriots" of East Florida before Florida became a territory of the United States.

In 1822 he travelled as a supply in the SOUTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE. He was admitted into that Conference in 1823, and appointed with John I. Triggs to the Chattahoochee Mission. He was admitted into full connection and ordained a DEACON in 1825; and in 1828 was ordained an ELDER.

His appointments included: 1823, Chattahoochee Mission, Oconee District; 1824, Early Mission, Oconee District; 1825, Appling, Savannah District; 1826, Tallahassee Mission, Tallahassee District; 1827, Ohoopsee, Savannah District. In 1829 he was superannuated and in 1830 he located on a farm in Thomas County, Ga., because of failing health.

In 1845, when the FLORIDA CONFERENCE was organized, John Slade was readmitted into the Florida Conference and served for nine years in the travelling connection. His appointments then were: 1845, Bainbridge, Ga., Quincy District; 1846, Blakely, Ga., Quincy District; 1847, Troupville, Ga., Tallahassee District; 1848, Warrior, Ga., Tallahassee District; 1849, Bainbridge, Ga., Tallahassee District; 1850, Irwin, St. Marys District; 1851, Holmesville Mission, St. Marys District; 1852, Wakulla, Tallahassee District; 1853, Troupville, Ga., Madison District; 1854, Thomasville Circuit, Ca., Madison District.

W. E. Brooks, Florida Methodism. 1965.

C. T. Thrift, Florida. 1944. WILLIAM E. BROOKS

SLATER, OLIVER EUGENE (1906-), American bishop, was born in Sibley, La., on Sept. 10, 1906, the son of Oliver Thornwell and Mattie (Kennon) Slater.

He received the B.A. degree from SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIVERSITY in 1930; B.D. from PERKINS SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY, 1932. Honorary degrees included D.D. from McMURRY COLLEGE, 1951; L.H.D. from SOUTHWESTERN COLLEGE, Winfield, Kan., 1961; LL.D. from BAKER UNIVERSITY, 1962; LL.D. from Southern Methodist University, 1964.

On Nov. 25, 1931, he was united in marriage to Eva B. Richardson of Dallas, Texas, an S.M.U. graduate. They have two children: Susan (Mrs. H. Kipling Edenborough, Dallas, Texas) and Stewart Eugene, San Antonio, Texas.

Eugene Slater joined the WEST TEXAS CONFERENCE of the M.E. Church, South in October 1932. He served pastorates at Rochelle, Texas, 1932-33; Menard, Texas, 1933-36; Ozona, Texas, 1936-42; Woodlawn, SAN ANTONIO, 1942-44; Bering Memorial, HOUSTON (TEXAS CONFERENCE), 1944-50; Polk Street, Amarillo (NORTHWEST TEXAS CONFERENCE), 1950-60. He was elected bishop at the SOUTH CENTRAL JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCE, San Antonio, Texas, June 1960, and assigned to the KANSAS Area with headquarters in TOPEKA, Kan. He was assigned to San Antonio-Northwest Texas Area, June 1964, with headquarters in San Antonio.

In August of 1952 he was one of sixteen guests of the U.S. Navy on a cruise to Pearl Harbor, Hawaii. In 1954 he was an accredited visitor to the Evanston Assembly of the WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES. Bishop and Mrs. Slater visited Methodist missions in six countries of South America during November and December 1956. He was delegate to the South Central Jurisdictional Conference, 1948, 1956, 1960, and a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE, 1956, 1960. He attended the WORLD METHODIST CONFERENCE, Oslo, 1961, and visited Methodist churches and institutions in Europe and North Africa; attended the World Methodist Conference, LONDON, England, 1966, and made episcopal visitation to JAPAN, KOREA and the PHILIPPINES.

He has been a member of the General Board of EDUCATION, General Board of LAY ACTIVITIES, and the General COMMISSION ON ARCHIVES AND HISTORY. He was chairman of the Committee to Study the Employed Lay Career Worker in The Methodist Church.

He is a member of the Board of Trustees of Southern Methodist University, McMurry College, Southwestern University, Southwest Texas Methodist Hospital, San Antonio and Methodist Hospital, Lubbock.

Who's Who in America, Vol. 34.

Who's Who in The Methodist Church, 1966.

N. B. H.

SLAVERY AND AMERICAN METHODISM. Slavery was already firmly embedded in the life of the nation into which the M.E. Church was born in 1784. The church's tradition, on the other hand, included a strong antislavery strain, inherited from JOHN WESLEY and the English Methodist CONFERENCE (see SLAVERY AND BRITISH METHODISM). Several of the early American Conferences over which Asbury presided, made antislavery statements or recommendations. The legislation of the constitutive CHRISTMAS CONFERENCE of 1784 is famous because it was more uncompromising than any that had gone before or was to come thereafter. "We view it as contrary to the Golden Law of God . . . and the unalienable Rights of Mankind, as well as every Principle of the Revolution, to hold in the deepest debasement . . . so many souls that are all capable of the Image of God" (Discipline, 1785, p. 14). This lofty pronouncement was followed by legislation according to which Methodists were to have a year to begin emancipating their slaves, and five years in which to finish it. The alternatives were voluntary withdrawal or expulsion. These rules, however, were already marked by the portentous exception exempting those states in which the civil laws forbade emancipation.

We have also to note, in this consideration of beginnings, in 1789, when the GENERAL RULES were first introduced into the formulae of the new Church (by a process which is more obscure than we might like, but which was doubtless initiated by the General Superintendents, COKE and ASBURY), that a new Rule on slavery, which had not been deemed necessary in England, was included. It forbade (as one of the long list of specifications under the general heading of "doing no harm"), "the buying and selling the bodies and souls of men, women and children, with an intention to enslave them" (Discipline, 1789, p. 48). It should be noted that this forbade not the holding, but only trading in, slaves. In fact the high ground taken by the Christmas Conference could not be maintained, and before six months were up, began that long process which was to leave the Church not only enmeshed in compromise, made for the sake of unity, but with shattered unity as well.

The concessions were not made without opposition from a small but zealous minority. Soon after the Christmas Conference, FREEBORN GARRETSON and PHILIP GATCH, two of the leading early itinerants, and certain others who are not named for us, emancipated their slaves. But the opposition met by those (especially Coke and Asbury) who preached emancipation, from mobs who muttered threats and brandished clubs induced a feeling of hopelessness. The GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1816 admitted alike the duty and the impossibility of reform when it reported that "little can be done to abolish a practise so contrary to the principles of moral justice" (Journals of the General Conference, 1, 169-70). The trading in slaves forbidden by the General Rule likewise defied not only prohibition, but even restriction. In 1796 expulsion was still the penalty for selling a slave.

Buying one was permitted under the supervision of local church committees who were to operate under certain elaborate provisions. By 1808 the General Conference gave up attempting to regulate either the buying or the selling of slaves, leaving the matter to each Annual Conference (Journals of the General Conference, 1, 93). This obviously allowed a great deal of latitude, and many Conferences, while retaining the Rule in print, acted pretty much as though it didn't exist. The General Conference never really regained the control it had thus relinquished; and it is not unfair to say that its actual legislation in the matter was of monumental unimportance. At one time the General Conference was greatly exercised over the phrasing of the General Rule on slavery. Should it read "the buying or selling" or "the buying and selling" etc.? In 1840, only a quadrennium before the separation of Episcopal Methodism, the General Conference confirmed the decision of an Annual Conference which excluded the testimony of Negroes from the records of Church trials.

The growing power of the North in the General Conference is reflected in the Episcopal elections of 1836. Though four new Bishops were elected, not one of them was a slaveholder. WILLIAM CAPERS was passed over (in spite of the fact that he was most obviously of Episcopal stature) because he was a slave owner. The southerners resented this slight most strongly—saying that it amounted to proscription.

In this matter the northern Conferences were joined by the "border Conferences." Among these the BALTIMORE CONFERENCE, particularly, made every effort to keep its ministers clear of entanglement with slavery. The feeling there was very strong that the "Itinerancy" belonged to the whole Church, and that nothing which made it unacceptable to the northerners ought to be allowed. From another point of view, it may be regarded as one more instance of the unfortunate tendency among Methodists to adopt a double standard of conduct—one for its laymen and quite a different one for its ministers. Nevertheless, it has been estimated that by 1843, 200 travelling preachers and 1,000 local preachers held nearly 1,200 slaves.

It was at this same General Conference of 1836 that the fraternal delegate of the English Conference thought it appropriate to remind the Americans to maintain at the least the antislavery principle in the abstract, and said so in his address. Whereupon the American Conference bristled defensively, said they always had done so, and that if the English brethren had understood the American situation more thoroughly, their delegate would not have found it necessary to intervene as he did.

Speaking of the South and North generally, we may say that in the former, the intensity of the effort to defend slavery grew pari passu with the intensity of the Abolitionist movement in the North—which took its rise in the 1830's. Speaking of Methodism especially, and for the time being of that in the South, we discover that they always denied, in spite of their practice, being "proslavery." So far as this writer has been able to discover, of the leading apologies for slavery which appeared in the region, and which made it out to be a divinely ordained blessing for white and black alike, none was written by a Methodist. This does not mean that the Southern Methodist point of view was not presented ably and in lively fashion in the Southern Methodist periodicals, for it was. SAMUEL DUNWOODY, a member of the SOUTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE, preached a sermon, which may be regarded as typical. On the one hand, he insisted that he was "no advocate for slavery," on the other, that Scripture sanction indicates that slavery is not a moral evil, and in principle is justifiable in certain instances. Henry B. Bascom was perhaps the most voluminous, but by no means the only writer in the field.

The Rev. Dr. Smith, President and Professor of Moral and Intellectual philosophy of RANDOLPH-MACON COLLEGE, published his Lectures on the Philosophy and Practise of Slavery in 1856. ABEL STEVENS, writing in the Methodist Quarterly Review, says Smith begins with the statement "Slavery is right per se" (39 [1857]: 274). A reviewer of this book in the Quarterly Review of the M.E. Church, South goes on to state Smith's further argument, which, to be sure, goes over pretty familiar ground: all men are not created equal; the inferior race has no right to equality; the slaves are daily brought into contact with civilizing influences; the South is much better off socially and religiously with slavery than the North is without it; reason and the Bible are for it, while against it is sentiment; but the God of the Bible must be vindicated. (April, 1857, pp. 242 ff.)

Slavery was not, however, defended in principle in any major work by a Methodist. The "Radical Abolitionism" of the North was always there, a good target for attack, and the Southern Methodists, like many of those in the North, supported the operations of the Colonization Society, which was regarded as a safe channel for the expression of concern for the Negro's welfare, and which was more impressive for size and bustle than for solid achievement. Furthermore, many leading Southern Methodists, especially WILLIAM CAPERS and JAMES O. ANDREW, gave much thought and energy to the evangelization of the slaves. This activity was regarded as the "crowning glory of the Church." Many Methodists (and neither North nor South had a monopoly on these) were apparently sincere in believing that the Church's main, indeed its sole, business was evangelization. Consequently whatever hindered success in that endeavor was ipso facto outside the church's legitimate field of endeavor.

Blacks had been the object of Methodist evangelism from the beginning. Bishop Coke was convinced that he had a special gift for speaking effectively to them. Bishop Asbury speaks of being much affected at seeing them crowd to the Communion table. Beginning as early as 1786 they had a special column in the statistical summaries of the Annual Conferences.

The planters often objected to the activities of the evangelists among their slaves as tending to make them restive and insubordinate; and of course teaching them to read was taboo, which makes it seem a very truncated sort of evangelism in a Protestant communion. And, for obvious reasons, it was considered better to have them attend the meetings of the whites than to hold assemblies of their own, except under very special circumstances and then only under strict supervision of white authorities. In the whites' meetinghouses they were usually required to sit in a special gallery or a restricted place on the floor. Usually too, they had to wait till all the whites had communion before they could take their places at the Table. Transgressors of these limitations were sometimes violently dealt with. It was just such an incident which led to withdrawal of the Negro section of the congregation of ST. GEORGE'S CHURCH in PHILADELPHIA, and the formation, in 1816, under the leadership of RICHARD

ALLEN, of the AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH. Allen was the first of the few Negroes to be fully ordained, though a considerable number were made local DEACONS, and more still were useful preachers. Four years later the AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL ZION CHURCH was formed as the result of a similar succession of events in the JOHN STREET CHURCH in New York City.

Northern Methodism furnished no Abolitionist leader of national stature, but La Roy Sunderland, LUCIUS MATHACK and especially ORANGE SCOTT, all of them members of the NEW ENGLAND CONFERENCE, became notable leaders among the Methodists. They refused to be discouraged by the fact that the officary and most of the church press was opposed to them. They had not been silent in the General Conference, but they agitated with much more success in the Annual Conferences, especially those of the Northeast. Their tactics were not always dignified, and it is to be feared that they made great nuisances of themselves in many instances. For instance, while the roll-call at the beginning of a Conference session was being gone through to "pass the character" of the members, they would challenge each other with having gone to Abolitionist meetings etc. This would give rise to discussions in which the cause was aired, and lengthy delays were imposed. Finally, the Bishop out of sheer weariness, would rule that being an Abolitionist was not an obstacle to "passing the character" of the Conference members. This was not such a small victory as it may seem, for Lucius Mathack had been barred from full membership in the PHILADELPHIA CONFERENCE for years because of his Abolitionist sympathies, and finally succeeded in gaining admittance only by transferring to the New England Conference, where a post was found for him alongside Orange Scott at Lowell, Mass. These same men put Abolitionist resolutions before quarterly and annual conferences. Sometimes the bishop or presiding elder would refuse to put the question, on the grounds that it was not a part of the proper business of the session. The officials would thereupon be charged with oppressive and high-handed abuse of power; to this the reply was often a charge of slander. It must be admitted that both sides were at times guilty of departure from brotherly charity in both word and action.

The Abolitionists founded Societies which at first used the name Methodist but when that was denied them, changed to "Wesleyan." When they were refused access to the Church's official Advocates they started their own periodicals. They were greatly disheartened by the lack of action in the General Conference of 1840. In that year Scott, Mathack and others called an antislavery convention which met in New York. Out of this convention grew the American Wesleyan Antislavery Society. By 1841 Orange Scott was saying of the M.E. Church, "There is . . . no alternative but to submit to things as they are or secede." In 1843 out of the Wesleyan Antislavery Society and sundry other disaffected groups grew The Wesleyan Methodist Connection of America, which became actually a church of considerable proportions, and constituted an ominous forerunner of the still greater split which was only a year away. (See Wesleyan Methodist Church of America.)

The fateful General Conference of 1844 awoke to a shocked awareness that the Abolition movement had grown up within the Church to proportions that would no longer be denied. The vote in "the Harding affair" of the Baltimore Conference (one hundred and seventeen to fifty-six) showed that the so-called border Conferences were prepared to continue voting with the North to maintain their historic policy of keeping the ministry free from entanglement with slavery; and there had been enough talk about slaveholding being a sin to indicate that the days of accommodation over lines geographical or otherwise were about over. So when, by a vote of 110 to 68, the Conference voted to ask Bishop Andrew (who had inherited a slave-girl from one wife, and become legally the owner of another by marrying again a woman who owned one) to "desist from the exercise of his office so long as this impediment remains," the slave-holding Conferences resolved that the action rendered "a continuance of the jurisdiction of this General Conference over these conferences inconsistent with the success of the ministry in the slaveholding states" (Journals of the General Conference, II, [1844] 109). (See also PLAN OF SEPARATION.) No matter how much each side might allege juridical grounds for its action (the North maintained the amenability of the bishops to the General Conference, while the South would allow nothing of the sort) everybody knew that the split was fundamentally a question of slavery in the Church. The division might conceivably have been carried out in such a way as to minimize frictions; but instead, mutual provocations multiplied, and the Plan of Separation which was intended to assuage the strife only increased it. Thus began the long separation of the M.E. Church, South, and the M.E. Church (north), which was to be until 1939—or nearly a century—in healing.

Though the delegates on the spot worked out a fairly equitable division of the property (consisting mostly of the assets of the BOOK CONCERN) there was a revulsion of feeling in the North during the next quadrennium. Many of those delegates who, in 1844, had agreed to the separation were not returned to the General Conference of the Northern Church in 1848. Their successors repudiated the agreement. The Southern Church brought suit in two States, NEW YORK and OHIO. The case in New York was decided in favor of the Southern Church. It declared the General Conference competent to divide the Church and the property. The decision of the Ohio Court, though not rendered till after the other had been handed down, was in direct contradiction to it: the General Conference was not competent to divide the Church. Members, of course, had freedom to leave in any numbers they wished, but they had no right to the property of the Church which they had left. The decision of the New York Court was not appealed by the Northern Church, but that of the Ohio Court was appealed by the Southern Church. In both cases the losers in the lower court may have assessed the situation keenly enough to know what they were about, for the Supreme Court decided unanimously in favor of the Southern Church. The monetary value of the settlement is put at $80,000; but the Southern Church felt that, in addition, the unanimity of the decision gave them the status of a co-ordinate division of the Church, on an equal footing of legitimacy with the Northerners.

After the separation was an accomplished fact, the after of the story may be subsumed under two heads: first, the way the two Churches brought their respective Disciplinary statements into harmony with the new situation in which each found itself in the matter of slavery; and, second, the melancholy matter of the rivalries and animosities which characterized the relations of the two Churches to each other. The two stories run concurrently, so far as time is concerned, but we shall for the sake of clarity deal with them topically, though it means going over the same time-period (1848-1864) more than once. Actually, what I have here designated as the second of my two topics—the rivalries and animosities of the two Churches—continued to subsist long after 1864; but this date seems the most fitting terminus for a treatment which regards them as effects of slavery; for it was in that year that the Emancipation Proclamation of President Lincoln began to take effect, and slavery came to an end.

We shall begin with the treatment accorded the Disciplinary statements on slavery by the M.E. Church, South. The Southern Church in its first General Conferences (1846, 1850 and 1854) was well occupied in getting its ecclesiastical machinery running. It was not till 1858 that it got rid of the rule on slavery, which it had taken over, along with the rest of the Discipline from pre-separation days. But doubtless a desire not to alienate the "border Conferences" during the critical period when they might, in whole or in part, join either Church, played its part in the delay. The matter was considered briefly in their General Conference of 1846, more seriously in those of 1850 and 1854; but the General Rule on Slavery was not actually dropped till 1858.

The Northern Church did not adopt new and more stringent antislavery provisions until two years later, that is in the General Conference of 1860. The same motives prompted the delay as had operated in the South—that is to say, a desire not to alienate the border Conferences. When finally the "new chapter" was adopted for the Discipline, it read, "We believe that the buying, selling or holding of human beings, to be used as chattels is . . . inconsistent with . . . that Rule in our Discipline which requires . . . us to do no harm" (History of American Methodism, II, 209). This was the strongest statement the radical Abolitionists could get at the time. Even so, it excited the fears of the border Conferences, and to allay them it was still further weakened by an explicit declaration that it was advisory and admonitory in character. Indeed it was not till 1864 that the holding of slaves was made an unqualified impediment to membership in the (Northern) M.E. Church. Before this, ironically, the slaves had been emancipated by the civil power as a military measure. Caesar in the service of Mars had accomplished what the spirit of John Wesley in the service of Christ had been unable to bring about. But indubitably Caesar, using the methods of Mars, left for generations yet unborn an entail of bitterness and alienation.

The border Conferences whose favor was so assiduously courted by both North and South were six in number: Baltimore, Baltimore East, Philadelphia, Western Virginia (soon to become simply West Virginia), Kentucky and Missouri. In these the struggle was particularly envenomed. In the General Conference of 1844 the Northern Church had promised not to try to set up churches in the territory of the Southern Church. But there was room for honest doubt where the lines lay. The ecclesiastical issue was clouded by the political one as Secession became a burning question—the border States adhered to the Union. So though neither Church erred on the side of modesty in estimating the limits of its missionary activity, there is no ground for charging the Northern Church with violating its promise in seeking the adherence of the border Conferences.

That part of the Baltimore Conference which lay in Virginia adhered with the rest of that state to the Confederacy, and the Methodists therein met by themselves till after the Civil War when the whole Baltimore Conference joined the Southern Church. On the other hand, some of the preachers of the KENTUCKY CONFERENCE of the Southern Church, having proclaimed their loyalty to the Union, refused to go to appointments in the Confederacy. After the War, eighteen of them withdrew and threw in their lot with the Northern Church. Roughly fifteen percent of the membership of the Northern Church was in the border Conferences in 1861. They had the preponderance in West Virginia; but in Kentucky and Missouri, the majority were in the Southern Church.

At times, as we shall see, the hostility boiled up in violence (see BORDER WAR); even when it did not, strong language was used on both sides, the vehement expression of the zeal with which each Church threw itself into the cause of the section in which it lay. Early in the war one northern preacher said, "Let Davis and Beauregard be captured, to meet the fate of Haman. Hang them up on Mason and Dixon's line, that traitors . . . may be warned. Let them hang until vultures shall eat their rotten flesh from their bones; let them hang until the crows shall build their filthy nests in their skeletons: let them hang until the rope rots, and let their dismembered bones fall so deep into the earth that God Almighty can't find them in the day of resurrection." Over against that bit of eloquence, we may put this description by a Southern preacher of the emissaries of the Northern Church, who came into the South "as enemies of the people and institutions of the slave states, rank, rotten with the foul virus of an incurable disease, foes of God and man, spies and traitors of their country and their kind, let them stay where they belong!" (Posey, p. 363.)

CALIFORNIA was another place where both churches were at work—but there was room for both in that spacious country. MISSOURI, however, was another story. The tradition of violence spilled over from the long struggle between Free-soil and slavery factions into the ecclesiastical realm. And because the lines between Southern and Northern Methodism corresponded closely with those already drawn, the tactics employed in both struggles were pretty much the same. In June of 1855, in Andrew County, Missouri, a preacher of the Northern Church attempted to conduct a protracted meeting in spite of threats. When he arrived he was met by a mob which tarred and feathered him. Perhaps the most celebrated clash of all was the one over ANTHONY BEWLEY, who moved from TENNESSEE to Missouri, but decided to remain in the Northern Church. In 1860 he and a companion were charged with poisoning wells and burning towns in TEXAS. He decided to return to Missouri, but on the way he was hanged by a mob near Fort Worth. "Before the separation was generally accepted, clashes along the border between the Churches became frequent, disturbing, even destructive. . . . It was not rare for services conducted by one side of the controversy to be broken up by the other" (Posey, ibid., p. 361).

The Southern Church seems to have been the more aggressive in the disputed territories before the outbreak of the War. It must be said, however, that the Northern Church, once the Union Armies had begun to occupy portions of the Confederate States, made indefensible use of the occupying forces as a screen behind which a campaign of ecclesiastical advancement was carried on. Bishop AMES was the principal promoter of this scheme, which involved securing the collaboration of military commanders to secure the use of churches and pulpits in occupied territory for ministers and chaplains of the Northern Methodist Church. In fairness it must be said that the Methodists were not alone in this sort of activity. Indeed probably the most famous case (made so by the protest of the ousted minister himself) was Presbyterian. President Lincoln himself was finally drawn into the discussion, and made it quite clear that he did not approve the replacement of one minister by another, except for open expressions of hostility to the cause of the Union. But after the President thought the Presbyterian difficulty had been solved by his intervention, he had to intervene to keep the commanders in "certain Southern military departments" from doing the same thing with Methodist churches for Bishop Ames.

So it went during the war years, each hostile act evoking a response still more hostile. The limits of our task as sketched earlier make it unnecessary to follow the melancholy story through the years of the Reconstruction. But just after the War's end, occurred an expression of opinion so refreshingly at variance with the prevailing temper that it may stand as the expression of a happier "might-have-been."

In 1865, John H. Caldwell preached two sermons in the Methodist Church in Newman, Georgia. They were published later, and bore a message of moderation which, as the event was to prove, went unheeded in the violent post-bellum atmosphere. These sermons gave vent to convictions "long pent up in his heart." Antislavery sentiments were stifled before the war, though they existed. God, Mr. Caldwell continued, has put an end to slavery, which shows that though the relationship involved was not wrong, at least the Southern practice of it was: the law punished the black man more severely than the white; the slaves were improperly fed, clothed and housed. Our contention that the Southern Church was not proslavery after the separation makes no sense—"if it was not pro-slavery, what was it?" Our children have been trained up to cherish the bitterest sentiments toward the North, but we shall shake hands with our late foes and cooperate with the Union.

In sum, we may say that though Methodism furnished neither defenders of slavery nor Abolitionist leaders of national stature, they furnished the matrix out of which great numbers of the rank-and-file of both parties were drawn. In this, as in so many other matters, Methodism was a representative cross section of the nation. At the present writing, the question of chattel slavery is a matter of historic interest only in the United States. Nevertheless, the prohibition against both the holding of and trading in slaves, still stands in our General Rules, a monument to a struggle now happily long past. All other declarations on the subject have, as might be expected, disappeared from the Discipline.

E. S. Bucke, History of American Methodism. 1964.

John H. Caldwell, Slavery and Southern Methodism: Two Sermons Preached in the Methodist Church in Newman, Georgia. 1865.

R. M. Cameron, Methodism and Society. 1961. Journals of the General Conferences.

D. G. Mathews, Slavery and Methodism. 1965.

Walter B. Posey, Frontier Mission: A History of Religion West of the Southern Appalachians to 1861. Lexington, Ky.: University of Kentucky Press, 1966.

W. W. Sweet, The Story of Religion in America. New York: Harper, 1950.

RICHARD M. CAMERON

SLAVERY AND BRITISH METHODISM. The right to sell slaves to the Spanish colonies brought great prosperity to the eighteenth-century English slave trade. About three million slaves were carried in English ships during the eighteenth century; in 1768 alone, English ships carried 53,000 out of about 100,000 slaves. They were bought for about £20-25 in West Africa and shipped to Jamaica, the main American market, where they were sold for about £40-50 each. Slaves made a great contribution to British wealth, making the trade highly respectable and creating a formidable vested interest with many able political defenders.

The Wesley brothers had met slavery as far back as 1736, and they never forgot its cruelties. Years later, on reading the book of "an honest quaker," Anthony Benezet, John Wesley branded the trade as "that execrable sum of all the villainies" (Journal, Feb. 12, 1772). Benezet's book shaped his own Thoughts on Slavery (1774). The "grand idol" of slavery was "the god of gain"; slaves were "petty tyrants over human freedom"; their excuses were "empty and hypocritical," and their methods inhuman. "I deny that villainy is ever necessary. A man can be of no necessity of degrading himself into a wolf." Wesley pleaded, "Give liberty to whom liberty is due, that is, to every child of man, to every partaker of human nature. Let none serve you except by his own act and deed, by his own voluntary choice. Away with all whips, all chains, all compulsion. Be gentle toward all men." He underlined these arguments in his Serious Address of 1777, and poured scorn on those who lamented the temporary loss of the trade in the American Revolutionary War. When the Committee for the Abolition of the Slave Trade was formed in 1787, Wesley wrote letters of support to Thomas Clarkson and Granville Sharp. He promised Clarkson to republish his pamphlet of 1774, with a recommendation of the committee (Works, xiii, 113). He preached on slavery at Bristol, a great center of the trade; the next day the society spent a day of fasting and prayer "for those poor outcasts of men" (Journal, March 6-7, 1788). The last book he read was the autobiography of an African slave, Gustavus Vasa; his last and most famous letter, written on Feb. 24, 1791, was to encourage WILLIAM WILBERFORCE: "Go on, in the name of God and the power of his might, till even American slavery, the vilest that ever saw the sun, shall vanish away before it."

The abolition of slavery was the only major social concern of John Wesley that was convincingly and wholeheartedly continued by early nineteenth-century Methodism. This was partly because the slavery issue was increasingly bound up with the rapid expansion of Wesleyan overseas missions. West Indian planters soon realized the danger of allowing Methodist instruction of their slaves, and they incited the colonial authorities to persecute Methodist missionaries and societies. Methodism was thus identified with the abolitionist cause; Wilberforce persuaded the 1791 Conference to support abolitionist petitions, while his own followers were soon dubbed "a set of Methodists" (Eclectic Review, August, 1810). The Conference of 1807 greeted the abolition of the English slave trade by forbidding missionaries to marry anyone without the emancipation of their slaves. It was an apt decision, as abolitionist effort was now concentrated on the destruction of slavery itself. From 1807 to 1833 there was a prolonged battle between Methodism and the West Indian interests. The Jamaican legislature prohibited Methodist instruction of slaves in 1807; the Wesleyan COMMITTEE OF PRIVILEGES persuaded the British government to annul the law in 1809. The creation of the WESLEYAN METHODIST MISSIONARY SOCIETY proper in 1814 gave Methodists a new focal point of opposition. RICHARD WATSON, one of its secretaries from 1821, published a convincing answer to charges that Methodism taught sedition, disobedience, and rebellion to West Indian slaves. He was strongly supported by JAREZ BUNTING, who published full details of the Demerara and Barbadoes persecutions in the Wesleyan Methodist Magazine. Watson and Bunting warmly supported the newly started Anti-Slavery Society and rallied Methodism to the abolitionist cause.

There was a strong reply to those Jamaican missionaries who denounced emancipation in 1824; the Missionary Committee declared it an irregular meeting; and they hold it to be the duty of every Christian government to bring the practice of slavery to an end, . . . and that the degradation of men merely on account of their colour, and the holding of human beings in interminable bondage, are wholly inconsistent with Christianity. . . . They will not compromise the principles of Christianity . . . to obtain favour. (Wesleyan Methodist Magazine, 1825, pp. 117-19.)

Watson remained firm despite the disapproval of the colonial secretary. Conference recommended antislavery petitions in 1829 and 1830, and in 1830 and 1831 urged Methodist voters to support abolitionist candidates at Parliamentary elections. When the Jamaican slave insurrection of 1831 was blamed on missionary teaching and made the pretext for further wholesale persecution, the Conference of 1832 defended the "peaceable conduct" of Methodist slaves, and the "prudent conduct" of their missionaries. It denounced the destruction of five chapels by Jamaican white mobs, noting that slavery corrupted the owners and their agents even more than the slaves. It repeated its condemnation of the Jamaican resolutions of 1824 and thanked the government for its promised protection (Minutes of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference, 1832).

In December, 1832, T. F. Buxton wrote to the dying Richard Watson to tell him that the government would introduce an emancipation bill and wanted their advice. The 1833 Emancipation Act was hailed by the Conference of 1834 in its "Annual Address to the Societies": "We congratulate you on this happy accomplishment of your ardent desires. . . . God hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on the face of the earth; and we anticipate the time when, by the admission and triumph of this great truth, all civil distinctions arising from colour and complexion shall be abolished" (Minutes of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference, 1834). Over 130 years later, that time has still not arrived. Slavery was by no means dead. Other nations abolished slavery in time, but the trade to the Americas survived until 1865. There was even controversy over the terms of the 1833 act; the compensation of £20,000,000 to the former slave owners was not welcomed by all Methodists, though the Wesleyan Methodist Magazine accepted it as an act of national repentance.

In 1840, the Conference recommended a new Society for the Extinction of the Slave Trade and the Civilisation of Africa (Minutes of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference, 1840). British Methodism occasionally clashed with American Methodism on the subject of slavery, and ROBERT NEWTON on his return from a visit to America in 1840 said,

If I were a coloured person I scarcely know what fate I should prefer, to be a slave in the South, or a reputed free-man in the North, and yet to have my manhood trodden down, and my feelings lacerated every hour, by the cruel ban under which those of African blood in every degree are doomed to suffer. (C. Smith, History of Wesleyan Methodism (1872) iii, 406).

Wesley, J. Thoughts on Slavery. London. 1774.

MICHAEL S. EDWARDS

SLEDD, ANDREW (1870-1939), American educator and teacher of New Testament Language and Literature, was born on Nov. 7, 1870, at Lynchburg, Va., the son of Robert Newton and Frances Carey (Greene) Sledd. His father was a prominent member of the VIRGINIA CONFERENCE. He received his A.M. and A.B. degree from RANDOLPH-MACON COLLEGE, took a Master's in Greek at Harvard, and later received the Ph.D. in Latin at Yale, 1903. He was, as he would have said, a Latinist, and took the chair of Latin at EMORY COLLEGE at Oxford, Ga., in 1898, serving there until 1902. On March 14, 1899, he married Annie Florence Candler, the daughter of Bishop WARREN A. CANDLER, who was at that time president of Emory at Oxford. Sledd became the professor of Greek in Southern University at Greensboro, Ala., for one year, and then he was made president of the University of Florida during the early days of that institution. The Florida University named a building in his honor long afterward.

At the founding of the School of Theology at EMORY UNIVERSITY in 1914, his father-in-law, Bishop Candler, acting as president and chancellor of the newly founded seminary, called Sledd to that institution and for a quarter of a century he served as professor of New Testament, Languages and Literature at Emory.

A. Sledd, as he usually signed his name, started as a layman, but while teaching at Oxford he was licensed to preach in 1898. Twelve years later he was admitted on trial in the FLORIDA CONFERENCE in 1910. He moved his Conference membership to ALABAMA, however, when he taught in that state, and kept his membership in the ALABAMA CONFERENCE for the rest of his life. He was never in the regular pastorate, but did serve churches for brief periods. He was "known to his pupils for the exactness of his thinking and his abhorrence of shoddiness." His classroom insights in the interpretation of the Greek New Testament will never be forgotten by those whom he taught.

Sledd wrote The Bibles of the Churches, Cokesbury, 1930; His Witnesses—A Study of the Book of Acts, with C. A. Bowen, the general church school editor, 1935; St. Mark's Life of Jesus, Cokesbury, 1930. He was considered somewhat liberal for his day in Scriptural interpretation, but publicly opposed the unification of the Episcopal Methodist Churches when this forward looking move came about in the mid-twenties and thirties.

Sledd's first child, Andrew, born in 1903, died in 1919, but seven other of his eight children, as well as his wife, survived him. He died on March 16, 1939.

Raymond H. Firth, "The Life of Andrew Sledd." Unpublished ms., Emory University.

Journal of the Alabama Conference, 1940.

C. F. Price, Who's Who in American Methodism. 1916.

N. B. H.

SLEEPER, JACOB (1802-1889), American layman and philanthropist, was born in New Castle, MAINE, on Nov. 21, 1802. His parents died when he was fourteen years old and the rest of his youth was spent under the care of his uncle in Belfast, Maine. After attending Lincoln Academy for a period, he went to work. By the time he was twenty-one he had a store in Belfast. In his early twenties he moved to BOSTON and in real estate and wholesale clothing he amassed a considerable fortune.

Sleeper yielded to public pressure and became a member of the Aldermanic Council of Boston, then a member of the State Legislature, and later served two terms in the Governor's Council. He was twice appointed by the Commonwealth an Overseer of Harvard University.

Sleeper was described by those who knew him well as handsome, having remarkably penetrating and sympathetic eyes. He was wise, cheerful, tactful, winsome, and modest. One of his mottoes was, "Do as much good as you can, and don't make a fuss about it."

Jacob Sleeper gave his heart to God in his youth and joined the M.E. Church. He gave to his church the first fifty dollars he ever earned by his own exertions and was always a generous supporter of every Methodist cause. He belonged to Bromfield Street Church, Boston, and was a longtime CLASS LEADER, for fifty-nine years Sunday school superintendent, and forty-six years treasurer of the Trustees.

Jacob Sleeper joined LEE CLAFLIN and ISAAC RICH in securing a Charter for BOSTON UNIVERSITY and in helping to start it in its progressive course of educational service. He died on March 31, 1889.

Dictionary of American Biography. DANIEL L. MARSH

SLICER, HENRY (1804-1874), American minister, was born in Annapolis, Md., March 27, 1801. While serving an apprenticeship in BALTIMORE he was converted and licensed to preach, and in 1822 began his fifty-two year ministry in the BALTIMORE CONFERENCE. Besides pastorates in every important station in WASHINGTON and Baltimore, he presided fifteen years over districts, was CHAPLAIN of the U. S. Senate for seven terms, and served two years as agent for the Metropolitan Church project at Washington.

Eight GENERAL CONFERENCES between 1832 and 1872 heard the voice of the old "war horse" lifted in debate, and in that of 1860 he led the unsuccessful struggle to defeat the "new chapter." That same year DICKINSON COLLEGE honored him with a D.D. degree. While he was on Potomac District in 1832 a remarkable revival took place, as well as a tussle with the Baptists. The latter called forth his treatise on BAPTISM. He later in 1838 published an influential sermon against dueling and led the BOOK COMMITTEE minority, 1868-72, against the "era of fraud." The temperance cause found him an able and widely sought advocate.

Colleagues remembered him as one who loved the Master and the Methodist Church and defended both with vigor. Rheumatism pained and slowed his steps, but he remained in effective relation until near April 23, 1874 when he closely followed his wife, Elizabeth, in death. They are buried in Greenmount Cemetery, Baltimore.

J. E. Armstrong, Old Baltimore Conference. 1907.

EDWIN SCHELL

SLOAN, HAROLD PAUL (1881-1961), American minister and editor, was born in Westfield, N. J., Dec. 12, 1881, the son of Theodore Reber and Miriam B. Hickman Sloan, who was herself the daughter of a Methodist clergyman. He studied at the University of Pennsylvania, Crozer Theological Seminary and DREW THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, where he received his B.D. degree in 1908. He married Ethel Beatrice Buckwalter, April 3, 1909. They had two children, Ruth B. and Harold Paul, Jr.

He joined the NEW JERSEY CONFERENCE (ME) in full connection in 1906. He served in various churches and as District Superintendent of the Camden District from 1934 to 1936. He was elected a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE in 1920, and to every subsequent General Conference until his election as Editor of the (New York) Christian Advocate in 1936.

Sloan was conservative in his theological position and became an ardent fundamentalist in the modernist-fundamentalist controversies of the 1920's. Feeling that modernism was entering Methodism mostly by way of the Conference COURSE OF STUDIES, he headed a drive culminating in 1920 when thirty annual conferences sent memorials to the General Conference demanding an investigation of, and appropriate changes in, the Course of Study. The General Conference voted that the new studies were to be in "full and hearty accord with those doctrines and that outline of faith established in the constitution of the church; and that the Discipline, with some special emphasis upon the ARTICLES OF RELIGION, and the standard sermons of JOHN WESLEY, fifty-two in number, recognized as standards in American Methodism, shall be included in the conference course."

Sloan continued his fundamentalist campaign through a publication, Call to Colors, which later merged with a magazine called The Bible Champion, later to become The Essentialist. He was unable, however, to influence the General Conference further by his fundamentalist position, although in 1928 he addressed that body charging "flagrant disloyalty to the Methodist doctrinal standards in seminaries, pulpits, and Sunday school literature."

He was a delegate to the ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE in LONDON in 1921, and he received an honorary doctorate from the University of Pennsylvania in 1940.

As Editor of the Advocate, he stated in his first issue his "basic loyalty . . . to the historic Christian faith itself," and during his four-year tenure many of his editorials centered in theological presentations of his own strongly held religious viewpoint. He took no steps to update the format of the paper or to make it more attractive to the average layman.

Sloan was a prolific writer, being the author of nine books. He also taught for a time at Temple Theological Seminary, and became a Trustee of Drew Theological Seminary and of ASBURY COLLEGE, Kentucky. After leaving the office of Editor, he became pastor of the Wharton Memorial Church in PHILADELPHIA, where he also conducted a radio ministry, "The Living Christ Hour," and began likewise to speak out strongly against communism. He was tall, powerfully built, with a friendly face topped by a mass of white hair. He possessed a clarion voice and demonstrated great skill in debate.

He died in 1961. A memorial service was held for him on May 25 in the Haddonfield Methodist Church, Haddonfield, N. J.

C. T. Howell, Prominent Personalities. 1945.

FREDERICK E. MASER

SLOANE, ISRAEL (1825-1863), American United Brethren missionary martyr, was born in MARYLAND, June 18, 1825. At about eighteen years of age he was converted. In the same year he enrolled at Oberlin College, where he remained for two years. During this period he decided upon entering the ministry. He transferred to OTTERBEIN COLLEGE and joined the Scioto Conference, CHURCH OF THE UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST.

In 1854 he was sent to CANADA as the first missionary of the United Brethren in Christ to that country, having served a number of appointments previously in Scioto Conference. Although he remained in Canada only four years he succeeded in establishing the Ontario Mission Conference in 1856. Feeling impelled to go to CALIFORNIA as a missionary he went there in 1858 and succeeded in forming a mission conference. The rigors of this life were quite strenuous. He served Humboldt Bay while Indians were on the warpath. Injured by an unmanageable horse in the Cache Creek Mountains, he died Aug. 26, 1863, having established more than a score of congregations and organized two mission conferences. Twice married, his second wife survived him.

Religious Telescope, Dec. 21, 1864.

Weekley and Fout, Our Heroes. 1908. ROBERT R. MACCANON

SLUTZ, FRANK DURWARD (1882-1956), American lay leader and educator, was born in Mt. Hope, Ohio, on Nov. 27, 1882. He received the A.B. and A.M. degrees from Mt. UNION COLLEGE, and the A.M. from Harvard. He taught in several elementary schools in Ohio and COLORADO and was superintendent of schools in Pueblo, Colo., from 1912 to 1917. For the next ten years he was director of Moraine Park School, DAYTON, Ohio, and from 1927 to 1932 was educational adviser at Chicago Teachers College. Slutz held various positions in The Methodist Church at the local, annual conference, and national levels. From 1948 to 1952 he was a member of the General Board of EDUCATION, and from 1948 to 1956 he was a member of the Curriculum Committee. He served the General Board of LAY ACTIVITIES and the Young Men's Christian Association in numerous capacities, and he gave many lectures to industrial managers and to labor unions. He was twice a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE. For thirty-five years he conducted a summer boys' camp at Cass Lake, Minn. Slutz died on Dec. 16, 1956.

Clark and Stafford, Who's Who in Methodism. 1952.

WALTER N. VERNON

SLUTZ, LEONARD DOERING (1913-), American layman, prominent in GENERAL CONFERENCE and general Church work, was born on April 7, 1913, in CINCINNATI, Ohio, his father and grandfather being Methodist ministers, Earl R. and William Leonard Slutz respectively. His mother was Edna Lee Davis. He was educated at OHIO WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, B.A., 1934; and the University of Cincinnati, LL.B., 1937. He has since practiced law as partner in a well known legal firm in Cincinnati.

Mr. Slutz was a member of the Commission on Inter-judicial Relations (1956-68), and Chairman of that important body (1964-68). He was the chairman of the Committee on Judicial Administration at the 1956 General Conference, the vice-chairman of the Committee on Conferences in 1966, and secretary of the Committee on Conferences of the General Conference of 1968. He has been a member of the General Conference (TMC), 1952, '56, '60, '64, '66, and '68. He is also a member of the WORLD METHODIST COUNCIL, serving on its executive committee, and was a member of the General Assembly of the NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES, 1960-64.

He has served as president of the Board of Alumni Directors of Ohio Wesleyan; on the Governing Board of the White Cross Hospital in Columbus, Ohio; the Bethesda Hospital and Bethesda Home for the Aged; Wesley Hall and Emanuel Community Center in Cincinnati. During the second World War, he was the commanding officer of the USS LSM 301. In Ohio he has been a member of the Board of Trustees of the Cincinnati Human Relations Commission, of the Ohio Civil Rights Commission, and has served as an instructor in speech at the University of Cincinnati, and also as an instructor in the College of Law, 1957-59. His reports at the General Conference of 1966 and '68 upon the matter of the dissolution of the Central Jurisdiction and matters pertaining thereto were received with great appreciation by the Conference as matters of high import.

Who's Who in Methodism, 1952.

N. B. H.

SLUYTER, EUNICE (1916-), arrived in INDIA in August 1939, as a missionary of the Reformed Church of America. She served as the treasurer and a teacher in Sherman Girls' High School of the Arcot Mission in Chittoor (then in Madras Presidency, now in Andhra State). When she met SARAH CHAKKO in 1943, Miss Sluyter became eager to work with her in ISABELLA THOBURN COLLEGE. On furlough in America next year, she obtained permission from authorities of the Reformed Church to transfer to the Board of MISSIONS of The Methodist Church. In 1945 she joined the staff of the college as a Methodist missionary.

When it seemed that the government of Uttar Pradesh would insist on Hindi for all instruction in the college, Miss Sluyter accepted an invitation from the LUCKNOW PUBLISHING HOUSE to develop a program of publishing and organizing book clubs and reading courses. A year later she was appointed director of literature for the Methodist Church in Southern Asia.

The next CENTRAL CONFERENCE (1956) appointed a Commission on Literature with representatives of all Annual Conferences in India. She was made secretary of the commission. The Board of Missions provided funds to assist in the program which included Bible correspondence courses, "Tin-Trunk" libraries for villages, reading rooms, book clubs, and training for would-be writers. She encouraged conference committees to produce and sell the literature needed within their boundaries. In March 1965, she was elected publisher for the Methodist Church in Southern Asia.

M. A. Dimmitt, Isabella Thoburn College. 1963.

J. N. Hollister, Southern Asia. 1956. J. WASKOM PICKETT

SMALES, GIDEON (1817-1894), NEW ZEALAND Wesleyan minister, was born at Whitby, Yorkshire, England, and was received on probation by the LIVERPOOL Conference in 1837. He arrived in New Zealand on the mission vessel "Triton" in May 1840. On Dec. 29, 1840, he married Mary Anna Bumby (1811-62), sister of John Hewgill Bumby, General Superintendent of the New Zealand Mission, who had been drowned in tragic circumstances in the previous June.

Smales was stationed at Newark for two years, and was transferred to Porirua near Wellington in 1842. In September of the following year, he was appointed to Aotea, where work had been begun by H. Hanson Turton in 1841. After three months of fundraising, Smales arrived at Rauraukare on the Aotea Harbor, in January 1844, where he supervised the building of a station which he named "Beechamdale." There he served with great devotion until 1856.

Wishing to make provision for his family of seven, Smales left the service of the Mission (which forbade its agents to own land) and bought a farm which he called "Hampton Park" at East Tamaki, near Auckland. In 1860 he built a stone church (St. John's) on his farm and it has been used ever since by both Anglicans and Methodists.

While they were visiting England in 1862, Mrs. Smales died, and later he married Mary Anne Baxter (1845-69). She bore him three children, all of whom died in infancy. Smales returned to New Zealand in 1868 as an accredited supernumerary minister of the British Conference. In the following year his second wife died.

Possessing private means, Smales generously built a "Home Institute" on the Thames gold-fields in 1868, as a social center for miners and citizens. This venture involved him in severe financial loss.

He visited the U. S. A. and England on a lecture tour in 1871-72, and about this time remarried. This third wife, Elizabeth Tayler, bore him seven children. All ten children of the first two marriages predeceased Smales. Of the third family C. G. Hunt wrote in 1957, "a son and three daughters are still living in New Zealand." Smales died on Oct. 5, 1894, and is buried in the crypt of St. John's Church, East Tamaki.

C. G. Hunt, Some Notes on the Wesleyan Mission at Aotea (typescript, Waikato Historical Society, Hamilton, New Zealand, 1957).

Gideon Smales, Opinions and Testimonials. Whitby, England; Horne & Son, 1872.

SMALL, JOHN BRYAN (1845-1915), Zion Methodism's first bishop to Africa, was born March 14, 1845 at Frazer, St. Joseph's Parish, Barbadoes, BRITISH WEST INDIES. Educated for the priesthood of the Anglican Church, he early persuaded his father to permit him to visit JAMAICA and other islands in the area. Later he proceeded to Africa and there remained more than three years, learning some of the native dialects while in residence. He joined the A.M.E. ZION CHURCH intentionally that he might bring to the African continent the Negro Church.

On coming to America, he served several churches in the New England area and then transferred to the PHILADELPHIA and BALTIMORE area, becoming a presiding elder in that Conference. He was elected a bishop of the Church in 1896. Bishop Small died on Jan. 15, 1915.

Bishop Small will be remembered for his significant work in the Gold Coast and LIBERIA and for his plan of bringing to America promising young African men to be trained in the denominational and other Church-supported schools for work in their home areas. Several of these young men gave a good account of themselves, such as Osam Pinanko and J. E. K. Aggrey.

J. W. Hood, One Hundred Years. 1895. DAVID H. BRADLEY

SMART, JAMES S. (1825-1892), American preacher, was born in Searsport, MAINE, on March 31, 1825. His father, Ephraim, was a local preacher, a selectman, and member of the state legislature. James left home at seven due to his father's death, and went to sea for a time. A tragedy on the vessel led to his conversion at sixteen.

He moved to MICHIGAN and was licensed to preach at Dexter; in 1848 he joined the MICHIGAN CONFERENCE on trial. He served continuously for forty-four years, rising to prominence in the DETROIT CONFERENCE. Twice was the presiding elder of the Flint District, and he was elected seven times as delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE.

In the Civil War he raised a company of men for the U. S. Army and served as chaplain of the 23rd Michigan Infantry, mostly in KENTUCKY and TENNESSEE. He wrote many reports of the war for the Northwestern Christian Advocate.

Smart was a trustee of ALBION COLLEGE twenty-four years, and by it was given an honorary D.D. degree. He served as Financial Agent for GARRETT BIBLICAL INSTITUTE two years; his work gave existence to Heck Hall. He also served as Financial Agent for Albion College. He was notable as a fundraiser for church indebtedness; perhaps no minister in his time dedicated more churches than he.

He was married to Elmira Carter in 1850, who with seven children survived him. One of his sons, Frederick A., followed his father as a minister in the Detroit Conference. Smart was prominent in conference causes; a member of the Centenary Committee in 1866; a promoter of reforms, including the election of presiding elders, a leader in the temperance movement. He had a commanding presence and was a vigorous and effective speaker.

He died at Flint, Mich., March 2, 1892.

M. B. Macmillan, Michigan. 1967.

Minutes of the Detroit Conference, 1892.

RONALD A. BRUNGER

SMART, WYATT AIKEN (1883-1961), American theologian, preacher, author, and teacher, was born in Newberry, S. C., on Oct. 22, 1883. His father was Richard Davis Smart, a distinguished minister of the M. E. Church, South; his mother was Ella Aiken. He was educated at the Webb School at Bell Buckle, Tenn., did undergraduate work at VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY (A.B., 1904), and pursued further studies at Union Theological Seminary in New York (B.D., 1907) and at the University of Chicago. He was awarded the D.D. degree in 1919 by SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIVERSITY and in 1930 by OHIO WESLEYAN.

Joining the VIRGINIA CONFERENCE in 1907, he served

Trinity, Lynchburg, 1907-09; Park View Church, PORTSMOUTH, 1909-13; First Church, Charlottesville, 1913-14 (all in Virginia). On Dec. 30, 1909, he married Ethel Bradshaw Chappell, and they had one daughter, Helen, who became Mrs. Millard Revis of the Virginia Conference. In 1914, Smart was called to the newly founded School of Theology at EMORY UNIVERSITY, and for the next forty years he remained there as a professor of Biblical Theology and Chaplain of Emory from 1943. He retired in 1952, but continued to teach for some time thereafter. He was much in demand as a speaker and lecturer, having a positive incisive approach both in preaching and speaking, and he greatly influenced college students. He delivered the Fondren Lectures at Southern Methodist University; the Cole Lectures at Vanderbilt; and the Quillian Lectures at Emory. For many years he wrote expository notes upon the Sunday school lessons, as these were published in various magazines of his Church, and these were much read.

He was the author of The Spiritual Gospel, Abingdon-Cokesbury, 1946 (the Quillian Lectures, 1945); Still the Bible Speaks, 1961, based on the Cole Lectures; and The Contemporary Christ, the Fondren Lectures of 1942.

Smart was a delegate to the third World Conference on Faith and Order at Stockholm, and was four times a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of his Church, being elected from the Virginia Conference in which he maintained a life-long membership. He was put in strong nomination for the episcopacy at the SOUTHEASTERN JURISDICTION CONFERENCES of 1944 and 1948, and while twice he received a majority of the votes cast, he did not receive the sixty percent required for election.

The so-called fundamentalist controversy broke on the Church early in his career, and he spoke out in candor "not so much for a cause as for the sake of truth," as J. Calloway Robertson stated it. His students, after his retirement, put his portrait in the School of Theology at Emory. He died on April 8, 1961, and was buried in the cemetery at Decatur, Ga., not far from Emory.

C. T. Howell, Prominent Personalities. 1945.

Minutes of the Virginia Conference, 1961.

Who's Who in Methodism, 1952.

N. B. H.

SMETHAM, JAMES (1821-1889), British Methodist painter, was born at Pateley Bridge in Yorkshire on Sept. 9, 1821. He was the son of a Wesleyan Methodist minister; he attended the school for Wesleyan preachers' sons at Woodhouse Grove. Leaving there in 1836, he was articled to an architect, E. J. Willson, of Lincoln, who was an associate of Pugin. Smetham decided, however, to become a painter, and for some time supported himself as a portrait painter. His father's death in 1847 led to his conversion, and from then on he turned more and more to religious subjects. From 1851 to 1877 he taught drawing at the Wesleyan Normal School, or teachers' training college, at Westminster (see WESTMINSTER COLLEGE). As a painter, however, he never succeeded; his biographer says that he was defeated by "Photography, Pre-Raphaelism, and Ruskinism," for he clung to an older, less fashionable style. His highest point was the exhibition of "The Hymn of the Last Supper" at the Royal Academy in 1869, but later attempts, such as "The Women of the Crucifixion," were rejected. He suffered much from depression in his later years and died in London on Feb. 5, 1889. There is a memoir, by William Davies, which serves as an introduction to Letters of James Smetham (first edition, 1891); there was a second edition in 1892, reprinted in 1902. The letters were edited by Sarah Smetham and William Davies.

W. Davies, Letters of James Smetham. London, 1891.

JOHN KENT

SMITH, ALEXANDER COKE (1849-1906), American bishop, was born near Lynchburg, Sumter County, S. C., on Sept. 16, 1849. The son of W. H. and Asabella (McLeod) Smith, he was the fourth generation of native Americans. His father and mother were both devoted Christians.

Converted early in life, Coke Smith was graduated from WOFFORD COLLEGE in 1872, and the same year he joined the SOUTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE. He was appointed to Cheraw charge, 1872; Washington Street Church, COLUMBIA, three years; Greenville, four; Trinity, CHARLESTON, two; presiding elder, Columbia District, three.

He was professor of Mental and Moral Philosophy of Wofford College, 1886-90; and that year he headed the delegation to the GENERAL CONFERENCE; professor of Practical Theology in VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY, Nashville, Tenn., 1890-92. Appointed pastor of Granby Street Church, NORFOLK, Va., three and a half years; Court Street Church, Lynchburg, Va., four years; returned to Granby Street Church, Norfolk, now Epworth. He attended the ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCES, 1891, and 1901. At the former he gave an address, "Christian Co-operation," which was followed by the most remarkable debate of the Conference, said one who was present. He was a fraternal delegate to the Methodist Church of CANADA, 1898.

On Dec. 22, 1875, he married Kate Kinard, daughter of General H. H. Kinard of Newberry, S. C., and they had eight children—one of whom became a member of the VIRGINIA CONFERENCE. He was elected bishop by the M.E. South General Conference of 1902. He died in Asheville, N. C., Dec. 27, 1906, and was buried in Norfolk, Va.

A sincere Christian, he shone more brightly as a pastor-preacher than anywhere else. He combined the gift of adaptability with pathos and could hold the interest and attention of the learned and the ignorant. A friend who called upon Bishop Smith about three months before his death said: "As he talked, I felt as if Jesus Christ was in the room."

COLLINS DENNY (later bishop) said, "Bishop Smith was a man of rare versatility and adaptability, and charmed every circle and community into which he entered . . . Coke Smith can truly be called 'a great man.'"

F. D. Leete, Methodist Bishops. 1948.

National Cyclopedic of American Biography.

South Carolina Conference Minutes, MES, 1907.

JESSE A. EARL

SMITH, ALFRED FRANKLIN (1869-1962), American clergyman, editor and publisher, was born at Charleston, Mo., on March 28, 1869. He was educated at CENTRAL COLLEGE and VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY and received two honorary degrees.

He joined the MISSOURI CONFERENCE of the M.E. Church, South, in 1892, and was appointed to Centralia.

ALFRED F. SMITH

His other pastoral appointments were Maberly, Hannibal, Inso, Oklahoma, Galloway Memorial Church in JACKSON, Miss., St. Paul's Church and Centenary Church in ST. LOUIS.

He was President of Central College for Women, 1903-08; editor of the St. Louis Christian Advocate, 1918-21; CHAPLAIN of Barnes Hospital in St. Louis, 1921-23; Editor of the Christian Advocate at Nashville, Tenn., 1923-32, and BOOK EDITOR and PUBLISHING AGENT, 1932-40. He retired in 1940.

Smith was a member of the Executive Committee of the FEDERAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES, the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1930, the ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE of 1931, the Conference on Life and Work at Oxford, England, in 1937, and the Conference on Faith and Order at Edinburgh in 1937. He died on March 7, 1962, at Cairo, Ill., and was buried at St. Louis, Mo.

Christian Advocate, April 12, 1962.

Who's Who in America.

ELMER T. CLARK

SMITH, ANGIE FRANK (1889-1962), American bishop, was born at Elgin, Texas, on Nov. 1, 1889, and educated at SOUTHWESTERN and VANDERBILT UNIVERSITIES, receiving honorary doctorates from Southwestern and McMURRY COLLEGE. He entered the ministry of the M.E. Church, South, in 1912 and joined the NORTH TEXAS CONFERENCE in 1914. He served pastorates at Detroit, Dallas, Austin, San Antonio, and Houston.

Elected a bishop in 1930, he was assigned to OKLAHOMA, the Indian Mission and MISSOURI, then to the three conferences in Missouri, and spent the rest of his episcopal career in TEXAS. He retired in 1960.

Bishop Smith was a member of the GENERAL CONFERENCES of 1926 and 1930, the Commission on Constitution and the Hymnal Commission. He was delegate to the ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE in 1931 and fraternal delegate to the United Church of CANADA in 1934. He was director of the Aldersgate Commemoration in 1937 and 1938 and a member of the Commission on the Unification of American Methodism in 1938 and 1939. In 1940 he became president of the Division of National Missions of the united Church and occupied that post until his retirement. He also served as a member of the Methodist Commission on Army and Navy CHAPLAINS. He was a member of the Board of Trustees of five Methodist institutions of learning and held numerous other positions of distinction. He died at his home in Houston, Texas, on Oct. 6, 1962.

A. FRANK SMITH

F. D. Leete, Methodist Bishops. 1948.
Who's Who in America.

ELMER T. CLARK

SMITH, ANNA CHURCHILL (1876-1963), American missionary to Africa and to the home church, was born into a Wesleyan Methodist parsonage family in New England. Growing up in a devout home, she early had a concern for her own salvation and that of people everywhere. As a student in Houghton College, she dedicated her life for service in Africa.

As the young wife of the Rev. Willard Boardman they went to Africa in 1902. Twenty days after their arrival her husband died of African fever. She remained to serve there.

Four years later she married the Rev. J. Hal Smith and in 1910 they were assigned by the Mission Board of the UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST as the first missionaries to the Kono Country in SIERRA LEONE. Mrs. Smith was the first white woman to enter this area of Sierra Leone.

For five years they served together, Mrs. Smith compiling a dictionary of Kono words which greatly facilitated learning the language.

Ill health forced Mrs. Smith's return to the States; her husband remained but met accidental death in 1915.

After regaining her health, she was appointed Special Support Secretary in 1916, a position she filled for more than twenty-five years.

Death came to her March 4, 1963 at Corry, Pa., where she made her home following retirement in 1942. From 1942-1945 she served as pastor of the Wayne Valley Church near her home.

Mrs. Smith was the author of several books: Glimpses into African Mission Life (1911), Mendi-English Dictionary (1910), and The Radiant Life of Vera B. Blinn (1921).

She was constantly presenting the cause of missions overseas. She was also a monthly contributor to the Woman's Evangel; prepared "mission newsletters" for the supporting constituency; and cared for all correspondence related to special support.

Four characteristics sum up her life: her dedication to one purpose; her prayer life; her generosity, and her simple faith and trust in God.

World Evangel, June-July, 1963.

MARY McLANACHAN

SMITH, BENJAMIN JULIAN (1899-), twenty-seventh bishop of the C.M.E. CHURCH, was born on Dec. 27, 1899, at Barnesville, Ga. He received an A.B. degree from Howard University in 1924, B.D. from GARRETT BIBLICAL INSTITUTE in 1927, and an honorary D.D. degree from LANE COLLEGE in 1944. He held pastorates in WASHINGTON, D.C., ILLINOIS, NEW YORK, and MISSOURI. From 1935 to 1954, he served as general secretary of the Board of Religious Education of the C.M.E. Church and was a delegate to the first assembly of the WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES in Amsterdam. At the General Conference in 1954, he was elected to the office of bishop and presently serves as president of the Board of Christian Education of his denomination in addition to his episcopal area.

Harris and Patterson, C.M.E. Church. 1965.

Ethel L. Williams, Biographical Directory of Negro Ministers. New York: Scarecrow Press, 1965.

RALPH G. GAY

SMITH, CHARLES RYDER (1873-1956), British Methodist scholar, was born at Mansfield. He entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1895. He served in Bombay 1903-08, then in English circuits; in 1920 he was appointed theology tutor at Richmond College, London, and he was college principal from 1929 to 1940. He gave the FERNLEY LECTURE in 1927, The Sacramental Society. He was professor of theology in London University, 1932-40. He was elected president of the Wesleyan Conference in 1931. Characteristic of his many later scholarly works was The Bible Doctrine of Salvation (1941).

JOHN KENT

SMITH, CHARLES SPENCER (1852-1922), American bishop of the A.M.E. CHURCH, was born in Colbourne, Canada on March 16, 1852. He was educated at Central Tennessee College and Walden University (Tennessee), receiving the M.D. degree from the latter institution in 1880. Honorary degrees were later bestowed upon him by WILBERFORCE UNIVERSITY, Ohio (LL.D.) and VICTORIA COLLEGE, Canada (D.D.). Smith, who was ordained DEACON in 1873 and ELDER in 1876, held pastorates in ALABAMA, TENNESSEE, PENNSYLVANIA and ILLINOIS. While in Alabama he was elected to the State Legislature (1874-1876). He was the founder and organizer of the Sunday School Union of the A.M.E. Church; he was its first Corresponding Secretary-Treasurer, a position which he held and developed until his election to the episcopacy in 1900. He also had the distinction of having produced and edited the first Sunday school literature published by Negroes in America. A church historian of note, he wrote the sequel to Daniel A. Payne's History of the A.M.E. Church in 1922. Bishop Smith supervised the work of the Twelfth, Thirteenth, Sixth, Tenth and Fourth Episcopal District Areas. He retired in 1920 and died in 1922.

R. R. Wright, The Bishops. 1963.

GRANT S. SHOCKLEY

SMITH, CHARLES WILLIAM (1840-1914), American bishop, was born in Fayette County, Pa., on Jan. 30, 1840. He was the son and grandson of Methodist preachers. His father, Wesley Smith, was a distinguished Methodist minister for nearly fifty years, who was serving a WEST VIRGINIA circuit when Charles was born. Charles Smith was educated in the schools of western PENNSYLVANIA and West Virginia; he attended ALLEGHENY COLLEGE, Pennsylvania (not a graduate). He received the honorary degree of A.M., D.D., and LL.D.

Converted in his eighteenth year, he was ordained and joined the PITTSBURGH CONFERENCE in 1859. He married Caroline L. Lindley of Connellsville, Pa., on Dec. 5, 1865. His pastoral appointments in and near Pittsburgh successively, 1859-79, were: Centerville, Carmichael's, Brownsville, Pittsburgh, Uniontown, Allegheny, Canton, Pittsburgh (again) and McKeesport; presiding elder of the Pittsburgh District, 1880-84; editor of the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate twenty-four years, 1884-1908. Smith was one of the most powerful editorial writers in the M. E. Church.

Elected bishop in 1908, Bishop Smith was assigned to St. Louis, Mo.

Bishop C. W. Smith was a member of the CENTENNIAL Conference in Baltimore, Md., 1884; a delegate to eight GENERAL CONFERENCES; to the ECUMENICAL CONFERENCE at Washington, D.C., 1891; London, England, 1901; and Toronto, Canada, 1911.

Eminently successful in every office, Bishop Smith became a leader of men by attractive kindness. That spirit expressed in his editorial chair made his paper strong and helpful and his work as editor and bishop inspiring. He was a trustee of Woman's College, Baltimore, and of the UNIVERSITY OF PUGET SOUND, Washington.

He was on the commission which compiled the first joint hymnal of the M. E. Church and the M. E. Church, South, in 1905.

Bishop Smith presided over the WEST VIRGINIA ANNUAL CONFERENCE which opened in Fairmont on Oct. 7, 1914. He died in Washington, D.C., on Oct. 31, 1914, and was buried in Homewood, Pittsburgh.

F. D. Leete, Methodist Bishops. 1948.
National Cyclopaedia of American Biography.
 M. Simpson, Cyclopaedia. 1878.

JESSE A. EARL

SMITH, CHESTER A. (1884-1972), American layman, widely known as the well-nigh perennial delegate to GENERAL CONFERENCES, was born in Peekskill, N. Y., on Nov. 15, 1884, in which city he continued to live.

His father, Louis H. Smith, was a descendant of John Howland, a signer of the Mayflower Compact in 1620. His mother, Abbie E. Lent, was a descendant of Isaac Lent who fought in the Revolutionary War in the Continental Army.

Mr. Smith served in World War I as a Field Clerk in the Army. Later he entered Columbia College, receiving an A.B. (1923) and M.A. from Columbia University in 1924. For fifty-four years he served as a court stenographer. Then upon retirement in 1954, he decided to become a lawyer so that he might earn enough money to pay off a debt of $43,000 owed by a bankrupt school of which he had been a trustee. He was graduated from the New York Law School in 1959 with a LL.B. degree. Although he had not practiced law, he had paid off $13,000 of the debt by 1966.

Active in the educational, civic, political, and cultural life of Peekskill, he was honored for his contribution to the community by a Citizens' Committee which erected a portrait tablet of him in the rotunda of the Municipal Building.

In the First Methodist Church of Peekskill, Chester Smith was the lay representative to the NEW YORK ANNUAL CONFERENCE for thirty-four years. Elected by that annual Conference as a lay delegate, he attended General Conference of the M. E. Church from 1916-36; the Uniting Conference, 1939; and General Conferences of The Methodist Church from 1940-64. In all (counting the Uniting Conferences), he was a member of fourteen General Conferences—a record unexcelled by anyone in Methodism, lay or clerical. He also was a member of the Northeastern Jurisdictional Conferences from 1940-64. He was a prolific writer, having written over seventy-five brochures on Peekskill and other historical subjects; contributed to the Christian Advocate, Zion's Herald, and the Upper Room.

Over the years, Mr. Smith was an outstanding foe of the liquor traffic. He several times urged the General Conference to substitute the word "cup" for "wine" in the Communion Ritual. Opposed to the use of tobacco, he fought every effort to remove the restriction against the use of tobacco by ministers. He felt the Methodist Church was wrong in accepting money from the JAMES B. DUKE Foundation—calling it "blood money". Advocate of peace, he refused to serve as a trustee of the Peekskill Military Academy, and urged the General Conference to delete the hymn, "Onward Christian Soldiers," from the Hymnal. Staunch opponent of racial segregation, he worked for over thirty years to get the CENTRAL JURISDICTION abolished from the organizational set-up of The Methodist Church.

While many of his positions have not prevailed in Annual, Jurisdictional, or General Conferences, he was respected for his convictions and for the able way in which he presented them. At the General Conference of 1964, held in Pittsburgh, Roy Turnage of North Carolina, offered the following resolution as a testimony to Mr. Smith's Christian witness and dedication:

I move we stand in respect to Chester A. Smith, who has lived this Conference and really put it on a high level when we may have taken it too lightly. Could we honor him in that respect?

He was given a standing ovation!

Chester Smith died Sept. 29, 1972.

Daily Christian Advocate, General Conferences, 1916-1964.
Chester Smith of Peekskill. Published by the New York Conference Historical Society, n.d. C. WESLEY CHRISTMAN, Jr.

SMITH, DAVID MORTON (1854-1931), publishing agent, Southern layman, the son of Jeremiah R. and Thurza (Young) Smith, was born on Oct. 14, 1854, near KNOXVILLE, Tenn. Educated in the public schools and a commercial college, Smith became cashier and general office man for a leading firm in Nashville, Tenn., for twelve years. In 1886 he was made business manager of the Southern METHODIST PUBLISHING HOUSE. Named assistant agent by the GENERAL CONFERENCE in 1890, he was elected senior publishing agent in 1902, the first layman to fill this post. He was reelected each quadrennium until his retirement in 1922, and was agent emeritus until his death.

The payment of $288,000 by the government for Civil War damages to the NASHVILLE publishing plant, despite a demand by the General Conference of 1902 that the church "retire from the printing business as speedily as possible," was the beginning of a new era in Publishing House history. This came about after 1902 when David M. Smith, who knew the House thoroughly, and A. J. LAMAR, a minister who knew the church, both became publishing agents ("Smith and Lamar"). In 1906 a new building was erected in Nashville. Annual sales increased from less than $500,000 in 1900, to more than $2,100,000 in 1922.

The Nashville Christian Advocate said of him in announcing his death Aug. 14, 1931: "Smith was conservative in times of financial panic; he was progressive when indications warranted advances." He laid a solid foundation for the enormous future growth of the Publishing House of the M. E. Church, South, and this contributed greatly to the strength of the united Methodist Publishing House after unification.

He organized the Men's Bible Class in historic McKendree Church in NASHVILLE, TENN., and for thirty years was treasurer of that church. For twenty years Smith was treasurer of the General Board of EDUCATION of the General Sunday School Board. He was also treasurer of the General Conference Delegate Fund.

David Morton Smith married Virginia Cunningham on Dec. 9, 1879. She was the daughter of W. G. E. Cunningham, a former Sunday School editor. They had six children: Melville, Jessie, Robert, Mildred, Virginia, and William. He died on Aug. 14, 1931.

E. S. Bucke, History of American Methodism. 1964.
History of McKendree Methodist Church, Nashville, 1933.
 C. F. Price, Who's Who in American Methodism. 1916.

JESSE A. EARL

EARL M. SMITH

SMITH, EARL M. (1895-), American missionary to URUGUAY, was born in Iowa, Neb., but grew up in CALIFORNIA. He was educated at Stanford University, graduating in 1920, and at GARRETT BIBLICAL INSTITUTE (1922). He was married to Bessie Marie Archer and they went as missionaries to the River Plate region in October 1922.

For two years he worked in ARGENTINA at Ward College (COLEGIO WARD) in BUENOS AIRES and the Union Theological Seminary (FACULTAD EVANGELICA DE TEOLOGIA). In 1924 they moved to Uruguay, assigned to Friendship

House in the stockyards district of MONTEVIDEO. There the Smiths lived and worked for thirty-seven years, making Friendship House a well-known institution with a Methodist church at its center and social work for the region around it. In 1925 Smith founded in Montevideo the first GOODWILL INDUSTRIES in Latin America.

For twenty years he was treasurer of the M.E. Mission for Uruguay. At sixty-five he was appointed to Melvin Church and helped to establish social work in connection with it. Although retired in 1965, he was asked to continue in service as superintendent of the Montevideo District of the Uruguay Annual Conference.

He helped found and keep active the Fellowship of Reconciliation in South America, and proposed the Consultation on Nonviolence in Latin America which was held in Montevideo in 1966, with delegates and visitors from nineteen countries.

Earl Smith is considered an authority on social work. He has written eight books in Spanish on topics from the Holy Spirit to the essentials of Christianity. One of his books, Treasured in Her Heart, is published in English (1966).

Barbara H. Lewis, Methodist Overseas Missions. 1960.

BESSIE ARCHER SMITH

SMITH, EARNEST ANDREW (1913-), American minister, was born Aug. 25, 1913 at MACON, Ga. He obtained an A.B. degree from RUST COLLEGE, 1937; an A.M. from Oberlin University, 1938; an honorary D.D. from GAMMON THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, 1958, and took doctoral studies at Hartford Seminary Foundation, 1948-50. He was married to Milverta Alice Gooden, Sept. 28, 1939.

Mr. Smith was ordained DEACON in 1939 and two years later ELDER. He preached at Alexander City, 1939-41, and Marion, 1941-43, both in ALABAMA. After a two-year period as a public school teacher, he became CHAPLAIN and professor at Rust College, 1945-51; pastor in San Antonio, Texas, 1951-57; and then president of Rust College, 1957-66. He was then elected Associate General Secretary, General Board of Christian SOCIAL CONCERNS, where he has continued in The United Methodist Church.

Dr. Smith has been a member of the COMMISSION ON STRUCTURE OF METHODISM OVERSEAS, 1964-66; BOARD OF EDUCATION, 1964-66; board of directors, Camp Fire Girls; Phi Beta Sigma. He has written Is It Ever Right to Break a Law? which was issued in 1969.

JOHN H. NESS, JR.

SMITH, EDWARD (1797-1856), American WESLEYAN METHODIST CHURCH leader and minister in the Allegheny Conference, one of the six original conferences in the Wesleyan Methodist denomination, was born in Rockbridge County, Va., in 1797. He was a member of the Utica, N. Y. organizing convention and was elected vice president of the body. A contemporary, ORANGE SCOTT, describes him as "being of Irish ancestry, southern born, a man of noble appearance, more than six feet in height, a ready debater, a good theologian, a warm advocate of Methodist doctrine, a staunch reformer."

Smith was an outstanding leader in the denomination from its beginning. He called the meeting to order at the First General Conference in Cleveland, Ohio in 1844. He was strongly opposed to secret societies. He was president of his home conference, the Allegheny, the largest in the connection. He did a good volume of business for the Book Concern and raised much money for missions. Scott says, "As a missionary beggar I never saw his equal." The Allegheny Conference had a net increase of 775 members for 1845. The Wesleyan Missionary Society was organized in 1846 and Smith was made General Superintendent of Missions. His first project proposed the employment of evangelists and pioneer church workers among the people of Ontario, Canada, mainly the 20,000 freedmen who had escaped from slavery in America. He moved to Troy, Ohio from PITTSBURGH to direct the operation from there.

Smith's notable anti-slavery address, "Love Worketh No Ill to His Neighbor," came into the hands of the Friends people who had 2,000 copies printed and circulated in NORTH CAROLINA among the Friends there. This able lecture refuted the arguments advanced by those who attempted to defend slavery from the religious standpoint. This led to the breaking-away from the M.E. Church, South, of a group who called for a Wesleyan minister to come as their leader.

Edward Smith died in Morrow County, Ohio, June 6, 1856.

I. F. McLeister, Wesleyan Methodist Church of America. 1934.
M. Simpson, Cyclopaedia. 1878. GEORGE E. FAILING

SMITH, EDWIN WILLIAM (1876-1957), British pioneer missionary, was born in 1876 at Aliwal North, SOUTH AFRICA, the son of a PRIMITIVE METHODIST missionary. He was educated in England and entered the Primitive Methodist ministry in 1897, returning as a missionary to Basutoland in 1898. In 1902 he led the pioneer mission to the Bal-lla, in Northern Rhodesia: he reduced their language to writing, made a grammar and dictionary, translated most of the New Testament, and produced an important anthropological study of the tribe. In 1916 he was seconded to the British and Foreign Bible Society, where he ended as editorial (translations) superintendent. His HARTLEY LECTURE, The Golden Stool (1926), influenced colonial administration. He was a president of the Royal Anthropological Institution, and received the Pitt-Rivers Memorial Medal in 1931, the first missionary to do so. He died on Dec. 23, 1957.

JOHN KENT

SMITH, EUGENE LEWIS (1912-), American minister and a mission/ecumenical leader, was born at Rockwell City, Iowa, on April 13, 1912, the son of Roy Leslie and Lois (Lewis) Smith. He received the A.B. degree from WILLAMETTE UNIVERSITY in 1934, the B.D. from DREW UNIVERSITY in 1937, and the D.D. from Willamette in 1958 and from Payne Theological Seminary in 1964. He was awarded the Ph.D. degree by New York University, 1945, the Litt.D. by AMERICAN UNIVERSITY, 1959, and the L.H.D. by MACMURRAY COLLEGE in 1966.

Dr. Smith served a number of pastorates and upon the retirement of RALPH DIFFENDORFER, he was elected general secretary of the Division of World Missions of the Board of Missions of The Methodist Church. In this capacity he served until 1964, when he became executive secretary of the New York office of the WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES. Dr. Smith's lectureships include SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIVERSITY, SCARRITT COLLEGE, and OHIO WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY (all in 1956); SOUTH-

WESTERN UNIVERSITY, 1963; Union Theological Seminary, the PHILIPPINES, in 1968; and Austin Theological Seminary in 1969. He has taught on the faculties of New York University and DREW THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY. He was a vice-president of the NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES, 1955-58; was a member of its Commission on Religion and Race; a member of the Theological Education Fund Committee and of the Commission of the Churches on International Affairs, a member of the executive committee of the WORLD METHODIST COUNCIL and is a past president of the COUNCIL OF SECRETARIES of The Methodist Church. He wrote The Power Within Us, 1948; They Gird the Earth for Christ, 1952; God's Mission and Ours, 1961; and Mandate for Mission, 1968. He has been a frequent contributor to church publications, and his articles have been translated for publication in Swedish, German, French, Spanish and Japanese. In his present position, he resides in New Jersey with an office in the Interchurch Center in New York City. He was a member of the GENERAL CONFERENCES in 1960, 1964, 1968, and 1970.

Contemporary Authors, Vols. 23-24. Detroit: Gale Research Company.

Dictionary of International Biography, 1969-70.

Who's Who in America, Vol. 34.

Who's Who in the Methodist Church, 1966.

N. B. H.

SMITH, GEORGE (1800-1868), British historian, was born at Condurrow, Cornwall, England, on August 31, 1800, the son of a small farmer. He received an elementary education and was employed at first in farm work and carpentry. He then entered the building trade and eventually acquired considerable wealth. He became a Wesleyan LOCAL PREACHER in 1823 and, along with an enterprising business career, found time for study, writing, and lecturing. In 1859 he was awarded the degree of LL.D. by the University of New York. Of his many biblical and historical works the most important is his History of Wesleyan Methodism in three volumes (1857). He died at Camborne, Cornwall, on Aug. 30, 1868.

G. ERNEST LONG

SMITH, GEORGE GILMAN (1836-1913), American minister and author, the historian of GEORGIA Methodism, was born on Dec. 24, 1836, at Sheffield, in what is now Rockdale County, Ga. His parents were George C. and Susan Howard Smith. His father was a physician who was also postmaster of Atlanta, Ga., 1851-55.

Smith received his elementary education in a school taught by his mother, and from 1853 to 1855 he studied classics with J. T. McGinty of Atlanta, and J. W. Rudisill of Sandersville, Ga. He spent a term and a half at EMORY COLLEGE, Oxford, Ga. For a while he was a clerk in the post office at Augusta, Ga.

In 1857 Smith was admitted on trial in the GEORGIA CONFERENCE, M.E. Church, South; in 1859 he was ordained DEACON and entered full connection. On Sept. 28, 1859, he married Sarah J. Ousley, and after her death he married Nannie L. Lipps.

When the War Between the States began Smith became a CHAPLAIN in Phillip's Legion. He was severely wounded in 1862, and even though he survived with a withered arm and a lame leg, his health was permanently impaired. In spite of his handicaps, and in addition to his pastoral appointments, he wrote by hand six major works and several lesser volumes. He was the biographer of Bishops ASBURY, PIERCE, and ANDREW. Also of great importance are his History of Methodism in Georgia and Florida, and History of Georgia Methodism, 1786-1866. He preserved much of Georgia history from oblivion, for no other history of Methodism in Georgia was attempted until the middle of the twentieth century. He drew upon such primary sources as the veteran LOVICK PIERCE, and during his long life he was intimately acquainted with the men who made Methodist history in the South.

After the war he served at Valdosta and Quitman, Ga., then a part of the FLORIDA CONFERENCE. He was transferred to the BALTIMORE CONFERENCE, then to WEST VIRGINIA, and then back to NORTH GEORGIA in 1879. Smith was superannuated in 1888 and spent his last years in Vineville near Macon, Ga.

Emory College conferred upon him both the M.A. and D.D. degrees. In recognition of his contribution to Methodist history he was elected one of the vice-presidents of the Methodist Historical Society of New England—which was a unique honor then for a Georgian. He died in 1913 in Macon, Ga.

Minutes of the Annual Conferences of the M.E. Church, South, 1858-1865.

A. M. Pierce, Georgia. 1956.

DONALD J. WEST

SMITH, GERVASE (1821-1882), British Wesleyan Methodist, was born at Langley, Derbyshire, on June 27, 1821. He entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1844, and, having spent twenty-five years as an itinerant, was, in 1879, appointed secretary of the Metropolitan Chapel Building Fund along with FRANCIS LYCETT. In 1866 Smith was elected to the LEGAL HUNDRED; in 1873 he became secretary of CONFERENCE, and in 1875 president. His appointment as secretary of RICHMOND COLLEGE illustrated his interest in the Wesleyan Theological Institution, and visits to CANADA, 1874, and Australasia, 1877, his interest in overseas work. In 1880 he became treasurer of the Auxiliary Fund. He died on April 22, 1882.

B. Gregory, Recollections of Dr. Gervase Smith. London.

H. M. RATTENBURY

SMITH, HARRY LESTER (1876-1951), American bishop, was born at Indiana, Pa., on April 15, 1876. The son of George W. and Lucy (Shepherd) Smith, Harry Lester married Ida L. Martin on June 29, 1899, a youth worker in one of his churches, and to them was born one son who died at the age of thirty-five.

Working with his father in the oil fields, Smith gave up an industrial career in the oil industry when he received a call to preach in an evangelistic meeting near Armagh, Pa. Beginning to preach at twenty, he joined the PITTSBURGH CONFERENCE in 1906. He was educated at ALLEGHENY COLLEGE (A.B., 1904; A.M., 1906); DREW SEMINARY (B.D., 1905), and Columbia University, New York. He was later given the honorary D.D. and LL.D.

His appointments were Pitcairn, Pa., 1897-1900; assistant pastor Meadville, 1900-01; Congregational Church, Cory, 1901-03; Leonia, N. J., 1903-05; assistant and then pastor at Bellevue Church, Allegheny, 1905-09; Delaware Avenue, Buffalo, N. Y., 1909-12; Central Church, DETROIT, Mich., 1912-20.

He was elected bishop in 1920, and assigned to the following areas: Bangalore, INDIA, where he "had the reputation of being a tiger hunter," 1920-24; then to

Helena, Mont., 1924-28; CHATTANOOGA, 1928-32; CINCINNATI, 1932-44; and the OHIO Area, as it became after Church Union and in 1944.

Bishop Smith was a member of the Hymnal Commission of 1930-34; secretary of the (M.E.) Board of Bishops and President of the COUNCIL OF BISHOPS after 1939. "A fine looking man," Bishop H. Lester Smith was, "a genius in parliamentary procedure," and a remarkable administrator. He was often seen sitting beside the presiding bishop in the GENERAL CONFERENCE giving counsel in administering the business.

Aggressive, athletic and strong, Bishop Smith nevertheless suffered from heart trouble for years. Once he said he was never up to par until 11:00 A.M. He had a number of severe heart attacks. Two days before his death, after talking about many things, a friend on leaving said, "The Lord be with you, Bishop," and he rejoined in clear tones, "And with you and your wife." His death occurred at 6:00 on Sunday morning, Oct. 6, 1951, and he entered his Sabbath rest. A "churchman extraordinary," Bishop H. Lester Smith was companionable, patient, approachable, democratic in spirit and a "Christian human being" with a sense of humor.

F. D. Leete, Methodist Bishops. 1948.

Ohio Annual Conference Journal, 1952.

Who's Who in Methodism.

JESSE A. EARL

SMITH, HENRY (1877-1924), American missionary to CUBA, was born in Cincinnati, Ark., March 23, 1877. His bride was Beulah Jackson Vann of Collinsville, Ala., and a few weeks after their marriage in 1907 they went to Cuba as missionaries. Their first appointment was Mayari, Oriente, and their last one was at Cienfuegos, while Smith was also superintendent of the Central District.

They had two daughters, and their home which was characterized by an unusual congeniality and their love for music, attracted many of the Cuban youth.

Smith's deep concern for the need of training a national ministry led him to make unusual personal sacrifices. A visitor from the North remarked to a friend, "Why does Smith in such an important church position dress so shabbily . . ." "You don't understand," replied the friend, "That man is keeping at least ten young men in school in training for the ministry . . . No sacrifice is too great for him."

Illness for which the doctors could not diagnose caused his retirement in 1923, and he died the following year.

GARFIELD EVANS

SMITH, HENRY WESTON (1827-1876), first American Methodist clergyman in the Black Hills of SOUTH DAKOTA, was killed by Indians en route from Deadwood to preach at Crook City.

He was born at Ellington, Conn., and at age twenty-three was licensed as an Exhorter in the M.E. Church. He preached in various New England communities including Worcester, Holyoke and Bloody Brooks, Mass., and Tolland and Summers, Conn. His first wife, Ruth Yeomans of Franklin, Conn., lived but a year after marriage. In 1857 he married Lydia Ann Joslin, of Tolland, Conn. They had four children: Gerald, Edna, Elmer and Gertrude.

An ardent unionist, he enlisted in 1861 in Company H, 52nd Massachusetts Infantry and participated in several engagements. In 1867 he studied medicine at LOUISVILLE KY., but apparently preached more than he practiced. In 1876 he joined the gold rush to the Black Hills of Dakota.

Six feet tall, heavily bearded, soft spoken, Smith moved unobtrusively among the immigrants surging across the prairies to the cluster of mountains where in 1874 General George A. Custer's expedition had discovered gold. At the boom village of Custer he preached on May 7 in a log cabin with a sawdust floor. The diary of George V. Ayres, a merchant, records that thirty men and five women attended, and "the congregation paid strict attention to the sermon except when there was a dog fight outside."

The town of Custer was deserted overnight when word came of a strike in Deadwood Gulch, and Smith moved to the new center in the wagon train of Capt. C. V. Gardner, a Methodist layman.

Deadwood of that day was rough—but "dear, delightful and devilish," one pioneer later recalled. Miners and bullwhackers often filled its one main street and Smith, supporting himself by manual labor, preached to them, often in front of Bent & Deetkin's Drug Store. One contemporary noted that "the shout of the gamblers and sports calling for trade" could be heard above his exhortations.

Sunday, Aug. 20, 1876, after his usual service he tacked on his cabin door a note, said to have been written on a leaf torn from a hymnal, "Gone to Crook City and if God willing, be back at 2 P.M." A few hours later at Crook City, now a forgotten ghost town nine miles away in the foothills, a horseman told of seeing a body at a place about halfway called "The Rest." It was Smith, a bullet hole in his breast, his Bible at his feet. Smith's body was taken to Deadwood on a load of hay. A public welfare committee chose Seth Bullock, first Black Hills' sheriff, to conduct a religious service. A professional gambler provided an Episcopal prayer book and Bullock commenced, considerably embarrassed. To his aid came one Deacon C. E. Hawley, who carried on with evangelical fervor.

Smith's remains now lie in Mt. Moriah Cemetery, overlooking Deadwood, with graves of Wild Bill Hickok, Calamity Jane, and Potato Creek Johnny nearby. Nothing of Smith's original sandstone statue remains but the feet. A white stone shaft on the Deadwood-Spearfish Highway (U.S. 14) is near the place he was murdered, and here memorial services have been regularly held since 1924 on the Sunday nearest August 20. A Preacher Smith Memorial has been set up at DAKOTA WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, Mitchell, S. D., where may be seen the memorabilia—including the bloodstained notes of his undelivered sermon.

Leland D. Case, Preacher Smith, Martyr. Published by Hot Springs, S. D., Star, 1929.

LELAND D. CASE

SMITH, HORACE GREELEY (1881-1968), American minister and president of GARRETT THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, was born March 28, 1881, near Ransom, Ill. After attendance at local schools, he was graduated in 1905 with a B.A. from NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY. Later degrees included an S.T.B. (1910) from Garrett, and honorary doctorates from SIMPSON COLLEGE, Northwestern, DEPAUW, and BOSTON UNIVERSITIES.

In 1909 Smith married Edith Gorsuch of Clarence, Ill., and to them were born three daughters.

In 1910 Smith became a member of the ROCK RIVER

CONFERENCE. After serving as Y.M.C.A. Secretary at Northwestern University he became pastor of the North Shore Church, Glencoe (1912-17); Hemenway Church, EVANSTON (1917-24); and Wilmette Parish Church (1926-32). New church buildings were constructed during each of these pastorates. Between the Hemenway and Wilmette pastorates he served as superintendent of the CHICAGO Western District.

While minister in Wilmette, Smith was called to the presidency of Garrett Theological Seminary (then known as Garrett Biblical Institute), where he had been a trustee and part-time teacher for eight years. As president he served with distinction and dedication from 1932 until 1953. Drastically affected by the depression, the seminary had been on the verge of closing when Smith became its head, but by the time he retired in 1953 it was on a sound financial footing with a large student body and growing faculty of highly trained scholars. On May 22, 1961 the seminary renamed its Gothic tower in Smith's honor.

Smith also served on the World Service Commission (1928-32) and Board of EDUCATION (1932-54) of The Methodist Church, and was for a term president of the Association of Methodist Theological Schools. He was a delegate from the Rock River Conference to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1928, '36, '40, '44, and '52, as well as the UNITING CONFERENCE of 1939.

Horace Smith published more than 150 articles and was the author of two books: The World's Greatest Story (1964) and Don't Retire From Life (1965), both published by Rand, McNally. After retirement he continued to live in Evanston, though he spent some time each winter in FLORIDA. He died in St. Petersburg, Fla., Feb. 20, 1968.

Clark and Stafford, Who's Who in Methodism. 1952.

ELEANOR DARNALL WALLACE

SMITH, ISAAC (1758-1834), American preacher, was born in New Kent County, Va., on Aug. 17, 1758, and was received on trial in the VIRGINIA CONFERENCE in 1784. He served the Salisbury and Tar River Circuits in NORTH CAROLINA and in 1786 was appointed to CHARLESTON, S. C. with Henry Willis, becoming one of the founders of Methodism in that state. He filled prominent appointments until 1796, when he located and entered the mercantile business in Camden. He married Ann Gilman, a cousin of James Rembert, and they had several children.

In 1820 Smith was readmitted to the Conference and sent to COLUMBIA, and the following year he was PRESIDING ELDER of the Athens District in Georgia, then a part of the South Carolina Conference. In 1822 he was sent as a missionary to the Creek Indians, in charge of a school to be established among them. He continued in this capacity until 1827, when he became superannuated. He died of cancer in Marion County, Ga., on July 20, 1834 at the home of his daughter Jane, wife of Rev. Whitman C. Hill.

Isaac Smith was called "the Saint John of the South Carolina Conference." His sons, Isaac Henry and James Rembert Smith, were local preachers and several grandsons were in the itineracy. One of the latter was the historian GEORGE G. SMITH.

A. D. Betts, South Carolina. 1952.

C. F. Deems, Annals. 1856, 1857, 1858.

A. M. Shipp, South Carolina. 1883.

LOUISE L. QUEEN

SMITH, JEDEDIAH STRONG (1799-1831), leader of Mountain Men and first American to cross overland to CALIFORNIA, was born at Jericho (now Bainbridge) in the Susquehanna Valley of southern New York, Jan. 9, 1799, to Jedediah and Sally (Strong) Smith. His parents became Methodist converts in 1813 at Northeast Township, Pa., and later in life he, himself, was a member and supporter of the Methodist Church at St. Louis. In 1821 Jedediah, having moved west with his parents, hunted in ILLINOIS, and in 1822 became one of the "enterprising young men" recruited by General William H. Ashley at St. Louis for exploring, trapping, and trading in the northern Rocky Mountains and plains. In the next nine years he became familiar with almost every part of America's West.

He is credited with many firsts in annals of the West. He was the first white man to penetrate the Black Hills of SOUTH DAKOTA; first to make "an effective discovery" of the South Pass in WYOMING which made possible an overland trek from the MISSISSIPPI to OREGON or California in one season; in 1826-27 he was the first American to break through the Rocky Mountain barrier to Spanish-settled California; and the first person to explore the coast from MEXICO to CANADA, and to crisscross NEVADA, north-south, east-west.

Jedediah Smith's most remarkable quality was his personal character. It was backed by a six-foot physique which enabled him to tangle with a grizzly bear in the Black Hills and live. The Mountain Men, whose hardihood and uncouth ways are legend, admired and respected him. He is said always to have carried in his pack a Bible and a Wesleyan hymn book. Few of Jedediah's letters are preserved, but one dated Christmas Eve, 1829, from "Wind River, East Side of the Rocky Mountains," tells of his "need of the watch and care of a Christian Church" and asks "our society" to bear him up "before a Throne of Grace."

A state redwoods park in northern California bears his name and the Jedediah Smith Society was established in 1957 at the UNIVERSITY OF THE PACIFIC at Stockton to pursue research and disseminate information on the man and his era.

Forever Beginning, 1766-1966. Lake Junaluska, N.C.: Association of Methodist Historical Societies, 1967.

Dale L. Morgan, Jedediah Smith and the Opening of the West. Indianapolis: Bobbs-Merrill, 1953.

The Pacific Historian, 1968.

Alson J. Smith, Men Against the Mountains: Jedediah Smith and the South West Expedition of 1826-29. New York: John Day, 1965.

Maurice S. Sullivan, The Travels of Jedediah Smith. Santa Ana, Calif.: Fine Arts Press, 1934.

_____, Jedediah Smith, Trader and Trailbreaker. New York: Press of the Pioneers, 1936. LELAND D. CASE

SMITH, JOHN (1758-1812), American pioneer circuit rider and journalist, was born in Kent County, Md., on March 10, 1758. He was converted June 9, 1779, was received on trial as a traveling Methodist preacher in 1784 when American Methodism was organized. Stevens wrote: "Smith labored faithfully, notwithstanding the infirmities of a feeble constitution, for ten or twelve years in the East and the West." Dr. Lawrence Sherwood says he traveled ten circuits, but he and The History of American Methodism name only three, REDSTONE, 1786-87 (Pennsylvania and West Virginia); Greenbrier (West Virginia), 1787-88, and Holston, 1788. His valuable Journal covered only the two years of preaching on Redstone and Greenbrier circuits. He was the first circuit rider on the Greenbrier circuit. The manuscripts were written in pain and weariness while riding on horseback over the West Virginia hills or by camp-fires or fireplaces. They had been in existence for more than 165 years when they were rediscovered by Sherwood in GARRETT SEMINARY'S Library (Greenbrier Ct.), and he made the original discovery of some other of Smith's writing on the Redstone Circuit.

Smith's spelling was unique, but his education was far above the average then: "Crost the Blue Ridge which is Said to run round the World . . . Rode thro Shepherds-town where I saw two saw Mills and two grist Mills watered by a Small Stream . . . on June 26, 1786—Crost the Great Ohio over into the Indian Country in company with Mr. Asbury, Henry and several others . . . Rode to A Little Town in the Wilderness called Clarksburg. (Next day). Rode near 30 miles higher to A small settlement call'd Buckhannon . . . Was at Fort Wheelan (Wheeling)."

Clarksburg Circuit formed in 1787 was the first one whose entire bounds were within the state of WEST VIRGINIA. The Greenbrier manuscript is of a more descriptive nature.

In 1787 Redstone Circuit was divided into three circuits, Redstone, Ohio, and Clarksburg. This is evidence of amazing progress, and John Smith had a major part in it. He was in company with the first Methodist preachers to enter the state of OHIO, June 26, 1786. This is the first record of Asbury going into Ohio.

After his abundant labors, John Smith's death was remarkably triumphant as he said, "I long to see the face of God." He died at Chestertown, Kent County, Md., May 10, 1812, and "rests at Hinson's Chapel near the great and good Wm. Gill."

E. S. Bucke, History of American Methodism, 1964.

A. Stevens, History of The M.E. Church, 1864.

JESSE A. EARL

SMITH, JOHN L. (1811-1899), American preacher and administrator, the son of Bowlin and Lovewell (Owens) Smith, was born in Brunswick County, Va., May 24, 1811. In 1826 the family moved to Green County, Ohio. In 1837 he was licensed to preach. In 1840 he was admitted into the INDIANA CONFERENCE. In 1844-45 he built ROBERTS CHAPEL in INDIANAPOLIS. For thirty-two of his fifty-one years of ministerial life he served as presiding elder. Six times he was elected to GENERAL CONFERENCE. He was on the BOOK COMMITTEE for thirteen years. For twenty-five years he was officially related to Indiana Asbury University. He helped establish schools at Thornstown, Stockwell, and Valparaiso. He married Louisa J. Kline, Dec. 1, 1840, and they had two sons. He retired from Valparaiso District in 1891 and lived there until his death March 11, 1899.

J. J. Detzler, Northwest Indiana Conference, 1953.

John Lewis Smith, Indiana Methodism: A Series of Sketches and Incidents, Grave and Humorous, Concerning Preachers and People of the West. Valparaiso, Ind.: n.p., 1892.

W. D. ARCHIBALD

SMITH, JOHN OWEN (1902-), American bishop, was born Sept. 21, 1902, at Johnston, S. C., the son of Walter Hill and Annie Elizabeth (Long) Smith. He received the A.B. degree from WOFFORD COLLEGE in 1922; a B.D. from Yale University, 1925; a D.D. from WOFFORD COLLEGE, 1947; and a D.D. from EMORY UNIVERSITY, 1963. On Dec. 27, 1924, he was united in marriage to Mildred Brown and their children are Mildred Adela (Mrs. John G. Lepingwell) and Betty Jean (Mrs. William C. Katzenmeyer).

JOHN O. SMITH

He was admitted on trial in the SOUTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE in 1925 at Abbeville, S. C.; full connection, 1927; ordained DEACON, 1927; ordained ELDER, 1929. After serving a number of pastorates, he became superintendent of the Spartanburg District, 1954-60, and in 1960 was appointed pastor of Bethel Church, CHARLESTON. He served at Bethel Church for only five days when he was elected bishop at the SOUTHEASTERN JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCE in 1960.

John Owen Smith was a delegate to every GENERAL and Jurisdictional CONFERENCE from 1948. He was an accredited visitor to the WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES in Amsterdam in 1948 and a voting delegate to the World Council of Churches, Evanston, Ill., 1954. He is the past secretary of the Southeastern Jurisdictional Council; was a member of the General Board of EDUCATION, 1952-64, and is now a member of the General Board of SOCIAL CONCERNS and PROGRAM COUNCIL. He has also been a member of the WORLD METHODIST COUNCIL.

Bishop Smith administers the work of The United Methodist Church in the NORTH and SOUTH GEORGIA CONFERENCES, comprising some 1,600 churches with a total membership of approximately 360,000 members. He resides in Atlanta, Ga.

Who's Who in America, Vol. 34.

Who's Who in The Methodist Church, 1966.

N. B. H.

SMITH, LEGRAND B. (1900-), missionary to BOLIVIA, was born in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and received his Th.B. degree from Gordon College, Ph.B. from Brown University, B.D. from Drew University, and M.A. from Peabody College. He was married to Mildren Sarah Fairly in 1924, and has two sons and a daughter.

Smith worked at Iquique English College in CHILE for five years and in Bolivia from 1934 to the present. During this time he was director of both American Institutes (La Paz—COLEGIO EVANGELICO METODISTA—and Cochabamba). He has also served as a pastor, executive secretary of the conference, executive secretary of evangelism and Christian education, conference treasurer, and treasurer of the mission. He was superintendent of the Southern District and presently is superintendent of the Central District. As senior Methodist missionary serving in Bolivia, he received one of the highest awards the Bolivian government can bestow. In a ceremony in La Paz, Bolivia's capital, the "Grand Order of Bolivian Education" was presented to Colegio Evangelico Metodista, formerly the American Institute of La Paz, and to Smith.

Highland Echoes, October 1959.

The Methodist Church in Bolivia. Published in English and Spanish by the Historical Committee of The Methodist Church in Bolivia, 1961.

N. B. H.

SMITH, MARION LOFTON (1889-), American educator and college president, was born on Jan. 26, 1889, in Chambers County, Ala. He was educated at Kingswood College and at EMORY UNIVERSITY where he received an M.A. and B.D. in 1921 and a Ph.D. from Yale in 1929. He served as President of the Board of Education of the MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE from 1944-48; he was elected President of MILLSAPS COLLEGE in 1938 and while there was president of the Association of Methodist Colleges from 1945-46. His wife was Bertha Elizabeth Wallace, whom he married on Aug. 11, 1907, and to them were born three daughters. Dr. Smith married a second time Mary Elizabeth Hanes on June 2, 1938. Following his retirement, he resided at Moss Point, Miss.

C. T. Howell, Prominent Personalities. 1945.

N. B. H.

SMITH, MATTHEW DINSDALE (1891-), American missionary and educator, was born at Montfort, Wis., Feb. 1, 1891, and reared in northeast Iowa and SOUTH DAKOTA. During his school years the family resided in Alpena where the father, Albert Francis Smith, was engaged in the mercantile business.

Mr. Smith received the A.B. degree in 1912 from DAKOTA WESLEYAN, and in 1914 the M.A. degree from Columbia University. He taught history and mathematics in the public high schools of South Dakota for four years.

In 1917 he offered his services as a foreign missionary of the M.E. Church and was sent to Callao, PERU, as principal of the Mission High School. Here he married a fellow missionary, Loretta Fern Sage, of Grand Rapids, Mich., Dec. 29, 1920.

After a year's furlough they were transferred to Puebla, MEXICO, where Mr. Smith became president of the Mexican Methodist Institute. Three buildings were added to the plant during the eleven years of their labors there. During the furloughs he completed work in 1930 for the Ed.D. degree at the University of California.

Upon returning to the United States in 1933, Dr. Smith served three years as dean of KANSAS WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY at Salina and accepted a similar position at his Alma Mater, Dakota Wesleyan University, where he remained eight years.

An urgent call from the Board of MISSIONS in 1944 persuaded Dr. Smith and his wife to go to PANAMA as director of the strong Methodist school there, The Pan American Institute. Three new buildings on a new campus were added to the school plant during their eight years of service.

In 1952 Dr. Smith responded to a pressing invitation to return to his alma mater as president. Here he guided the institution through a financial crisis and then a disastrous fire in 1955. Within one year College Hall was rebuilt on a larger scale and Dayton Hall, a woman's residence, was added.

At the age of sixty-seven, Dr. Smith retired, and for two years (1958-60) he became the executive secretary of the South Dakota Foundation of Private Colleges.

He served as a member of the General Board of Education of The Methodist Church for twelve years (1940-44, 1952-60) and from 1952 to 1968, he was chairman of the South Dakota Conference Historical Committee. Under his editorship the Circuit Riders of the Middle Border, a history of the Conference, was published in 1965. At present he has charge of the archives of the SOUTH DAKOTA ANNUAL CONFERENCE, located in the Conference Center at Mitchell, S. D.

Clark and Stafford, Who's Who in Methodism. 1952.

C. T. Howell, Prominent Personalities. 1945.

Who's Who in America, Vol. 32.

Who's Who in American Education, 1950. JOHN V. MADISON

SMITH, MERLIN G. (1894-), FREE METHODIST educator, was born at Delta, Ohio. His degrees are: A.B., GREENVILLE COLLEGE, 1911; A.M., University of Illinois, 1916 and Ph.D., 1918. He was professor of mathematics and physics, Greenville College, 1919-1926; president of SPRING ARBOR JUNIOR COLLEGE, 1926-1933; and president, ROBERTS WESLEYAN COLLEGE, 1933-1957. He is a member of the Rochester Astronomy Club (N.Y.) and the National Education Association. He is author of "Why I Believe In God," in Presbyterian Life and of various articles in The Free Methodist. He retired in 1959. Dr. and Mrs. Smith now reside at Bradenton, Fla.

BYRON S. LAMSON

SMITH, PHILANDER (1796-1870), Canadian Methodist bishop, was born in Schoharie County, N. Y. At an early age he came to Brockville, Upper CANADA, with his parents. He was converted during the great revival of 1817, and in 1820 was taken on trial by the GENESEE CONFERENCE. Ordained ELDER at the Conference of 1824, he became a presiding elder in 1826. Unfortunately, within a few years his health deteriorated and he was superannuated. During the conference year, he was able to take a small station again.

In 1834 Smith once more was superannuated, probably because he objected, as did many others, to the union of 1833. Three years later he asked for a recommendation to the BLACK RIVER CONFERENCE in the United States, but within a short time JAMES RICHARDSON and he joined the Methodist Episcopal Conference.

According to JOHN CARROLL, Smith subsequently was involved in financial and possibly other difficulties. These, however, did not weaken his devotion to the Episcopal Methodists or his determination to preach as he was able. Thus, when Bishop JOHN ALLEY died unexpectedly in 1847, Philander Smith was elected bishop to assist his aging friend, Bishop JOHN REYNOLDS.

Bishop Smith held office in the Canadian M. E. Church until his death, which occurred in Brooklyn, Ontario, March 29, 1870. Doubtless he was regarded by that date as a rather old-fashioned preacher. In any event, he served his church as minister and administrator as faithfully as his health would permit. It was a goodly heritage which he bequeathed to his colleague, Bishop James Richardson and to the latter's successor, Bishop ALBERT CARMAN.

J. Carroll, Case and His Contemporaries. 1867-77.

T. Webster, James Richardson. 1876. C. S. FRENCH

SMITH, ROCKWELL CARTER (1908-), Seminary dean and authority on rural church work and rural sociology, was born on March 6, 1908, in Holyoke, Mass. His parents were Stephen C. and Ethel (Carter) Smith, and he received his education at DePAUW UNIVERSITY, BOSTON UNIVERSITY (S.T.B., 1931), and the University of Wisconsin from which he received the Ph.D. degree in 1942. He received the honorary D.D. from DePauw in 1949. His wife is Frances Dyer Eckardt, and they married on Aug. 27, 1931. He joined the NEW ENGLAND CONFERENCE in 1929, and after serving a number of pastoral charges in MASSACHUSETTS, went to Belleville, Wis., in 1938, where he was research assistant at the University of Wisconsin, 1937-40. He became a Professor of Rural Church Administration and Sociology at GARRETT THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, 1940, and thereafter devoted his life to that institution. He became dean of students in 1957.

He is a member of the American Sociological Association and the Rural Sociological Society, of the European Rural Sociology Society, the World Association of Agricultural Economists, and the American Association of University Professors. He is the author of Rural Church Administration, 1953; People, Land and Churches, 1959; The Church in Our Town, 1945, and The Role of Rural Social Science in Theological Education.

"Rocky" Smith, as he is often called, has been in demand over American Methodism for lectures, addresses and direction in many of the conferences held for the benefit of ministers in rural appointments. In 1969 he relinquished the deanship and became the occupant of a newly established chair in Sociology of Religion. He and his wife reside in Evanston, Ill.

Who's Who in The Methodist Church, 1966.

N. B. H.

SMITH, RODNEY ("GIPSY") (1860-1947), British revivalist, was born on March 31, 1860, of Gypsy stock. He was the son of Cornelius Smith, and he was born in the parish of Wanstead, near Epping Forest, Essex. He experienced conversion at a service in the PRIMITIVE METHODIST Chapel in Fitzroy Street, Cambridge, on Nov. 17, 1876. The following year he became an evangelist under the direction of WILLIAM BOOTH—later General Booth of the Salvation Army—and began work in Whitechapel, London, under the auspices of the Christian Mission, the title at that time of Booth's organization. Smith ran further successful missions in Whitby, Sheffield, and Bolton. In 1879, as the Christian Mission was being transformed into the Salvation Army, Smith was promoted to the rank of captain. For some years he made his center at Hanley, in Staffordshire, where he was highly regarded and received a testimonial from the people. This was against the regulations of the Salvation Army, however, and he had to resign his post. He became an independent revivalist and in 1889 made the first of five visits to the United States; in 1894 he went to Australia. In England he carried through great missions in London, Manchester, Birmingham, and in 1897 became a missionary under the control of the National Free Church Council. During the First World War he preached to the British troops in France, and was awarded the M.B.E. He never lost touch with Methodism, and was associated with the Wesleyan Methodist Church in revival campaigns in the 1920's. He died on Aug. 14, 1947.

Gipsy Smith, His Life and Work, written by Himself. London, 1902.

JOHN T. WILKINSON

ROY L. SMITH

SMITH, ROY L. (1887-1963), American preacher, writer, editor and publisher, was born in the midst of a blizzard in a tarpaper house at Nickerson, Kan., on Jan. 28, 1887. His parents were poor and in 1905 his father was killed in an accident in the mill where he was employed. In spite of his financial handicaps Smith graduated from SOUTHWESTERN COLLEGE, Winfield, Kan., in 1908, received his A.M. at NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY in 1915, and was granted the B.D. degree from GARRETT BIBLICAL INSTITUTE that same year. During his life, twelve colleges and universities awarded him honorary degrees. He filled lectureships at many colleges and was a member of the graduate faculties of three institutions. He married Mabel Conley on April 6, 1908, and they had two children.

Smith was ordained in 1908, serving pastorates in KANSAS, ILLINOIS, MINNESOTA, and CALIFORNIA. During the time he was pastor of First Church, LOS ANGELES (1932-40), it was the largest Methodist church in the world. In 1936 he was chosen as one of the six "most representative Methodist preachers in America" and in 1942 as one of the ten "most effective Protestant preachers in America."

He was first employed as a writer when he was eleven years old and this employment continued with some newspaper or magazine until the time of his death. He published his first book in 1920. Since that time more than forty books have come from his pen. In 1940 he was elected editor of The Christian Advocate, official news-magazine of The Methodist Church, and served until 1948. From 1948-52 he was one of the two general managers of The METHODIST PUBLISHING HOUSE.

Smith was elected delegate to three GENERAL CONFERENCES, four JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCES, the UNITING CONFERENCE in 1939, two ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCES, and the WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES meeting in Amsterdam. He was a member of the Boards of Temperance and of EVANGELISM of The Methodist Church. His alma mater, Southwestern College, named a lectureship for him as well as a college and student center.

He died on his way to a preaching appointment on April 20, 1963, and was buried in Wildmead Cemetery at Nickerson, Kan., on April 25.

Who's Who in America.

C. ORVILLE STROHL

SMITH, THOMAS WATSON (1836-1902), Canadian minister and author, was born in Windsor, Nova Scotia, in 1836, the son of a clergyman. Educated in Windsor, he was received on probation in 1857 for the Methodist ministry. Before his ordination in 1861 he served in Aylesford, Woodstock, and Andover; subsequently he preached in Nashwaak, Capetown, Shelburne, Wallace, and Bermuda. Returning from the south with impaired health in 1875, he spent the next five years as a supernumerary in Windsor and Halifax.

In 1880, Smith was appointed editor of The Wesleyan, a post he held until ill health again forced him into retirement in 1886. His biographer tells us that:

For editorial work he had unique qualifications. He caught with ease the salient and critical points of public and passing events. There was a judicious reticence when that seemed a desirable policy, but a fearless and uncompromising attitude in regard to moral issues, . . . and the paper was made a power through the length and breadth of the land. (Johnson, p. 395.)

In 1877 Smith published the first volume of The History of Methodism . . . in the Late Conference of Eastern British America, the second of which followed in 1890. In these, Methodism is traced from the arrival of the first disciples of JOHN WESLEY in the Atlantic Provinces to the setting up of the Eastern British American Conference in 1855, with special attention to local congregations and workers. Smith was a member of the Nova Scotia Historical Society, and contributed many papers, including a notable one on Slavery in Nova Scotia. He was also a member of the Historical Society of MASSACHUSETTS.

He was President of the Nova Scotia Conference in 1890, and was delegate to the General Conferences of 1882, 1883, and 1890. MOUNT ALLISON and Dalhousie Universities conferred honorary degrees on him.

He died in Halifax, March 8, 1902.

G. H. Cornish, Cyclopaedia of Methodism in Canada. 1903. D. Johnston, Eastern British America. 1924.

E. ARTHUR BETTS

SMITH, WILBUR KIRKWOOD (1913-), American bishop of the Methodist Church of BRAZIL, was born on June 21, 1913, in PORTO ALEGRE, State of Rio Grande do Sul, of missionary parents. After finishing the high school course at Porto Alegre Institute (Methodist), he came to the United States, where he received his A.B. degree from ASBURY COLLEGE in 1935; his B.D. from the CANDLER SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY at ENORY in 1936; and M.A. from the University of Kentucky in 1938. He also studied at the Kent School of Social Work connected with the University of Louisville.

WILBUR K. SMITH

He married Grace Buyers, also of missionary parents, and they have six children. In 1938, he was ordained deacon at the KENTUCKY CONFERENCE, and sailed for Brazil, where in 1940, he was ordained elder. Throughout the years, until 1965, Wilbur Smith served in the States of Rio Grande do Sul and Paraná, as pastor, district superintendent; Reitor (Principal) for eleven years of the Instituto União in URUGUAIANA; and as Secretary of the Board of Social Action of the Methodist Church of Brazil (1950-55).

In July 1965 he was elected bishop by the General Conference of that Church—the first second-generation missionary to be so honored. His area comprises the States of Santa Catarina and Paraná. One of Bishop Smith's announced plans is to use the new lay order of deacon which was created at the 1965 General Conference of the Church in Brazil. "I think the Church has opened its doors wide to the laymen in a way . . . that will affect the advancement of the Church," he stated.

His episcopal headquarters are at Curitiba, Paraná, Brazil.

EULA K. LONG

SMITH, WILLIAM ANDREWS (1802-1869), American church leader and college president, was born in Fredericksburg, Va., on Nov. 29, 1802. His parents died when he was very young, and he was adopted by Russell Hill of PETERSBURG, Va. When seventeen years old he was converted and joined the M.E. Church. He received a good elementary education and read the classics, but not being able to attend college, studied in the home of his uncle, Mr. Porter, in Orange County, Va., and afterward taught school in Madison County. In 1824 he traveled the Gloucester Circuit in the VIRGINIA CONFERENCE and in February 1825, was admitted on trial in that Conference where he served several pastorates. In 1833, while agent for RANDOLPH-MACON COLLEGE, the carriage which he was driving upset and fell on him breaking his right thigh and laming him for life.

W. A. Smith was a delegate to every GENERAL CONFERENCE from 1832 to 1844. He was active in the General Conference of 1844 and defended Bishop J. O. Andrew against the Northern majority which deposed him. He was noted for his deliberative and forensic eloquence, and was the most prominent advocate of the Southern point of view. The next year Smith was a member of the LOUISVILLE CONVENTION which organized the M.E. Church, South, and subsequently of all the General Conferences of that church from 1846 to 1866. In 1846 he was called from his pastorate in VIRGINIA to the presidency of Randolph-Macon College where he served for twenty years. Randolph-Macon, then located at Boydton, Va., steadily grew through the efforts of Smith and the agents of the college. An endowment of $100,000 was raised which was the largest amount of money raised by a church college up to that time. During the Civil War the college lost both its students and its funds, but scores of ministers by then had entered the ministry under Smith's care.

In 1866 Smith became the pastor of Centenary Church in St. Louis, where he served for two years. From there he was called to be president of CENTRAL COLLEGE in MISSOURI.

Smith is best known to Methodist historians for his preparation and sponsorship of a measure in the 1854 General Conference of the M.E. Church, South, giving the bishops of that Church the power to declare unconstitutional any rule or regulation adopted by a General Conference which in their view was unconstitutional. This measure, formally adopted by that Conference, gave the Southern bishops the power, not to veto, but to "check" any legislation they deemed unconstitutional until it could be referred back to the Conference, which then might by two-thirds majority adopt the measure again and send it to the Annual Conferences for constitutional approval.

This measure when adopted was given a place in the Discipline in the chapter on the General Conference, "and was thus incorporated as a part of the RESTRICTIVE RULES of the Constitution" (DuBose, p. 113). It was, however, clearly seen by W. A. Smith in 1854 that this statutory action was not itself constitutional and he was preparing at a later date to have this measure adopted by a constitutional vote of the Church. However, Smith died before this matter could be finally settled as it was destined to be in 1870 by his disciple LEROY M. LEE, who by a statesmanlike paper and enabling motion put into effect what W. A. Smith had been aiming at in 1854. Southerners credit Smith with the sponsorship of this measure which gave to the bishops of the Church, South, an enormous power in establishing them as the judges and guardians of constitutional law. (See JUDICIAL COUNCIL.)

Smith died March 1, 1869, while on a visit to RICHMOND.

H. M. DuBose, History. 1916.

W. W. Sweet, Virginia. 1955.

F. C. Tucker, Missouri. 1966.

J. MANNING POTTS

SMITH, WILLIAM ANGIE (1894-), American bishop, was born in Elgin, Texas, on Dec. 21, 1894, the son of William Angie and Mary Elizabeth (Marrs) Smith. He received the A.B. degree in 1917 and the D.D. in 1937 from SOUTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY and the A.M. degree in 1924 from Columbia University. He was also a student at PERKINS SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY, VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY School of Religion, and Union Theological Seminary. The following institutions conferred on him an honorary D.D. degree: McMURRY COLLEGE, 1927; CENTENARY COLLEGE, 1934; CENTRAL COLLEGE, 1946; and Southwestern University. He received the LL.D. from SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIVERSITY, 1945; Litt.D. from OKLAHOMA CITY UNIVERSITY, 1945 and the S.T.D. in 1958.

W. ANGIE SMITH

On July 20, 1920, he married Bess Owens of Fort Worth, Texas. They have three children, William Angie III, Bryant Wesley and Shelby Lee. William Angie Smith is the brother of the late Methodist Bishop FRANK SMITH of HOUSTON, Texas, and his wife, Mrs. Bess Smith, was president of the world organization of Bishop's Wives, 1964-68.

Smith was ordained to the ministry of the M.E. Church, South, in 1921. He served a number of pastorates including Mt. Vernon Place Church, WASHINGTON, D. C., 1934-36; First Church, BIRMINGHAM, Ala., 1936-38; and First Church, DALLAS, Texas, 1938-44. In 1944 he became the first bishop elected by the SOUTH CENTRAL JURISDICTION of The Methodist Church and was assigned to the OKLAHOMA-NEW MEXICO Area. Bishop Smith was president of the General Board of EVANGELISM of The Methodist Church from 1952-64 and of the Board of Trustees of Centenary College, 1932-33. He served a one-year term as president of the COUNCIL of BISHOPS of The Methodist Church, 1957-58, and had the responsibility of the Pacific Area of the Latin America Central Conference, 1960. He also had responsibility for visitation to Latin America from 1944-60; and now has visitation responsibility for MEXICO. He was assigned as Methodist bishop of HONG KONG and FORMOSA for a one-year term expiring Aug. 1, 1961.

Bishop Smith was a vice-president of the Methodist Board of Missions, and president of Division of Education and Cultivation of that Board from 1952 until 1964. He was a chairman of the COMMITTEE on STRUCTURE of METHODISM OVERSEAS, 1948-64 and of the Four-Year Study Program of the Board of Missions. He is president of the CHAPLAIN'S Commission and Commission on Inter-jurisdictional Relations. Since 1938 he has been a trustee of Southwestern University and since 1944 of Southern Methodist University. He has been an honorary president of McMurtry College Board of Trustees since 1944; and president of the Oklahoma City University Board of Trustees since 1944. He is an adopted member of twenty-two Indian tribes, with official title of Chief Tissoya, meaning in English, "Dependable." He is a member of the Oklahoma Hall of Fame and was appointed by Gov. Henry Billman as an Ambassador for Oklahoma. During the twenty-four years he presided over the Oklahoma-New Mexico Area, every year each Conference showed a net increase in membership. At the end of the twenty-four years, the membership of the Area was more than doubled.

Who's Who in The Methodist Church, 1966.

N. B. H.

SMITH, WILLIAM MILTON (1915-), a bishop of the A.M.E. ZION CHURCH, was born on Dec. 18, 1915 to George and Elizabeth Smith in Baldwin County, Ala. He was educated at Lomax-Hannon High School and later received a B.S. degree from Alabama State College, Montgomery, Ala.; an A.M. from Tuskegee Institute, Tuskegee, Ala.; and a B.D. from Hood Theological Seminary, SALISBURY, N. C. He also did work at PERKINS SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY, SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIVERSITY, Dallas, Texas.

His pastorates included Ebenezer, MONTGOMERY, Ala., and Big Zion, MOBILE, Ala. He is a member of the Board of Directors of numerous institutions, including Mobile General Hospital and the Mobile Chamber of Commerce. He was elected to the episcopacy in 1960.

DAVID H. BRADLEY

SMITH ISLAND, MARYLAND, U.S.A., is part of a group of small islands with many Methodist people (proportionately) in the Chesapeake Bay off the eastern shore of MARYLAND at Tangier Sound just above the line dividing Maryland from VIRGINIA. First reference to the island is in the account of Captain John Smith, who as early as 1607 crossed the Bay from his settlement at Jamestown, Va., to the Eastern Shore of what is now Maryland, noting certain "isles, rivers, straits, and places for harbors and habitations." These have since been identified as Smith's, Holland's, Deal's and Tangier Islands and the straits and sounds within this area. Settlement did not proceed rapidly, but by 1666 reports concerning the section had been so favorable that considerable settlement had occurred and Somerset County itself had been formed.

The beginning of organized Methodism on Smith's Island is vague, but it is generally thought that Methodism was fostered through the ministry of Joshua Thomas, called "The Parson of the Islands." Born Aug. 30, 1776, he was first influenced by the Episcopalians but later became a Methodist and spent his life as a preacher among the island people. He died Oct. 8, 1853 and was buried on Deal's Island where his grave bears an appropriate marker and inscription.

There is no extant record of an organized church on Smith's Island until 1855, although Methodist revivals were previously held for many years throughout the islands. The first church was built in 1854 but was burned the following year; but from that date a clearer record is available. Churches were built in 1855 and 1866. In 1896 Calvary Church was built at Rhodes Point, and in the following year chapels were built at North End and at Drum Point and a new church was erected at Tylerton. In 1938 a disastrous fire made it necessary to rebuild the church that had been built at Ewell. Today churches are located at Rhodes Point, Tylerton and Ewell.

The chief industry of the Island is oyster and crab fishing. The Island has no hotels, taverns, theatres or crime, and policemen are unnecessary. Pastors of the Island have been called "Water Circuit Riders."

No Methodist bishop ever visited the Island until 1959 when Bishop G. BROMLEY OXNAM preached at Ewell. Since then the Island has been regularly visited by his successor, Bishop JOHN WESLEY LORD.

The isolated, clannish islanders have been termed a living link with the England of 300 years ago, and in 1959, when a Together magazine writer accompanied Bishop Oxnam to the Island, he spoke of their speech as a "charming tongue that hints of their Elizabethan ancestors." Access to the Island can be had through the mail-produce boat which departs each day from Crisfield, Md.

Together Magazine, August 1959.

Adam Wallace, The Parson of the Islands or the Life of Joshua Thomas. Philadelphia, 1872. FREDERICK E. MASER

SMITHIES, JOHN (1802-1872), one of the early missionaries to AUSTRALIA, was born in Yorkshire, England. He was the first Wesleyan Methodist minister to take up an appointment in Western Australia. He arrived in the Swan River Colony in 1840 as a missionary sent out by the Wesleyan Missionary Society. He had had nine years experience in Newfoundland and two years in a Circuit in England, and was well equipped for his new task. He was charged with the conversion and welfare of the aborigines and the pastoral care of the colonists, of whom there were then only 2,311 in the colony after twelve years of colonization.

Smithies' first task was an extremely difficult one because of the nomadic character of the aborigines and the second, that of finding a place for the church in the daily lives of people who were dominated by the sheer struggle for survival in an arid and harsh land. He faced his tasks, however, with courage, determination and ability.

Within a matter of weeks he had laid the foundation stone for a commodious Chapel at Fremantle, the port of PERTH, and went on to establish a school for the native children at Perth and later, a flourishing Mission at Wanneroo, a few miles to the northwest of Perth. He built a Chapel at Perth costing £1200, a mission residence, and a school room and, very soon, he had the second largest primary school in the Colony.

For twelve years he carried on alone, the only Methodist minister in a state covering almost one million square miles, and in all that time he was unable to meet and have fellowship with another Methodist minister. In 1852 he was joined by William Lowe. This enabled him to move the aboriginal mission from Wanneroo to York into the rich wheat growing country to the East that was being opened up in the Avon Valley. Here he re-established the mission, established Wesleyan Methodism and speedily built a mission house, church and school. In 1855 he was transferred from Western Australia to TASMANIA where he served in several circuits. He died at Barrington, Tasmania, in 1872.

AUSTRALIAN EDITORIAL COMMITTEE

SMUGGLING was widely regarded in eighteenth-century England as an unconventional but legitimate form of free trade. Rich and poor alike benefited; the gentry had duty-free luxuries, while fishermen found a profitable and exciting sideline. By 1770, 470,000 gallons of brandy and 350,000 pounds of tea were smuggled into Cornwall alone in a single year, at a cost of £150,000 to the Exchequer.

JOHN WESLEY consistently opposed smuggling and tried to stamp it out in the Methodist societies. On July 26, 1753, he examined the St. Ives society. "I found an accursed thing among them; well nigh one and all bought or sold uncustomed goods." (Journal.) He told them, "either they must put this abomination away, or they would see my face no more." Later, he thought—wrongly—that Cornish Methodism had reformed. "That detestable practice of cheating the King is no more found in our societies." (Journal, Sept. 21, 1762.) In fact, both Richard Trewavas of Mousehole in 1770 and Henry Carter of Breage (1749-1829) were both Methodist sympathizers and smugglers; Carter's smuggling survived his conversion and his call to preach, though he afterward prohibited swearing on his ship, and conducted Sunday services for English smugglers at Roscoff in Brittany. Nor was smuggling confined to Cornwall. Wesley denounced it at Sunderland (Journal, June 16, 1757; June 23, 1759), at Dover (Dec. 3, 1765), and at Rye, in Sussex (Dec. 23, 1773). He raised the subject in a Bristol Pastoral Address in 1764, and in letters to JOSEPH BENSON and Zechariah Yewdall. He wrote his famous tract, A Word to a Smuggler, in 1767. In it, he defined the practice as "a general robbery. It is, in effect, not only robbing the King, but robbing every honest man in the nation." A smuggler is "no honest man—a pick-pocket." It was agreed at the Conference of 1767 that members who persisted in smuggling should be expelled. Wesley's total opposition may have helped to convince Methodists that smuggling was a sin rather than a harmless misdemeanor, but the practice survived well into the nineteenth century. RICHARD TREFFRY conducted a service at the Lizard in the Helston Circuit in Cornwall in 1802; he had seen a smuggler land his goods before the service, and so he had few hearers. On the whole, public approval of smuggling died through changes in fiscal policy rather than through religious pressure.

J. B. Cornish, Autobiography of a Cornish Smuggler. London, 1894.

J. Pearce, Wesleys in Cornwall. 1964. MICHAEL S. EDWARDS

SMYTH, WILLIAM HENRY (1864-1949), Irish minister, was born in Newtownards, County Down, and entered the ministry in 1886. He was a skilled debater and an able administrator, and connexional offices were soon opened to him. In these he served with distinction, particularly as Secretary of Religious Education and a representative of the Irish Methodist Church at ecumenical conferences. After the establishment of the Parliament of Northern IRELAND, he became one of the CHAPLAINS to the House of Commons. In 1921 he was elected to the highest office of the church, and was the first to receive the official title of President of the Methodist Church in Ireland, in addition to the previous title of Vice-President of the Conference. He was again elected to this office in 1927.

FREDERICK JEFFERY

SNAITH, NORMAN HENRY (1898-), distinguished British Old Testament scholar, was born at Chipping Norton, near Oxford, the son of John A. Snaithe, PRIMITIVE METHODIST minister, himself also the son of a Primitive Methodist minister. He was educated at the Paston School, North Walsham; the Duke's School, Alnwick; and the Manchester Grammar School, of which he was school captain. He went to Corpus Christi College, Oxford, on an open scholarship, and took a B.A. in mathematics in 1920. Accepted for the Primitive Methodist ministry in 1921, he studied at Mansfield College, Oxford, 1922-25. He rapidly established himself as an Old Testament scholar, and after serving in several circuits was stationed at Wesley College, Headingley, Leeds in 1936 as Old Testament tutor; he was principal of the college from 1953 to his retirement in 1961.

He was elected president of the Methodist CONFERENCE in 1958. He acted as visiting professor at SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIVERSITY, Dallas, Texas, 1949, and at United College, Bangalore, in 1957-58. He was awarded the D.D. of Oxford University, as well as the honorary D.D. of Glasgow and the honorary D.Litt. of Leeds University, where he was an associate lecturer from 1936-62. He gave the Speaker's Lectures at Oxford, 1961-65. Perhaps his best-known book was The Distinctive Ideas of the Old Testament (1944; 9th English ed., 1962; American ed., 1946). He published commentaries on many parts of the Old Testament; The Jewish New Year Festival (1948); and contributed to both The Interpreter's Bible (1954) and the New Peake Commentary (1962). In 1958 he published an edition of the Hebrew text of the Old Testament for the BRITISH AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY, an important culmination to his life's work.

JOHN KENT

SNAVELY, GUY EVERETT (1881-), American college president and educator, was born at Antietam, Md., on Oct. 26, 1881, the son of Charles Granville and Emma (Rohrer) Snavely. He received the A.B. degree from Johns Hopkins University, 1901, and the Ph.D. in 1908; also the Alliance Francaise in Paris in the summer of 1905. He holds honorary degrees from twenty-three universities and for many years has taken part in the activities of learned societies and academic organizations throughout the United States.

Dr. Snavely served as teacher of Romance Languages and Literature in various colleges, and held an executive position in ALLEGHENY COLLEGE, before going to Converse College in Spartanburg, S.C., in 1919 to be dean. In 1921 he was elected president of BIRMINGHAM-SOUTHERN COLLEGE and served until 1938. He was the executive director of the Association of American Colleges, 1937-54; a trustee of MILES COLLEGE, Hood College, and AMERICAN UNIVERSITY.

Dr. Snavely was a lay member of the Joint Hymnal Commission, 1930-34, from the M.E. Church, South. He has been a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of his Church and has served actively in the Association of American Colleges of which he was president, 1929-30. He is an officer of the French Legion of Honor, 1947; has written Choose and Use Your College, History of the Southern College Association; The Church and the Four Year College, 1955; A Search for Excellence: Memoirs of a College Administrator, 1964; and has been chancellor of Birmingham Southern College since 1955.

Who's Who in America, Vol. 34.

Who's Who in The Methodist Church, 1966.

N. B. H.

SNEAD COLLEGE, Boaz, Alabama, was established in 1899 by the M.E. Church as Boaz Academy, a mission school. Reorganized as a high school in 1906, it was named for John H. Snead, one of the early settlers of Boaz, a member of the M.E. Church. In the early years of the institution, Snead paid off an indebtedness on the school, and out of gratitude the name was changed to The John H. Snead Seminary. It became a junior college in 1935. The governing board has twenty-five members elected by the NORTH ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

JOHN O. GROSS

NICHOLAS SNETHEN

SNETHEN, NICHOLAS (1769-1845), American preacher and reformer known as "Francis Asbury's Silver Trumpet," was born on Long Island, N. Y., Nov. 15, 1769. He entered the itinerary of the M.E. Church in 1794 and was sent to New England, where he served successively the Fairfield and Tolland circuits in CONNECTICUT, Vershire circuit in VERMONT, and the Portland circuit in MAINE.

In 1798 he was appointed to CHARLESTON, S. C., and in 1800 he was chosen to travel with Bishop ASBURY. He was assigned to this post again in 1801. He was also stationed in BALTIMORE, PHILADELPHIA, GEORGETOWN, ALEXANDRIA, and FREDERICK.

While at Georgetown in 1811 he was elected CHAPLAIN of the House of Representatives. In 1816 he was a candidate of the Federalist Party for a seat in the National House but was defeated. He was also defeated when he ran for the MARYLAND House of Delegates.

Snethen was secretary of the GENERAL CONFERENCE in 1800 and a member of that body in 1804 and 1812.

In 1803 he married Susannah Hood Worthington. She owned land at Linganore in Maryland where in 1814 Snethen located and settled. He later suffered reverses and moved westward to a farm near Merom, Ind.

Snethen was interested in the causes which gave rise to the M.P. CHURCH: opposition to episcopacy and the presiding eldership and support of lay representation in all the councils of the Church. He presided at the General Conference which organized the Associated Methodist Churches and when in 1830 the name of that body was changed to the Methodist Protestant Church he affiliated with it. He was a contributor to The Wesleyan Repository, begun in 1821, and to its successor, The Mutual Rights. In 1834 he became one of the editors of The Methodist Protestant, published in Baltimore.

After the death of his wife and daughter in 1830, he united with the OHIO CONFERENCE of the M.P. Church and served in CINCINNATI, LOUISVILLE, Ky., and Zanesville, Ohio, later retiring because of age.

Snethen was interested in education under religious auspices, and in 1836 he became president of Dearborn College, a new institution established near Lawrenceburg, Ind. The venture failed when in 1839 a fire destroyed the building. He accepted an invitation to become president of a seminary to train ministers in 1843. It was to be called Snethen Seminary and was to be located at Iowa City, Iowa, but his death on May 10, 1845 at Princeton, Ind., prevented any active service. He was buried at Princeton.

F. Asbury, Journal and Letters. 1958.

T. H. Colhouer, Sketches of the Founders. 1880.

E. J. Drinkhouse, History of Methodist Reform. 1899.

H. L. Feeman, Asbury's Silver Trumpet. 1950.

M. Simpson, Cyclopaedia. 1878. ELMER T. CLARK

SNOW CREEK CHURCH in Iredell County, North Carolina, was organized during the great revival of 1801-02 in central NORTH CAROLINA. PHILIP BRUCE said he organized it in the fall of 1801, but according to tradition it was formed by Peter Claywell in 1802. The first deed calls it King's Meetinghouse, after Richard Hugg King who at the time was a licensed Methodist preacher. However, he was originally a Presbyterian and later he returned to that church and became a noted preacher in it. The meetinghouse was built next to what was known as Snow Creek Cemetery, and in time it took that name. During much of the nineteenth century, Snow Creek was the dominant church of its region. It continues as a work on the Friendship Charge, Statesville District. In 1969 it reported sixty-three members and property valued at $58,000.

Iredell County Deeds.

M. H. Moore, Sketches of the Pioneers of Methodism in North Carolina and Virginia. Nashville: Southern Methodist Publishing House, 1884.

HOMER KEEVER

SNOWDEN, RITA FRANCES (1907-), NEW ZEALAND deaconess, was born at Hope, Nelson, and brought up at Brightwater. Feeling the call to full-time service in the church—following six years at business—she trained at Methodist Deaconess House, CHRISTCHURCH. She was later appointed home missionary supply in a rugged country area in the middle of the King Country. Here she established a reputation for hard work and originality. She was next moved to Otorohanga, to be the first full-time agent of the Methodist Church.

During the depression years the church moved her to the AUCKLAND Central Mission. Here she picked up a germ on the lining of her heart, and was for two years totally incapacitated. Following recovery, which many deemed miraculous, she commenced a writing ministry. She wrote forty-three books, published by EPWORTH PRESS and ABINGDON PRESS, and widespread contributions to religious publications in New Zealand, England, SCOTLAND, United States, CANADA, and AUSTRALIA. For almost five years—on recovery—she was in charge of the Church Book Caravan, covering New Zealand from end to end.

When the Second World War brought this to an end, she served the church in the Epworth Bookroom for some years. Later, she served the wider church as lecturer and guest speaker in several countries, including a time as guest of QUEEN SALOTE in TONGA. In 1957-58, Miss Snowden was elected first woman vice-president of the New Zealand Methodist Conference. In 1960 she was made a fellow of the International Institute of Arts and Letters. She long served as a devotional broadcaster. In 1966 she made her home at "West Hills," Titirangi, Auckland.

Journal of the Auckland Methodist Synod. L. R. M. GILMORE

SNYDER, HENRY NELSON (1865-1949), American educator and college president, was born in MACON, Ga., on Jan. 14, 1865. He was educated at VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY, and at Gottingen University, GERMANY. In 1890 he became professor of English in WOFFORD COLLEGE, and in 1902 he was elected president of the college, serving in this capacity until his retirement in 1942.

Snyder served in a number of the GENERAL CONFERENCES of his church, and was an active leader in the Commission on Unification, the General Board of EDUCATION, and the joint Hymnal Commission. He scarcely ever attended a General Conference as a lay representative without receiving votes for the office of bishop by members of the conference who were unaware that he was not a minister.

His keen perception of literary values made him a helpful member of the Hymnal Commission. Once when a bishop objected to too many deletions of CHARLES WESLEY's "not-too-wonderful" hymns, Snyder remarked, "Bishop, we are greatly improving Charles Wesley's reputation as a hymn writer."

As president of Wofford College, Snyder added several distinguished scholars to the faculty, substantially increased the endowment, expanded the physical plant, and placed a major emphasis on scholarship. During his administration, Wofford came to be numbered among the strong liberal arts colleges of the East. Snyder died in Spartanburg on Sept. 18, 1949.

A. D. Betts, South Carolina. 1952.

Henry Nelson Snyder, An Educational Odyssey. Nashville: Abingdon-Cokesbury Press, 1947.

D. D. Wallace, Wofford College. 1951.

CLARENCE CLIFFORD NORTON

SNYDER, SAMUEL S. (?-1863), American United Brethren home missionary martyr, was sent by the Home Missionary Board of KANSAS in 1854 to assist W. A. Cardwell, later becoming first presiding elder of the Kansas Conference, CHURCH OF THE UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST. His life was threatened almost daily, but he was fearless. As a lieutenant of colored troops, he was among 150 citizens shot by the blood-thirsty mob called Quantrill's Raiders at Lawrence, Kan., in August 1863. Later the United Brethren church in Lawrence was renamed in his memory.

Nothing is known of the life of Samuel S. Snyder until he was received into the ministry of the Allegheny Conference (western PENNSYLVANIA) in 1845 and was ordained in 1847. For several years he served this conference as presiding elder before going to Kansas.

Weekley and Fout, Our Heroes. 1908-11.

ROBERT R. MACCANON

SOCIAL CONCERNS, BOARD OF CHRISTIAN, an administrative agency of The United Methodist Church (U.S.A.) with headquarters in WASHINGTON, D. C. This Board is responsible for pursuing the task of Christianizing society through a program of study and action in relationship to pressing community, national and world problems. Officially established by the 1960 GENERAL CONFERENCE of The Methodist Church, the Board was formed through the union of three former Methodist agencies: the Board of Temperance, the Board of World Peace and the Board of Social and Economic Relations. It had been felt for some time that many of the issues dealt with by the separate agencies were interrelated and, in some cases, overlapped; therefore, it seemed best, from the standpoint of effectiveness of program and efficiency of administration, to combine these boards for a united approach. The Board was located in Washington largely because of the desirability of having representation at the national center of influence.

The purpose of the Board as stated in the Discipline of The United Methodist Church is "to relate the gospel of Jesus Christ to the members of the Church and to the persons and structures of the communities and world in which they live . . . seek to bring the whole life of man, his activities, possessions, and community and world relationships, into conformity with the will of God . . . [and] show the members of the Church and the society that the reconciliation which God effected through Christ involves personal, social, and civic righteousness."

The Board, since its establishment, has grown to be a major Board of The United Methodist Church, with a large membership—presently about ninety members—from a great variety of occupations. The staff is composed of a General Secretary and three Associate General Secretaries as well as a number of department heads and administrative personnel. Responsible for the co-ordination of the total program, the General Secretary serves as the chief administrative officer of the Board. The three Associate General Secretaries are primarily responsible for programming matters in their assigned areas.

The Board carries on its work through three divisions: the Division of Peace and World Order, the Division of Human Relations and Economic Affairs, and the Division of Alcohol Problems and General Welfare. These divisions are each engaged in a program of research, education and action with respect to certain assigned issues. Among those issues for which the General Welfare Division is responsible are: alcohol problems, gambling, crime, sex and moral values, and community welfare policies and practices. Some of the concerns under the purview of the Human Relations Division include: race relations, civil liberties, church and state relations, labor-management relations, unemployment and housing. Other issues are dealt with by the Peace Division, such as: American foreign policy, the United Nations, disarmament, foreign aid, immigration, conscientious objectors and the draft. The Board attempts to bring these concerns to the attention of the churches, their members, and the communities they serve.

There are certain specific and traditional functions of the Board. The Board attempts to train leadership in the field of Christian social concerns through national, regional, and annual conference assemblies. In addition, the General Board produces dozens of pieces of literature each year dealing with the specific program areas assigned. The Board's fortnightly publication, Concern, seeks to keep its subscribers well-informed on current pressing social issues and to look at these from a Christian perspective. Certain special days receive encouragement for observance by the churches, through the production of helpful resource materials. These presently include: Labor Sunday, Commitment Day, World Order Sunday, Race Relations Sunday, and Social Creed Sunday.

Where the General Conference has taken action on a specific matter, the Board of Christian Social Concerns may occasionally testify before a Congressional Committee using the General Conference resolution as the basic document for such testimony. As legislative matters related to social concerns come before the United States Congress periodically, the Board attempts to keep leadership throughout the Church informed of the issues involved, and of opportunities for appropriate and effective action. The Board does not engage in lobbying, seeking only to stimulate the Christian citizenship responsibilities of Methodist people. Of no small advantage, however, is the strategic location of the Methodist Building, just a block from the Capitol and directly across from the Supreme Court.

The Board has played a significant role in response to the great tension in recent years over race relations. This role has focused upon awakening the conscience of the Church, building an inclusive Church in an inclusive society, and supporting the enactment of specific national legislation guaranteeing the civil rights of all people without discrimination.

Further, the Board cooperates with annual conferences, districts and local churches in arranging Washington Study Programs, through which Methodist groups visit the Washington scene and examine government policies from the vantage point of the Christian faith. Also, thousands of Methodists annually visit the United Nations in New York studying that international organization through the facilities of the Methodist Office and the Woman's Division of the Board of Missions. The Church Center for the United Nations, which houses the Methodist Office for the U.N., was completed in 1963. This twelve-story structure, across the street from the United Nations, was a project initiated by the General Board of Christian Social Concerns. Both in purpose and function the Church Center for the United Nations is ecumenically oriented. A number of denominational offices as well as the International Affairs Commission of the National Council of Churches operate U.N.-related programs at the Church Center.

J. ELLIOTT CORBETT

SOCIAL CONCERNS, BRITISH. Declarations on social matters have been made from time to time by the British Conference. It has thereby approved declarations on social questions whose social judgments may be said to carry the explicit approval of the Methodist Church. Among such declarations are the Christian Significance and Use of Leisure (1935), which emphasized the need for the Church to set a positive example; The Gambling Problem (1936), which asserted that gambling is contrary to an acceptance of the divine will and providence; and The Christian Observance of Sunday (1939), which said that in the general interest of the community, public legislation should be based on the principle that the character of Sunday as a day of rest and recreation and worship should be preserved, that any change should be at the instance of the community, and not for the benefit of an interested group.

There have also been two important statements on family life. Marriage and the Family (1939, revised in 1961) said that provided that the means employed are acceptable to both husband and wife, and that, according to the best evidence available, they do neither physical nor emotional harm, for the purpose of conception-control there is no moral distinction between the practice of continence and the use of estimated periods of infertility, or of artificial barriers to the meeting of sperm and ovum, or indeed of drugs which would, if effective and safe, inhibit or control ovulation in a calculable way.

The statements on Divorce (1946, 1948 and 1967) reaffirmed the Methodist view that the norm and standard of Christian marriage is the lifelong and exclusive union of one man with one woman. But the Conference also recognized that there are courses of conduct which so violate the pledges and obligations of marriage that they destroy it; and therefore divorce is possible for Christians, though it should only be granted when a marriage has broken down beyond the possibility of restoration. Another important declaration on a traditionally Methodist topic was Total Abstinence and Temperance Reform (1951), which said that teetotalism was not a condition of membership of the British Methodist Church, but that our obligations to our neighbors and the call to complete personal dedication fully justified the refusal to compromise with the habit of drinking intoxicants.

Peace and War (1957) said that war was contrary to the spirit, teaching, and purpose of Christ. Some Methodists were pacifist; others believed that war was sometimes the lesser of two evils: the Methodist Church would uphold the liberty of conscience of both groups. "The Christian pacifist contends that no war can be justified. The non-pacifist contends that the use of nuclear weapons of mass destruction cannot be justified."

In 1961, the Conference issued another declaration, The Church in Multi-Racial Communities, which identified Methodism with the declaration of the second Assembly of the World Council of Churches, holding that "any form of segregation based on race, colour, or ethnic origin is incompatible with the Christian doctrine of man and the nature of the Church of Christ."

In 1963 a declaration of The Treatment of Animals condemned all sports that inevitably caused suffering to animals, or harmed the character of those either taking part in or watching them.

In 1960, the Christian View of Industry in Relation to the Social Order said that the Christian ought not to put individual, sectional, or class interests before the interests of the community. The primary function of industry is to provide by cooperative effort the goods and services needed by the community; acquisitiveness as such is not Christian. No form of contemporary social organization perfectly reflects the mind of God. (See Declara- tions of Conference on Social Questions; official publication.)

JOHN KENT

SOCIAL CREED, THE METHODIST, is a series of affirmations which were drawn up first in 1908 within the M. E. Church and published in the Discipline of that year as "The Church and Social Problems" (p. 479). This early statement on social problems was limited largely to the economic situation. It was prepared and presented to the GENERAL CONFERENCE by the unofficial METHODIST FEDERATION FOR SOCIAL SERVICE, with Bishop HERBERT WELCH as its first president. Having no other official body charged with the responsibility for Christian leadership in this field, the M. E. Church gave its official approval to the Federation and adopted its corpus of social principles. The Federation further called upon the Church to "continue and increase its work of social service," and urged its ministry to "the fearless but judicious preaching of the teachings of Jesus in their significance for the moral interests of modern society." (Discipline, 1908, p. 481.)

The United Methodist Discipline, 1968, par. 96, aptly states that "The interest of The Methodist Church in social welfare springs from the gospel, and from the labors of John Wesley, who ministered to the physical, intellectual, and social needs of the people to whom he preached the gospel of personal redemption." Methodism affirms that the Spirit of Christ in the New Testament is the solution to all social evils.

The factual formulation of the Creedal statements in 1908 in the M. E. Church resulted from the swelling impetus of the "social gospel," as it was beginning to be called, and in the midst of an industrial and economic life characterized by a great deal of tension and injustice. The exploitation of workers was common and was marked by long hours in hot, ill-equipped factories. An inefficient industrial commercial system, moreover, resulted in undue fluctuation in employment, poor relationship between wages paid and profit earned, and bad working conditions for women and children. A call had already been made for the amelioration of such conditions, and, along with the Church, other concerned organizations were arising in the interest of this cause: "trade unions, farmers' organizations, institutions for aid and support of the homeless, and groups concerned about the immigrants flooding the nation." (Ward, p. 20.)

With a few changes and additions the M. E. statement on the Church and social problems was adopted in December 1908, by the FEDERAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES of Christ in America at their first meeting, and in 1912 the M. E. Church adopted the changes and additions made by the Federal Council. One item among the additions and changes had to do with the liquor traffic. In December 1912, the Federal Council added two more principles, both pertaining to economic life, and in 1916 the M. E. Church in turn included these two principles in its own statement.

The M. E. Church, South, in 1914, endorsed the Social Creed, and in 1916 the M. P. Church in its General Conference made the action of the three great bodies of Methodism unanimous. From that time, this creed or its revisions and expansions have been published in all Methodist Disciplines of the three churches. When they came together in 1939 as The Methodist Church, they, of course, continued the Creed in the Discipline of 1940 and succeeding quadrennia.

Within the present Discipline the original material has been greatly amplified. In place of the few terse statements in the 1908 Discipline, there are now whole paragraphs dealing with the family, economic life, responsible use of power, poverty and unemployment, wealth, social benefits for workers, the right to organize for collective bargaining, town and country life, urban life, Christian vocation, the Church and general welfare, alcohol problems, crime and rehabilitation, gambling, mental health and medical care, drug abuse, sex in Christian life, social welfare, human rights, civil liberties and civil rights, peace and world order, international organizations, the Christian and military service. The Creed concludes with a "mandate" to read, study and apply these principles. (See also ETHICAL TRADITIONS IN AMERICAN METHODISM.)

In parallel with the compilation and endorsement of the Social Creed, there came about within the respective Churches certain agencies charged with responsibilities in this whole field. In 1904 a Temperance Society was organized, which became in 1912 the Board of Temperance of the M. E. Church. It evolved by 1916 into the Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals. In 1918 the M. E. Church, South, organized a Board of Temperance and Social Service. The Commission on World Peace was established in the M. E. Church in 1924, and after union of the Churches there came into existence in 1952 a Board of World Peace, and a Board of Social and Economic Relations. In 1960, at a reorganization of these interests, there was created a Board of Christian SOCIAL CONCERNS, with a Division of Temperance and General Welfare, a Division of Human Relations and Economic Affairs, and a Division of Peace and World Order. The Division of Temperance and General Welfare (1960) became in 1964 the Division of Alcohol Problems and General Welfare. At the Uniting Conference of 1968, The United Methodist Church continued the Board of Christian Social Concerns, with a general committee appointed to study and recommend any needed modifications in its structure or mission.

General Conferences are competent to modify the Creed and change its language from time to time and do so. Methodists differ in interpreting the import of various items of the Social Creed, and especially in their application. Such differences will appear in the future as in the past. It may confidently be expected, however, that future General Conferences will honor the request of the earlier ones and continue to publish in the Book of Discipline the, or a, Social Creed.

The Social Creed is not considered binding Methodist law, as are statutory enactments in the Discipline, but as it does have behind it the force of General Conference acceptance, and full promulgation, and is the result of the thinking of representatives of the whole Church upon practical situations of everyday life, it will always be held in the highest regard by Methodist people everywhere. It is usually referred to in current terminology as the Methodist Social Creed, rather than as the Social Creed of the Churches as it was formerly called.

Discipline, TMC, 1964.

Samuel D. Lewis, "The Historical Development of the Social Creed of The Methodist Church." Unpublished ms., Candler School of Theology.

W. G. Muekler, Methodism and Society. 1961.

A. D. Ward, Social Creed. 1965.

SAMUEL D. LEWIS

SOCIETY, METHODIST USE OF THE TERM. Society commonly means "a collection or aggregate of persons usually thought of as forming a more or less cohesive, collective group." But in Methodist terminology, it early came to have a technical sense in that WESLEY began to speak of his followers in their different meetings as "societies," and in the GENERAL RULES, which he wrote, he spoke of "the rise of the United Society first in London and then in other places." He never intended to found a Church, and religious "societies" of various sorts were well known and often found all over Protestantism when Wesley lived.

Again and again we find him speaking of "meeting the society" in such and such a place; and in America the term persisted for years, so that in many stories of the origin of churches in this Encyclopedia it will be found that the original organization is spoken of as "a society which was formed." Indeed it took some time for the societies in America, even in the M. E. Church, to begin to recognize themselves as local churches, rather than societal groups, and there are those today who hold that the great organized Methodist churches of the present still have about them many of the marks of the early Societies.

Wesley gave rules for admission to his Societies. In a letter to VINCENT PERRONET in the year 1748, A Plain Account of the People Called Methodists, he told how the original societies began by certain persons, who wished to be guided in Christian understanding and living, coming to his brother CHARLES and to himself for help. Wesley said, "But I soon found they were too many for me to talk with severally so often as they wanted it. So I told them, 'If you will all of you come together every Thursday, in the evening, I will gladly spend some time with you in prayer, and give you the best advice I can.' . . . Thus arose, without any previous design on either side, what was afterward called a Society; a very innocent name, and very common in London, for any number of people associating themselves together." (Letters, II, p. 294.)

Thus the name came to be used in a technical sense in early Methodism. The different groups because of their organization became something of a church within a Church. Not until 1784 in America and some years after Wesley's death in England, did the "Societies" decide to become a Church—or Churches, as finally happened over the world.

Dow Kirkpatrick, The Doctrine of the Church. Nashville: Abingdon, 1964.

E. W. Thompson, Doctrine of the Church. 1939. N. B. H.

SOCIETY MEETING. Unlike churches with a congregational polity, in Methodism a gathering of all the local members possessed no authority at all in Wesley's time, and has achieved only very little during this present century. Early Society Meetings were occasions when the members of the various CLASS MEETINGS in each society came together for worship or fellowship, but not for business. This was transacted by Wesley's TRAVELING PREACHERS in conjunction with the LEADERS' MEETING and the TRUSTEES. It was customary for preachers to hold a Society Meeting after a preaching service in the smaller rural societies, either on Sunday afternoons or on weekday evenings. These were occasions for exhortations specifically aimed at committed Methodists rather than at the general public often present at the preaching services, and frequently some aspect of the GENERAL RULES was "explained and enforced." From 1821 onwards the preachers were "peremptorily required to read the pastoral address of the Conference to all the societies in their respective circuits." The periodical LOVE FEAST often constituted a form of Society Meeting, though frequently several societies joined together for this exercise. In the twentieth century the annual Society Meeting became the occasion for introducing new members and officers, and for reporting on the statistics and spiritual health of the society. At METHODIST UNION in Britain in 1932 an annual society meeting was made mandatory, and its gradual improvement in status was recognized by charging the members with electing their own representatives to the Leaders' Meeting in the proportion of one for each thirty members. (See also BRITISH METHODISM, ORGANIZATION OF.)

W. Peirce, Ecclesiastical Principles, 1873.

Spencer and Finch, Constitutional Practice, 1958.

FRANK BAKER

SOCIETY FOR THE PROPAGATION OF THE GOSPEL IN FOREIGN PARTS (S.P.C.)

is an Anglican society formed in 1701, ninety years before the publication of William Carey's famous tract, An Enquiry into the Obligations of Christians to use Means for the Conversion of the Heathen (1792). The Society was formed to assist in the missionary work initiated by the Society for the Promotion of Christian Knowledge (S.P.C.K.), founded by Thomas Bray and four laymen in 1698. The work of the S.P.C.K. was essentially literary and educational; the S.P.C. was intended to provide the ministrations of the Church of England for British people overseas, and also to evangelize the non-Christian races of the world. In the eighteenth century the S.P.C. chiefly concerned itself with the first of these aims, finding and financing for example CHAPLAINS for British soldiers and settlers in INDIA and North America. Nevertheless, it is worth remembering that when JOHN and CHARLES WESLEY set out for the new American colony of GEORGIA in 1735, John clearly envisaged the evangelization of American Indians among his plans, and the conflict between the role of chaplain and evangelist characteristic of the Society in its earlier years was illustrated by the frustration of his Indian work. John had been a member of the S.P.C.K. since 1732. In the nineteenth century the S.P.C. joined in the expansion of missionary work common to all the Churches, and now has financial responsibility for more than sixty Anglican missionary dioceses, for nearly a thousand European missionaries, and many non-European workers.

JOHN KENT

SOCKMAN, RALPH WASHINGTON (1889-1970), American pastor and radio preacher of national note, was born at Mount Vernon, Ohio, Oct. 1, 1889, son of Rigdon Potter and Harriet O. (Ash) Sockman. He was graduated from OHIO WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY in 1911 with the B.A. degree; M.A., Columbia University, 1913; Ph.D., 1917. The D.D. degree was conferred upon him by Ohio Wesleyan in 1923, and subsequently he was recipient of honorary degrees from a number of educational institutions.

Sockman's ministry was unique in that he served but one church and that for a period remarkably long in the Methodist connection, forty-four years and eight months. He began his pastorate at Madison Avenue Methodist Church, NEW YORK CITY, in 1916 as associate pastor, and became pastor in 1917, serving continuously until his retirement in 1961, at which time he became minister emeritus. During his pastorate the church became Christ Church, and Sockman led the building program for the present church edifice on Park Avenue.

The clergyman is probably best known for his preaching during thirty-six years on the National Radio Pulpit, and he has also had a television series. "The sermons delivered in a highly personal way," observed The New York Times, "brought in an average of 30,000 letters a year."

In a poll conducted by the Christian Century Sockman was named one of the six foremost clergymen of all denominations in the United States. Look magazine described him as "the most widely known of the nation's Methodist ministers." Time magazine called him one of the most noted preachers of our time. He participated in many interdenominational church councils and conferences and delivered numerous lectures. He served as visiting professor at Union Theological Seminary, New York, and at Yale University—also after his retirement as director of the Hall of Fame for Great Americans, New York City. He could easily have been elected a bishop, but rejected the suggestion saying that he preferred the pastorate.

He served as president of the Carnegie Foundation's Church Peace Union; president of the Methodist Board of World Peace; and a member of the Central Committee, WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES.

Sockman was the author of numerous books, with three being selections of the Religious Book Club: The Higher Happiness, How to Believe, and The Whole Armor of God, with Man's First Love being a Pulpit Book Club selection.

On June 15, 1916, he was married to Zellah Widmer Endly. They have a daughter, Elizabeth Ash.

After retiring in 1961 Sockman continued to forward a ministry of preaching and writing. His death after a brief illness came on Aug. 29, 1970, in his New York home.

Who's Who in America, Vol. 34.

Who's Who in The Methodist Church, 1966.

J. MARVIN RAST

SOLOMON, ABRAHAM (1836-1903), was born in Jerusalem, Feb. 11, 1836. He studied under Rabbi Ezra Hasometh and received a diploma. His father set him up in business, and he went to Persia, and after that, in 1857, to INDIA, CHINA, AUSTRALIA, the PHILIPPINES, and back to India. In BAREILLY, he met another Jew who had come under Christian influence, and he was given a copy of the New Testament. He read it with strong interest and was almost persuaded to become a Christian.

Later he visited Peshawar and met a Presbyterian minister who had been born a Jew, Isador Lowenthal. Under Lowenthal's influence Solomon was again strongly drawn toward Christ. Business took him to Balkh and Bokhara. In 1864, he returned once more to India. In Moradabad he met EDWIN W. PARKER who urged him to accept Christ at once. He did so and was baptized on June 3, 1864. After his conversion, Solomon lost all interest in trade and wealth and became a teacher in a Methodist school. At a CAMP MEETING two years later, there came to him a transforming experience. He became a full-time minister, and in 1879 was admitted to membership in the NORTH INDIA CONFERENCE. Eleven years later he was made presiding elder and continued in that office until in 1900, at the age of sixty-four he was retired. The number of Christians in his district had increased year by year, until when he retired they numbered almost 6,000. His successor, H. A. Cutting, said that Solomon knew the district like a farmer knows his fields or a shepherd his flock. He died on July 24, 1903.

Abraham's son, Joshua, served as a minister in the North India Conference, and Joshua's son, Samuel, has served the church as a layman in many ways, including supervision of the construction of a large church. Samuel's daughter is president of the National W.C.T.U. in India, and her husband is the Delhi Area Executive Secretary. Their son, Jagdish, has been selected for admission to the India administrative service.

J. N. Hollister, Southern Asia. 1956. J. WASKOM PICKETT

SOLOMON ISLANDS form a chain of islands, generally large and of volcanic origin, 900 miles in length, to the southeast of New Guinea.

In 1902, through the initiative of GEORGE BROWN, Methodist missionary work began in an area of the Solomons untouched by any other missionary society. The pioneer party was led by JOHN FRANCIS GOLDIE, a man of restless energy, who had the astonishing record of forty-nine years service in the Solomons. He retired at the age of eighty-one in 1951, knowing that every island in the Methodist area had received the Gospel.

The lives of Goldie and other early missionaries were frequently in jeopardy in a district of inveterate head-hunters. The South Sea Islands teachers showed an intrepidity and devotion equal to that of their white leaders.

From 1922 the New Zealand Methodist Church became responsible for the work in the Solomons. NEW ZEALAND had become a separate Conference in 1913 and desired its own missionary sphere.

During World War II the Japanese occupied the Solomons. Fierce fighting in which American troops were conspicuous followed. Some missionaries were evacuated by the Government; two stayed with the natives in the interior of islands, one of these for the duration of the war.

The Solomon Islands mission, with its dramatic record of evangelistic success since 1902, became part of the United Church in 1968 (see UNITED CHURCH OF PAPUA, NEW GUINEA AND THE SOLOMON ISLANDS). In recent years it has sent teachers to the pioneer district, the Highlands Region (see NEW GUINEA, HIGHLANDS CHALLENGE).

G. Brown, Autobiography. 1908.

Clarence T. J. Luxton, Isles of Solomon: A Tale of Missionary Adventure. Auckland: Methodist Foreign Missionary Society, 1955.

R. C. Nicholson, Son of a Savage. N.p., 1924.

A. HAROLD WOOD

SOMEILLÁN, ENRIQUE BENITO (1856-1928), first Methodist minister to CUBA, was born in Caibarién, Cuba, but had to leave the country for political reasons, at thirteen years of age. He went to St. Augustine, Fla., and from there to a Presbyterian school in Chattanooga, where he was converted. On a voyage to Key West he met a Methodist preacher and became interested in a mission to the Cuban exiles in Key West. Eventually he became pastor of the newly formed congregation.

While in Key West he visited the tomb of VANDUZAR, who had died several years previously, and read the inscription of the last words of Vanduzar, "Don't give up the Cuban Mission." There Someillán resolved to dedicate his life to his own people in Cuba. In 1883 he led a mission to Cuba, and left there the beginnings of a congregation.

In 1888 the members of the Church in Habana petitioned the FLORIDA CONFERENCE, of which Someillán was a member, to return Someillán to Cuba. In 1899 Someillán, with his family, returned to Cuba and was appointed to Santiago de Cuba.

In 1901, through a misunderstanding, he joined the Congregational Church which later was absorbed into the USA Presbyterian Church.

He was instrumental in the conversion and call to the ministry of most of the early Methodist Cuban pastors, such as MANUEL DEULOFEU and Clemente Moya.

Always he maintained a broad concept of spiritual unity and in almost all interdenominational meetings he was a valued member. His fifty years of ministerial service gave leadership to the ecumenical spirit and the discovery and training of younger leaders.

S. A. Neblett, Methodism in Cuba. 1966. JUSTO L. GONZÁLEZ

SOMMER, C. ERNST (1911-), bishop, German Methodist leader and former dean of the Frankfurt Theological Seminary (PREDICERSEMINAR), was born Dec. 2, 1911, in Turkey, the son of J. W. ERNST SOMMER. He was educated in high school, college, and university in FRANKFURT, where he received the Ph.D. in 1935, M.A. in 1936, M.Ed. in 1938. He taught in high school and junior college from 1938 onward. He was with the German army in France and Northern Africa (from 1941). After the war in 1950 he was elected professor of Christian education and church history in the Frankfurt Methodist Theological Seminary. He was appointed its dean in 1953. The GERMANY CENTRAL CONFERENCE OF The United Methodist Church elected him bishop on May 27, 1968. He was the first bishop to be elected anywhere by the newly organized United Methodist Church.

Sommer has been active in educational work as a member of German Methodist Board of Education, of the Free Church Sunday School Association and Curriculum Committee, chairman of European Committee and member of Board of Managers of the World Council of Christian Education, president of the German Methodist Historical Society, member of the executive committee of the Methodist Church in Germany, and of Council of Methodist Central Conferences in Europe. He was a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCES OF The Methodist Church (U.S.) of 1964, 1966 and 1968. He is a member of the WORLD METHODIST COUNCIL. He has edited various publications, e.g., Dienst am Kinde (1949-54), Bible and church history study material (1952-65). He is author of Matthias Claudius (1935) and Christ Calling Young People Today (1965).

He presides over the conferences of Germany, the Frankfurt area.

ERNST SCHOLZ

SOMMER, J. W. ERNST (1881-1952), German bishop and distinguished scholar and church leader, was born on

J. W. E. SOMMER

March 31, 1881, the son of a then Wesleyan Methodist German minister and his British wife in Stuttgart, GERMANY. He was educated at KINGSWOOD, and then Cambridge University, England, and later at Lausanne, SWITZERLAND. After a brief period of assistant professorship in LONDON (where he married Beatrice Dibben; they had three daughters and one son, C. ERNST SOMMER), he became missionary in Turkey (1906-12) serving as dean of teacher training college, then dean of missionary training college near BERLIN (1913-20). He was professor of Old Testament and Ethics at Frankfurt Methodist Theological Seminary from 1920, becoming its president from 1936 until 1946, when he was elected bishop by the Germany Central Conference.

He had been district superintendent (part time) for eleven years (1926-37), and this gave him much help in understanding church administration and practical church affairs. During the war—before he was elected bishop —(1941-45), he was in charge of a circuit in addition to his Seminary work.

Bishop Sommer was recognized as a magnificent scholar, brilliant in debate, and of painstaking interest in the men whom he taught. For many years he was a leader in German Sunday school work through lectures and publications of various types. His dynamic personality loved encounter and lived through dialogue. He had great affection for young people. Significantly, enough, the last service he rendered a day before his death was a lecture to young leaders in Switzerland.

A member of the "World Alliance for Promoting International Friendship through the Churches," he took part in the noteworthy "Faith and Order Conference," in Lausanne in 1927. His contacts during these years necessarily took him also to the Amsterdam Conference of 1948. He wrote a significant preparatory article for this Conference: "Ecumenicity in one's home country." His confrères regarded him as a bishop of theological vision, of ecumenical range; added to this there was a deep sense of social responsibility. This was realized in his ethical teachings and in a slender but important volume on the social question and JOHN WESLEY, and evidenced also in his approach to the diaconate concerning man's body and mind and social life.

Bishop Sommer founded the Methodist Relief Work after World War II, which he co-ordinated with the Evangelical Relief Work of all Protestant Churches in Germany. With Pastor Niemoeller he was responsible for the founding of the "Co-operative Fellowship of Christian Churches in Germany." All the while he remained missionary minded. After six years of serving as a bishop he had, with the help especially of Bishop RICHARD C. RAINES and the INDIANA Area, U.S.A., put German Methodism on its feet again following that dreadful period of evil in general, and war in particular. Sommer was a great leader of men and a devout Biblical scholar. He left a deep impress on his people and Church.

F. D. Leete, Methodist Bishops. 1948.

C. E. Sommer, Bischof Dr. J. W. E. Sommer in memoriam. Der Evangelist, Anker-Verlag, Frankfurt a.M., 1952. N. B. II.

SOONG, CHARLES JONES (1864-1918), Chinese layman, was born in Hainan, Kwantung province, CHINA, on Sept. 10, 1864. When only nine years old, he was sent with his brother to East INDIA, and in 1877 he was an apprentice in his uncle's tea and silk shop in BOSTON, Mass. In some way he became a member of the U.S. Coast Guard and sailed to Wilmington, N. C. There he was converted and joined the Fifth Street M.E. Church, South. His Chinese name was Soon Chiao-chun, but when he was baptized he took the name of Charles Jones Soong, for Captain Charles Jones of the vessel on which he reached Wilmington.

Young Soong became a protégé of General JULIAN S. CARR, a wealthy manufacturer of DURHAM, N. C., who sent him to Trinity College (later DUKE UNIVERSITY) and VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY. From the latter institution he graduated in theology in 1885.

He returned to China as a missionary appointed by Bishop HOLLAND N. McTYEIRE, travelling with W. H. PARK, a medical missionary. In China he added a "g" to his name and became a pastor. He married Miss Ni Kwei-teng, who became a Methodist and one of the most notable women leaders of the Church in China.

As a missionary and preacher, Soong encountered difficulties, and he eventually left the pastorate to become a publisher of Bibles. Until his death, he remained an outstanding Methodist layman.

Six children were born to the Soongs, and at least four of them became famous. His eldest daughter married Dr. Sun Yat-sen, called the George Washington of China. Another married Dr. H. H. Kung, descendant of Confucius, finance minister of China, and a man of great wealth. A son, T. V. Soong, was both finance and foreign minister and an international financial statesman. The youngest daughter, Mayling, became internationally famous as the wife of Generalissimo CHIANG KAI-SHEK.

Charles Soong died on May 4, 1918.

Elmer T. Clark, The Chiangs of China. Nashville, n.d.

ELMER T. CLARK

SOOTHILL, WILLIAM EDWARD (1861-1935), British UNITED METHODIST missionary in CHINA. Born in Halifax, England, he entered the ministry of the UNITED METHODIST FREE CHURCHES (from 1907 a part of the United Methodist Church of Britain), and spent twenty-nine years as a missionary in Wenchow, China. Not only did he engage in pioneering tasks such as founding a hospital, a training college, schools, and two hundred preaching places, he also wrote many books interpreting the Chinese people, and became one of the world's greatest authorities upon the Chinese language. He served as President of the Imperial University of Shansi, was president-designate of the proposed Christian University at Hankow, designed to serve the whole of China—a plan brought to nothing by war and revolution—and in 1920 was appointed Professor of Chinese at Oxford University.

FRANK BAKER

SOPER, DONALD (1903-), British Methodist minister and Life Peer, distinguished as preacher, open-air speaker, Christian socialist and pacifist, and writer, was born in LONDON. He was educated at Aske's School, Hatcham; St. Catherine's College, CAMBRIDGE; and at the London School of Economics. He trained for the Methodist ministry at Wesley House, Cambridge, and was first stationed at the South London Mission, 1926-29. He was then at the Central London Mission, 1929-36, and since 1936 he has been minister of the Kingsway Hall, London, and superintendent of the West London Mission, originally founded by HUGH PRICE HUGHES. Soper is a past alderman of the London County Council, and also of the Greater London Council which replaced it.

He was elected president of the Methodist CONFERENCE in 1953. A well-known open-air speaker on religious subjects, he has for many years held an open-air meeting on Tower Hill in London every Wednesday lunchtime, and in Hyde Park every Sunday afternoon. He is the chairman of the Christian Socialist Movement, and his Christian contribution to English politics was recognized when he was made a Life Peer in 1964. He has also been prominent in the SACRAMENTAL FELLOWSHIP and in the PEACE FELLOWSHIP. He has sought to encourage Methodist EVANGELISM through the Order of Christian Witness, an association of laymen and ministers who devote some part of each year to concentrated evangelistic work in a specific area. He has published many books, including Christ and Tower Hill; All His Grace (the Methodist Lent Book for 1957); Practical Christianity Today; and Aflame with Faith.

JOHN KENT

SOPER, EDMUND DAVISON (1876-1961), American teacher, administrator and author, was born in Tokyo, JAPAN, July 18, 1876. His parents, Julius and Mary Frances (Davison) Soper, were among the first Methodist missionaries to Japan. Soper's deep personal interest in the missionary movement led colleagues and students to refer to him as "Mr. Missions." He was also consistently committed to the values in church related colleges and devoted the greater part of his professional life to teaching and administration in such institutions.

On June 15, 1905, he married Miriam Alice Belt. Twin boys were born of this marriage: Robert Wells and Herbert Davison. Following Mrs. Soper's death in 1938, he was married on Nov. 10, 1939 to Moneta Troxel, a missionary-teacher on furlough from KOREA who survives him.

Soper held A.B. (1898), D.D. (1913), and LL.D. (1927) degrees from DICKINSON COLLEGE; B.D. (1905) and LL.D. (1935) degrees from DREW THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY; and was granted honorary doctorates from SYRACUSE (1931), OHIO NORTHERN and DEPAUW UNIVERSITIES (both in 1935). He was a member of Phi Beta Kappa, Omicron Delta Kappa and Kappa Delta Pi.

His service included five years as Field Secretary for the Missionary Education Movement; Professor of Missions and Religion, OHIO WESLEYAN (1910-14) and Drew Seminary (1914-19); Professor of the History of Religion, NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY, (1919-25); Vice President and Dean, Divinity School, DUKE UNIVERSITY (1925-28); President, Ohio Wesleyan (1928-38); and Professor of the History of Religion, GARRETT THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY (1938-48). After retirement in 1948 he lectured for three years under the Board of Missions at Leonard Theological College, Jabalpur, INDIA, and elsewhere in the Orient.

In 1932-33, Soper was president of the Methodist Education Association and in 1934 was president of the Association of American Colleges. He was a member of the Edinburgh Missionary Conference (1910); the Faith and Order Conferences in Lausanne (1927), Edinburgh Conference (1937); and the Oxford Conference on Life and Work (1937). His far-reaching commitment to the ecumenical movement since its inception, to the modern missionary movement, to amicable race relations as an integral part of Christian world relations, and to an understanding of comparative religion is indicated by the titles of his books: The Faiths of Mankind (1918 and 1931); The Religions of Mankind (1921, 1938 and 1951 and still in print); What May I Believe? (1927); Lausanne: The Will to Understand (1928); The Philosophy of the Christian World Mission (1943); Racism: A World Issue (1947); The Inevitable Choice (1957).

Soper died Oct. 23, 1961 in Evanston, Ill.

ELEANOR DARNALL WALLACE

SORTILEGE in early Methodism. JOHN WESLEY learned from the MORAVIANS and resorted to sortilege when making important decisions—e.g., whether to marry Miss SOPHIA HOPKEY in GEORGIA; before printing his sermon on Free GRACE; before going to BRISTOL (Journal, ii, 158). The early Methodist society at FETTER LANE fixed the BANDS by lot, and appeal to lots was always accompanied by the prayer that "God would give the perfect lot." Wesley defended his practice in The Principles of a Methodist Farther Explained (Letters, ii, 245 ff). As Moravian influence decreased in early Methodism, so did the use of lots; and after Wesley's separation from the Fetter Lane Society (1740), it largely dropped out of the customs of Methodism, though not so completely that the Conference could not revive its use during the Sacramental Controversy after John Wesley's death.

JOHN C. BOWMER

SOSA, ADAM F. (1902-), pastor in the River Plate region of South America, was born in Asunción, PARAGUAY, son of Florentino and Ida Maldini Sosa. His parents had been sent to Paraguay from BUENOS AIRES, his father as lay preacher in charge of the Methodist Church in Paraguay and his mother to teach in the Asunción school. The father later was ordained and in 1916 became the first native district superintendent in the River Plate Annual Conference.

Adam, eldest of eight children, studied in the public schools of Argentina and, after ten years of commercial work, entered the Buenos Aires Union Seminary in 1932. He has served several pastoral charges in ARGENTINA; has been a district superintendent; has taught church history in the FACULTAD EVANGELICA DE TEOLOGIA in Buenos Aires; has been for several years president of the River Plate Confederation of Evangelical Churches and the Argentine Federation of Evangelical Churches; has been co-president of the Argentine Fellowship of Christians and Jews and is now one of its honorary presidents.

ADAM F. SOSA

Since 1932, Mr. Sosa has been involved in the work of Christian literature through the River Plate Commission on Christian Literature, of which he has been editorial secretary to the present time. His main work is the translation of books into Spanish from English, French, Italian and Portuguese. He has been chief editor of El Predicador Evangelico and Cuadernos Teologicos, two interdenominational magazines for preachers. Original works are: Breve historia del Apostol San Pablo and Vivir sin religion.

EDWIN H. MAYNARD

SOTO, ASENSI MIGUEL (1892-1961), a minister and educator, was born in Valencia, SPAIN, Oct. 17, 1892. After his education in the Los Escolapios (monks) schools in Spain and FRANCE he became a resident in Paris for five years during World War I, where he was engaged as a representative of a French banking firm. His business required frequent trips to LONDON, South America, the United States, and at times, CUBA. In Cuba he became interested in the Methodist Church and after receiving a license to preach in 1923 he joined the Cuban Annual Conference (MES) and served the following charges: Holguin, Habana Central, Matanzas, Santiago de las Vegas, Pinar del Rio, Herradura, Camaguey, Cardenas, Jovellanos, Cienfuegos, and Iglesia Universitaria, Havana. He married Rosa Ana Nonell, and they had three children.

In 1960 he retired but continued to be active in translating Christian literature. For a number of years he served as District Superintendent of the Central District, as Editor of Revista Trimestral, as Director de la Cruz Aurea, and as Secretary of Lay Activities. His outstanding contribution was director-administrator of El Evangelista Cubano (1944-60) and Publications' Agent (1956-60). In 1960 until his death he was editor of Accion Metodista, the Spanish interpretation of The Methodist Story.

With his wife he published El Hinnario Metodista, and wrote the book La Mayoradomia o el Cristianismo Práctico. He published Bishop Paul B. Kern's La Biblia en Esta Era de Desorientación; he prepared for printing The Interpretation of Methodism (Understanding The Methodist Church) by Bishop Nolan B. Harmon, and Jesus of Nazareth by Alejandro Westphal.

He was a Rotarian and always active in civic affairs. Although often racked by weakness and pain he continued to work and write prodigiously. His amiable and ever unselfish spirit made him an outstanding leader and never to be forgotten friend.

GARFIELD EVANS

JOSHUA SOULE

SOULE, JOSHUA (1781-1867), American bishop and author of the Constitution of the M.E. Church, was born at Bristol, MAINE, on Aug. 1, 1781. He was a lineal descendant of George Soule who came to America on the Mayflower. His parents, who were Presbyterians, were Joshua and Mary (Cushman) Soule.

He united with the M.E. Church in 1797 and joined the NEW ENGLAND CONFERENCE on trial in 1799. He served as a pioneer preacher, was presiding elder of the Maine District in 1804, and was later stationed in NEW YORK and BALTIMORE.

In 1816 he was elected BOOK EDITOR of the Church and in 1818 he became editor of the Methodist Magazine, a revival of the Arminian Magazine, which was published in 1789 and 1790. Between 1816 and 1820 he was active in the work of the AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY and treasurer of the newly organized Missionary and Bible Society of the Church.

At the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1808 there was dissatisfaction with the administration of the Church. The General Conference, which had no restrictions on its powers, was a meeting of all the Methodist preachers who had served four years or more. Since the General Conference was usually held near a few of the large cities and conferences, preachers from more distant communities found it difficult to attend. Without any assistance, Soule prepared the draft of a Constitution, which was adopted at the 1808 General Conference with few changes. He was then only twenty-six years old. The Constitution provided for a delegated General Conference with six RESTRICTIVE RULES on its authority. This has continued with practically no changes until the present time.

In 1820 Soule was elected a bishop, but he declined the office because legislation was enacted providing for the election of presiding elders by the annual conferences, which Soule regarded as a violation of the Constitution which he had written. After serving in New York and Baltimore during the ensuing quadrennium he was again elected bishop in 1824. He accepted the office because the offending legislation had been rescinded.

As a bishop he resided for several years at Lebanon, Ohio. He was a fraternal delegate to the British and Irish Conferences in 1842.

When the PLAN OF SEPARATION, which set up two General Conferences, one in the North and one in the South, was adopted and the Church was divided over legal issues arising out of slavery, Soule adhered to the M.E. Church, South, although he had never lived in the South. He held that the action of the General Conference in virtually deposing a bishop who had violated no rule of the Church and who had not been charged or tried, was a violation of the Constitution.

He thus became the senior bishop of the M.E. Church, South, and was accepted as such by its first General Conference. He moved to NASHVILLE, Tenn., and later built a home on a farm near that city. He was active bishop in the various Southern Conferences for ten years, though enfeebled by the end of that time.

He died on March 6, 1867, and was buried at the old City Cemetery in Nashville. His body was later disinterred and buried on the campus of VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY by the side of Bishops MCKENDREE and MCTYEIRE.

Dictionary of American Biography.

H. M. DuBose, Joshua Soule. 1911.

J. F. Hurst, History of Methodism. 1901-04.

History of the Organization of the MES. 1845.

H. N. McTyeire, History of Methodism. 1884.

J. Mudge, New England Conference. 1910.

M. Simpson, Cyclopædia. 1878.

J. J. Tigert, Constitutional History. 1894. ELMER T. CLARK

SOUTH AFRICA. The Methodist Church of South Africa owes its foundation to British soldiers. Although there is evidence of Methodism among the troops during the first British occupation of the Cape (1795-1803), its origin is usually traced to the second occupation in 1806. A Society was formed under the leadership of George Middlemiss of the 72nd Regiment and later of Sergeant JOHN KENDRICK, whose requests led eventually to the appointment of BARNABAS SHAW as Wesleyan minister at the Cape. Shaw felt called to mission work among the heathen and found little scope for this at Cape Town. He therefore trekked to the Kamiesberg, some 250 miles due north of Cape Town, and founded the Leliefontein mission among the Namaqua. This became the base from which missionaries advanced northward into Great Namaqualand and Damaraland (present South West Africa).

The difficulties were immense: the people were semi-nomadic, the distances great and the country barren and thinly populated. JACOB LINKS, Johannes Jager, WILLIAM THRELFALL and EDWARD COOK gave their lives in the work and the health of other missionaries was undermined. Money was chronically short and by 1867 the stations in South West Africa had been handed over to Rhenish missionaries. The territory was entered again during World War I. The Leliefontein mission was retained and is still an isolated and difficult outpost. The work in Cape Town (interrupted by Shaw's departure) was recommenced in 1820 and made good progress among the Cape Colored people and the whites, whose numbers were swollen by immigration.

Leliefontein was also the base from which SAMUEL BROADBENT set out on his first unsuccessful attempt to establish a mission in Bechuanaland. On a second journey he made contact with the Barolong, and eventually settled with JAMES ARCHBELL at Thaba N'chu, which was annexed to the Orange Free State in 1884 and is now the site of the MOROKA INSTITUTION.

In the second half of the century Wesleyan Methodism was established in Bloemfontein and several other white towns in the Orange Free State, at that time an independent Boer Republic. After the discovery of diamonds at Kimberley in 1867, work was undertaken among the white diggers and the thousands of African laborers who flocked thither from all parts of Southern Africa.

In 1820 settlers from Great Britain were located in Albany, on the disturbed frontier between the Cape Colony and the Xhosa tribes. This brought young WILLIAM SHAW to South Africa as CHAPLAIN to one of the parties, and he soon made the settlement a second and more important base for missionary advance in South Africa. Shaw rapidly organized the WESLEYAN METHODIST CHURCH among the settlers and supervised its establishment in most towns of the Eastern Cape. He also conceived and carried out a plan for a chain of stations from the Eastern Frontier to Port Natal (now Durban). This venture appeared more hazardous than the Namaqua Mission, for it involved settling with tribes which were periodically at war with the Colony. However, although mission stations were destroyed on several occasions, only J. S. THOMAS was murdered—and that by mistake. In other respects conditions were easier than in the west: the country was more fertile, the distances less and the people more settled. But once again the resources in men and money were too slender and the missionaries evoked little response from the strongly tribalized Africans. For the greater part of the nineteenth century these missions were not numerically large, but firm foundations were laid for the considerable Methodist witness in the modern Transkei.

The first Wesleyan minister in Natal was James Archbell, who travelled with the British occupation force in 1842. Between 1849 and 1851 there was considerable immigration from England as a result of which the work among whites was firmly established. In 1862 Ralph Scott, an ex-INDIA missionary, began work among Indians imported as laborers on the sugar plantations. (The Indian Mission has never been large and numbered 1,074 full members in 1966.) A large African work also developed within the colony and in the early years of the twentieth century a mission was established in Zululand. A remarkable development took place in 1874 when African Methodists in Natal decided that they should take a more active part in the evangelization of their own people. Led by Daniel Msimang (later a pioneer in Swaziland), they formed a movement known as Nzondelelo which collected funds and began to appoint evangelists in heathen areas. The white missionaries were suspicious but the misunderstanding was cleared up in 1877. Nzondelelo has continued to work in association with the Church for nearly a century.

Wesleyan ministers were stationed in the Transvaal from 1871, but only after the First War of Independence (1881) was this area given special attention. This was partly on the initiative of the Natal Synod which offered to release a man, give up part of its grant and raise additional funds for a Transvaal mission. OWEN WATKINS was accordingly appointed Chairman and General Superintendent and was ably assisted by GEORGE WEAVIND. Societies had already been formed by untrained African laymen (see Transvaal African Pioneers) in several rural areas. These were brought into formal association with the Church and new stations were opened up. Gold was discovered on the Witwatersrand in 1885 and Wesleyan local preachers soon began services in Johannesburg and other mining camps. Watkins sent in a resident minister in April 1887 and by 1889 a staff of four was caring for whites and Africans. In 1966 there were close to sixty Methodist ministers in the Witwatersrand conurbation.

When RHODESIA was opened to white colonists in 1890, Watkins and Isaac Shimmin were not far behind the Pioneer Column and obtained several grants of land from Cecil Rhodes.

Methods of Work. In many towns Methodism was the first English denomination to make its appearance and members of other Churches found a ready welcome in its fellowship. This led to some departures from the strict British Methodist system, but the life of the white circuits generally resembled that of the mother church.

Where tribalism was strong, African converts settled on mission stations under the patriarchal government of the missionary, but the circuit system has now become general. Much emphasis has always been laid on EVANGELISM and discipline and African circuits retain the class system to the present day.

The evangelization of Africans demanded a knowledge of the vernacular, and Methodists were prominent in the study of Bantu languages. W. B. BOYCE produced the first Xhosa Grammar, and W. J. DAVIS, J. APPLEYARD and H. H. DUGMORE made important contributions to Xhosa grammar and literature. Archbell was a pioneer Tswana grammarian.

From the beginning education went hand in hand with the gospel. After the foundation of HEALDTOWN in 1855, this aspect became increasingly important. Prominent among the educational institutions were those established at Bensonvale, CLARKEBURY and SHAWBURY in the Cape, Induleni in Natal, Kilmerton in the Transvaal and Moroka in the Orange Free State. This advance was largely dependent upon government financial assistance and for many years the Church cooperated closely with the Provincial Education Departments. In 1956 the Bantu Education Act of 1953 came into operation and the central government assumed control of African education and placed it under a special department. The Methodist Church objected to the policy and the philosophy behind it, but decided to lease school buildings to the state and to retain control of hostels at boarding establishments. This uneasy partnership is still in operation.

Methodist Connexional Schools for white children are now four in number. Their flourishing condition is a pleasing contrast to a history of false starts and broken hopes.

Shaw College, Grahamstown, was opened in 1861 under the inspiration of George Wood and the Rev. W. Impey, Chairman of the Albany District. The headmaster was Peter MacOwen who was assisted by Theo, brother of the famous South African novelist Olive Schreiner. The venture was wrecked by financial depression and was abandoned in 1863.

The Wesleyan High School for Girls, Grahamstown, was founded by John Walton in 1880 under the principalship of his daughter. It provided a sound Christian education for nearly fifty years, and many former pupils became prominent in the Women's Work of the Church. The financial depression of the late 1920's made it impossible to carry on after 1928.

The depression also wrecked Methodist educational work in Queenstown. A Wesleyan Collegiate School for the sons of colonists and ministers was commenced at Lesseyton, near Queenstown, in 1870 under the headmastership of Josiah Slater, who was succeeded by T. Chubb. The institution was moved to Queenstown in 1878 and a girls' school was established in 1882. The pupils of The Wesleyan Grammar School for Boys were transferred to a government school in 1902. The High School for Girls, which came to be known as Queenswood, was discontinued in 1932.

See also EPWORTH SCHOOL, KEARSNEY COLLEGE, KINGSWOOD COLLEGE, and ST. STITHIANS COLLEGE, present-day thriving connexional schools.

Medical Missions. In the past thirty years the Church has entered the field of medical missions, again with financial assistance from the State. There are at present four mission hospitals. The Mount Coke Hospital (143 beds in 1966), near East London, was founded in 1933 under the superintendence of Dr. H. M. Bennett, who was ordained in 1937 and retired in 1961. The Moroka Hospital (134 beds in 1966), at Thaba 'Nchu, Orange Free State, was established in 1938 and has been a first class training school for nurses since 1948. (See also MOROKA INSTITUTION.) Bethesda Hospital (149 beds in 1966), Ubombo, Zululand, was opened in 1940 with assistance from Lord MacLay of Glasgow. It is a training school for nurses and midwives and owes much to the services of Dr. R. Turner, medical superintendent in 1940-43 and from 1953 to the present day. Manguzi Hospital (63 beds and presently expanding), near Kosi Bay in Maputaland is the most isolated of the institutions and is normally approached by air. Founded in 1948, it passed through a critical period in 1961-65 when it was without a resident doctor and had to be served by doctors who flew in from hospitals up to 100 miles away. Dr. W. E. Laufer, who was the first medical superintendent, returned to this post in 1965. The Methodist Church also operates fifteen mission clinics in various parts of South Africa.

The financing of the work is a major problem. The Provincial authorities pay approximately eighty-five percent of the total cost of maintenance in certain cases, while the Central Government meets ninety-five percent to 100 percent of maintenance costs for infections and venereal diseases. Even with this generous assistance, the maintenance and development of the work has been a considerable strain upon the financial resources of the church. The State is prepared to provide capital for the expansion of hospitals situated on land owned by the South African Bantu Trust, and the church may soon be compelled to sell its hospital sites in order to carry on its work.

Another grave problem is the shortage of staff, which is common to mission hospitals of all denominations. In 1966 six doctors were urgently required in the four Methodist hospitals and there was little prospect of the vacancies being filled. A legacy of the late Dr. Elsie Chubb was providing medical training for two ministers, but this scheme, which will supply two doctors every six years, only partially meets the need.

Beyond the boundaries of the Republic, a hospital was operated at Mahamba, Swaziland, between 1926-34 and 1950-63. The chief reason for its discontinuance was the total inadequacy of the grants from the British administration. The government has now taken over the buildings as a tuberculosis hospital, while the Methodist Church maintains a mission clinic.

Constitutional Development. For over fifty years Methodist missions in South Africa were completely subject to the Missionary Committee of the British Conference which paid the piper and therefore called the tune. The Cape of Good Hope (in the west) and Albany (in the east) were constituted separate districts in 1823. While William Shaw remained in charge (1820-56) the work in the east remained a unity, for he was Chairman and General Superintendent of Albany, the Bechuana Mission (Orange Free State), the Transkei and Natal. After his departure fragmentation took place: Natal had already become a separate district in 1853; and in 1863 Albany was divided into the Grahamstown, Queenstown and Bechuana (later known as Kimberley and Bloemfontein) Districts. The Clarkebury District (Transkei) was separated from Natal and Queenstown in 1880.

A multiplicity of districts subject to a committee in London and without opportunity for mutual consultation led much to be desired. William Shaw saw the need for a South African Conference as early as 1860 but his proposals were rejected by the Missionary Committee. The first step to independence was the introduction of Triennial Meetings which took place in 1873, 1876 and 1880 and made possible a certain amount of cooperation between the districts. After the visit in 1880 of John Kilner, representing the Missionary Committee, the six districts were formed into an Affiliated Conference which held its first meeting in 1883. Grants from overseas were progressively reduced and disappeared completely by 1902. Legislation and the election of the President had to be confirmed by the British Conference until 1927, when the Wesleyan Methodist Church of South Africa became autonomous. The Transvaal remained a missionary district of the British Conference until 1932 when it united with the Primitive Methodist Mission (a small body with two circuits) and the South African Conference to form the present Methodist Church of South Africa.

The constitution of South African Methodism is based upon that of the British Church. Three hundred and seventy-three circuits (usually serving a single race) are grouped into eight districts (the Transvaal was divided into Northern and Southern Districts in 1956) whose multi-racial synods meet annually. The Annual Conference, which is also multi-racial, has about one hundred and twenty members, over half of whom are the elected representatives of the district synods. The President, who holds office for one year, is elected at the previous conference, and there is a full-time secretary.

The Ministry. The Church is served by an itinerant ministry presently numbering 650. The first ordained native of South Africa was Jacob Links, who was martyred with William Threlfall in 1825. His successors among the Cape Colored people have been relatively few in number. African catechists were employed at an early stage in the Albany District but it was 1865 before the first African candidates for the ministry were accepted. Most famous of the pioneers was Charles Pamla. The real growth of the African ministry dates from 1880 when Kilner criticised the "timid if not at times jealous hands" which had held back suitable candidates, and insisted on over fifty being accepted by the Triennial Meeting. There are now over 300 African ministers in the active work and they provided their first President in the person of Seth Mokitimi, who presided at the 1964 Conference.

For many years South Africa leaned heavily upon Great Britain for its supply of white ministers, but the reliance was never complete: a number of British settlers entered the ordained ministry in the time of William Shaw, and the steady trickle of South African candidates became a great majority in the 1950's.

Theological Training has a history of slightly over a century. In the early days missionaries were recruited and trained in England, or served their full probation in the field. In 1866, however, the first African candidates for the ministry were received, and in 1867 Healdtown Institution became a training school for both native teachers and ministers. In 1883 theological training was transferred to Lesseyton Institution near Queenstown, where it continued till 1921. In the Transvaal theological training was provided at Kilnerton (see Kilnerton Training Institution, Pretoria, Transvaal).

In 1916 the Wesleyan Methodist Church cooperated with other churches, missions, and state bodies in founding the South African Native College at Fort Hare, Alice (near East London), for the higher education of Africans. This later became the University College of Fort Hare. Wesley House was opened in 1921 at Fort Hare as a residence for Methodist students at the College, and it became the training center also for Methodist theological students. At first separately, then in cooperation with the Presbyterian and Congregational churches, African, Cape Colored and Indian candidates for the ministry were trained at Fort Hare till 1959. From 1948, first in affiliation with the University of South Africa, then with Rhodes University, Grahamstown, a Department of Divinity was established at Fort Hare, and theological degrees and diplomas were available for selected theological students. The majority of candidates continued to follow the less advanced two-year course provided by the churches.

When in 1960 the South African government took over Fort Hare, the churches' theological training there came to an end and in 1963 the Federal Theological Seminary of Southern Africa was opened at Alice in the Eastern Cape. John Wesley College is a constituent college of this Seminary, joined on a federal basis with the colleges of the Anglican, Presbyterian and Congregational churches, and the American Board of Missions. The Seminary provides three-year courses at different standards to meet the varying educational qualifications of candidates, and the Colleges join in lectures and the provision of staff.

South African Methodism did not possess its own theological training center for white candidates for the ministry till 1930 when a small college was opened at Mowbray, Cape Town, which provided a two-year theological course. This continued till 1940 when the war dried up the supply of candidates and brought training to an end. After the war the Methodist Church joined with the Anglican, Presbyterian and Congregational churches in setting up and endowing a Faculty of Divinity at Rhodes University, Grahamstown, in the Eastern Cape, and in 1947 Livingstone House was opened at the University as a residence for theological students of the three non-Anglican churches. Degrees and diplomas in arts and divinity are provided at the University for white theological students of any church wishing to avail themselves of them, lectures (apart from some denominational subjects) are shared by students of all the churches, and the staff of the Faculty of Divinity is appointed by the University in consultation with the cooperating churches.

In 1966 the Methodist Church opened the Clifton Pastoral Center at Johannesburg to provide short post-collegiate training in practical and pastoral work for white probationers as a supplement to the academic courses provided at Rhodes University.

Students of all races are expected to gain practical experience in circuit work during the vacations, and all candidates for the ministry serve for three or four years as probationers before or after their college training. During this period of probation they are engaged in full-time circuit work and complete additional courses of study and reading in theology, the Bible and other subjects.

Division and Reunion. One of the most disturbing features of contemporary South African Christianity is the proliferation of African Independent Churches, which now number approximately 3,000 and account for more than twenty percent of the total African population. Methodism has had her share of secessions: Nehemiah Tile founded the Tembu National Church in 1884; James Dwane seceded in 1895 and was responsible successively for the African Methodist Episcopal Church (in association with the American Church of that name) and the Order of Ethiopia (in association with the Anglican Church). A considerable secession in 1932-33 led to the establishment of the Bantu Methodist Church. Unfortunately there is little contact between the Methodist Church of South Africa and the bodies which have seceded.

Ecumenism is a tender plant in South Africa. Although the Methodist Church is fully involved, the movement is regarded with misgivings in certain quarters. The Methodist Church is a member of the World Council of Churches and the Christian Council of South Africa, of which Seth Mokiti was elected President in 1966, the first African to hold this office. African Methodists have played a prominent role in the Inter-Denominational African Ministers' Association of South Africa (IDAMASA) and provided the first full-time General Secretary, A. L. Mncube. Union conversations with Presbyterians and Congregationalists broke down soon after World War II. In the early 1960's the Church of the Province of South Africa (Anglican) initiated separate conversations with the Presbyterians (later joined by the Congregationalists) and Methodists. These have led to the formation of a Unity Commission involving all four denominations, which started work in 1968.

Church and State. Relations between the Methodist Church and the various governments have usually been good. During the nineteenth century Wesleyan missionaries such as Thomas Jenkins and PETER HARGREAVES played an important role in relations between the Transkeian tribes and the colonial authorities. William Shaw was highly regarded by successive Governors of the Cape and was able occasionally to shape official policy on important matters. Such direct influence was rare in the Boer Republics (Orange Free State and Transvaal) and after the Cape and Natal attained self-government. Much was achieved, however, by personal contacts with government officials both before and after the formation of the Union of South Africa in 1910. An unsettling feature of the present situation is the increasing breakdown of such relationships and the growing suspicion between Church and State.

This breakdown is a result of the implementation of apartheid by the Nationalist Government which has ruled South Africa since 1948. The Methodist Church has been less vocal on this subject than some other denominations, but its official opposition to the ideology and the injustices that result has been made clear by statements of Conference, Synods and individual leaders. Many white members do not support their Church's official stand on race relations although the majority probably oppose the Government.

Race in the Church. The racial situation understandably causes tensions and difficulties within the Church. From time to time there has been talk of separation on racial lines, but the Conference of 1958 resolved that the Methodist Church should remain "one and undivided." There have been renewed efforts since then to express this unity more fully but there are no grounds for complacency as segregation is almost complete at the local level. The increasingly strict application of apartheid will make the situation progressively more difficult.

Membership. After a century-and-a-half the Methodist Church of South Africa is established in every part of the country and includes a good cross-section of the various population groups. The official return of full members presented to the 1966 Conference was 343,658 (African 251,492; white 67,584; Cape Colored 23,508; Indian 1,074). According to the 1960 Census the number of Methodist adherents was as follows:

| | Adherents | Total Population | Methodist Percentage |
|---------|-----------|------------------|----------------------|
| African | 1,319,672 | 10,927,922 | 12.1 |
| White | 269,825 | 3,088,492 | 8.7 |
| Colored | 117,903 | 1,509,258 | 7.8 |
| Asiatic | 2,019 | 477,125 | 0.4 |
| TOTAL | 1,709,419 | 16,002,797 | 10.7 |

These figures indicate that Methodism is second to the Dutch Reformed Church in total membership; has the largest number of adherents among the Africans; and ranks third among the whites (D.R.C. 42.9%; Anglican 12.6%).

Free Methodist Church (U.S.A.). Missionaries originally serving in LIBERIA and MOZAMBIQUE transferred to Natal and established the first station on a 2,300-acre farm at Fairview on the Indian Ocean, seventy-five miles south of Durban. Other stations, each located on large farms, are at Itamba and Edwaleni. The latter is the conference center. At Greenville, Cape Province, there is a flourishing hospital and nurses training school, supported largely by government subsidy. A new tuberculosis sanitarium has been established. The capital expenditure and annual operating expenses are provided by the government. There is a regularly organized conference. In recent years several new churches have been erected in the new African cities of the Durban area. A Bible Institute for laymen has been established at the Edwaleni Conference Center. Ministerial training is received at Union Bible School, Sweetwaters. In 1969 there were about 1,850 members in the Natal area.

Pioneer missionary G. Harry Agnew, founder of the Mozambique mission, followed his new converts to the gold mines of the Transvaal in 1895. He established a Bible school at Witbank and cooperated with independent missionary, A. W. Baker, in establishing schools and churches at the mines. The entire work was later put under Free Methodist supervision. This part of the work is for the men from Mozambique who are on contract with the mines for periods of one to two years. At the mine schools, the men learn to read. They receive instruction in Biblical and related subjects. The Christians are conserved and some become leaders of the churches when they return home. Also there are new converts regularly reported.

There is a great demand for Bibles and Christian literature. Colportage work is an important part of mission work in this area. A Bible school, located on a dairy farm campus, Eastern Transvaal, prepared African evangelists for work in the new locations developing so rapidly around the Transvaal cities. Generous grants of land by government and cooperative financing by Africans and the mission have resulted in the erection of many churches in recent years. The Transvaal district is part of the Mozambique Conference. This district makes generous contributions to the home conference budget from their above-average earnings. There are about 2,000 members in this district.

L. A. Hewson, South Africa. 1950.
South African Methodism—Her Missionary Witness. Cape Town: Methodist Publishing House, 1966.
 J. Whiteside, South Africa. 1906.

D. G. L. CRAGG
 E. LYNN CRAGG
 BYRON S. LAMSON

SOUTH AUSTRALIA CONFERENCE. British settlement in what is now the Australian State of South Australia dates from 1836. The colonizing body was the South Australian Company the chairman of whom sought as settlers "those who fear God" and expressed the hope that "the present movement will lay the foundation of a new kingdom in truth and righteousness." This idealism was shared by a number of Methodists who arrived in the first ships or came shortly afterwards. The first Wesleyan CLASS MEETINGS were organized within six months of the proclamation of the colony. In the sixty-four years between 1836 and Methodist Union in 1900, four Methodist bodies worked in the State. The WESLEYAN METHODISTS were present from the beginning and their work expanded as the population grew and settlement was extended. In 1838 the first minister, William Longbottom, arrived unexpectedly, being shipwrecked near the South Australian coast while en route to his appointment in West Australia. By 1876, forty years after the colony's beginning, they had 179 churches.

The PRIMITIVE METHODISTS date from 1840, the first two ministers arriving from England in 1845. Their growth was also rapid and by 1876 this body had 106 churches.

The BIBLE CHRISTIAN denomination owed its origin in South Australia to an invitation sent by Cornish immigrants to the Conference in England. Two ministers arrived in 1850 and began work among the mining community most of whom had come from Cornwall and other areas in England's South-West. 1876 returns put the number of Bible Christian churches at 87.

The fourth Methodist group, the METHODIST NEW CONNEXION, dates from 1863, when James Maughan formed a society with ten members, the parent congregation of ADELAIDE's present-day Central Methodist Mission. Two churches were built but there was little growth after Maughan's death in 1871. After twenty years the membership was only eighty-two and in 1888 the Connexion merged with the Bible Christian Church.

An Annual Conference or Assembly within a nationally organized church with full or partial autonomy was established in all three bodies with the Primitive Methodists leading the way in 1856. South Australia Wesleyans were initially responsible for the work in West Australia and at Port Darwin in the Northern Territory. One of the last acts of the Wesleyan General Conference prior to union was to constitute West Australia a separate Conference, the first State meeting taking place in 1900.

Methodist Union. The movement towards Methodist Union in South Australia is part of the wider story of union throughout the country as a whole. A distinctive feature of the South Australian situation, however, was the greater relative strength of the Primitive Methodists and Bible Christians vis-a-vis the Wesleyans compared with what prevailed in other States. The "Minor Methodists" (as the non-Wesleyan bodies were termed) were convinced of the desirability of union as early as 1887 and from then until the inauguration of the united Church on Aug. 14, 1899, they never wavered in their commitment to union. The first United Conference was held in February 1900.

The Minutes of the 1900 Conference give the following figures for Methodism at the time of union: Churches, 457; Ministers (including probationers), 132; Church Members, 15,426. The population of the State was then 370,000.

Church and Society. As has already been mentioned South Australia had a higher percentage of non-Wesleyans among its Methodists than was found in the other Australian states. It also had a higher number of non-Anglican Protestants than was usual in British colonies. A well-known history of early South Australia bears the title "Paradise of Dissent" and this points to the strength and influence of the non-Anglican churches during the State's formative years. Some of the leading pioneers were Congregationalists. Methodists increased rapidly, especially with the influx of Cornish miners following the discovery of copper in the 1840's. The State's Lutheran population has always been relatively high, the first settlers from the Continent arriving as early as 1839.

The number of Anglican adherents has always been about thirty percent of the population. Two significant results of the high Non-Anglican element in the population was the successful resistance to early proposals to establish the Church of England as the official church, and the growth in the nineteenth century of a secular system of State education. The debate over the latter raged through the 1850's and 1860's. Opposition to State finance for Church schools was de facto opposition to the Church of England and the consequence was a public educational system from which all forms of religion were excluded. Not until 1943 was legislation passed to allow Church representatives to enter the schools for a half-hour period of religious instruction each week.

Another result of the religious composition of the State's population was that until recently there has been an identifiable Church influence on social legislation, particularly with regard to gambling and the sale of alcoholic liquor.

Since World War II immigration from Europe has steadily altered the State's denominational picture. The population is now approximately 1,200,000 and in the last census Anglican adherents numbered 29%, Roman Catholics 21% and Methodists 22%.

Methodist Growth. In almost all towns and districts in South Australia there is (or in the past has been) a Methodist church. Prior to union it was not unusual to find all three Methodist denominations even in small towns. The growth of Methodism kept pace with the opening up of the country in the last half of the nineteenth century. The pioneer missionaries often travelled long distances by horseback or bicycle, visiting farmhouses and settlements, and gathering together in homes, halls and churches the first congregations.

The mining communities from 1850's to the early years of this century were predominantly Methodist and each body erected numerous churches and halls many of which became redundant when the work of the mines ceased.

Recent years have seen a decrease in the rural population. This together with the development of good roads and the automobile has meant the closing of a number of small churches. At the same time the metropolitan area around Adelaide has expanded rapidly since the end of World War II. The metropolis now includes nearly seventy percent of the total State population. The Church's Home Mission Department is continually engaged in establishing new causes, some of them being joint charges with the Presbyterian and Congregational churches. Statistics for the South Australian Conference as of May 1969, are as follows: Number of ministers in active work, 153; number of churches, 452; number of members, 35,850.

Conference Institutions. Prince Alfred College, Methodist Ladies' College, Wesley Theological College, Lincoln College, Westminster School, Resthaven Homes for the Aged, Memorial Hospital, Kate Cocks Babies Home, Epworth Book Depot, Annesley Deaconess College. (See also ADELAIDE.)

AUSTRALIAN EDITORIAL COMMITTEE

SOUTH BEND, INDIANA, U.S.A., is the former home of the Miami, Iroquois, Pottawattomi and Mound Builder Indians. The city takes its name from a large bend in the Saint Joseph River. The river flows south from MICHIGAN into INDIANA and then bends back north to empty into Lake Michigan. The Indians and early missionaries enjoyed the excellent transportation it afforded. Father Jacques Marquette, renowned Jesuit missionary explorer, used the river for his work.

N. B. Griffith, a Methodist minister, was the first Protestant clergyman to come to South Bend. He preached his first sermon on Jan. 31, 1831. During the next four years, a budding congregation met in private homes and in an old log school. In 1835 and 1836, temporary church structures were built. First Church of South Bend descends from this earliest Methodism.

Saint Paul's Church was organized in 1883. The present building, erected in 1903, witnesses to the generosity of the Studebaker family. The architecture represents a pre-Renaissance revival of antique and Byzantine art. An ancient baptismal font, claimed by some to be the oldest in use in the United States, graces the sanctuary. Studies indicate that the font was made by "The Cosmati," a group of Roman marble workers in the 12th and 13th centuries. It is believed that the marble was quarried from the ruins of ancient Rome. Mayer and Company of Munich, Germany, made and installed the heavily insured art glass windows.

The Board of Home Missions and Church Extension of the former M.E. Church regularly granted funds to help with the growth of Methodism in South Bend. From 1902 to 1926, the larger churches sponsored societies in many new communities and in new neighborhoods in old towns. Grace Church helped to inaugurate Methodist services in the Lowell Heights and River Park settlements. In 1912, three local churches gave birth to new mission congregations: First Church initiated Trinity; Epworth came into existence as a mission of St. Paul's; Stull was dedicated through the efforts of Grace Church. The great Roman Catholic university, Notre Dame, has received deserved praise for "its helpful boost to grass roots ecumenism when on March 6, 1966, the (newly formed) Clay Methodist Church held its first worship services in the engineering building on the Notre Dame campus. This has continued weekly ever since and will, until the Clay Church, now under construction, is completed." (South Bend Tribune, May 6, 1968.) The sole stipulation of the president of Notre Dame was that the arrangement must be free. Methodist Bishop RICHARD C. RAINES gratefully noted the above agreement and said, "With Methodists worshipping on the Notre Dame campus, we are manifesting today a united witness to Christ that cuts across ancient historical boundaries." (Ibid.)

John A. O'Brien, noted author and theologian at Notre Dame, quoted Father Theodore M. Hesburgh, Notre Dame's president, as saying, "It is to the good of Notre Dame, its faculty and students that Methodists are praying on her campus. The world is no longer divided between Christian bodies but between those who believe in God and those who do not. Christians are drawing closer together, praying together, and working together for the good of all" (Together Magazine, March, 1968).

In 1970 there were seventeen United Methodist churches in South Bend, with a total membership of 8,571. Grace Church is the largest of these with a membership of 1,706. South Bend is in the North Indiana Conference of The United Methodist Church.

First Church. Rev. N. B. Griffith was appointed to Fort Wayne Mission in 1831, and arrived with his family in South Bend, Jan. 24, 1831. Early in April Griffith preached in the barroom of a small tavern kept by Benjamin Coquilard, a Roman Catholic, and organized a Methodist class with eight members. The class consisted of Samuel Martin and wife, Benjamin Potter and wife, Benjamin Ross and wife, Rebecca Stull, and Simeon Mason. Martin and Ross were appointed class leaders. From June to autumn, 1831, the following were added by certificate: William Stanfield and wife, Samuel Newman and wife, Samuel Good and wife, and Jacob Hardman, M.D., later a trustee. Several Baptists, Presbyterians, and United Brethren, residing in town, put their membership in the Methodist Church with the understanding that when their denominations organized they would join them.

In 1832 the Conference Minutes reported South Bend Mission, N. B. Griffith, pastor. Worship was held in a log schoolhouse.

First Church in reality goes back to 1833 when the South Bend Circuit was formed. The first church edifice was erected in the fall of 1836, a small frame building. During J. B. DeMotte's pastorate, 1845-46, the Methodists and Presbyterians united in a protracted meeting which resulted in about 150 conversions.

About 1849, a small frame church was replaced by a brick church. This was dedicated Aug. 17, 1851, by L. Berry, president of Asbury (now DePauw University) and J. L. Smith. During 1869-70, First Church was enlarged and rebuilt under John Thrush. By 1876 First Church reported 389 members and property valued at $33,000. First Church contributed to the growth of other churches through the years in South Bend, and a mission started by First Church became an independent church, Milburn Memorial Chapel, erected by Mrs. Clem Studebaker as a memorial to her father, George Milburn. The chapel was dedicated by H. A. Gobin, April 1, 1883. This cost around $10,000.

Edythe J. Brown, The Story of South Bend. South Bend, Ind.: South Bend Vocational School Press, 1920.

J. J. Detzler, Northwest Indiana Conference. 1953.

General Minutes, UMC, 1970.

M. Simpson, Cyclopaedia. 1882.

South Bend Daily Times, Aug. 31, 1894.

South Bend Tribune, May 5, 1968.

JESSE A. EARL
DONALD F. MCMAHAN

SOUTH CAROLINA, U.S.A., is an Atlantic Coast state and one of the original thirteen. Containing 31,055 square miles, it is the fortieth state in size. Its population in 1970 was about 2,600,000. Its coastal plain is called the low country, and the piedmont and mountainous section the upcountry. The first permanent English settlement was in 1670, and CHARLESTON was founded in 1680. The colony had proprietary rule (1670-1719), royal rule (1720-1775), and statehood beginning in 1776. The earliest provisions for proprietary rule made possible the large plantations and the slaveholding aristocracy which prevailed until the Civil War. The upcountry has become industrialized, and the low country, known for its agrarian economy of cotton and tobacco, is now developing industry.

Methodism came early to South Carolina. JOHN and CHARLES WESLEY visited the colony in 1736-37, and GEORGE WHITEFIELD was in Charleston fourteen times during his American evangelistic tours (1737-1770). John Wesley's seventy-four page Collection of Psalms and Hymns, printed at Charleston in 1737, was "the first collection of hymns published for use in the Church of England."

JOSEPH PILMORE, who came to America in 1769 as one of Wesley's first official missionaries, visited Charleston in January 1773. He soon had a revival under way. Proceeding to GEORGIA, he later returned and delivered his last sermon in Charleston, March 8, 1773. Pilmore did not organize a Methodist society because he could not remain in South Carolina and there was no other Methodist preacher to take charge.

After Pilmore's departure, there was no more Methodist preaching in Charleston until the arrival of FRANCIS ASBURY. Accompanied by three preachers—Woolman Hickson, JESSE LEE, and Henry Willis—Asbury appeared on Feb. 24, 1785. En route he and his party visited Cheraw, and Asbury preached at Georgetown. Remaining in Charleston three weeks, they laid the foundation for organized Methodism. The bishop appointed Willis as preacher in charge, and he soon organized a Methodist society. In 1786 the church had thirty-five white and twenty-three colored members.

James Foster who, beginning in 1776, served two years as a traveling preacher in VIRGINIA, located and moved to South Carolina. He ministered in the state and won some members before Asbury's arrival in 1785. Foster's work made possible the Broad River Circuit which covered parts of Newberry, Fairfield, Union, and Chester counties. In 1786 it had 210 members.

Asbury immediately linked South Carolina Methodism with the conference he held at Louisville, N. C. in April 1785. At that gathering John Tunnell was appointed to Charleston and Woolman Hickson to Georgetown. Jesse Lee says the conference "took in" the Broad River Circuit that year, but it does not appear in the appointments until 1786. The conference in 1786 was held at SALISBURY, N. C.

The first Methodist conference in South Carolina met at Charleston, March 22, 1787, with Bishops Asbury and COKE in charge. The sessions were held in a new church building, the first to be erected by the Methodists in the city. A wooden structure sixty by forty feet with balconies for Negroes, it came to be known as the Cumberland Street Church. The SOUTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE dates from the 1787 session. At that time it had work in Georgia, and in 1822 work in FLORIDA was added. In 1824 northwestern South Carolina became a part of the HOLSTON CONFERENCE, but the territory was returned to the South Carolina Conference in 1844. In 1830 Georgia and Florida were set off as the GEORGIA CONFERENCE. In 1850 a part of the North Carolina territory was given to the NORTH CAROLINA (MES) CONFERENCE and the remainder went to it in 1870. Thereafter the South Carolina Conference was limited to its own state boundaries.

In 1791 Charleston Methodism suffered a schism led by WILLIAM HAMMETT, a British Methodist preacher who had served as a missionary in the WEST INDIES. Though not a member of the South Carolina Conference, he desired, and the laymen wanted him, to be appointed to Charleston. Unable to have his way, Hammett called Asbury a tyrant, and said he himself was being persecuted. Leading what he called the "Primitive Methodist" movement, Hammett developed a large following and built several churches. He died in 1803, and most of his followers returned to the Methodist fold.

In 1833 a small group of laymen tried to get legal control of all Methodist property in Charleston so as to transfer it to the M.P. CHURCH. Their plan thwarted, they organized a M.P. church in the city, but it did not prosper. However, there was a SOUTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE (MP) from 1839 to 1939. At the time of unification it brought five ministers, four charges, and some 400 members into The Methodist Church. The Charleston Colored Mission (MP) was formed in 1892, changing its name to South Carolina Colored Mission in 1924. In 1939 it brought twelve ministers, eleven charges, and about 1,200 members in the SOUTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE (CJ).

Negroes were admitted as members of Methodist churches in South Carolina from the beginning. At the first conference in 1787, the preachers were enjoined to minister to the colored people and enroll them in the societies. WILLIAM CAPERS (later bishop) was called the founder of missions to the slaves. In 1861 the South Carolina Conference had 48,600 colored and 37,986 white members.

Following the division in 1844, the South Carolina Conference of course adhered South, and this left the M.E. Church with no work in the state until after the Civil War. In 1866, however, it organized the colored South Carolina Conference. Many Negroes then transferred from the Southern to the Northern Church, while others joined the independent Negro Methodist denominations. By 1869 the Negro membership of the South Carolina Conference (MES) had dropped to 2,411, while in the same year the South Carolina Conference (ME) reported 22,489 members.

After unification in 1939 the South Carolina Conference (Negro) was the strongest in the Central Jurisdiction. It reported 47,066 members in 1968. In that year the CENTRAL JURISDICTION was abolished, and the conference was received into the SOUTHEASTERN JURISDICTION pending merger with the South Carolina Conference which had been organized in 1787.

The Negroes who remained in the M.E. Church, South, after the Civil War formed the C.M.E. CHURCH in 1870. In 1966 that denomination had about three dozen pastoral charges in South Carolina. The A.M.E. CHURCH organized a conference in South Carolina in 1865. In 1966 it had 71,000 members in the state. It founded Payne Institute at Cokesbury, moved it to COLUMBIA in 1880, and changed its name to Allen University. The A.M.E. ZION CHURCH organized a South Carolina Conference in 1893. In 1966 it had about fifty ministers and seventy churches. Its Central Wesley College, Central, S. C., was chartered in 1909. Some South Carolina members of the M.E. Church, South who declined to enter The Methodist Church in 1939 formed the SOUTHERN METHODIST CHURCH. In 1966 it had fifty-two pastoral charges in the state. In 1962 it established Southern Methodist College at Orangeburg.

In 1915 the South Carolina Conference (MES) was divided to form the UPPER SOUTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE. Differences among conference leaders over management of the Southern Christian Advocate and some other matters caused the division. In 1947 the two bodies merged to form again the South Carolina Conference which covered the whole state. The consolidated conference then had 317 pastoral charges and 170,313 members.

The outstanding Methodist institutions in South Carolina are: South Carolina Methodist Advocate (formerly Southern Christian Advocate), Epworth Children's Home at Columbia, the Methodist Homes at Greenwood and Orangeburg, Claflin College at Orangeburg, COLUMBIA COLLEGE for women in Columbia, WOFFORD COLLEGE at Spartanburg, and SPARTANBURG JUNIOR COLLEGE.

Through the years the following native South Carolina Methodists have been elevated to the episcopacy: William Capers, WILLIAM M. WIGHTMAN, H. N. McTYEIRE, WILLIAM W. DUNCAN, A. COKE SMITH, JOHN C. KILCO, EDWIN D. MOUZON, PAUL HARDIN, JR., JOHN O. SMITH, EDWARD J. PENDERGRASS, and JAMES S. THOMAS. Two others, J. W. TARBOUX and CYRUS B. DAWSEY, became bishops in the Methodist Church of BRAZIL.

In 1970 the two South Carolina Conferences of The United Methodist Church reported 786 ministers, 598 total charges, 239,458 members, and property valued at $120,441,362.

F. Asbury, Journal and Letters. 1958.

W. C. Barclay, History of Missions. 1950.

A. H. Bassett, Concise History. 1882.

A. D. Betts, South Carolina. 1952.

W. M. Jenkins, Steps Along the Way. 1967.

General Minutes, UMC.

Minutes of the South Carolina Conferences.

A. M. Shipp, South Carolina. 1884.

J. MARVIN RAST
ALBEE GODBOLD

in what came to be known as the Cumberland Street Church, the first to be built by the Methodists in the city. (See SOUTH CAROLINA for account of early Methodism in the state.) At the outset there were twelve preachers, six circuits, and 2,070 white and 141 colored members. In 1796 the GENERAL CONFERENCE designated six conferences with boundaries, and South Carolina was one of the six. It included South Carolina, GEORGIA, and part of NORTH CAROLINA. In 1822 FLORIDA became a part of the conference.

Northwestern South Carolina became a part of the HOLSTON CONFERENCE when it was formed in 1824, but the region was returned to the South Carolina Conference in 1844. In 1830 Georgia and Florida were set off as the GEORGIA CONFERENCE. Part of the North Carolina territory was given to that conference in 1850 and the remainder in 1870. Thus after eighty-three years, the South Carolina Conference was limited to the boundaries of its own state. In 1871 it reported 35,532 members. In 1915 the conference was divided to form the Upper South Carolina Conference, but the two merged into one conference again in 1947 which then had eleven districts, 317 pastoral charges, 771 local churches, and 170,313 pastoral charges, 771 local churches, and 170,313 members.

The M.E. Church launched the Wesleyan Journal at Charleston in 1825, but the next year the paper was merged with the Christian Advocate in NEW YORK which was then called the Christian Advocate and Journal. Sectional differences over slavery made necessary a southern paper, and in 1837 the Southern Christian Advocate began in Charleston with the understanding that it would serve several conferences. In 1858 the paper became the official organ of the South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida conferences, and for a time it was published in AUGUSTA and MACON. In 1877 it came back to Charleston as the organ of the South Carolina Conference alone. It moved several times within the state, and in 1917 was permanently located at COLUMBIA. Today it is called the SOUTH CAROLINA METHODIST ADVOCATE.

The South Carolina Conference always demonstrated a missionary spirit. It sent TOBIAS GIBSON to Natchez in 1800, and MATTHEW P. STURDIVANT to the TOMBIGEE CIRCUIT in ALABAMA in 1808. Following the organization of the conference missionary society in 1821, WILLIAM CAPERS (later bishop) was appointed superintendent of Indian Missions. A mission school and church were maintained among the Creek Indians in Georgia and Alabama until 1830 when the Indians were moved west to Indian Territory. The conference did not condemn slavery, but it did regard the slaves as souls to be saved. By 1828 nearly one-third of the Negro membership of the M.E. Church was in the South Carolina Conference. In 1828 with William Capers leading, the conference began the "Plantation Missions," a mission to the thousands of unreached slaves on the great plantations. The work grew rapidly. In 1855 there were twenty-six missionary stations in the conference served by thirty-two preachers, and the missionary collections were about $25,000 per year. In 1861 there were 48,600 Negro and 37,986 white members in the conference. Prior to the organization of the C.M.E. Church in 1870, the South Carolina Conference had a "Cokesbury Colored District" directed by a Negro presiding elder. After the entry of the M.E. Church into South Carolina following the Civil War, many of the Negroes transferred to that Church.

SOUTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE was organized in CHARLESTON, March 22, 1787, with Bishops FRANCIS ASBURY and THOMAS COKE in charge. The sessions were

The first foreign missionaries sent out by the M.E. Church, South—CHARLES TAYLOR and BENJAMIN JENKINS—went from the South Carolina Conference to CHINA in 1848. The South Carolina Conference has sent more missionaries to BRAZIL than any other conference in Methodism.

The South Carolina Conference has promoted EDUCATION. The conference met at the home of Edward Finch in Newberry County in 1794, and the next year Asbury dedicated there the MT. BETHEL ACADEMY, a 40 by 20-foot building. The school continued until 1820. In 1834 the conference established the Dougherty Manual Labor School, soon called COKEBURY INSTITUTE, in the Mt. Ariel Community, Abbeville County. A strong institution, Cokesbury continued until 1918 when the plant was sold to Greenwood County for a public high school. In 1859 some forty-seven of the effective preachers of the conference had been educated at Cokesbury.

In 1850 BENJAMIN WOFFORD, a local preacher, died and left $100,000 for the establishment of a Methodist college in Spartanburg. WOFFORD COLLEGE opened in 1854 and continues as a strong and influential Methodist school. In 1869 Wofford tried to inaugurate a divinity school or department with a faculty of three. Wofford has had two presidents of regional if not national stature—JAMES H. CARLISLE (1875-1902) and HENRY N. SNYDER (1902-1942). COLUMBIA COLLEGE for women, established in 1859, has become a first-rate institution. LANDER COLLEGE, started as Williamston Female College in 1872, was moved to Greenwood in 1904 and became a conference college in 1906. In 1948 the conference gave the school to the community of Greenwood. SPARTANBURG JUNIOR COLLEGE, an accredited institution which is related to both the board of education and the board of missions of the general church, began as the Textile Industrial Institute in 1911. The Boylan-Haven-Mather Academy, begun at Camden in 1887, is under the direction of the board of missions.

Other institutions related to the conference are: Epworth Children's Home, Columbia, which began as Epworth Orphanage in 1896; the Methodist Home, ORANGEBURG, which was founded in 1953; the Methodist Home at Greenwood, started in 1968; the South Carolina Methodist Camp, Cleveland, which began in 1963; the Killingsworth Home for business women at Columbia which began in 1947; and Bethlehem Community Centers at Columbia (1945) and Spartanburg (1930).

In 1970 the South Carolina Conference reported 644 ministers, 475 pastoral charges, 194,104 members, and property valued at $108,886,901. In 1968 the conference anticipated and began preparations for merger in due time with the South Carolina Conference (1866).

A. D. Betts, South Carolina. 1952.

General Minutes.

Journal of the South Carolina Conference. ALBEA GODBOLD

SOUTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE (1866) was organized in CHARLESTON, April 2, 1866, with Bishop OSMAN C. BAKER presiding. It was a Negro conference of the M.E. Church, though it had a few white members when it began. At the beginning its boundaries included SOUTH CAROLINA, FLORIDA, and GEORGIA. In 1968 when the conference became a part of the Southeastern Jurisdiction, the year of organization was added to its name to distinguish it from the South Carolina Conference which dates from 1787.

Missionary work preceded the formation of the conference. In 1862 Bishop Baker sent T. Willard Lewis, a white minister who was a graduate of New York College, to work in Beaufort, S. C., and Florida. Going to Charleston in 1865, Lewis won the confidence of the Negro members of Trinity Church (MES), and declaring that the M.E. Church made no distinction between the races, persuaded them to walk out en masse while two preachers were begging them to stay. The group formed Centenary Church (ME). Old Bethel and Wesley, Negro M.E. churches in Charleston, were also constituted in 1865.

With the help of two Negroes, Samuel Weston and JOSEPH A. SASFORTAS, who had been successful in business before emancipation and who later became ministers in the conference, Lewis soon established Baker Theological Institute in Charleston and served as its president. The organizing session of the conference was held in the institute.

In December 1865, Bishop BAKER sent Alonzo Webster of the VERMONT CONFERENCE to Charleston to help Lewis. With Webster working in Charleston and Lewis in the surrounding territory, they organized a number of Negro Methodist congregations. V. H. Bulkly and J. R. Rosemond, Negro preachers, assisted the white ministers. Rosemond founded some eighty preaching places along the NORTH CAROLINA line.

When organized the conference had two districts, Charleston and Florida. The one district included South Carolina and the other Florida and Georgia. The conference had fourteen ministers, twelve charges, and 3,137 members including 346 probationers. The conference grew rapidly, reporting about 28,000 members in 1870.

In 1872, the FLORIDA and GEORGIA CONFERENCES were established, thereby limiting the South Carolina Conference to its own state.

There were unsuccessful efforts to start a conference paper in 1866 and 1875. In 1881 the Methodist Messenger was established at Charleston; it soon moved to Orangeburg and continued publication until 1887. Later, support was given to the general church publications.

In 1881 the conference noted that there were some white congregations of the M.E. Church within its boundaries which it could not serve, and it voted over the objection of at least two of its members, to ask the BLUE RIDGE (Atlantic) CONFERENCE (North Carolina) to supply the white churches with pastors.

As Methodist unification approached, the conference debated the issues and voted for it eighty-two to forty. In 1939 the conference received twelve ministers, eleven pastoral charges, and 1,236 members from the South Carolina Colored Mission of the M.P. Church. The eleven charges became the Berkeley District which continued fifteen years before it was absorbed by the conference. Reporting 40,461 members in 1940, South Carolina was the largest conference in the CENTRAL JURISDICTION.

Through the years education was a prime concern of the conference. Fortunately there was help from the north with the educational endeavors. In 1969, LEE CLAFLIN, a prominent layman, and his son WILLIAM CLAFLIN who was governor of MASSACHUSETTS, offered financial assistance for the establishment of a college for Negroes in South Carolina. The property of a defunct women's college at Orangeburg was purchased, the school was opened in October, and on Dec. 18, 1869 it was chartered as Clafin University. In 1871 Baker Theological Institute was merged with the new school. In 1924 the name of the institution was changed to CLAFLIN COLLEGE. L. M. DUNTON, a white man, rendered outstanding service as president of Clafin from 1885 to 1922.

Clafin furnished trained leadership for the conference, and the conference in turn supported the school. The preachers raised money for the college, including scholarship funds for students. It was estimated that 17,000 students enrolled at Clafin during its first half century. Today it is a strong Methodist college.

In 1968 when The United Methodist Church was organized and the Central Jurisdiction was abolished, the South Carolina Conference (1866) became a part of the SOUTHEASTERN JURISDICTION, pending merger with the SOUTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE which dates from 1787.

In 1970 the conference had 142 pastors, 123 pastoral charges, 45,354 members, and property valued at $11,554,461.

A. D. Betts, South Carolina. 1952.

General Minutes.

W. M. Jenkins, Steps Along the Way. 1967. ALBEA GODBOLD

SOUTH CAROLINA METHODIST ADVOCATE is the official organ of the SOUTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE of The United Methodist Church, Southeastern Jurisdiction. It is owned and controlled by that Conference—which embraces the whole state of SOUTH CAROLINA—under the direction of trustees elected by the Conference. The present Advocate continues the Southern Christian Advocate founded in 1837. The pages of this church weekly mirror the growth of church and culture in interaction in ways that point to the positive relationship between the Christian faith and the secular order.

The Southern Christian Advocate itself was born June 24, 1837 in the midst of the sacred-secular debate over slavery. Earlier, in 1825, the South Carolina Conference in Charleston published for nearly two years The Wesleyan Journal, edited by WILLIAM CAPERS. The only other American Methodist journal then in existence was Zions Herald, an unofficial church paper published in BOSTON. In 1826, the Christian Advocate, published in NEW YORK, appeared. In 1827, the New York and Charleston ventures were combined into a single publication named, The Christian Advocate and Journal, to which was added in 1828, Zion's Herald. In 1833, Zion's Herald withdrew.

Largely because the southern regions of Methodism felt they were not free enough to express their views on certain "domestic institutions" (slavery), the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1836, in CINCINNATI, authorized the establishment of three regional papers on a par with the New York Advocate: one in NASHVILLE (already in print); another in RICHMOND (not to begin till later); and another in Charleston. William Capers was appointed editor of the Charleston paper and its first issue appeared June 24, 1837, designed for readers in the South Carolina Conference (which then included large sections of eastern NORTH CAROLINA) and the GEORGIA CONFERENCE (which then included northern FLORIDA). Many subscribers were from as far away as ALABAMA, TENNESSEE, and VIRGINIA, making appropriate its founding name, Southern Christian Advocate.

From its beginning the Southern Christian Advocate was a paper of personal journalism reflecting the intimate relationship of Christianity and the secular world.

Despite its founding editor's claim that slavery was a "civic and political matter," the direction of his editorship and his founding of "missions to the slaves" confirmed the intimate relationship of the gospel to the world. His claim to fame today rests, not so much on the fact that he was later a bishop of the M. E. Church, South, but rather on his ministry to the Negro slaves.

Other secular interests of concern to the sacred were represented in the Advocate. It was the Progressive Farmer of its days, with columns of advice on raising poultry, when to dig sweet potatoes, how to preserve grapes, how to candle eggs. As late as 1866, when the Advocate was published then in MACON, Ga., because of the Civil War, its editor proposed that the weekly "adapt itself more fully to the wants and interests of the present time," and became a "double paper—one half devoted, as heretofore, to Religion and the Church; and one half to Literature, Science, Art, the News, the Markets, Advertisements, etc. etc." In short, the Advocate sought to become a family newspaper-journal, "being all that a family that takes but one Newspaper can need."

Theological and ecclesiastical issues were not, however, forgotten. From its earliest days, the Southern Christian Advocate was an open forum where ministers and laymen debated contemporary issues. In 1843, one such issue was what sort of coat a minister should wear. The editor proposed that the issue be ventilated in the pages of the Advocate, and promised "to publish whatever the brethren have to say, pro and con." He urged "writers on either side" to "avoid all personalities and keep to the matter in hand in a perfectly good humor, until the subject shall be thoroughly sifted." (SCA, Jan. 6, 1843.) The same debate continues in our day in the use of the pulpit robe, and/or the clerical collar as appropriate ministerial garb.

Recent editors of the Advocate (now called the South Carolina Methodist Advocate after Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, ARKANSAS and MISSISSIPPI established their own Conference journals, and the use of the more inclusive title Southern Christian Advocate seemed inappropriate) have continued the open policy of debate on current issues. Under the editorship of J. MARVIN RAST, debate during the nineteen-thirties on the union of the three branches of Methodism was fully covered. The debate over segregation in church and society produced its share of "pros and cons" during the editorship of this writer and his successor, Adlai C. Holler. Presently under the capable leadership of A. McKay Brabham, Jr., the Advocate is giving full coverage to such issues as the ecumenical debate over the NATIONAL and WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES. The secret of the Advocate's power lies here. It has never been simply a trade journal of the church, but has been a pulpit where responsible editors have been able to enlist the laity in creative dialogue on the relation of the gospel to the world.

Advocate editors have been: William Capers, 1837-1840 (later bishop); WILLIAM MAY WIGHTMAN, 1840-1854 (later bishop); E. H. Myers, 1854-1871; J. Milton Kennedy, 1871-1878; Samuel A. Weber, 1878-1885; W. D. Kirkland, 1885-1894; John O. Willson, 1894-1902; W. R. Richardson, 1902-1904; C. H. Waddell, 1905; S. A. Nettles, 1906-1914; William C. Kirkland, 1915-1920; R. E. Stackhouse, 1921-1926; Emory Olin Watson, 1927-1933; Robert O. Lawton, 1933-1936; JOHN MARVIN RAST, 1936-1941; D. D. Peele, 1941-1948; John L. Sandlin, 1949; D. D. Peele, 1950-1952; J. Claude Evans, 1952-1957;

Adlai C. Holler, 1957-1961; and A. McKay Brabham, Jr., 1961 to date.

A. D. Betts, South Carolina. 1952.

Mason Crum, The Southern Christian Advocate, An Historical Sketch. N.p., 1945.

Southern Christian Advocate, June 23, 1887; June 24, 1937.

J. CLAUDE EVANS

SOUTH DAKOTA, U.S.A., population 661,406 in 1970, is in the north central part of the country. It is bounded by NORTH DAKOTA on the north, MINNESOTA and IOWA on the east, NEBRASKA on the south, and WYOMING and MONTANA on the west. A rolling plain, the state's area of 77,047 square miles is divided by the Missouri River into eastern and western parts of nearly equal size. A chain of large lakes is formed behind dams on the river. Semi-arid, the east produces farm crops and the west grows wheat and cattle. The badlands with their sharp erosional sculpture are intriguing. A part of the Louisiana Purchase in 1803, Dakota (including North and South Dakota) became a territory in 1862. South Dakota was admitted to the Union in 1889. Fur trading was important in the early days, but no attempts were made to settle the region until 1856 when pioneers from Minnesota and Iowa located at Sioux Falls and Medary. Railroads and the discovery of gold in the Black Hills in 1875 brought many people. South Dakota has led the nation in the production of gold for the last 20 years.

Methodism entered South Dakota almost with the first settlers. In 1860 Bishop O. C. BAKER, presiding over the UPPER IOWA CONFERENCE, appointed S. W. INGHAM as a missionary to all the territory between the Big Sioux and Missouri Rivers. Ingham preached his first sermon in South Dakota at Vermillion on Oct. 14, 1860. He served two years in the region, traveling some 7,000 miles on horseback, and organized a Methodist class at Vermillion. Other missionaries followed Ingham. In 1870 the first Methodist church in South Dakota was built at Elk Point by Fred Harris. A church was erected at Sioux Falls in 1873.

In 1880 the Black Hills Mission and the Dakota Mission were organized, the one covering the part of South Dakota west of the 101st meridian and parts of Wyoming and Montana, and the other the part of South Dakota east of the meridian. In 1885 the Dakota Mission became the Dakota Conference, and in 1891 the Black Hills Mission was designated as the Black Hills Mission Conference. Due to prolonged drouth and other discouraging factors, the latter was reduced to the status of a mission again in 1901, and in 1913 it was absorbed by the Dakota Conference. At its peak strength the Black Hills body had no more than twenty-two charges and about 1,100 members. However, it was adventurous, establishing Black Hills College at Hot Springs and Methodist Deaconess Hospital at Rapid City. The college operated from 1890 to 1900, and the hospital from 1912 to 1939.

The name of the Dakota Conference, organized in 1885, was changed to South Dakota Conference in 1892 and back to Dakota Conference again in 1896.

Some German, Swedish, and Norwegian-Danish churches were organized in South Dakota, but they were members of foreign language conferences each of which covered several states. (See NORTHWEST GERMAN CON-FERENCE, NORTHWEST SWEDISH CONFERENCE, and NORWEGIAN-DANISH CONFERENCE.)

South Dakota was adversely affected by drouth and economic depression in the 1920's and 1930's. Dust storms which were disastrous for agriculture beggar description. Pastors became distributors of the relief provided by the Red Cross and county welfare departments. Some college professors were paid mostly in kind. Church membership declined. Between 1927 and 1931 the Dakota Conference membership dropped from 28,835 to 23,306, a decline of about twenty per cent. Not until 1937 did the conference membership equal or surpass the 1927 figure. Eventually the economy of the state was strengthened by the huge dams constructed by the Federal government on the Missouri River.

At unification in 1939 the Dakota Conference was continued in The Methodist Church. At that time it was a part of the Des Moines Area. In 1952 the NORTH CENTRAL JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCE changed the name of the Dakota Conference to South Dakota Conference, and it made the two Dakotas an episcopal area with the bishop's residence at Aberdeen, S. D.

The South Dakota Conference supports DAKOTA WESLEYAN COLLEGE at Mitchell, WESLEY FOUNDATIONS at three state schools, the Methodist Hospital at Mitchell, homes for the aged at Watertown, Gettysburg, and Mitchell, and three youth camps. In 1970 the conference reported three districts, 112 charges, 177 ministers, 44,147 members, and property valued at $19,099,512.

M. D. Smith, Circuit Riders of the Middle Border, 1965. General Minutes, MEC and MC.

Minutes of the Dakota and South Dakota Conferences.

JOHN V. MADISON

SOUTH DAKOTA CONFERENCE succeeded the Dakota Conference in 1953. The Dakota Conference in its early years superseded or absorbed the missions projected by the M.E. Church in South Dakota. (See SOUTH DAKOTA for beginnings of Methodism in the state.)

The Black Hills and Dakota Missions, divided by the 101st meridian, were organized in South Dakota in 1880. The Dakota Mission went on to become the Dakota Conference in 1885 (it was called the South Dakota Conference from 1892 to 1896), and it absorbed the Black Hills Mission in 1913. Thereafter the Dakota Conference covered the entire state.

Though the work was called the Dakota Conference, it was a mission field for many years. In 1885 only four churches in the conference were self-supporting, and as late as 1922 the denominational board of missions appropriated some $35,000 to supplement pastors' salaries. It was not until 1937 that the churches of the conference were on a completely self-supporting basis.

At the beginning the Dakota Conference had ninety-five churches and approximately 5,000 members. In 1914, after absorbing the Black Hills Mission, the conference reported 171 charges and 18,810 members.

The Dakota Conference was strongly interested in education from the beginning, voting unanimously in 1886 to accept DAKOTA WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY which was launched at Mitchell the year before. Through the years the school had difficulties, but today with an endowment of more than $1,000,000, a plant valued at $3,500,000, and a student body of 900 it is one of Methodism's accredited senior colleges.

The Dakota Conference accepted Methodist Deaconess Hospital which was started in Rapid City by the Black Hills Mission in 1912. The institution continued operation until 1939. Dakota Deaconess Hospital at Brookings was operated from 1912 to 1930. The Methodist Hospital in Mitchell began in 1916. A fine institution, it is today the only Methodist hospital in the two Dakotas.

At unification in 1939 the Dakota Conference reported 125 charges, 29,643 members, and property valued at $2,333,190. By 1953, when the name was changed to the South Dakota Conference, the number of charges had dropped to 115, but the membership had risen to 39,354.

The South Dakota Conference was organized at Aberdeen on June 2, 1953 with Bishop EDWIN E. VOICZ presiding.

In 1949 the Dakota Conference authorized the organization of Methodist Homes, Inc. for the purpose of building homes for the aged. Jenkins Memorial Nursing Home was opened at Watertown in 1954. In 1964 Wesley Acres at Mitchell and Oahe Manor at Gettysburg (retirement homes) were dedicated.

The conference supports WESLEY FOUNDATIONS at three state institutions of higher learning, and it maintains three youth camps.

In 1952 the two Dakota Conferences requested that they be constituted as an episcopal area. The NORTH CENTRAL JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCE concurred, and since that time the bishop of the Dakota area has lived in Aberdeen, S. D.

In 1970 the South Dakota Conference reported three districts, Northern, Southern, and Western, with 112 charges, 177 ministers, 44,147 members, and property valued at $19,099,512.

General Minutes, MEC and MC.

Minutes of the Dakota and South Dakota Conferences.

M. D. Smith, Circuit Riders of the Middle Border, 1965.

JOHN V. MADISON

SOUTH GEORGIA CONFERENCE (MES) was formed during the session of the GEORGIA CONFERENCE at Americus, Nov. 28 to Dec. 5, 1866, with Bishop HOLLAND N. McTYEIRE presiding. Under authority granted by the 1866 GENERAL CONFERENCE the GEORGIA preachers voted for two conferences in the state, the dividing line to run generally east and west a little north of MACON. In the division the South Georgia Conference received more territory but only about half as many members as the NORTH GEORGIA CONFERENCE. In the realignment of boundaries, the South Georgia Conference received also the Bainbridge and Brunswick Districts which had been in the FLORIDA CONFERENCE since its establishment in 1845. At the close of the 1866 session of the Georgia Conference, Bishop McTyieire read out the appointments of the South Georgia and North Georgia Conferences. In 1867 the South Georgia Conference met in SAVANNAH, while the North Georgia body convened in ATLANTA. (See GEORGIA for beginnings of Methodism in the state and an account of the Georgia Conference.)

The South Georgia Conference's increase in church membership between 1867 and 1939 was impressive. Beginning with 19,626 members in 1867, church membership trebled by 1900, and was about six times the original figure by 1939.

From the beginning the South Georgia Conference joined the North Georgia Conference in supporting EMORY and WESLEYAN COLLEGES. Wesleyan at Macon, founded in 1836, is the oldest permanent college for women in the United States. From the beginning the conference owned and supported Andrew College which was founded at Cuthbert in 1852 and was named for Bishop JAMES O. ANDREW. In time it became an accredited junior college. At different times the conference sponsored other colleges which did not live long. In 1916 the churches of the conference were assessed $16,000 for higher education, and the money was distributed to seven colleges and the General Board of EDUCATION at Nashville.

The Methodist Children's Home was established at Macon in 1873, and the Vashti School for Girls was started at Thomasville in 1903. Today the latter is a secondary school related to the National Division of the Board of Missions. The conference gives support to the Warren Candler Hospital which was founded at Savannah in 1903.

The South Georgia Conference came to unification in 1939 with eight districts, 213 charges, and 117,100 members. Its churches and parsonages at that time were valued at $6,247,400. Merged with parts of the Georgia Conferences of the M.E. and M.P. Churches, the new body became the South Georgia Conference of The Methodist Church.

Beginning in 1949 the South Georgia Conference developed Epworth-by-the-Sea on ST. SIMON'S ISLAND. It serves not only as a summer assembly but also as a year round facility for the conference and its organizations and groups. The archives of the conference historical society are housed there. Because of the ministry of JOHN and CHARLES WESLEY on St. Simon's during their sojourn in America, Epworth-by-the-Sea has been designated as a national Methodist Historic Shrine.

The South Georgia Conference raised $116,686 for higher education in 1968. The conference joins the North Georgia Conference in supporting nine Wesley Foundations in the state. The Wesleyan Christian Advocate, supported by both Georgia conferences, had a circulation of 49,000 in 1968. Institutions developed and supported in more recent years by the South Georgia Conference are: the South Georgia Methodist Home for the Aging at Americus, and the Hotel Ware for retirement at Waycross.

In 1970 the South Georgia Conference reported nine districts, 352 charges, 454 ministers, 143,579 members, and property valued at $75,878,595.

General Minutes, MECS and MC.

Minutes of the South Georgia Conference.

A. M. Pierce, Georgia, 1956.

ALBEA GODBOLD

SOUTH INDIA ANNUAL CONFERENCE includes portions of Madras and Mysore states, and embraces a territory covering 88,371 miles with a population of over 10,000,000. Work is mostly among the Hindus and with the Christian constituency. Outside of Bangalore, which is one of the principal cities, Belgaum, and Kolar, its work is largely carried on among rural people. The conference has nine districts, and at last reporting there were 98,036 members. Evangelistic work in the conference is fifty percent self-supporting, and ninety percent of the leadership is carried on by Indian pastors.

Bangalore is the largest and most important district in the conference, as Bangalore itself is second to Madras among the cities of South INDIA. Mysore is the official capital, but Bangalore is the seat of the state government.

Madras is the third city in Indian population, and is an ancient and historic seaport founded in 1640. It is the capital of Madras State, the third city in India in population last reported as 1,900,000. There is a tradition that the Apostle Thomas suffered martyrdom there. Protestant worship dates from 1680, coming in with the East India Company. Methodist work was begun in 1874. There are two self-supporting Methodist churches in the city—the Tamil and Emmanuel Methodist Churches. There is also the St. Christopher Teachers Training College, which the Division of World Missions has assisted in sponsoring with other denominational agencies since 1945; and the Woman's Christian College, which likewise is an interdenominational enterprise with the Woman's Division of Christian Service of The Methodist Church cooperating. Founded in 1915, the college is now affiliated with the University of Madras.

The Belgaum District in this conference is situated about a city of 127,885 inhabitants, 305 miles south of BOMBAY, and at a rather high altitude. The London Missionary Society began work in the city in 1820, which work was transferred in 1904 to the M. E. Church. There are two Methodist congregations in the city. There are boys' and girls' Methodist high schools and self-supporting churches in Belgaum, Gulbarga, and Raichur.

The Bidar, Chidaguppa, Gokak, Gulbarga, Raichur, Shorapur, and Yadgiri Districts are the other districts of the conference. Evangelistic work is carried on in each of these, and there are other Protestant agencies at work in this particular region.

Discipline, UMC, 1968.

Project Handbook Overseas Missions, United Methodist Church. New York: Board of Missions, 1969. J. WASKOM PICKETT

SOUTH IOWA CONFERENCE (MC) was organized at Ames, June 26, 1958 with Bishop F. GERALD ENSLEY presiding. It was formed by changing the name of the IOWA-DES MOINES CONFERENCE which included approximately the south half of the state. The Iowa-Des Moines body had been created in 1932 by merging the Iowa and DES MOINES CONFERENCES.

The Des Moines Conference dated from 1864 and when formed it included the west half of the state, but half of its territory was taken in 1872 to form the Northwest Iowa Conference (see NORTH IOWA CONFERENCE). The Iowa Conference dated from 1844, and when formed it included the whole state, but after the organization of the UPPER IOWA CONFERENCE in 1856 and the Des Moines Conference in 1864, the Iowa body was limited to the southeast quarter of the state. Under the circumstances the South Iowa Conference when organized, like the Des Moines Conference before it, felt justified in claiming historical continuity from 1844.

At its beginning in 1958, the South Iowa Conference had 350 ministers, 277 pastoral charges, and 136,362 members. There were six districts—Boone, Burlington, Council Bluffs, Creston, Des Moines, and Ottumwa. In 1960 a seventh district, Newton, was formed.

The South Iowa Conference supported two colleges, IOWA WESLEYAN at Mt. Pleasant founded in 1842, and SIMPSON at Indianola dating from 1867. Iowa Methodist Hospital at Des MOINES was founded in 1901; beginning with thirty beds, its plant expanded several times during the years; Blank Memorial Children's Hospital was added in 1943, and Yonkers Memorial Rehabilitation Center in 1959.

The conference supported three retirement homes, Wesley Acres at Des Moines, Heritage House at Atlantic, and Halcyon House at Washington. It sponsored the GOODWILL INDUSTRIES at Council Bluffs and at Des Moines.

The South Iowa and North Iowa Conferences jointly supported WESLEY FOUNDATIONS at Drake University and at the three state universities. They also cooperated in the work of the Hillcrest Children's Services at Cedar Rapids and the Iowa Methodist Services to Youth at Des Moines.

In 1968 the South Iowa Conference had 308 ministers, 216 pastoral charges, 142,918 members, and property valued at $80,979,676. In that year the NORTH CENTRAL JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCE voted that in June, 1969, the conferences in Iowa should merge into one body to be called the Iowa Conference.

R. A. Gallaher, Methodism in Iowa. 1944. Minutes of the South Iowa Conference.

JOHN A. NYE

SOUTH KANSAS CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church was organized March 11, 1874 at Fort Scott with Bishop JESSE T. PECK presiding. It was formed by dividing the KANSAS CONFERENCE. Its territory included the south half of the state. The conference had four districts—Fort Scott, Humboldt, Emporia, and Wichita. It reported ninety-three charges, forty-three churches, and 9,226 members.

In 1882 the South Kansas Conference was divided to form the SOUTHWEST KANSAS CONFERENCE. This limited the South Kansas body to the eastern third of the south half of the state.

In 1914 the South Kansas Conference was absorbed by the Kansas Conference. The new and enlarged body then covered the eastern third of the state. In the year prior to the merger the South Kansas Conference reported four districts—Emporia, Fort Scott, Independence, and Ottawa—33,006 members, and 297 churches valued at $1,178,225.

D. W. Holter, Fire on the Prairie. 1969.

Minutes of the South Kansas Conference. F. E. MASER

SOUTH LEIGH, England, a village near Witney, in Oxfordshire, at whose parish church JOHN WESLEY preached his first sermon on Sunday, Sept. 26, 1725. He made no mention of the fact in his diary, though the manuscript of the sermon survives. The sermon was on "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness." He preached there again on Oct. 16, 1771, and noted in his Journal (v, p. 432) that "one man was in my present audience who heard" the sermon he had given forty-six years before. The man was called Winter. In the south Midlands, where the name Leigh is frequently found, it is pronounced as though it was spelled "Lye," the way in which Wesley originally wrote it. In the first volume of the Standard Edition of John Wesley's Journal there is a reproduction of an old print of the South Leigh Church.

V. H. H. Green, Young Mr. Wesley. 1961.

JOHN KENT

SOUTH MERRITT ISLAND, FLORIDA, U.S.A. Georgiana Church is one of the oldest churches in FLORIDA Methodism. Called "The Little Church in the Wildwood," it was founded in 1885 and Franklin Allen, Sr. home-steaded the land where the church now stands. He donated the ground for the church and the old part of the cemetery. One year later the church building was started and lumber for the church was brought down from St. Augustine, Fla. in sailboats. Volunteer labor and donated materials made it possible to conduct services on Thanksgiving Day, Nov. 25, 1886. A Rev. White was the first Methodist minister. Mr. and Mrs. Frank Munson, charter members and founders of the Georgiana Church, took an active interest in the growth and development of the church and carried on faithfully until their demise in 1950. For lack of leadership, the church was permitted to close for six years, but on Jan. 15, 1956, Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Gillette and Mr. and Mrs. C. K. Hall invited local Methodists to the first service to be held since the church had been closed. The refurbishing of the building and the growth in membership has been consistent because of the devoted interest of those who want "The Little Church in the Wildwood" to continue its role as "The Mother of Methodism" on the east coast of Florida.

SOUTHERLAND, SILAS BRUCE (1817-?), American M. P. minister, was a member of the MARYLAND CONFERENCE, and actively participated in the affairs of his denomination on a General Conference level. He was born in Prince George's County, Md., on May 21, 1817. Following the death of his parents he moved to Harper's Ferry, Va., and engaged in the apothecary business. He read and studied continuously, especially in the field of law. When he was converted in February 1839, his purposes were changed from the law to the ministry. He was licensed to preach by the M. P. Church and in 1841 was received into the Maryland Conference. He filled most of the prominent appointments of this conference, including a term as its president. He was repeatedly chosen to represent the conference in the GENERAL CONFERENCES. He was a member of the committee appointed by the General Conference of 1880 to prepare the hymnal, The Tribute of Praise. At a semi-centennial celebration at Old St. John's Church in BALTIMORE in 1878, he gave an address "of great force and beauty." He was one of five representatives from the M. P. denomination at the first ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE held in London in 1881. He presided one day during this conference and also presented an address on "Non-Episcopal Methodism in America." He was a representative of his denomination at the General Conference of the M. E. Church which met in Baltimore in May, 1876. He was a member of the historic uniting convention of 1877. He received the honorary D.D. degree from the University of Georgia.

A. H. Bassett, Concise History. 1887.

E. J. Drinkhouse, History of Methodist Reform. 1899.

M. Simpson, Cyclopaedia. 1882. RALPH HARDEE RIVES

SOUTHERN ASIA CENTRAL CONFERENCE in the M. E. Church developed on the initiative of annual conferences in INDIA. The earliest record on the subject is a letter from JAMES MILLS THORBURN to JAMES H. MESSMORE, saying,

In 1879 I became impressed that we needed an organization in which all parts of our scattered work in India would be represented to look after the general interests, and to keep us from drifting apart. . . . I wrote to Brother [EDWIN WALLACE] PARKER giving an outline of what I thought was needed. . . . My letter crossed one from him to me of practically the same import.

These letters led to the holding of a two-day joint session of the North India and South India Conferences. No bishop was present. George Bowen of Bombay was elected to preside. Both Annual Conferences had called for a joint session. They voted to hold a delegated conference in July 1881, and to ask the General Conference to recognize and to commit to it "all those interests of the church in India which are included in Part IV of the Discipline entitled 'Educational and Benevolent Institutions.'"

The proposition was opposed by the Board of Bishops and by the Board of Missions, and although approved by the Committee on Missions in the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1880, the measure was defeated by the vote of the Conference. Nevertheless, the delegated conference as planned in India was held in July 1881, and assumed authority to act on its own initiative in many areas. It addressed no request to the 1884 General Conference, but the subject was prominent in the discussions there, and Edwin W. Parker and WILLIAM TAYLOR presented a memorial asking for "a sub-ordinate General Conference in India," and their memorial was viewed favorably. The Conference already organized in India was recognized under the name Central Conference, and a Central Conference was also authorized for JAPAN.

As Methodism had by then spread from India into other countries, eventually including BURMA, SINGAPORE, MALAYA, the Dutch East Indies, SARAWAK, and the PHILIPPINE ISLANDS, the Central Conference of India was renamed the Central Conference of Southern Asia. Its powers were extended. In 1920 a Commission was appointed which under the chairmanship of J. WASKOM PICKETT prepared a Constitution for the Central Conference of Southern Asia. In 1928 this Central Conference was given authority to elect its bishops, the number predetermined by the General Conference.

In the PLAN OF UNION by which the M. E., M. E. South, and M. P. Churches were united in 1939, Central Conferences were continued, and Jurisdictional Conferences in the United States were set up, modeled somewhat on the plan that had proved so valuable in Central Conferences.

The title of this Conference as listed in the Discipline of The United Methodist Church (1968) is Southern Asia Central Conference. It comprises the following Annual Conferences: AGRA, BENGAL, BOMBAY, DELHI, GUJARAT, HYDERABAD, LUCKNOW, MADHYA PRADESH, MORADABAD, NORTH INDIA, SOUTH INDIA, and NEPAL Mission. These conferences are administered through four episcopal areas, namely, Bombay, Delhi, Hyderabad, and Lucknow.

J. WASKOM PICKETT

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CONFERENCE. (See SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA-ARIZONA CONFERENCE, and CALIFORNIA.)

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA-ARIZONA CONFERENCE. The SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CONFERENCE (ME) was formed in 1876 by dividing the CALIFORNIA CONFERENCE.

ENCE. (See CALIFORNIA CONFERENCE, and CALIFORNIA.) At first the conference included only the south half of the state, but in 1917 it was expanded to include the southern part of NEVADA, and in 1920 it took in the state of ARIZONA. At unification in 1939, the Southern California Conference absorbed part of the PACIFIC CONFERENCE and all of the ARIZONA CONFERENCE (both MES). In 1940, the name was changed to the Southern California-Arizona Conference. (See ARIZONA, and PACIFIC CONFERENCE.)

In 1853, the California Conference sent Adam Bland as a "missionary" to LOS ANGELES, then a town of a few more than 1,600 people. He was told there were no Methodists in the town. He wrote of the place that "of all the society I ever saw here is the worst." But impressed with the country, he predicted that it was "destined . . . to be the big end of CALIFORNIA." A Los Angeles District was soon formed, but because of pro-slavery sentiment, the Methodist Episcopal Church made little progress in Southern California until after the Civil War. In 1875 the population of Los Angeles was 8,450 and the surrounding county had over 24,000. By that time the Northern Methodists had grown stronger, thus making possible the organization of the Southern California Conference the next year. When organized the new conference had 27 preachers and 1,257 members.

The coming of the railroads in the late 1880's brought thousands of people into southern California, and the conference experienced rapid growth. Between 1886 and 1889 the number of preaching appointments jumped from 80 to 130, the conference membership rose from 3,909 to 5,173, and two new districts were created. As time passed a strong Los Angeles Missionary and Church Extension Society was organized which solicited financial assistance from over the conference as well as from within the city for building new churches. The Northern Methodists grew much more rapidly in southern California than the southern branch of the church. The Southern California Conference came to Methodist unification in 1939 with 106,522 members, while the southern California part of the Pacific Conference brought only 8,509.

At its first session in 1876, the Southern California Conference looked toward the establishment of a school in Los Angeles. In 1880, the UNIVERSITY OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA was launched with M. M. BOVARD, a member of the conference, as president. Several other schools were started soon afterward, but due to economic reverses in the region they closed or merged after a few years. In 1885, a substantial gift made possible the establishment of a theological seminary in connection with the university. The conference failed to take all legal steps necessary to insure ownership and control of either the university or the seminary, and ultimately it lost both institutions.

In 1955, the conference authorized a new but continuing seminary to be called the Southern California School of Theology. Retaining the faculty of the School of Religion of the University of Southern California, the new seminary operated in temporary quarters until it could be housed in 1960 in excellent new buildings at Claremont.

In 1957, after several years of negotiations, the conference accepted the Balboa University in San Diego, and changed its name to California Western University. CALIFORNIA WESTERN UNIVERSITY stands as the only Protestant affiliated institution of higher learning in its county.

The conference voted in 1918 to require seminary training of all new ministers entering on trial, the first conference in Methodism to set so high a standard. In 1957, at heavy expense, the conference enrolled all of its preachers in the ministers' reserve pension plan, the first conference in the connection to achieve that distinction.

Through the years the Southern California Conference ministered to various language groups within its bounds—Chinese, Japanese, Korean, Italian, Portuguese, Filipino, Hawaiian, Latin American, German, Scandinavian, and American Indian.

A Negro church was organized in the conference in 1888. At the time of unification in 1939, there were five Negro congregations, and since the CENTRAL JURISDICTION did not include the WESTERN JURISDICTION, they remained as integral parts of the Southern California Conference. Twenty years later there were ten Negro churches with a total of 6,128 members. There were no integrated churches in the conference prior to 1939, but in recent years the conference has appointed some Negro pastors to all white churches.

Several institutions in the Los Angeles area, such as the Frances DePauw Home, the Spanish American Institute, the Plaza Community Center, and the Church of All Nations, are notable for the special services they render to particular groups. In addition, the conference maintains a home for children, a home for girls, several homes for the aged, and the Methodist Hospital in Los Angeles.

An epochal event occurred in the conference's life when the HAWAII Mission became a district of the conference. This action came pursuant to an enactment of the 1964 General Conference giving the Hawaiian Mission the right to become a provisional annual conference or to merge with the Southern California-Arizona one. Hawaii, which had been under the supervision of Bishop GERALD KENNEDY, the resident bishop in Los Angeles, voted to join the Southern California-Arizona, and this was done. In June 1967, it became the Hawaiian District of that conference. It brought into the conference (1968 report) twenty-seven pastoral appointments, 6,893 members, and churches, parsonages and other property valued at $9,286,541. The 1968 session of the Western Jurisdictional Conference was held in Honolulu.

In 1970 the Conference reported 934 ministers, 495 charges, 260,047 members, and property valued at $180,637,498.

General Minutes, ME, MES, UMC.

Minutes of the Southern California-Arizona Conference.

E. D. Jervey, Southern California and Arizona. 1960.

ALBA GODBOLD

SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. (See SOUTH CAROLINA METHODIST ADVOCATE.)

SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN RECORDER. A publication of the African Methodist Episcopal Church. (See AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, Publications.)

SOUTHERN CONFERENCE (ME) was organized at NEW ORLEANS, La., Oct. 29, 1924, with Bishop CHARLES L. MEAD presiding. It superseded the SOUTHERN GERMAN CONFERENCE. Its territory was TEXAS and LOUISIANA, and at the outset it included the work which had been in the Southern German Conference. It began with two districts—Brenham and San Antonio—thirty-three charges, 4,518 members, and property valued at $358,035.

In 1926 the Southern Conference absorbed both the Southern Swedish Mission Conference and the GULF CONFERENCE. This brought all of the white work of the M.E. Church in Texas, Louisiana, and MISSISSIPPI into one conference, and it so continued until unification in 1939.

The Southern Swedish Mission Conference was organized at Austin, Texas, Dec. 5, 1912 with Bishop ROBERT MCINTYRE presiding. It had eleven charges and 1,057 members. Methodist work among Swedish immigrants in Texas had begun much earlier. The Austin Conference (ME) organized a Scandinavian District in 1885 and continued it until the formation of the Southern Swedish Mission Conference. It is claimed that between 1838 and 1910 some 7,000 Swedes settled in Texas, mostly around Austin. Conscious of the need of native trained leadership, the Swedish Mission Conference established Wesleyan Academy at Austin and maintained it until 1926 when the property was sold for $100,000 and the money given to TEXAS WESLEYAN COLLEGE at Fort Worth. When the Swedish Mission Conference was absorbed by the Southern Conference in 1926 it had thirteen charges, 1,804 members, and churches and parsonages valued at $93,200.

The Gulf Mission (ME) was organized at Jennings, La., Jan. 20, 1893 with Bishop EDWARD G. ANDREWS presiding. Composed of white ministers and churches, it was formed by dividing the LOUISIANA CONFERENCE along racial lines. In 1896 its territory was extended to include east Texas, and in 1900 it took in the white work of the denomination in Mississippi. At the beginning the mission had only seven charges and 354 members. In 1897 it became the Gulf Mission Conference and in 1904 the Gulf Conference. In the latter year it had forty-two charges and 2,859 members. Since some Northern Methodists were moving South, and since the Gulf Conference did not face the language limitations of Swedish and German Methodism, it was believed that the new conference would grow. But many northerners who came south soon became southern in their sympathies and tended to unite with the stronger Southern Church. Moreover, ministerial students going north of necessity for training failed to return. The merger with the Southern Conference in 1926 was necessary for economy and efficiency. In its last year the Gulf Conference reported three districts, thirty-nine charges, nineteen ministers, 5,327 members, and property valued at $423,150. Bishop W. RALPH WARD was admitted on trial in the Southern Conference in 1929.

In 1927 the Southern Conference reported seventy-eight charges and 11,896 members. The final session of the conference was held at SAN ANTONIO, Oct. 17-18, 1939 with Bishop Mead presiding. It brought into The Methodist Church seventy-five charges, 14,110 members, and property valued at $972,952.

General Minutes, MEC.

O. W. Nail, Texas Methodism. 1961.

C. G. Wallenius and E. D. Olson, A Short Story of the Swedish Methodism in America, reprint from Vol. 2, The Swedish Element in America. Chicago, 1931.

FREDERICK E. MASER

SOUTHERN GERMAN CONFERENCE (ME) was organized at Industry, Texas, Jan. 15, 1874 with Bishop THOMAS BOWMAN presiding.

Methodist work among the Germans in LOUISIANA and TEXAS began in the 1840's. In the spring of 1842, some Germans who had moved from CINCINNATI to NEW ORLEANS invited Peter Schmucker to come down and preach to them. Schmucker organized a class and entrusted it to Karl Bremer, a young man who had been converted in Germany and was licensed as a local preacher in America. When the MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE met in November (it included Louisiana at that time), the appointments listed a German mission in New Orleans, and the next year Bremer was appointed preacher in charge. When the LOUISIANA CONFERENCE (MES) was organized in 1847 it had three German mission appointments in New Orleans. Because of upheavals in Europe, many Germans emigrated to Texas between 1845 and 1850. The Texas Conference (MES) first listed a German appointment in 1848.

The M. E. Church on reentering the South following the Civil War quickly developed work among the Germans in Texas and Louisiana. The TEXAS CONFERENCE (ME) was organized in 1867, and though primarily a conference of Negro ministers and churches, it reported a German district of three charges the first year. The 1870 minutes of the Northern Church's Louisiana Conference (organized in 1869) show a German mission in New Orleans.

When the Southern German Conference began in 1874 it included all of the German preachers and churches which had been in the TEXAS CONFERENCE, and beginning in 1880 the conference also took in the German work of the denomination in Louisiana. In 1880 the conference reported four districts—Austin, Dallas, New Orleans, and San Antonio—twenty-five charges, and 1,251 members.

The Southern German Conference felt the need of native trained leadership and endeavored to establish Immanuel Institute at Rutersville. It was short-lived, and five years later the conference started Mission Institute at Brenham. In a few years it was called Blinn Memorial College in honor of the man who gave it $20,000. About the turn of the century Blinn was a fairly strong institution. Then financial and other problems beset it, the interest of the conference became lukewarm, and in 1934 the school became a municipal junior college.

The last session of the Southern German Conference was held in New Orleans, Oct. 31 to Nov. 4, 1923. To avoid embarrassment the word "German" was deleted from the name, and it became the Southern Conference. In 1923 the Southern German Conference reported two districts, thirty-three charges, 4,445 members, and property valued at $392,275.

E. S. Bucke, History of American Methodism. 1964.

P. F. Douglass, German Methodism. 1939.

General Minutes, ME, MES.

FREDERICK E. MASER

SOUTHERN ILLINOIS CONFERENCE of The United Methodist Church is located in the southern third of the state of ILLINOIS. Methodism entered this territory in the person of Joseph Lillard, a Methodist local preacher, who preached there a short while in 1793. In 1797 Hosea Rigg established Methodism in St. Clair County.

Illinois was in the WESTERN CONFERENCE, 1803-12; in the TENNESSEE CONFERENCE, 1812-16; and in the MISSOURI CONFERENCE, 1816-24. The Southern Illinois Conference was separated from the ILLINOIS CONFERENCE

ENCE in 1852. The first session of the new conference was at Belleville, October 27, with Bishop E. R. AMES presiding. There were forty-six pastoral charges with 14,948 members and sixty-five traveling preachers.

The early years were not entirely peaceful ones. In 1864 Southern sympathizers among the Methodists were forced to withdraw and organize separate bodies which were called (in various places) the Illinois Christian Association, the Christian Union of Illinois, and the Christian Union Church. These bodies came together to form the Southern Illinois Conference of the M.E. Church, South. At a convention on June 8, 1867, Bishop DAVID S. DOGGETT welcomed them into Southern Church. The first conference was Oct. 16, 1867, at Nashville, Ill., with Bishop Doggett presiding.

Large numbers of German-speaking immigrants settled in Southern Illinois prior to the Civil War. In 1857 two German language Districts were created in Southern Illinois. In 1864 these became part of the ST. LOUIS GERMAN CONFERENCE where they remained until 1924 when merger brought them back into the Southern Illinois Conference. Thirteen charges and ten pastors were received at that time.

At unification in 1939, the ILLINOIS CONFERENCE of the M.E. CHURCH, SOUTH, and the ILLINOIS CONFERENCE of the M.P. CHURCH came into the Southern Illinois Conference of The Methodist Church. In 1968 the ILLINOIS CONFERENCE of the E.U.B. CHURCH was merged into the larger body.

Benevolent institutions of the conference include McKENDREE COLLEGE, the oldest college in the Midwest founded at Lebanon in 1828; Holden Hospital (Carbondale); the Children's Home (Mt. Vernon); Alton Memorial Hospital; the Old Folk's Home (Lawrenceville); and a number of small educational institutions which have passed out of existence.

In 1970 the conference reported 76,125 members in 240 charges served by 325 ministers.

J. C. Evers, Southern Illinois Conference, 1964.

Journal of the Southern Illinois Conference.

J. GORDON MELTON

SOUTHERN METHODIST CHURCH was formed in 1934 by members of several congregations of the M.E. Church, South, who did not wish to participate in the merger with the M.E. Church. They felt that the M.E. Church was apostate and full of heresy and infidelity and also that merger would eventuate in the racial integration of the annual conferences and churches.

The withdrawing members, meeting in convocation at Columbia, S. C., set up plans to perpetuate what they considered to be the M.E. Church, South. In attempting to retain local church property and the name "Methodist Episcopal Church, South," the group became the center of a series of landmark court decisions culminating in the mandate of Judge George Bell Timmerman on March 12, 1945. The bishops of The Methodist Church were legally established as representatives of the membership of The Methodist Church with control over its property; and the name, "Methodist Episcopal Church, South," was established as the property of its legal successor, The Methodist Church. The name Southern Methodist Church was then adopted by the withdrawing group.

The church claims to be Arminian-Wesleyan in doctrine and has added statements of belief on prevenient

GRACE, the WITNESS OF THE SPIRIT, CHRISTIAN PERFECTION, and the evangelization of the world. It has also added statements on the creation account of Genesis, premillennialism, and Satan. It is somewhat unique among American denominations, for it has placed a statement favoring racial segregation among the doctrinal beliefs.

Departing from its episcopal heritage, the new body is congregational in polity. It retains the annual and general conference but has dropped the office of district superintendent and replaced the bishop with a quadrennially elected president.

The church grew very little for the first twenty years but experienced a large growth in the 1960's concurrent with the national racial crisis. Its present membership approximates 10,000 in two conferences in over forty local congregations. The church operates a school, Southern Methodist College, at Orangeburg, S. C. Also at Orangeburg is the headquarters and Foundry Press, which publishes the Discipline and the monthly Southern Methodist, the two official publications of the church.

The Southern Methodist Church is a member of both the American and International Councils of Christian Churches and is associated with the FUNDAMENTAL METHODIST CHURCH, EVANGELICAL METHODIST CHURCH IN AMERICA, and the METHODIST PROTESTANT CHURCH in the International Fellowship of Bible Methodists. Missions are supported in NIGERIA, Tanganyika, and Ethiopia; and other independent missions are partially supported.

Discipline of the Southern Methodist Church, 1960.

Issues of the Southern Methodist.

Walter McElreath, Methodist Union in the Courts, 1946.

J. GORDON MELTON

SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIVERSITY, Dallas, Texas, was established by the educational commission appointed in 1910 by the five annual conferences of the M.E. Church, South, in Texas. These annual conferences confirmed the work of their commission which resulted in the university's being chartered by the State of Texas on April 17, 1911. The university was designated as the connectional institution for all conferences west of the Mississippi River by action of the General Conference of the M.E. Church, South, in 1914.

Classes began in the university on September 22, 1915. Its first-year class of 706 students was at that time the largest first-year enrollment of any university in this country's history. At its opening it had two buildings and thirty-five faculty members. In 1964 it had seventy buildings, fifty of which were erected after the Second World War. (Combined assets of the two universities founded in 1914, EMORY and Southern Methodist, had grown to $153,558,628 in forty-eight years.)

The properties of the university in 1914 were vested with trustees elected by the General Conference of the M.E. Church, South. At the uniting conference in 1939 this responsibility was shifted to the South Central Jurisdiction of The Methodist Church. A Phi Beta Kappa chapter was established in 1949.

Schools are the University College, the schools of Humanities and Sciences, Business, Engineering, Arts, Law, and Theology, the Graduate School, and Dallas College.

The governing board has sixty-three trustees: eight bishops, twenty-five members at large elected by the South Central Jurisdiction, and thirty from the annual conferences of the jurisdiction. The Board of Governors has twenty members, of whom eleven are trustees.

JOHN O. GROSS

SOUTHERN NEW JERSEY CONFERENCE (MC) was authorized by the 1964 NORTHEASTERN JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCE when New Jersey was designated as an episcopal area. The Jurisdictional Conference recommended that the two New Jersey annual conferences change their names to NORTHERN NEW JERSEY and Southern New Jersey. Both conferences concurred. Bishop PRINCE A. TAYLOR presided at the session of the New Jersey Conference at Ocean City when it voted on June 10, 1965 to change its name to the Southern New Jersey Conference, effective July 1 of that year. At that time the conference had four districts, 316 charges, 105,450 members, and property valued at $60,848,949.

The New Jersey Conference (ME) was created by the 1836 GENERAL CONFERENCE. It was formed by dividing the Philadelphia Conference to which New Jersey Methodism had been attached from the beginning. (See New Jersey for the beginning of Methodism in the state.) The New Jersey Conference was organized at Newark, April 26, 1837 with Bishop BEVERLY WAUGH presiding. It began with four districts, Camden, Newark, Paterson, and Trenton, 71 charges, and, 18,060 members. The Rahway and Burlington Districts were added in 1842, and the Newton District in 1852. Twenty years after it was created, the New Jersey Conference membership had doubled, and in 1856 the General Conference divided it to form the NEWARK CONFERENCE. Thereafter the New Jersey Conference included a little more than the southern half of the state.

After the Newark Conference was set off, the New Jersey Conference had 119 preachers and 20,457 members. Because of the Civil War growth of the New Jersey Conference was negligible until 1867 when it reported 24,117 members. Thereafter the membership increased steadily, and in 1900 it was 50,470. The conference came to unification in 1939 with four districts, 298 charges, and 80,214 members. A part of the Eastern Conference (MP) was merged with the New Jersey Conference at that time.

The New Jersey Conference supported the PENNINGTON SCHOOL and DICKINSON COLLEGE from the beginning. Pennington has continued and is today a strong Methodist secondary school with an endowment of $2,000,000, a plant valued at $2,500,000, and 250 students. The conference has sustained a close relationship with Dickinson College though the school is in PENNSYLVANIA. Following the Civil War the conference approved the FREEDIEN'S AID SOCIETY and raised money for its work. Also, it gave support to DREW THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY and DREW UNIVERSITY when they appeared.

Beginning about 1900, the New Jersey Conference developed a close relationship with the Methodist Hospital at PHILADELPHIA. It gave support to the Methodist Home for the aged, established at Collingswood in 1888, and to the Methodist Deaconess Center, started at Camden in 1913. In later years the New Jersey Conference joined the NEWARK CONFERENCE in establishing homes for the aged at OCEAN GROVE, OCEAN CITY, Branchville, and Collingswood. The conference maintains a youth camp called the Conference Center at Brown's Mill. The two conferences cooperate in WESLEY FOUNDATIONS at Princeton and Rutgers, and they maintain campus ministries at nine state colleges.

In 1940, one year after unification, the New Jersey Conference reported four districts, 299 charges, and 81,944 members.

In 1965 the New Jersey Conference received twenty-two ministers and twenty charges from the DELAWARE CONFERENCE of the CENTRAL JURISDICTION as that conference was merged with the overlying conferences of the Northeastern Jurisdiction. These ministers and churches represented about fifteen percent of the strength of the Delaware Conference.

In 1970 the Southern New Jersey Conference reported six districts, Camden-Metropolitan, Central, Northeast, Southeast, Northwest, and Southwest, 311 charges, about 322 preachers, 109,671 members, property valued at $78,894,195, and $5,482,679 raised for all purposes during the year.

J. Atkinson, Memorials in New Jersey. 1860.

General Minutes, ME, TMC, UMC.

Minutes of the New Jersey and Southern New Jersey Conferences.

F. B. Stanger, New Jersey. 1961. FRANK BATEMAN STANGER

SOUTHGATE, THOMAS SUMMERVILLE (1868-1928), American financier and lay leader in the Southern Methodist Church, was born in Richmond, Va., in 1868, the son of Thomas M. and Mary E. (Portlock) Southgate. He established the T. S. Southgate and Company Wholesale Provisions at NORFOLK, Va., in 1892 and also became a prominent director in various important companies in VIRGINIA and over the South. He saw that Hampton Roads would be an important factor in the nation's commerce, and developed at that gateway a vast center of distribution of manufactured products to all southern markets. The business grew enormously. It was later incorporated as T. S. Southgate and Company and of this he was president until his death when it had become one of the largest of its kind in America.

He married Nettie Duncan Norsworthy of Norfolk on Oct. 6, 1891, and to them were born five children. T. S. Southgate was the first conference lay leader of the VIRGINIA CONFERENCE of the M.E. CHURCH, SOUTH, and one of the first to be aware of the possibilities of laymen as an organized force in the Methodist Church. He was known far and wide as an ardent supporter of missions and had great influence among the laymen in the Church. He was a member of the Norfolk City Council for eight years, a director of the Norfolk and Western Railway, and the vice-president of the American Commission to Europe in 1913 which was to study rural credits. Out of this Commission's report grew the present farm Loan Bank System.

Thomas Southgate was a life-long tither and was repeatedly elected president of the Southern Methodist LAYMEN'S ASSOCIATION. He was state chairman of the organization that raised $3,500,000 in Virginia for missions, and $1,250,000 for Christian education—an unusually large amount for that day. It was said of him, "Although multitudinous enterprises drew heavily upon his time and energy, he did not permit them to shut him out of a full life as a citizen nor as an alert and understanding participant in the larger affairs of the nation." He had a great interest in the peculiar economic and social problems of the Negro people of his state, and he worked and befriended that race helping in its development, "and by its individuals he was beloved." (The National Cyclopaedia of American Biography) Southgate died in Philadelphia, Pa., on Sept. 27, 1928.

National Cyclopaedia of American Biography.
Norfolk Ledger-Dispatch, Sept. 28, 1928.
Richmond Christian Advocate, May 26, 1932.
Who's Who in America, 1928-29.

N. B. H.

SOUTHLANDS TRAINING SCHOOL

SOUTHLANDS TRAINING COLLEGE, British teachers' training college for women, was founded by the Wesleyan (now Methodist) Education Committee in Battersea, London, in 1872 to train teachers to work first and foremost in the Methodist day schools. To it were transferred a small group of women students from WESTMINSTER COLLEGE—which has begun as a mixed college twenty years earlier. These formed the nucleus of the new college at a time when it was a most unusual thing for a woman to leave her home in order to train for a career of her own. The college grew in size and reputation for fifty years when the committee decided to move it to a more open site permitting further developments and offering better facilities for study and recreation.

The magnificent site on Wimbledon Parkside (formerly owned by the Royal House of France) was purchased, and the college was transferred to its present premises in 1929.

From 1949 to the present day it has been constantly enlarged, so that in ideal conditions and a rural setting six miles from the center of London, five hundred women students train for service in the secondary/modern and primary schools of England and go out to teach all over the world.

The religious life of the college is conducted in accordance with the tenets and usage of the Methodist Church directed by the principal and Methodist chaplain of the college. Daily worship is an integral part of the corporate life of the college, and special attention is given to the systematic instruction of the Bible and in the preparation of the students for giving Bible lessons.

Southlands today is a constituent college of the University of London Institute of Education, and its large tutorial staff are lecturers of the institute. It continues to be directed by its own governing body which is responsible to the Methodist Education Committee, and which owes many of its beautiful buildings to the generosity of Methodist benefactors both great and small.

M. S. JOHNSON

SOUTHWEST CONFERENCE began as a conference of the M. E. Church. It was organized at Muskogee, Okla., on Dec. 4, 1929 with Bishop CHARLES L. MEAD presiding. Its territory was ARKANSAS and OKLAHOMA, and it was formed by merging the LITTLE ROCK CONFERENCE with the Oklahoma part of the Lincoln Conference. At its beginning the Southwest Conference had four districts—Fort Smith, Hot Springs, Little Rock, and Oklahoma—eighty-eight charges, 7,156 members, and property valued at $608,766.

In 1848 the M. E. Church reentered MISSOURI, Arkansas, and the territory to the west. Following the Civil War the denomination had an Arkansas Conference composed of both white and Negro churches and ministers. In 1878 the Negro work of the Arkansas Conference was set off as the Little Rock Conference. The new conference began with two districts and twenty-nine charges. At the end of the first year it reported 1,443 members. In 1900 there were four districts and 4,502 members. At its last session in 1928 the Little Rock Conference reported three districts, seventy-one charges, 5,915 members, and property valued at $480,615.

In 1902 the M. E. Church organized the Okaneb Conference. It was formed by merging the Negro work of the Oklahoma Conference with the western part of the Central Missouri Conference, a Negro conference. The territory of the Okaneb Conference was Oklahoma, KANSAS, NEBRASKA, and western Missouri. The next year the name was changed to the Lincoln Conference. The Lincoln Conference began with two districts—Oklahoma and Topeka—forty-seven charges, 1,878 members, and property valued at $67,215. At its last session in 1928 it reported four districts, sixty-seven charges, 3,665 members, and property valued at $612,256. Some 1,250 of the members were in Oklahoma.

At unification in 1939 the Southwest Conference became a part of the CENTRAL JURISDICTION. It reported that year three districts—Fort Smith, Little Rock, and Oklahoma—eighty-one charges, 6,361 members, and property valued at $373,420. After the Second World War the number of church members in the conference steadily declined, particularly in Arkansas. The report of the district superintendents in 1967 declared that at one time the Little Rock District had strong rural churches with families that owned their homes and farmed their own land. But as time passed the older generation died, the people left the farms, and the churches had become only skeletons of what they had been in former days. The conference reported 4,853 members in 1953, a twenty-four per cent decline from the 1939 figure.

The Southwest Conference and its predecessor bodies have supported PHILANDER SMITH COLLEGE. Founded in 1877, Philander Smith has become a strong Methodist senior college. It has a plant valued at $3,000,000, an endowment of about $600,000, and an enrolment of more than 800.

On the abolition of the Central Jurisdiction in 1968, the Southwest Conference became a part of the Little Rock Area of the SOUTH CENTRAL JURISDICTION pending merger.

In 1970 the Southwest Conference reported two districts—Little Rock and Oklahoma—forty-one charges, about forty-three ministers, 3,095 members, and property valued at $1,363,279.

General Minutes, MEC and MC.
Minutes of the Southwest Conference.

ALBEA COBOLD

SOUTHWEST KANSAS CONFERENCE (ME) was organized at Burlington, March 1, 1882 with Bishop H. W. WARREN presiding. It was formed by dividing the SOUTH KANSAS CONFERENCE and it included "all territory west of the east line of Cowley, Butler and Marion Counties and south of the north line of Marion, McPherson, Rice and Barton Counties and of this line continuing directly west to the west line of the state." This meant that the conference was comprised of approximately the west two-thirds of the south half of the state.

At its organization the conference had three districts—Wichita, Newton, and Larned—and fifty-two ministers, sixty-seven charges, and 6,370 members. During the first ten years there was rapid growth; in 1892 the conference had 129 charges and 19,166 members. Southwest Kansas was the first conference in the connection to require each candidate for admission to pledge that he would refrain from the use of tobacco.

The conference established a number of institutions. SOUTHWESTERN COLLEGE (called Southwest Kansas College until 1908) was founded at Winfield in 1885. Wesley Hospital was established at Hutchinson in 1912; it moved to Wichita in 1917. In 1915 Stewart Hospital at Hutchinson was acquired; its name was changed to Grace Hospital in 1922. In 1924 Epworth Hospital at Liberal was purchased for $50,000. The conference joined other conferences in the state in building a home for the aged at Topeka in 1904 and in launching a children's home at Newton in 1927.

At the time of unification in 1939, the Southwest Kansas Conference merged with the Northwest Kansas Conference to form the CENTRAL KANSAS CONFERENCE. The Southwest Conference brought to the merger 213 pastoral charges and 66,457 members.

Herbert, Barton and Ward, Southwest Kansas Conference. 1932.

D. W. Holter, Fire on the Prairie. 1969.

Minutes of the Southwest Kansas Conference.

FREDERICK E. MASER

SOUTHWEST MISSOURI CONFERENCE was organized at Lexington, Mo., Sept. 30, 1874 with Bishop JOHN C. KEENER presiding. It superseded the West St. Louis Conference which had been formed by dividing the ST. LOUIS CONFERENCE in 1870. The territory of these two conferences was the same, the southwest quarter of the state. At the end of its first year in 1871 the West St. Louis Conference reported six districts and 12,529 members.

In 1905 the Southwest Missouri Conference absorbed the WESTERN CONFERENCE which included all Southern Methodist work in Kansas, and designated it as the Western District. At the time there were nineteen charges and over 2,300 members in Kansas. After 1914 the Western District was abolished and the Kansas work was incorporated in the Kansas City District of the Southwest Missouri Conference.

The Southwest Missouri Conference grew steadily. In 1900 it had 31,780 members, and in 1939 it brought into The Methodist Church 125 charges and 41,516 members. In 1941 it had 65,918 members.

From its beginning the Southwest Missouri Conference joined the Missouri and St. Louis Conferences in supporting CENTRAL COLLEGE at Fayette. The Southwest Missouri Conference was also more or less affiliated with several other schools. In 1872 the Springfield District of the conference projected Morrisville Institute which continued under varying names and with tenuous conference affiliation as an academy or a college until 1924. Cottey College at Nevada began in 1884 and was under the auspices of the conference for a long period. In 1927 the institution was acquired by the P. E. O. SCARRITT COLLEGE, now in Nashville, Tenn., began as a Bible and Training School in KANSAS CITY in 1892 and was operated there until 1924.

The names of Bishop EUGENE R. HENDRIX and NATHAN SCARRITT are associated with the early history of the Southwest Missouri Conference. While never a member of the conference, Hendrix lived in Kansas City from 1856 till his death in 1927. Because of Scarritt's generosity when Scarritt College was founded, the school was named for him.

All of the Southwest Missouri Conference territory became a part of the MISSOURI WEST CONFERENCE in 1961. At its final session in 1961 the Southwest Missouri Conference had six districts, Joplin, Kansas City, Marshall, Nevada, Sedalia, and Springfield. It reported 251 charges, 405 churches, 93,878 members, and property valued at $25,988,328.

General Minutes, MECS and MC.

Minutes of the Southwest Missouri Conference.

F. C. Tucker, Missouri. 1966. FREDERICK E. MASER

SOUTHWEST TEXAS CONFERENCE (MC) goes back to the Rio Grande Mission Conference created by the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1858. The Mission Conference was organized at Goliad, Texas, Nov. 9, 1859 with JESSE BORING presiding in the absence of Bishop GEORGE F. PIERCE. It was formed by dividing the TEXAS CONFERENCE. At the beginning the Rio Grande Mission Conference included west, southwest, and a part of north-west TEXAS. This meant that it had within its bounds not only the territory of the present Southwest Texas Conference, but also parts of the territory of the present CENTRAL TEXAS, NORTHWEST TEXAS, and NEW MEXICO CONFERENCES.

In 1862 the Rio Grande Mission Conference was designated as the RIO GRANDE CONFERENCE. In 1866 the name was changed to the West Texas Conference, and on Oct. 17, 1939 at SAN ANTONIO, with Bishop A. FRANK SMITH presiding, the West Texas Conference became the Southwest Texas Conference of The Methodist Church.

The Rio Grande Mission Conference began with twenty-five charges, twelve preachers, and 1,257 white and 138 colored members. Among early conference leaders was "Fighting Parson" ANDREW JACKSON POTTER who organized more than a dozen churches. Others prominent in the early days were H. C. Horton who preached in the Indian territory around Uvalde, JOHN WESLEY DE VILBISS who delivered the first Protestant sermon in San Antonio in 1844, and organized a Methodist class there in June, 1846, and HOMER S. THRALL who later wrote A Brief History of Methodism in Texas. Among the twelve preachers at the beginning were three Germans, an indication of the strong German element in southwest Texas.

The first Methodist society in southwest Texas was organized at Bastrop in 1833 by James Gilleland, a layman. He conducted a service in an unfinished warehouse, using a barrel for a pulpit, and then formed the society with eleven charter members, one of whom was a Negro slave woman, Celia Craft. The next year DAVID AYERS organized the first SUNDAY SCHOOL in Texas at old San Patricion. Because he proved zealous in distributing Spanish New Testaments, Ayers was driven out of the colony by an irate priest.

In the early years the West Texas Conference established a number of academies and colleges. At one time or another the following towns and cities had a Methodist school or college: Rutersville, San Angelo, San Saba, Cherokee, Lampasas, Fredericksburg, Austin, Bastrop, San Marcos, Seguin, San Antonio, and Goliah. Some of the institutions failed during the Civil War; others gave way to an advancing state program of high school and college training. Rutersville College was one of the four that preceded SOUTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY at Georgetown, which now has the support of all the Texas conferences and which is the oldest Protestant college in Texas.

At its first session in 1859 the Rio Grande Mission Conference appointed Robert P. Thompson as a missionary to the Mexicans of the Rio Grande Valley. In 1874 the West Texas Conference set up the Mexican Border Mission District with six charges, and by 1881 there were two Mexican districts with 732 members. This work led to the formation of the Mexican Border Mission Conference in 1885. (See RIO GRANDE CONFERENCE.)

In 1874 the German work in Texas and LOUISIANA was organized as the German Mission Conference. In 1917 the name was changed to the Southwest Texas Conference, but the next year the conference was abolished and the German churches and ministers were received into the overlying English-speaking conferences. The merger brought about 1,300 members into the West Texas Conference. For the next three years the West Texas Conference maintained a separate district for the German churches.

The West Texas Conference came to unification in 1939 with eight districts, 179 pastoral charges, 64,958 members, and property valued at $5,409,396. As the Southwest Texas Conference of The Methodist Church, its membership increased eighty per cent between 1939 and 1968.

The Southwest Texas Conference has four retirement homes which can accommodate 700 guests: Hilltop Village at Kerrville, the Golden Age Home at Lockhart, Morningside Manor at San Antonio, and Wesley Manor at Weslaco. There are two hospitals: Knapp Memorial at Weslaco, and Southwest Texas Methodist at San Antonio. The conference maintains a Methodist Building at San Antonio, and the Methodist Kerrville Association, a recreational and educational camping facility at Kerrville. It joins the other Texas Conferences in supporting the Methodist Children's Home at Waco and the WESLEY FOUNDATIONS at the state institutions of higher learning. The conference contributed in 1968 for Methodist colleges, seminaries, and Wesley Foundations $187,473.

In 1970 the Southwest Texas Conference had six districts, 272 charges, 469 ministers, 114,971 members, and property valued at $57,348,400. The total amount raised for all purposes that year was $8,534,573.

R. F. Curl, Southwest Texas. 1951.

General Minutes, MES, TMC, UMC.

Minutes of the Southwest Texas Conference.

O. W. Nail, Texas Methodism. 1961.

M. Phelan, Methodism in Texas. 1924. L. U. SPELLMAN

SOUTHWESTERN CHRISTIAN RECORDER. A publication of the African Methodist Episcopal Church. (See AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, Publications.)

SOUTHWESTERN COLLEGE, Winfield, Kansas, was founded by the M. E. Church as Southwest Kansas Conference College in 1885. The name was changed to the present one in 1908.

In 1950, Richardson Hall, the main building of the institution, was totally destroyed by fire. Previously North Hall, the original building, had been condemned by the state fire marshal. The loss of these two buildings precipitated a crisis in the life of the college. A special session of the Central Kansas Conference was called, and it was voted to proceed with a million-dollar building program on the campus at Winfield. This initiated a plan that has made it possible for the college to have a new and modern educational plant. It offers the B.A. and B.M. (Music) degrees. The governing board has thirty-five members, elected by the Central Kansas Annual Conference.

JOHN O. GROSS

SOUTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY, Georgetown, Texas, was chartered in 1840 as Rutersville College honoring MARTIN RUTER, the founder of the Methodist Church in Texas. News of the decisive battle of San Jacinto, which freed Texas from Mexico, was received while the General Conference was in session at Cincinnati, Ohio. Ruter, then president of ALLEGHENY COLLEGE, volunteered to go to Texas and must be considered a founder of that state along with Sam Houston and the Austins, Moses and Stephen.

Under the leadership of FRANCIS ASBURY MOOD, president of Soule University, the rights and assets of Rutersville College and those of three other Methodist colleges—Wesleyan, founded in 1844, McKenzie, 1848, and Soule University, 1856—were transferred to project a central university at Georgetown. This institution opened as Texas University in 1873, and in 1875 the name was changed to Southwestern University. Degrees offered are the B.A., B.S., B.S. in Education, B.M. (Music), B.S. in Business, B.F.A. (Fine Arts). The governing board has twenty-six members, plus four ex officio; nineteen elected by the annual conferences of TEXAS and NEW MEXICO, seven elected at large.

JOHN O. GROSS

SPAIN. It could well be said that Spanish Methodism began in GIBRALTAR, where, as happened in so many other places, British soldiers, here as early as 1792, began to hold services among themselves under the leadership of ANDREW ARMOUR, a Glasgow Scot who had been converted in a Wesleyan chapel in Ireland while on military service there. The Wesleyan METHODIST MISSIONARY SOCIETY took an early interest in this work, seeing Gibraltar as a possible pied à terre for an advance into the Iberian Peninsula, as well as into countries of the eastern Mediterranean region. The first missionaries sent fell early victims of yellow fever, but in 1832 WILLIAM H. RULE came to Gibraltar from service in Malta and St. Vincent, and soon began a determined effort to evangelize Spain, especially through the circulation of the Scriptures. Rule was a man of intellectual gifts above the average, full of energy and zeal, and of clear mind and determined will. He succeeded in initiating class meetings in Cadiz and tried to establish evangelical churches and schools in various places. His enthusiasm infected the Committee of the Society to the point of their coming to envisage Gibraltar as a potential nursery for Spanish work, not only in Spain itself but in Spanish America. This dream, however, did not materialize. Even so fearless a man as Rule, before the all-powerful Roman Church, was forced to retire from direct activity in Spain, and in 1839 this first chapter was brought to a close. Nevertheless, the pamphlets and booklets published by Rule, together with his collection of hymns and his Bible commentaries, have greatly helped many and various generations of Spanish evangelicals down the years. A larger work of his, a well documented study of the Inquisition, was probably also inspired by his experience at this time.

The continuing history of Spanish Methodism began some quarter of a century later, when in 1868 the September Revolution, led by General Prim, opened the doors of Spain to the preaching of the Gospel. The temporary breakdown of the monarchy, though not leading to the establishment of democratic government as many hoped, brought a greater measure of toleration, and the Wesleyan Missionary Society, in common with other evangelical churches, was quick to take advantage of this new opportunity. George Alton, then missionary in Gibraltar, sent a number of agents to work in Barcelona and the Balearic Islands, with the injunction, as he said to one, "to act as a good man and a Methodist among his friends, while pursuing his own (secular) calling." These colporteurs met with an encouraging response.

The first missionary to be sent from Britain directly to Spain was a layman, W. T. Brown, who had learned Spanish in order to work among Spanish sailors in the Port of London. He opened a school in Barcelona, and by 1876 there were three preaching places there, with an aggregate membership of twenty-three. Brown was later ordained in 1879, and served for a number of years after in the Balearic Islands. The first Methodist church in Spain, later moved to its present situation in the Calle de Tallers 26, Barcelona, was constituted in September of 1871, with a membership of ten. Soon the work was extended to various outskirts of Barcelona, churches and schools being set up in Pueblo Nuevo, Clot, Rubí, San Cugat, and in the Balearic Islands. In this latter place rapid progress was made, the membership there in 1876 reaching 118. The work in the Balearics has always remained relatively strong, down to the present day, when many tourists visit the churches there.

Among the missionaries who worked in Spain may be noted: Robert Simpson (1876-1889), marked by a saintliness which transfigured his human quality of friendship, and of whom Romanist and Protestant alike used to say "Don Roberto is a saint"; J. G. Wheatcroft Brown (1883-1896), who became Chairman of the District in succession to Simpson in 1889; Franklyn G. Smith (1884-1916), whose tenacity and sanguine activity secured the continued existence of the Church through highly critical periods, and whose thirty-two years of ministry, first in the Balearic Islands for eight years, and then in Barcelona, probably constituted the most significant missionary contribution made to Spanish Methodism; and J. W. Lord (1916-1924), and Samuel H. G. Saunders (1924-1933), these latter consolidating the extension work done by Franklyn G. Smith.

These missionaries were splendidly supported by various Spanish workers, among whom may be mentioned:

D. Esteban Cirera, who labored meritoriously in Minorca and Barcelona; D. Miguel Longas, former Roman Catholic Missionary in Africa, Chile and Spain, professor of philosophy at Tiers, and one of the most popular and eloquent of Spanish priests, who, from his conversion in 1899, to the time of his death in 1918, like the Apostle Paul, preached with great effect the faith of which he once made havoc; and Juan Bibiloni, first a colporteur and later a lay-pastor in Majorca. The first Spanish superintendent of the Mission was D. José Capo (1920-1953), who, with his two brothers, D. Juan and D. Samuel, carried the work forward. Each of these three brothers gave also a son to the ministry, D. Alfred, D. Humberto and D. Enrique respectively, the two latter now occupying important positions in the United Spanish Evangelical Church, of which D. Humberto is First Secretary.

Parallel with this activity there arose in other parts of Spain work which came under the auspices of the M. E. Church. The founder of this work was Pastor Francisco Albricias, a convert from Roman Catholicism, who had worked in Catalonia, and who, for health reasons, set up home in Alicante, where he began to hold evangelical meetings; in January of 1897 he opened a day school to which, not being able to use the name "Protestant," he gave the title of "Escuela Modelo" ("Model School"), which grew considerably from its beginnings in a tent, until it came to be housed in a large and handsome building. In 1919 realizing the need for greater material resources than those he could personally command, Albricias offered the school and church of Alicante, together with those in Seville, to the M.E. Church, which in 1920 organized its SPANISH METHODIST MISSION.

The onward march of the Methodist Missions in Spain was interrupted by the Revolution of 1936 and the Civil War which lasted until 1939. The principal workers, both in the British related work in Catalonia, as in the Andalusian churches of the M. E. Church, had to flee the country, and from 1939 on the churches were closed, surviving only in private houses, where meetings continued to be held. Thus, clandestinely, the Church survived. It was not until 1945, with the publication of the "Fuero (Constitution) de los Españoles" which permitted Protestants to hold worship services "provided they are held within buildings and with no public manifestations," that the churches could begin to reorganize themselves. The churches of the Spanish Episcopal Methodist Mission had suffered very great damage, and what was left of them was integrated in the Spanish Evangelical Church, which for a long time had been a kind of Federation linking the different Missions which were working in Spain, and which from 1945 onwards began to emerge as an embryonic national church made up of the various Missions.

The Catalanian Methodists in 1945 reorganized their churches and their circuits, with the help of George Bell (1948-1955), of the Methodist Missionary Society of Great Britain, and in 1955 the Mission was integrated into the new Evangelical Church of Spain ("Iglesia Evangelica Española"), made up of Lutheran, Reformed and Methodist elements, and of whose total membership Methodists represented about a quarter part. In 1969 this Church continued to progress, and owed much to the Methodist contribution which it received a decade and a half ago.

AUGUST G. SPANGENBERG

SPANGENBERG, AUGUST GOTTLIEB (1704-1792), MORAVIAN, was born at Klettenberg on July 15, 1704, the son of a Lutheran pastor. He was influenced by Count NICOLAUS ZINZENDORF and the Moravians and became deeply interested in missionary work. Spangenberg was much impressed by the Moravian settlement at Herrnhut, declined a chair of theology at Halle University, and became a Moravian. John Wesley was convinced of his lack of faith by Spangenberg, who shared with PETER BÖHLER the honor of bringing the two Wesley brothers to their historic experience in 1738. Spangenberg organized Moravian missionary work in England, and set up headquarters at Lightcliffe in 1742, a few months later organizing the first London Moravian congregation at FETTER LANE. He died at Berthelsdorf in September, 1792.

C. W. TOWLSON

SPANN, JOHN RICHARD (1891-), American pastor, theological teacher and secretary of the Commission of Ministerial Education of The Methodist Church, was born near Valley View, Tex., Oct. 2, 1891, the son of Frank White and Mary Ussery Spann. He received the A.B. degree from RANDOLPH-MACON COLLEGE, 1915, the D.D. in 1932; the M.A. from SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIVERSITY, 1916; the B.D. from DREW UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY, 1918; he did post graduate work for a year at Union Theological Seminary and Columbia University, before becoming a navy chaplain in June of 1918. He served in that capacity until the end of the war. On July 12, 1918, he married Julia Mouzon (deceased Oct. 31, 1932). The Rev. Edwin Spann of the VIRGINIA CONFERENCE is their son. June 4, 1949 he married Cecile Clark (deceased Oct. 13, 1963).

Dr. Spann served a number of churches in TEXAS and MISSOURI before becoming a teacher in the School of Theology of Southern Methodist University, 1923-27. He later became the pastor of other churches in TEXAS and LOUISIANA, including First Church, BATON ROUGE, La., 1933-41, and Laurel Heights Church, SAN ANTONIO, Tex., 1941-46. Following a year of service on the San Antonio District he was elected to the Secretaryship of the Commission on Ministerial Training of The Methodist Church, with headquarters in NASHVILLE, Tenn. Here he united and expanded the correspondence work and the short term training schools for pastors. He also helped in the unification of ministerial education of the ministers under the Board of EDUCATION. He retired in 1961.

N. B. H.

SPARKS, W. MAYNARD (1906-), American E.U.B. bishop, was born in Rockwood, Pa., Dec. 16, 1906, a son of the Rev. and Mrs. George A. Sparks. He was graduated from LEBANON VALLEY COLLEGE in 1927; from UNITED THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY in 1930; and from University of Pittsburgh in 1936.

He was licensed as a Quarterly Conference minister, Nov. 1, 1919; granted license by ALLEGHENY CONFERENCE, CHURCH OF UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST, 1923; and ordained in the same conference by Bishop GRANT D. BATDORF, 1930.

On Oct. 27, 1931 he was married to Blanche M. Frank, and they have three sons.

Following sixteen years of pastoral service in western PENNSYLVANIA, Dr. Sparks was elected Superintendent of Allegheny Conference of The E.U.B. Church, 1946-50. In 1950 he was elected to the faculty of Lebanon Valley College to serve as Assistant Professor of Religion. In 1953 he assumed the office of Chaplain in addition to his teaching duties. In 1958 he was elected a bishop of The E.U.B. Church and assigned to the Western Area with residence in SACRAMENTO, Calif. At the GENERAL CONFERENCES of 1954 and 1958 he served as Recording Secretary. In 1963 and 1967 he was a co-editor of the Book of Discipline. In The United Methodist Church Bishop Sparks was assigned to the SEATTLE AREA.

Overseas assignments were as follows: SIERRA LEONE, West Africa, 1961 and 1967; GERMANY and SWITZERLAND, 1965; BRAZIL, 1967.

Beginning with the 1954-58 quadrennium he was a member of the COMMISSION ON CHURCH UNION, which in cooperation with a similar Commission from The Methodist Church formed a PLAN OF UNION that made possible the advent of The United Methodist Church, Dallas, Tex., April 23, 1968. The Seattle Area over which he presides comprises the CALIFORNIA, NORTHWEST CANADA, and PACIFIC NORTHWEST CONFERENCES formerly of the E.U.B. CHURCH and the PACIFIC NORTHWEST CONFERENCE of the former Methodist Church.

J. S. Fulton, History of the Allegheny Conference. Otterbein Press, 1931.

Minutes of the Western Pennsylvania Conference, EUB, 1966. United Seminary Bulletin, January 1959. A. BYRON FULTON

SPARLING, JOSEPH WALTER (1843-1912), Canadian minister and educationist, was born at Blanshard, Perth County, Ontario, on Feb. 14, 1843, the son of John and Mary (Williams) Sparling. He was educated at St. Mary's High School, VICTORIA UNIVERSITY, and NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY. Ordained in the Methodist ministry in 1871, he served various charges in Ontario from 1874 to 1883. In 1888 he was elected President of the Montreal Conference.

In 1889 he assumed the principalship of WESLEY COLLEGE in WINNIPEG. By 1906 he had a permanent staff of six professors; had removed the mortgage indebtedness, and had established a small endowment fund. A crowning achievement was the opening of Sparling Hall, a ladies' residence, in 1912. He died in Winnipeg on June 16, 1912.

Sparling was a genial and lovable person, who had a remarkable talent for raising and utilizing money effectively. He was recognized as a major figure in his conference and in Canadian Methodism as a whole. He used his gifts for the benefit of Manitoba and his church.

R. S. Cummings, "History of Wesley College." Ms., 1938.

J. H. Riddell, Middle West. 1946.

W. S. Wallace, ed., Macmillan Dictionary of Canadian Biography. London: Macmillan, 1963.

F. W. ARMSTRONG

SPARTANBURG JUNIOR COLLEGE, Spartanburg, S. C., began as the Textile Industrial Institute in 1911. Its founder was DAVID ENGLISH CAMAK, who started with one pupil and $100. The institution was founded to serve persons in the textile industry, and for many years its educational offerings were limited to elementary and secondary education for both adults and children. In 1927 it became a junior college with special emphasis upon combining part-time employment with academic work.

At the time of union of the three branches of Methodism, the college became the property of the Board of Missions of The Methodist Church. It is now operated jointly by this board and the SOUTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE. R. B. Burgess served as president from 1923 to 1962. In 1942 the present name was assumed. The governing board has twenty-three members: sixteen elected by the South Carolina Annual Conference, six by the Division of National Missions, and the general director and the treasurer of the Division of National Missions.

JOHN O. GROSS

SPAUGY, L. DORSEY. (See JUDICIAL COUNCIL.)

SPAULDING, JUSTIN (1802-1865), American preacher and pioneer missionary to BRAZIL, was born in Vermont in 1802, and was received on trial in the NEW ENGLAND CONFERENCE in 1825. He was pastor in Augusta, Maine, when FOUNTAIN E. PITTS appealed to the Missionary Society of the church for a permanent missionary in Rio DE JANEIRO. Bishop ELIJAH HEDDING appointed Spaulding to Rio de Janeiro to initiate what became known in Brazil as the "Spaulding-Kidder Mission." With a wife and a "domestic," he sailed from New York on March 23, 1836. Arriving April 29, he began to room with a German Lutheran family, and that same night preached to some thirty or forty persons—"a small society of pious persons"—which Pitts had organized while in Rio.

In June he moved to larger quarters where he could house a congregation and start a Sunday school. In July 1836, urged by the English-speaking people in Rio, he opened a school for their children. He also distributed Bibles and thousands of tracts in English and Portuguese. In answer to his appeals for help, DANIEL P. KIDDER was sent out as an evangelistic missionary, R. J. McMurdy as a local preacher, and Marcella Russell as teacher for the school. They sailed from Boston on Nov. 12, 1837. The last two mentioned married soon after arrival.

A series of unfortunate circumstances brought about the closing of the mission. The discouraged McMurdy left very soon. Then on April 16, 1840, Kidder's wife, only twenty-two, died and was buried in the British Cambôa Cemetery, where a large tombstone still marks her grave. Kidder, left with two infant children, returned to the States before the end of the year. Only Justin Spaulding remained.

The financial straits of the infant Missionary Society, however, and the conviction that religious liberty was too precarious in Brazil, as there had been so much persecution, led the home Society to recall Spaulding at the end of 1841. One of the members of his congregation, a Mrs. Martha Walker, lived long enough to constitute a continuing link with the Methodism of later years, when J. J. RANSOM arrived and organized a church. At home Justin Spaulding transferred to the NEW HAMPSHIRE CONFERENCE.

J. L. Kennedy, Metodismo no Brasil. 1928. D. A. REILY

SPAULDING, WESLEY J. (1828-1909), American minister and educator, was born in Newark, N. Y., on April 18, 1828, but moved to La Grange County, Ind., where his father was a businessman and banker. He was graduated from Indiana Asbury (DePAUW) in 1854 and later received an M.A. and an honorary Ph.D.

Admitted to the INDIANA ANNUAL CONFERENCE of the M.E. Church, he transferred to the IOWA ANNUAL CONFERENCE in 1855 to become Professor of Latin and Greek at IOWA WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, an institution to which he would devote most of his life. In 1860-61 he was stationed at Ottumwa, Iowa, but returned to the University as vice president and acting president 1861-63. He was assigned in Indiana for one year at Mount Vernon but then accepted a retired relationship because of ill health 1865-69 when he acted as superintendent of schools in Sturgis, Mich. Returning to Iowa in 1870, he served churches in Wapello, Keosauqua, Washington and Fairfield. In 1875 he became vice president of Iowa Wesleyan and was president in 1876.

Spaulding initiated important curricular revisions, expanded the Normal Program and in 1877 effected the affiliation of the University with the Iowa Conservatory of Music which under its founder, Alexander Rommel, made Iowa Wesleyan an effective leader in music education throughout the area.

In 1884 Spaulding resigned the presidency to accept a retired relationship in the Iowa Annual Conference. He continued to reside in Mount Pleasant as an active supply preacher, giving much time to civic and banking affairs.

Spaulding was granted an honorary Litt.D. by Iowa Wesleyan in 1905. His wife, Martha Berry Spaulding, who received an honorary M.A. in 1867, taught occasionally at Iowa Wesleyan. He moved to Denver, Colo., in 1907 and died there on Feb. 22, 1909.

Louis A. Haselmayer, The Presidents of Iowa Wesleyan. Mount Pleasant, 1968.

Iowa Wesleyan Archives.

Minutes of the Iowa Annual Conferences.

LOUIS A. HASELMAYER

SPAYTH, HENRY G. (1788-1873), German-born American United Brethren itinerant preacher and church historian, was born in Wurtemberg, Germany. He was brought to America by his parents at the age of three. His first work as a minister in the Church of the United Brethren in Christ was serving as an itinerant preacher in 1812 in the ORIGINAL CONFERENCE in MARYLAND and VIRGINIA.

Later he moved to Mount Pleasant, Pa., where he both taught school and preached.

He located in Ohio and became presiding elder in the Muskingum Conference during its early years. Then in 1835 he joined the Sandusky Conference, when it was formed, and resided at Tiffin, Ohio for the remainder of his life.

The GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1845 appointed him chairman of a committee to revise the church hymnbook which was published in 1848. The same General Conference requested him to write a denominational history which he did jointly with WILLIAM HANBY, published in 1851. Much of that history was gleaned from personal interviews with early church leaders or the experiences of the two writers.

He died at his home, Sept. 2, 1873. His body was placed to rest in the family vault in the Tiffin Cemetery near the main entrance.

A. W. Drury, History of the U.B. 1924.
Eberly, Albright and Brane, History of the U. B. Church, 1911.
Religious Telescope, Sept. 10, 1873. C. DAVID WRIGHT

SPEARE, ALDEN (1825-1902), American layman, businessman, and philanthropist, was born in Chelsea, Vt. Both his father and grandfather were physicians. His formal education was received in the public schools and in the Newbury Seminary.

Speare moved to BOSTON when he was nineteen and began his business career as a clerk in a drygoods store. Seven years later he established the "Alden Speare & Sons Co.," a firm dealing in oil and laundry supplies. He became one of the leading businessmen of Boston, a charter member and president of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, president of the Associated Boards of Trade, vice-president of the Merchants Association, incorporator and president of Penny Savings Bank, director of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad, and a director of seven other railroads.

Speare was a life-long member of the M.E. Church, which he generously supported. As his wealth increased his liberality grew until he was giving forty percent and finally nearly all his income. He lived in Newton, a suburb of Boston, and was the chief force in building the Newton Center Methodist Church. He had many philanthropic and civic interests, Newton Library, Mayor of Boston among them, but his deepest interest, after his Church, was BOSTON UNIVERSITY. He was a trustee of the University and supported it so generously that the Corporation made him an Associate Founder.

DANIEL L. MARSH

SPEED, FANNY HENNING (1820-1902), was born on Sept. 12, 1820, in Jefferson County, Ky., near LOUISVILLE. Originally from VIRGINIA, the Hennings were wealthy and of high social standing. Fanny Henning attended the academy at Science Hill.

When twenty-two years of age, Miss Henning married Joshua Speed, an intimate personal friend of Abraham Lincoln. Lincoln visited their home in Louisville, and on many matters Speed served as an advisor to the future President. He was offered a place in Lincoln's cabinet but declined. His brother, James, accepted in his stead.

In early life Mrs. Speed became a Christian. Her parents were Virginia Episcopalians. But when she became old enough to choose for herself, she united with the M.E. Church, South. When the M. E. Church was organized in Louisville in 1865, she became a member of the new society. A few years later when the church secured its permanent home at Third and Guthrie Streets, the name "Trinity," which she proposed, was accepted.

Mrs. Speed's interests were not limited to Trinity. The KENTUCKY CONFERENCE, struggling with poverty and the peculiar problems growing out of its location, was heartened and helped by her. Her biographers called her the "LADY HUNTINGDON of American Methodism." Certainly she was to the preachers of the Kentucky Conference all that the early friend of WHITEFIELD and the WESLEYS was to them.

Mrs. Speed was generous in her support of all the general benevolences of Methodism. Her special interests, however, centered around the Kentucky mountain districts and Negroes. To help the former, she was chiefly instrumental in founding UNION COLLEGE at Barbourville, Ky. To help the Negroes, she gave freely to the industrial and educational schools of the FREEDMEN'S AID SOCIETY.

Fanny Henning Speed died in Louisville, Ky., Aug. 10, 1902.

JOHN O. GROSS

SPEIGHT, JOHN F. (1804-1860), American M.P. minister and official, was born on Nov. 18, 1804, in Greene County, N.C. On Sept. 29, 1840, he married Emma Lewis, daughter of Exum Lewis of Mount Prospect, N. C.

Speight entered the NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE of the M.P. CHURCH as an itinerant preacher in March 1831, and was made Superintendent of the Roanoke Circuit. For his ministerial labors that year he received $70.80. In addition to the Roanoke Circuit, Speight also served the Guilford, Orange, Granville, Albemarle, and Tar River Circuits and the Tabernacle Mission. In November 1850 he was made the Superintendent of the newly-formed Halifax Circuit. He served as secretary of the North Carolina Conference in 1838 and 1839, and was president in 1851, 1855 and 1859. He was a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCES of 1854 and 1858. In 1854 he was appointed to serve as agent to solicit funds for MADISON COLLEGE in Pennsylvania. Later he took an active part in organizing JAMESTOWN FEMALE COLLEGE and was elected one of its trustees. In 1859 he was made general agent for the college. His pledge of $400 was the largest individual gift made to the ill-fated college.

Speight died on June 29, 1860. His widow gave the land on which in 1877 was built Speight's Chapel, named in his honor. This church, located between Whitakers and Tarboro, N. C., was dedicated by WILLIAM H. WILLS. After being closed for some years, Speight's Chapel was reopened in May 1956, and now has an active congregation of 110 members.

J. Elwood Carroll, History of the North Carolina Conference (MP). Greensboro, 1939.

Journals of the North Carolina Conference, MP.
Our Church Record, June 23, Sept. 29, 1898.

RALPH HARDEE RIVES

SPELLMEYER, HENRY (1847-1910), American bishop, was born in New York City. After graduating from New York University, he pursued theological studies at Union Theological Seminary, and entered the NEWARK CON-

ERENCE in 1869, being ordained DEACON in 1871. Serving this Conference with distinction during his entire ministry of thirty-five years, his pastorates included St. James, Elizabeth; Calvary, East Orange; and Central, Roseville and Centenary of NEWARK.

In 1896 he was elected to GENERAL CONFERENCE and was placed on the BOOK CONCERN committee and also on the BOOK COMMITTEE. He became a member of the Committee on the Entertainment of the General Conference, and was made its first chairman. The 1900 General Conference continued him in these offices. The General Conference of 1904 gave him 612 votes out of 691 to elect him bishop with the largest vote ever cast, up to that time, for that high office.

Bishop Spellmeyer died March 14, 1910, and was buried in Evergreen Cemetery, Elizabeth, after services held in Centenary Church, Newark, N. J.

FREDERICK G. HUBACH

SPENCE, ROBERT (1748-1824), British Methodist book-seller and publisher was born March 8, 1748, at Stillington near York. Spence's blacksmith father died when he was a child, and he was educated at a dame school in the village and by a curate supplied by the absentee incumbent, the famous Laurence Sterne. At thirteen Spence went into service as a postilion in a local family, who greatly resented his serious ways after joining the Methodists in 1763. His brother John was a Methodist LOCAL PREACHER in York, and managed to secure his apprenticeship to a bookbinder at Pontefract, whence he returned to York and launched his own business—a secondhand bookstall in the Thursday Market. Later he removed to a small shop on the old Ouse Bridge, and then to a larger building in High Ousegate. It was from this latter address that he ventured into the publishing business, printing many books and pamphlets for Methodists.

Spence's Collection of Hymns from Various Authors, published in 1781, borrowed so heavily from Wesley's much larger and much more famous Collection issued the previous year that he encountered severe criticism, and for a time pondered leaving the Methodists. He decided against it, saying: "The loss of Robert Spence will be of no consequence to them whatever; they can do better without me than I can without them." Eventually the tables were somewhat turned, however, for his shilling hymn book, subsequently entitled A Pocket Hymn Book, designed as a constant companion for the pious, caused Wesley in his turn to issue a Pocket Hymn Book in 1784, and another in 1785, which went through many editions. Spence's Pocket Hymn Book seems to have outsold Wesley's, and became the standard work in the U.S.A., where it went through at least sixteen editions before 1899. This was probably due largely to the advocacy of THOMAS COKE. Spence's Pocket Hymn Book, in fact, was the chief ancestor of the American Methodist Hymnal. Nevertheless Robert Spence retained a genuine love for Wesley's Collection, as for Wesley himself and the Methodists in general. At his death in York on Aug. 4, 1824 he had been a member of the Methodist society for sixty-three years and a local preacher for fifty-seven.

Frank Baker, Union Catalogue of the Publications of John and Charles Wesley, Durham, N. C., 1966, item 396.

Richard Burdekin, Memoirs of the Life and Character of Mr. Robert Spence, of York, York, 1827.

R. G. McCutchan, Our Hymnody, 1937. FRANK BAKER

SPENCE, WILLIAM H. (1875-1935), American minister, central figure of the book, One Foot in Heaven, was born in Huron County, Ontario, Canada, April 4, 1875. He was licensed to preach in the Canadian Methodist Church in 1899. He graduated from the University of Toronto in 1904, married Hope M. Morris of Stratford, Ontario, and moved the same year to the United States, where he joined the NORTHWEST IOWA CONFERENCE. After pastorates at Lake Mills and Clarion in Iowa he was appointed in 1909 to Fort Dodge, where a large new church was built and many of the incidents recounted in One Foot in Heaven occurred.

In 1917 he served a year at Hanscom Park Church, OMAHA, Neb., in the NEBRASKA CONFERENCE, later returned to Northwest Iowa Conference for two years at Grace Church, Sioux City, Iowa, and in 1920 transferred to the COLORADO CONFERENCE to Park Hill Church, DENVER, Colo. In 1923 he served at Burlington in the IOWA CONFERENCE. His last charge was Mason City, Iowa, in the UPPER IOWA CONFERENCE, where he served from 1929 to 1935. He retired for health reasons in 1935 and died December 1 of that year. He is buried at Mason City.

In 1916 he was named a member of the General Board of EPWORTH LEAGUE and was one of the founders of the Epworth League Institute at Lake Okoboji in Iowa, serving as its dean for three years. He was a member of the GENERAL CONFERENCE in 1916 and 1928.

In 1940 his son, Hartzell, published the book, One Foot in Heaven. It is in general his father's biography. The book was widely read and was made into a motion picture which was viewed by millions of people.

Minutes of the Upper Iowa Conference, 1936.

FRANK G. BEAN

SPENCER, HARRY CHADWICK (1905-), American minister, was born April 10, 1905 in Chicago, Ill., to John Carroll and Jessie Grace (Chadwick) Spencer. He attended Albany College, 1921-22, and received his B.A. degree from WILLAMETTE UNIVERSITY, 1925. The same school honored him with the D.D. degree in 1935. He studied at University of Chicago Divinity School, 1926-28 and received the B.D. degree from GARRETT BIBLICAL INSTITUTE, 1929. Harvard University conferred an M.A. degree, 1931. He was married to Mary Louise Wakefield, May 26, 1935.

Dr. Spencer was ordained by ROCK RIVER CONFERENCE as DEACON, 1931, and ELDER, 1933. He served for two years each at Washington Heights and Portage Park Churches, CHICAGO, before becoming Recording Secretary to the Board of Missions, 1935-40. He was Assistant Executive Secretary, BOARD OF MISSIONS, 1940-45 and Secretary, Department of Visual Education of the Board, 1945-52. Since 1952 he has been the executive leader of the TELEVISION, RADIO AND FILM COMMISSION (TRAFECO).

In his professional service Dr. Spencer served one year as president, COUNCIL OF SECRETARIES, The Methodist Church; chairman of RAVEMCO (Radio, Visual Education and Mass Communication Committee), Division of Foreign Missions, NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES, 1948-53; chairman, Broadcast and Film Commission, National Council, 1961-63; chairman, World Association for Christian Broadcasting, 1961-63; and representative of RAVEMCO to Asia Conference on Mass Communication, Bangkok, 1955, and Tokyo, 1958. Dr. Spencer has written many magazine articles on mass communications, produced a large number of motion pictures, television and radio series, and was the author of a mission study book on Latin America.

Who's Who in America, 1970-71.

Who's Who in The Methodist Church, 1966.

JOHN H. NESS, JR.

SPENCER, PETER (ca. 1779-1843), American Negro and founder of the AFRICAN UNION METHODIST PROTESTANT CHURCH, was born about 1779 in Kent County, Md., living his early life as a slave. Upon the death of his master he moved to WILMINGTON, Del., where he became a member of Asbury M.E. Church.

In 1805 Peter Spencer led a number of Negroes out of Asbury M.E. Church who requested permission to build a church of their own. The Asbury trustees granted this wish and Spencer began to hold outdoor meetings with his small group. Later a house was used for their services. In 1812 they erected their first church edifice, Ezion M.E. Church. In 1813 Spencer and about fifty Negroes formally withdrew from the M.E. Church and established their own denomination which they called The Union Church of Africans. This never became a denomination, but it did eventually establish churches and elementary schools in several eastern states and Canada. In 1816 Spencer and other leaders accepted RICHARD ALLEN's invitation to attend the organization convention of the AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH in PHILADELPHIA but never united with Allen's group. Little else is known about the personal life of Spencer. In 1865 a schism occurred in the First Colored Methodist Protestant Church at BALTIMORE, Md. A large group from this body united with the Union Church of Africans which in 1866 changed its name to African Union First Colored Methodist Protestant Church. Later this designation was changed to the African Union Methodist Protestant Church (AUMP).

D. J. Russell, History of the African Union Methodist Protestant Church, Philadelphia: Union Star Book and Job Printing and Publishing House, 1920.

GRANT S. SHOCKLEY

SPENCER, WILLIAM ANSON (1840-1901), American minister, was born Sept. 6, 1840, at Rock Island, Ill., the son of Judge and Mrs. J. W. Spencer. Spencer was educated at Rock River Seminary and NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY where he graduated in 1861, later becoming a Trustee of the University. He enlisted in the Eighth Illinois Cavalry in September 1861 and served as chaplain 1863-65. He graduated from Garrett Biblical Institute (now GARRETT THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY) in 1867, entered CENTRAL ILLINOIS CONFERENCE, served the Camden Mills Circuit, Hale Chapel, and Moline, transferred to ROCK RIVER CONFERENCE, and became pastor at State Street Church and later First Church in CHICAGO.

He toured the world and the Far East missions with Bishop WILLIAM L. HARRIS in 1873-74. In 1881 he became presiding elder of the Dixon District, and in 1885 assistant secretary of the CHURCH EXTENSION SOCIETY. In this capacity he traveled widely, was especially concerned with the development of work in the Northwest and solicited $250 in gifts with which to start churches on the frontier. He became ill at the ERIE CONFERENCE in 1901, developed pneumonia a few days later at his home in PHILADELPHIA, and died Sept. 25, 1901. His wife, four sons, and a daughter, Miss Clarissa Spencer, a missionary in JAPAN, survived him. He was the author of the song "Harvest Time," and was renowned for his singing and evangelistic preaching.

Minutes of the Rock River Conference, 1901.

ROBERTA BAUR WEST

SPIVEY, LUDD MYRL (1886-1962), American educator, was born at Eclectic, Ala., on Dec. 5, 1886, and was educated at Epworth University in Oklahoma, VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY, and the University of Chicago. He received the LL.D. degree from BIRMINGHAM-SOUTHERN COLLEGE and Miami University, Ed.D. from Stetson University, and Doctor of Humanities from Philathea College in Canada. He was a member of six scholastic fraternities.

He entered the ministry of the M.E. Church, South, in 1912 and joined the ST. LOUIS CONFERENCE, serving pastorates at Valley Park, Mo., and Scruggs Memorial and Grand Avenue Churches in St. Louis.

In 1922 Spivey became Dean and Professor of Sociology at Birmingham-Southern College. In 1925 he was elected President of FLORIDA SOUTHERN COLLEGE at Lakeland, Fla., where he remained for thirty-two years. At the beginning of his administration, the institution had only two buildings and 200 students and an indebtedness of about half a million dollars. Spivey paid the debt, erected a dozen new buildings, and increased the enrollment to 2,000 students. When he retired the college gave him a home at Palm Beach and a liberal pension.

Spivey died in the Good Samaritan Hospital at West Palm Beach on Dec. 27, 1962. His funeral was conducted in the chapel he had erected at Florida Southern College and he was buried in Oak Hill Cemetery at Lakeland.

He traveled widely in Europe and elsewhere, and was nationally known as an educator and financial administrator for the institution he served.

Who's Who in America.

Who's Who in Methodism, 1952.

ELMER T. CLARK

SPOKANE, WASHINGTON, U.S.A. The first preaching service in the small village of Spokane Falls was held by S. H. Havermale, presiding elder of the Walla Walla District in 1875. Havermale was on his way to Colville, WASHINGTON Territory, to establish a church there. On returning to Spokane Falls a year later, he again held preaching services and appointed J. H. Laird, who organized the first Methodist Church in 1878 with a charter membership of ten. This was eleven years before Washington became a state.

The Congregational Church had organized six months prior to Laird's coming. Over the years, Spokane Methodism has grown until now there are ten churches in this city of 170,000 people.

Spokane Methodism has always been active in institutional life. The largest concentration of Methodist related institutions in the Pacific Northwest is found within the city. The Spokane Deaconess Hospital, a multi-million dollar institution, was established in 1892 and is now in its seventy-fifth year of service. In 1939 Spokane Goodwill Industries was organized under Methodist auspices. Today its net worth is one third of a million dollars with employees numbering 160—all but six of whom were handicapped when they came. Its annual payroll is $360,000.

Spokane Methodist Homes, Inc. opened Rockwood Manor, a retirement home for the elderly, on Nov. 1, 1960 with space for 250 residents. This is one of the best operated retirement homes on the west coast.

District youth camp, Twinlow, received its initial impetus from Spokane pastors in the early 1930's and is now one of the youth centers in the PACIFIC NORTHWEST ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

The present day Central Church, successor to First Church, is closest to the mid-city of any Protestant congregation. It has taken the leadership in bringing together other Protestant congregations and the Roman Catholics in an organization, "Mid City Concerns," to help solve the core-area problems of the city.

A new building was recently completed by this church and will be used extensively by the congregation and the new organization.

General Minutes, UMC.

SPOTTSWOOD, STEPHEN GILL (1897-), American bishop in the A.M.E. ZION CHURCH, was born July 18, 1897 to Abraham Lincoln and Mary Elizabeth (Gray) Spottswood. A graduate of ALBRIGHT COLLEGE and Gordon Divinity School, Massachusetts, he did graduate work at Yale University. He married Viola Estelle Booker (deceased), and is the father of five children. He spent thirty-four years in the pastorate, serving the following points: PORTLAND, MAINE; West Newton and Lowell, Mass.; NEW HAVEN, Conn.; INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. (Jones Tabernacle); WINSTON SALEM, N.C. (Goler Memorial); St. Luke, BUFFALO, N. Y., and John Wesley Church, WASHINGTON, D.C. He has been closely identified with the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the WORLD METHODIST COUNCIL. He serves as Chairman of the Board of Finance of the denomination and is a Trustee of LIVINGSTONE COLLEGE, SALISBURY, N. C. Bishop Spottswood was elected and consecrated a bishop in May 1952.

DAVID H. BRADLEY

SPRAGUE, LEVI L. (1844-1936), American preacher and educator, was born at Beekman, N. Y., on Dec. 23, 1844. His father, Nelson Sprague, a carpenter and "joiner," after practicing his trade in various places, finally settled on a farm near LeRaysville, Pa. Because of his family's frequent moves, much of Levi's early education was under private teachers. At LeRaysville, when he was fourteen years of age, he studied for three years in a private academy of which Chester P. Hodge was the principal.

After two years of teaching in the ungraded public schools, he entered Eastman College of business at Poughkeepsie, N. Y. On graduating from Eastman he came to WYOMING SEMINARY, Kingston, Pa., as a teacher in the business department and in 1867 was made head of the department. At this time he was interested in the legal profession, and in his extracurricular time he studied law in the office of a prominent law firm. However, under the influence of REUBEN NELSON and David Copeland, presidents of Wyoming Seminary, he began the study of theology and in 1876 was admitted to the WYOMING CONFERENCE. On Dec. 22, 1869 he was married to Jennie Russell, an art teacher at Wyoming and niece of Mrs. Nelson.

After fifteen years as head of the business department of Wyoming Seminary, he was elected in 1882 as president of Wyoming Seminary, which position he held for fifty-four years. His death terminated seventy-one years of uninterrupted service to this school.

L. E. Bugbee, Wyoming Conference, 1952.
Minutes of the Wyoming Conference. WILBUR H. FLECK

SPRENG, MINERVA STRAWMAN (1863-1924), American missionary leader, was born Minerva Strawman, near Lindsey, Ohio, March 10, 1863, the daughter of the Rev. and Mrs. Daniel Strawman.

In early girlhood she heard the call to missionary service through her church, the EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION, and its importance never wavered for her to the end of her life. Her father encouraged her interest in missions from the very beginning and guided her with his kindly and wise direction. Her marriage to E. M. Spreng lasted only nineteen months, when he died suddenly in 1887.

In 1892 she was elected president of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Evangelical Association, an office which she held for thirty-two years. This organization was her very life and nothing was too hard for her to attempt. Its very inception in 1884 can be traced to a letter in 1880 which she and two others prepared which was signed by fifty petitioners requesting permission of the Board of Missions to organize women's missionary societies.

She had a deep concern for the training of the children of the Church and gave strong support to the Mission Band, an auxiliary organization for the children. She was a missionary statesman, a good administrator, a valuable member of the Board of Missions, and a world Christian. Death came April 5, 1924 at CLEVELAND, OHIO with burial in Lindsey, Ohio.

During her presidency the sum of $52,702.52 was raised for the establishment of a Chair of Missions in the EVANGELICAL THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY at Naperville, Ill. This was named in 1940 as the Mrs. E. M. Spreng Memorial Chair of Missions, given in her memory who gave thirty-two years of distinguished leadership as president of the Woman's Missionary Society of The Evangelical Church.

Evangelical Missionary World, May 1924. L. ETHEL SPRENG

SPRENG, SAMUEL P. (1853-1946), American EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION bishop, was born in Wayne County, Ohio, Feb. 11, 1853. Educated at North Western College (now NORTH CENTRAL COLLEGE), Naperville, Ill., he was licensed by the OHIO CONFERENCE, Evangelical Association, in 1876. Spreng served several pastorates and a term as presiding elder before he was elected in 1887 as editor of the Evangelical Messenger, official English paper of his church. After serving twenty years in this capacity, Samuel Spreng was elected bishop in 1907 and filled the office continuously until 1930. He made seven episcopal visits to Europe and one to CHINA and JAPAN. As an editor he strongly supported a union of the Wesley bodies in America.

He was married to Miss Margaret A. Beck, Sept. 18, 1878. He died April 18, 1946 at his home in Naperville, and was buried in the Naperville Cemetery.

In addition to denominational offices Bishop Spreng was vice-president of the National Anti-Saloon League for twenty years, a member of the Administration Board of the Federal Council of Churches, and author of a number of books. Some of these were: History of the Evangelical Association, History of the Evangelical Church, What Evangelicals Believe, The Life and Labors of John Seybert, and the Life of Charles Spurgeon in Messages of Hope and Faith.

Evangelical Messenger, May 11, 1946.

David Koss, Bishops of the Evangelical Association. Unpublished ms., 1959.

R. M. Veh, Evangelical Bishops. 1939. JOHN H. NESS, JR.

SPRING ARBOR COLLEGE, Spring Arbor, Michigan, founded in 1873 as Spring Arbor Seminary, is now accredited as a four-year liberal arts college of the FREE METHODIST CHURCH. A large campus development and building program has been loyally supported by the alumni and the denomination. Large gifts from private donors and foundations have made possible a pay-as-you-go building program of unusual proportions. The faculty has a high percentage of doctorates and master's degrees. Present enrollment is about 600.

BYRON S. LAMSON

SPRINGER, CORNELIUS (1790-1875), American minister and editor, was born of Swedish parentage near Wilmington, Del., on Dec. 29, 1790. He became a member of the M.E. Church at the age of eighteen. He was teaching school when he enlisted in the War of 1812, serving as lieutenant of a company. He resumed teaching at the close of the war but in 1816 left his position in the Putnam Academy to enter the ministry in the OHIO CONFERENCE of the M.E. Church, where he served for fourteen years.

He was among the earliest of those who sought a change in the government of the church and became one of the founders of the M.P. CHURCH. He was elected president of the Conference in 1830 and in 1831 he was appointed editor of the Methodist Correspondent, serving four years. In 1837 he was elected president of the PITTSBURGH CONFERENCE. He became editor of the Western Recorder in 1839, resigning after six years because of failing eyesight. He retired to private life and acted as supernumerary assistant on the Zanesville circuit. In 1856 and 1857 he represented Muskingum County in the OHIO Legislature.

He married Mary A. McDowell of Chillicothe, Ohio in 1820 and after her death he married Catharine B. Monday in 1849. He married Elizabeth Trapp in 1857. He died on Aug. 17, 1875, after serving fifty-nine years in the ministry.

T. H. Colhouer, Sketches of the Founders. 1880.

M. Simpson, Cyclopaedia. 1878.

ANN G. SILER

SPRINGER, HELEN EMILY (1868-1949), pioneer missionary in RHODESIA and the CONGO, Africa, was born in New Sharon, Maine, April 2, 1868, and died in the Belgian Congo, Aug. 23, 1949. She was graduated from Holyoke (Mass.) High School, and Woman's Medical College, PHILADELPHIA. She first went to Africa in 1901. On arrival in Rhodesia she married a young missionary, William Rasmussen, who died in 1895. Later she married a fellow-missionary, JOHN M. SPRINGER, who was elected missionary bishop of Africa in 1936. Together they shared the early pioneering life of the interior of Africa. They traveled thousands of miles on foot, at other times using hammocks, donkeys, mules, and bicycles. In 1907, to dramatize the need of "the dark continent," Dr. and Mrs. Springer trekked through the heart of the continent from the Indian Ocean to the Atlantic Ocean, accompanied by native carriers. One of Mrs. Springer's major missionary accomplishments was in translating Christian literature and scriptures into several native tongues. She helped to reduce three languages to writing and produced textbooks for schools in the various languages, as well as in English. She wrote a number of hymns and translated other hymns as well as several Books of the Bible into various languages. She witnessed and was a part of the great transformation of Central Africa, which has seen the rapid introduction and extension of motor roads, railroads and airplane routes. After the election of Dr. Springer to the missionary episcopacy, she helped him carry on his heavy administrative responsibilities throughout Central and South Africa. Wherever possible, she accompanied him on episcopal travels and was a great inspiration both to the missionaries and the African Christians. One of her major concerns was the welfare of the African women and children. She wrote Snapshots from Sunny Africa.

W. W. REID

JOHN M. SPRINGER

SPRINGER, JOHN MCKENDREE (1873-1963), missionary bishop, was born in Cataract, Wis., Sept. 7, 1873 and died in Penney Farms, Fla., Dec. 2, 1963. He was educated at NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY, and at GARRETT BIBLE INSTITUTE. Appointed for missionary service to AFRICA in 1901, he arrived there only three years after the RHODESIA mission had been established. Ten years later he battled with primitive conditions in opening work in the Republic of Congo, then the Belgian Congo. With his first wife, he trekked across the continent from the Indian Ocean to the Atlantic in 1907, and helped dramatize to American Methodists the needs of the African people. In 1913 he established a mission station at Kambove, overlooking a valley that was called Livingstone's Spruit, gateway to the copper mines, one of the objective points toward which Livingstone was striving at the time of his death in 1873. For some twenty-eight years Springer was stationed not more than 300 miles from where the great explorer died, and in 1938 he was able at last to visit the place of Livingstone's death, where his heart was buried. Springer saw missionary work develop from its very inception to the place where annual conferences are constituted mainly by Africans. In 1936 he was elected missionary bishop for Africa, and finally retired in 1944. After retirement he spent fifteen more years in Africa. In 1935 Bishop Springer was decorated with the Order of the Lion, by the Belgian Government. Springer Institute in Mulungwishi, the Congo, was named in his honor. He wrote Campfires in the Congo and I Love the Trail.

W. W. REID

SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS, U.S.A., the capital of ILLINOIS and Sangamon County, was settled in 1818 by a SOUTH CAROLINA family and became the county seat in 1823. Largely through the efforts of Abraham Lincoln, it became the state capital in 1837. Incorporated as a city in 1840, Springfield is the center of a rich agricultural region which raises corn, grain, and livestock. Its diversified industries produce farm implements, shoes, food mixes, electronic and automatic equipment. The city has six railroads and is the seat of Concordia Theological Seminary and Springfield Junior College. Famous for fine buildings and parks, Springfield has an impressive state capital in the form of a Greek cross. Abraham Lincoln's home and monument here are owned and maintained by the state. Lincoln, his wife, and three sons are buried here.

The Sangamon Circuit was created in 1820 as a part of the Illinois District in the MISSOURI CONFERENCE. That year James Simms, who had just been received into the Conference, was sent to Sangamon Circuit and preached the first Methodist sermon in Springfield. After itinerating one year, he left the work, became a local preacher, and established a business in Springfield. He was the first member of the lower house of the legislature from Sangamon County.

In 1821 John Glanville was appointed to the circuit and a small society was formed in Springfield. PETER CARTWRIGHT, the unique circuit rider, was sent to this circuit in 1824. His first year, with a wife and six children, he received a salary of forty dollars. The second year he received sixty dollars.

Simpson says, "In 1825-26 the first M.E. Church, a plain structure, was erected under the superintendence of Peter Cartwright, and was for many years the only house of worship." (Cyclopaedia.)

In his First Methodist Church History, Piersel says, "A small schoolhouse was erected in '28, and used for religious services on Sunday. Preachers of various denominations made their appointments, which often clashed, and the result was not satisfactory." Pascal P. Enos gave the church two lots, deed dated Oct. 10, 1831. "Very soon thereafter the Methodist chapel was erected." It was probably erected in 1833, the year given as the 100th anniversary date, being 1833-1933.

Smith W. Robinson directed the first revival in the Methodist Church in 1833. So many members were received that Springfield was made a new station in 1834, with Joseph Edmundson the first preacher.

In 1839 the upper house of the Legislature sat in the Methodist Church and appropriated $150 for rent. By 1854 the old church was sold and a new brick building, costing $10,000 and seating 500, was erected. In 1858 the church subscribed $200 for the Illinois Conference Female College at Jacksonville.

The war governor of Illinois, Richard Yates, during the early 1860's, seems to have been the first Methodist governor. Richard Yates, Jr., was governor forty years later and a member of his church's Board of Stewards.

In 1876 Springfield had four churches: First Church with 345 members and $30,000 worth of property; Second Church, 181, and $10,000 in property; German M.E. Church, 38, and building valued at $4,000; and an A.M.E. Church with 218 members and building estimated at $7,000.

First Church erected a new stone edifice in 1885. This was dedicated on October 25, seating nearly 700. A great revival was held in the new church for seventeen weeks in 1886. Thomas Harrison was the preacher, 2,000 were converted and First Church gained 500 new members.

Kumler Church was built and dedicated April 15, 1888. First Church made large contributions to the development of this church. In March 1892, the West Mission had a Sunday school, and First Church led in buying a lot for the West End Mission, where the people built a church and called it Douglas Avenue. In 1970 this church had 1,068 members.

By 1898 First Church made arrangements for raising money for a South End Church to take the place of the former mission. Within a short time Laurel Church came into being. In 1970 it had 1,153 members.

Elaborate remodeling of First Church began in 1922. Before it was completed it cost approximately $100,000. By 1946 the membership of First Church reached 2,204. In 1970 it reported 2,899 members.

In 1970 Springfield had ten United Methodist Churches, and Springfield District reported a membership of 24,850.

General Minutes, UMC, 1970.

W. G. Piersel, First Methodist Church, Springfield, Illinois, 125 Years. Published by the church, 1947.

M. Simpson, Cyclopaedia. 1878.

JESSE A. EARL

SPRINGFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS, U.S.A., situated on the Connecticut River ninety-two miles southwest of Boston, and only three miles from the state boundary, is the third largest city in the commonwealth with a population (1970) of 162,078. Settled in 1636 the area has been known since the colonial period as a leading center for the manufacture of arms.

Bishop FRANCIS ASBURY made three visits to Springfield, the first being on July 15, 1791 when he made this entry in his journal, "At six o'clock I delivered a discourse in Mr. C---'s house on the text, 'Tis time to seek the Lord, till he come and rain righteousness upon you.' The people were a little moved, and one person was under deep conviction. This place is a haunt of soldiery, the army being moved here. There appears to be very little religion among the inhabitants."

At nearby WILBRAHAM the first session of the NEW ENGLAND CONFERENCE was held in September 1797. In 1819 Springfield Methodism was separated from the Toland, Conn. circuit. Daniel Dorchester was appointed first resident pastor. The first Methodist building in the city was called Asbury Chapel. From this congregation was formed the 1844 Pyncheon Street Church. Eventually the Pyncheon Street Church divided, forming Trinity Church on Bridge Street, and Grace Church on South Main Street. These groups reunited May 8, 1922 to form the influential Trinity Church housed in a cathedral edifice adjoining Forest Park and completed May 19, 1929 after seven years of construction under the leadership of Fred Winslow Adams. Here in 1947 the Seventh ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE was held.

There are three Methodist churches in Springfield: Liberty, Trinity, and Wesley with a total membership (1970) of 3,183.

Trinity Church is one of the most beautiful and imposing religious edifices in America. Seven years in the building, it was dedicated in 1929, a granite quadrangle of fourteenth century English gothic design, set deep within spacious lawns and against the sylvan background of historic Forest Park.

Dominating the complex of buildings is the Singing Tower with its carillon of sixty-one bells yielding forty-eight tones, one of the largest ever cast by the famous Bellfounders, John Taylor and Company of Loughborough, England.

Flanking the Sanctuary are Grace Chapel, credited as being "as impressive and beautiful a gem of its size as can be found in America"; the Educational wing, and the Community House. The latter contains a modern, regulation-size swimming pool with adjacent lockers and shower facilities, a gymnasium, small game room, and assembly hall.

The seven-day-a-week institutional program of Trinity serves the entire community and averages a cumulative total of 100,000 people a year, including over 8,000 individual participants. The active membership of the church in 1970 was 1,890.

TRINITY CHURCH, SPRINGFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS

One of the notable stained glass windows in the Sanctuary pictures the famous aviator, Charles Lindbergh, and during World War II his representation "among the saints" elicited considerable national controversy. The memorabilia in the history cabinet include an authentic water pitcher once owned and used by JOHN WESLEY; the original draft of Angela Morgan's well-known poem "Sanctuary," which she wrote after visiting Grace Chapel; and a personal letter to the church in the handwriting of Mahatma Gandhi, expressing appreciation that his likeness appears in one of the aisle windows.

This is the fourth structure of the society, which was organized as the Pynchon Street Church on Feb. 9, 1844. Trinity was host to Methodism's quadrennial GENERAL CONFERENCE in 1924, and in 1947 entertained the Ecumenical Methodist Conference in its first session following World War II.

General Minutes, UMC.

Minutes of the New England Conference.

M. Simpson, Cyclopaedia. 1878.

ERNEST R. CASE

SPRINGFIELD, PENNSYLVANIA, U.S.A. Covenant Church is a comparatively recent church, being organized on Christmas afternoon in 1921. Springfield is located on the outskirts of Philadelphia, and the church was begun by a group of Christian people, among whom Methodists were discovered in the majority. During March of 1922, a Board of Trustees was chosen to serve the Springfield Community Church, Methodist Episcopal. By December of 1924, with more than 200 members, buildings were dedicated and the three-year-old congregation was housed.

From 1928 Springfield was served by appointed ordained ministers of the PHILADELPHIA CONFERENCE, and while struggling through the depression years, membership increased steadily, with temporary building additions being made.

In 1953 a new sanctuary was completed, and the name of the congregation was officially changed to Covenant Methodist, honoring a substantial gift from the sale of a Covenant Church in PHILADELPHIA. Membership had grown in some thirty-one years to 1,300 persons. An educational facility was added in 1961, featuring a never closed private prayer room, opening to the street. Only six ministers had served the steadily enlarging congregation in this period.

The congregation in 1970 numbered 2,020 members with a church school enrollment of 1,089. It is served by a staff of four ministers, an organist, three secretaries, and three sextons. In April of 1968 the original building used for worship was demolished to make way for a new unit consisting of a fellowship hall, kitchen, music ministry rooms and youth ministry facilities. The Church is characterized by its lay committee program, volunteer choir ministry, its involvement in the changing suburban patterns of churchmanship, and its emphasis on worship as a centrality in the life of seeking Christians.

KENNETH G. FANSLER

SPRINGFIELD, VIRGINIA, U.S.A. Springfield Church is located on the growing edge of mushrooming Fairfax County, in the metropolitan area of WASHINGTON, D.C.

The church has had a phenomenal growth. Starting in an elementary school auditorium in January 1954, with thirty-three members, it has grown to be the third largest Methodist church in the VIRGINIA CONFERENCE, with 2,808 members in 1970.

Two units of a beautiful and functional edifice were erected in 1955 and 1960. A third unit provides adequate room for all church activities. A tall steeple, with tower chimes, dominates a busy shopping area. The church building, valued at more than $700,000, provides a beautiful sanctuary seating 750 worshippers, twenty-eight class rooms, offices, library and social hall. The social hall has served as the main community center for the young city and has been used by numerous civic, fraternal and business organizations. In one typical month, more than fifty different organizations held meetings in the church building.

The church library contains more than 2,500 volumes covering various phases of religion, philosophy and related subjects. The collection of pictures, film strips, tapes and records, to augment the regular curriculum materials, is one of the most significant in Northern Virginia.

One outstanding characteristic of this congregation is the comparative youthfulness of the membership. The estimated average age of the adult membership is less than forty years. This is due to the large proportion of the membership which comes from families of men and women on active duty with the Armed Forces or serving with one of the Federal establishments located in the Washington metropolitan area. These members bring unusual talents and a rich background of experience to enhance the religious life of the church.

The church supports a well-rounded program of religious and community action and service under the leadership of two ministers, a Director of Christian Education and a competent church staff. While concerned with enormous problems of providing church facilities and staff, the church has always been interested in Christian outreach. Partial support is being given to missionaries in CHILE and RHODESIA as well as to church extension projects with the District.

George W. Harrison was the first pastor assigned to the new congregation in January 1954, and served for eleven and one-half years.

ESDRAS S. GRUVER

SPURLOCK, BURWELL (1790-1879), American pioneer circuit rider, Confederate chaplain, statesman, was born in Montgomery County, Va. Although self-educated, he was unique, a great orator.

From Dec. 5, 1810, to March 15, 1815, he was Captain of Militia. Ordained a DEACON by Bishop ASBURY, he was admitted to the OHIO CONFERENCE and was appointed to the Guyandotte Circuit, WEST VIRGINIA, which included what is now CHARLESTON and Huntington, 1818-1821, and again in 1823. His circuit activities covered eastern KENTUCKY and southern West Virginia, an area 300 miles long. In 1851 he was appointed to the Wayne (M.E. Church, South) Circuit.

In 1842 Spurlock was one of the commissioners to fix the bounds of Wayne County, setting it off from Cabell. When the division of the M.E. Church came, he joined the WESTERN VIRGINIA M.E. Church, South, CONFERENCE. Elected to the Secession Convention in Richmond, Va.—West Virginia was then part of VIRGINIA—he voted against secession. During the Civil War, he remained in old Virginia, but returned to Wayne County after peace came. He was a Confederate chaplain with 131 men in his Cavalry detachment, and prayed for all of the 131 to be returned home alive. Although sixty-four of them were wounded, all 131 returned home and every one of the 131, it is said, were converted under Spurlock shortly before he died.

Judge James H. Ferguson declared Burwell Spurlock "the greatest man he had ever known," and further said that if he had had a technical education he "would have been made a bishop."

Spurlock's first wife was Sallie Morrison and they had four children. His second wife was Nancy Garrett and they had eight children.

Burwell Spurlock died in Wayne County, W. Va., on Aug. 5, 1879, on the farm where his father, Jesse Spurlock, had lived.

George S. Wallace, Cabell County Annals and Families. Richmond: Garrett and Massie Publishers, 1935.
Wayne County News, Wayne, W. Va., April 4, 1958.

JESSE A. EARL

SPYWOOD, GEORGE A. (1798-1876), superintendent of the A.M.E. ZION CHURCH, was born Jan. 5, 1798, in PROVIDENCE, R. I. where on March 7, 1818 he was converted. He was licensed to preach in the same city in 1831. He joined the traveling connection June 20, 1842, was ordained a DEACON May 18, 1843, an ELDER, eleven years later, and was consecrated a superintendent May 24, 1852. He died March 9, 1876.

DAVID H. BRADLEY

SQUANCE, THOMAS H. (1790-1868), pioneer British missionary to CEYLON, was born at Exeter on Feb. 3, 1790, became a local preacher in 1807, was accepted for the ministry in 1812 and appointed to Liskeard. At the LIVERPOOL Conference of 1813, he volunteered to join THOMAS COKE's "mission to the East" and was one of the five missionaries who landed in Ceylon after Coke's death in 1814. Squance served usefully, first at Jaffa, then in other stations, and finally in Negapatam, INDIA, until 1823. He died on April 21, 1868.

W. M. Harvard, Ceylon and India. 1823. CYRIL J. DAVEY

STACEY, JAMES (1818-1891), British Methodist, was born in Sheffield on Feb. 28, 1818, was helped by JOSEPH BARKER, and studied under THOMAS ALLIN. He entered the METHODIST NEW CONNEXION ministry in 1839 and became one of its most able and cultured ministers. He served as Missions Secretary for four years and from 1863 as resident tutor and governor of Ranmoor College, becoming principal from 1865-76. He served as president in 1860 and 1881. He wrote biographies of JOHN RIDGWAY and W. N. HALL, the CHINA missionary. He died at Ranmoor, Sheffield, on May 11, 1891.

W. J. Townsend, James Stacey, D.D. London, 1891.

OLIVER A. BECKERLEGGE

STACK, JAMES (1801-1883), NEW ZEALAND Methodist lay missionary, was born at Portsmouth, England. He came to AUSTRALIA and there offered for Wesleyan mission work in New Zealand as a lay agent. He was one of the original party at Wesleydale (Whangaroa) in 1823, and when the station was destroyed by hostile Maoris in 1827, he assisted with the reestablishment of the work at Mangungu in the Hokianga District. In 1831, he visited England, and owing to some differences of opinion with the missionary committee, he entered the ministry of the Church of England.

Returning to New Zealand he worked with the Church Missionary Society until 1847. After a failure in health, he returned to England and spent his retirement in his native town.

C. H. Laws, Toil and Adversity at Whangaroa. Wesley Historical Society, New Zealand, 1945. L. R. M. GILMORE

STAEBLER, CHRISTIAN (1852-1927), American EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION minister, was born Sept. 24, 1852, in Oxford County, Ontario, Canada of Swabian and Swiss ancestry. He completed a German course at NORTH CENTRAL COLLEGE and was a member of the first graduating class (1878) of the EVANGELICAL THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, Naperville, Ill.

After twenty-seven years of fruitful pastoral service in the CANADA and NEW YORK CONFERENCES, Evangelical Association, he was elected editor of Das Evangelische Magazin and German Sunday school literature. Holding this position to the end of his career (1903-26) he became prominent in the official circles of the Evangelical Association.

"He was a man of distinguished and notable talent," said his biographer, Editor Frye of the Evangelical Messenger. Yet, "he was constantly employed in adding to his resources by study and by using his talents to the full in those tasks to which he was called. His authorship of a wide variety of promotional material, manuals, books, etc. on Sunday school and young people's work; his ministry at conventions, and as a member of various denominational boards and commissions; his outstanding membership on the Lesson Committee of the International Sunday School Association—all gave him a wide outlook and enabled him to exercise a powerful influence in the life of the Church."

In his memorial service message in CLEVELAND, OHIO, June 16, 1927, with burial in the same city, Bishop S. P. SPRENG declared, "Above all he was a man of deep religious life, and high moral purpose . . . His name is written high in the records of the Church."

The Evangelical Messenger, Nov. 14, 1925; Oct. 23 and Nov. 20, 1926; June 25, 1927.

ROY B. LEEDY

STAFFORD, CHARLES LEWIS (1844-1930), American minister and college president, was born on Sept. 26, 1844 in Clark County, OHIO, but moved to IOWA at an early age. Educated at the Denmark Academy, he was graduated from IOWA WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY in 1871. Admitted to the IOWA ANNUAL CONFERENCE of the M.E. Church in 1870, he served churches for twenty years at Fairfield, Oskaloosa, Burlington, Albia, Keokuk, and Washington; was PRESIDING ELDER of the Muscatine District, 1884-88; and was stationed at the First Church, Ottumwa, 1889-90. He received an honorary D.D. from Upper Iowa University in 1889.

Elected president of Iowa Wesleyan University in 1891, he launched a vigorous financial campaign, completed the Chapel and Hall of Science in 1893 and the Elizabeth J. Hershey Hall for Women in 1897. He revised the Academy course and the Normal Program and introduced the Commercial and Art courses.

Stafford returned to the pastoral ministry in 1899 at Muscatine and Bloomfield; was district superintendent at Oskaloosa, 1908-13, and held two-year appointments in West Liberty and Wilton before retirement in 1918.

He was a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCES of 1892, 1896, 1900, 1912 and to the ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE in London, 1901. Iowa Wesleyan granted him an honorary LL.D. in 1905. Stafford married Mary Allen, Iowa Wesleyan, in 1869, one of the Seven Founders of The P.E.O. Sisterhood. He died on Sept. 1, 1930 in Oak Park, Ill.

Louis A. Haselmayer, The Presidents of Iowa Wesleyan. Mount Pleasant, 1968.

Iowa Wesleyan Archives.

Minutes of the Iowa Annual Conferences.

LOUIS A. HASELMAYER

STAFFORD, MARGARET V. (1892-1962), missionary and deaconess administrator, served as superintendent of Grant Hall (a dormitory for girls) and Elmore Home for the Aging, MILWAUKEE, Wis., from 1934 until her retirement in 1959. Through her aggressive leadership Methodist Manor, a commodious home for the aging, was established in West Allis, a Milwaukee suburb.

Miss Stafford was born in Rutland, Vt., July 28, 1892. Her parents were Ora E. and Libbie J. Kelley Stafford. Two of her ancestors, Stephen Hopkins and Richard Henry Lee, signed the Declaration of Independence.

She was trained as a deaconess in the Chicago Training School (now consolidated with GARRETT THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY). In 1920 she went to Nanking, CHINA, where she served as mission secretary and business manager of Alden Spears Memorial Hospital.

Called back to America by illness in her family, she served with ARTHUR W. HEWITT at Plainfield and Adamant, Vt., and then went to the midwest to work in Jennings Seminary, Aurora, Ill. From that post she went to Milwaukee to superintend Grant Hall and Elmore Home (now Methodist Manor). After retirement she lived in the retirement home, which had been established largely through her efforts, until her death July 16, 1962.

WILLIAM BLAKE

STAFFORD, THOMAS ALBERT (1885-1969), American clergyman, and church official, was born April 23, 1885, at Enniskillen, North Ireland. He was educated at Lincoln-Jefferson University, the University of Chicago (where he studied business administration) and GARRETT THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, which later conferred on him an honorary D.D. degree. He came to the United States from Canada in 1906, and in 1907 married Mary Anna Fullerton. They had a daughter Grace, who is Mrs. Chester H. Lunde.

Stafford joined the NORTHERN MINNESOTA CONFERENCE of the M.E. Church in 1911 and served churches until 1917, when he became assistant treasurer of the Board of PENSIONS, Chicago. He advanced to treasurer in 1929 and served in this post until 1938, when he was made executive secretary. He held this position until 1952 when he retired. He was responsible for much of the progress in pensions' legislation and administration made in The Methodist Church following unification. In retirement he served as CHAPLAIN in the new Methodist Building in Evanston, Ill., until 1966.

He wrote a number of books of prose and poetry, and a book in the area of church finance, Pension Administration in the Methodist Episcopal Church. His three books of verse are: Peace of Mind, The Stars Are Always Shining and The Mind of Christ. Guide Marks on the Christian Way and The Practice of the Presence are books of devotional material. Christian Symbolism in the Evangelical Churches and Within the Chancel are specialized but standard works which come from his lifelong interest in symbolism.

On his eighty-fourth birthday in 1969 the United Methodist Board of Pensions paid tribute to him and named the chapel of the Methodist Building in Evanston in his honor. He died in Chicago, Nov. 10, 1969.

Who's Who in The Methodist Church, 1966. T. OTTO NALL

STALKER, ARTHUR W. (1860-1930), American minister, was born Nov. 6, 1860, in Commerce, Mich., two years after his father, Thomas Stalker, had come from England to preach in America. The son received his first academic degree in 1884. He married Mary Hendrickson. He served pastorates in Dixboro, Clinton, DETROIT, SAULT STE. MARIE, in MICHIGAN, and MADISON, Wis., where LAWRENCE COLLEGE conferred on him a D.D. degree. He was called to Ann Arbor, Mich., to preach in this University city, and for twenty-five years charmed people with his personality, and preached to vast numbers of students and townspeople.

Perhaps his greatest contribution to Methodism came through his creative efforts toward the formation of the local and international WESLEY FOUNDATION movement. As early as 1882 a petition had been presented from the Ann Arbor Quarterly Conference to the Committee on Education of the DETROIT CONFERENCE suggesting the formation of a boarding and lodging home for Methodist students attending the University of Michigan. The building would have been called Haven Hall. In 1884 Ann Arbor instituted the first recorded Methodist organization for students aside from the Sunday school. In 1885, since there were more Methodist students in the University of Michigan than students of any other denomination, a Wesleyan Guild was incorporated under the laws of Michigan with a Methodist Board of Trustees, an executive council, and an advisory board of twenty-five. By 1894 the Methodists outside of Ann Arbor had begun to help pay the bills.

In his volume, The Church Follows Its Students, Dr. Shedd informs us that magnificent experiments in student work in three universities took place in the decade 1910 to 1920. The leaders of these movements were: James Baker at Illinois University, who had created a Wesley Foundation at Urbana; A. W. Stalker at the University of Michigan; and Edward Blakeman, who led a student movement at Wisconsin University. These three men were blazing new trails in Methodist student work.

In The Christian Advocate of Feb. 23, 1895, James T. Buckley called the Ann Arbor church "the most important pulpit in Methodism." Doubtless this was partly because of the large number of students from overseas attending this church. Stalker realized the challenge of preaching the gospel to all the world. Within a year after his arrival in Ann Arbor, Carolyn Owens had begun classes for Chinese students who met on Sunday afternoons, and Stalker himself taught a bi-weekly Bible class for Chinese students. Indemnity due the United States from the Boxer Uprising was used to send Chinese students to the United States, many of whom came to Ann Arbor to study at the University of Michigan. The list of American students who went as missionaries to CHINA, INDIA, and South America lengthened under Stalker's pastorate. Seven missionaries went from the Ann Arbor student group in the year 1920. In 1921 the Wesleyan Guild Corporation purchased a student building next to the church and named it Wesley Hall. The name was later changed to Stalker Hall.

Besides a growing student work, marking Stalker's twenty-five year ministry in Ann Arbor, membership in the local church grew from 634 in 1905 to 1,692 in 1930. Stalker was a superbly practical religious thinker. "He did not dwell on the sins of the world so much as on the opportunity for doing good . . . the sane enjoyment of life."

Arthur W. Stalker preached his last sermon in the Ann Arbor Church Nov. 6, 1930, on his seventieth birthday. He died Nov. 19, 1930. The Memorial Service was led by the new pastor, FREDERICK B. FISHER, on Nov. 30, 1930.

CHARLES W. BRASHARES

JOHN S. STAMM

STAMM, JOHN S. (1878-1956), American E.U.B. bishop and educator, was born March 23, 1878. His parents were charter members of the congregation at Elida, Kan. As a youth he gave marked evidence of a religious bent. This was developed and strengthened through his years of undergraduate study at NORTH CENTRAL COLLEGE and his theological study at EVANGELICAL THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY. He was ordained by and became a member of the KANSAS CONFERENCE of the EVANGELICAL ASSOCIA-TION. After serving two parishes in KANSAS, he transferred to the ILLINOIS CONFERENCE where he continued in the parish ministry. He was married in 1912 to Priscilla Marie Wahl.

In 1919 he became professor of Systematic Theology in Evangelical Theological Seminary. In this position he continued until 1926 when the general conference of the Evangelical Church elected him to the episcopacy. Quadrennially thereafter he was reelected until 1950 when the GENERAL CONFERENCE of The E.U.B. Church granted him retirement. As bishop, he was stationed for eight years in KANSAS CITY, Mo., and for sixteen in Harrisburg, Pa.

As pastor, professor and bishop, two concerns dominated his activities. In preaching and in writing, he vigorously promoted the cause of evangelism. With equal zeal he espoused the growing ecumenical movement. He gave wise and strong leadership to the program which eventuated in the creation of The E.U.B. Church in 1946. In 1948 he was a denominational delegate to the Amsterdam organization meeting of the WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES. He served as consultant to the programs which produced the Revised Standard Version of the Scriptures and The Interpreter's Bible.

The Telescope-Messenger, March 31, 1956. PAUL H. ELLER

STAMM, PRISCILLA MARIE WAHL (1884-1965), American E.U.B. mission leader, was born Feb. 2, 1884, in Glasgow, Mo. Active in her home church, she was married in 1912 to JOHN S. STAMM, who served as bishop, 1926-50.

Her name early became identified with missions. In the KANSAS CONFERENCE, EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION, she was Branch secretary of Mission Bands. In ILLINOIS she was secretary of Little Heralds, and later Branch president. In 1919 she was elected denominational Woman's Missionary Society vice-president. Her special assignment was Missionary Candidates' Secretary.

She was general president of the Woman's Missionary Society of The Evangelical Church, 1926-44, residing first in KANSAS CITY, Mo., and then in HARRISBURG, Pa. In 1944 she was made honorary president of the Board of Missions, having completed twenty-five years of service to the Board. Upon the formation of The E.U.B. Church in 1946, she was named to the WOMEN'S SOCIETY OF WORLD SERVICE Council, and in 1950 she was voted president emeritus relationship. She was active in effecting union of the Woman's Board with the General Board of Missions of The Evangelical Church in 1930; in raising $50,000 for a Chair of Missions at EVANGELICAL THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY; and in laying the basis of union for The E.U.B. Church women's work.

She died at Friendly Acres Home, Newton, Kan., Dec. 19, 1965, with burial in Kansas City, Mo.

The Telescope Messenger, March 1, 1966.

World Evangel, March 1966. MRS. RAYMOND M. VEH

STAMP OF SHORTLANDS, BARON (1880-1941), British Methodist, was born at Bexley, Kent. This most distinguished and loyal Methodist became a Methodist on his marriage. He was an outstanding economist whose public service in the academic and business worlds was as great as that of any Methodist in this century. He became chairman of the London, Midland, and Scottish Railway and a director of the Bank of England before those two bodies were nationalized. In 1939 his work on the Economic Advisory Council was recognized by his appointment to the wartime post of Adviser on Economic Co-ordination to prepare the nation for the changes needed to win the war. He was killed in an air raid in 1941.

H. J. Jones, Life of Lord Stamp. London, n.d. E. R. TAYLOR

STANDARD SERMONS. The sermons contained in "the first four volumes of Wesley's sermons" constitute, together with his Notes on the New Testament, the doctrinal standard of the Methodist Church in Great Britain. Counsel ruled in 1914 that "the first four volumes of Wesley's sermons" means Vols. 1-4 of those published in eight volumes in 1787-88, forty-four in all. (These four volumes were originally published separately in 1746, 1748, 1750, and 1760.) Local preachers and candidates for the ministry must assent to the doctrines contained in these sermons. The model deed (DEEDS, TRUST) declares that "no person shall be permitted to preach who shall teach any doctrine which is contrary to what is contained in these Standard Sermons." In the Deed of Union, however, the Clause on Doctrine adds that the sermons "are not intended to impose a system of formal and speculative theology on Methodist preachers, but to set up standards of preaching and belief which should secure loyalty to the fundamental truths of the gospel of redemption." These words originated in the Wesleyan Methodist Conference of 1919, and their ultimate background was the Fundamentalist controversy.

J. Wesley, Standard Sermons. 1921. JOHN C. BOWMER

STANFORD, WESLEY MATTHIAS (1846-1923), American Evangelical clergyman, editor, reformer and bishop, was born in the farm home of his parents in Rockland Township, Venango County, Pa., on May 15, 1846. Coming from a devout family, he experienced a change of heart when still a young boy, and he united with the church. His education was in the common schools of his county. When he was eighteen years of age, he began to teach school in the winter and attend college during the summer. Although the PITTSBURGH CONFERENCE, EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION, licensed him to preach in the spring of 1871, he was not assigned a charge until the next year since he wished to finish his college education. His ministry was blessed by an annual average of seventy-five conversions for the next ten years.

After these years in the pastorate he was chosen assistant editor of The Evangelical Messenger in the spring of 1882. He continued in this office until the fall of 1887. Owing to difficulties involving the church press, he resigned and returned to the pastorate in 1888 where he served for eighteen months, aiding in bringing over 100 souls to conversion.

On Oct. 1, 1890 he was elected editor-in-chief of The Evangelical, continuing only until the fall of 1891, when he was elevated to the episcopacy by the GENERAL CONFERENCE meeting in PHILADELPHIA.

He served as bishop for eleven years, when his tenure lapsed according to the reservations imposed by The United Evangelical Church. In 1902 he returned to the editorship of The Evangelical, which he served for eight years. He then became editor-in-chief of the United Evangelical Sunday school literature. He remained in this office until the union of the two branches of The Evangelical Church in 1922.

Bishop Stanford was married twice. His first wife was Rose A. Weimar, who died Oct. 27, 1919. His second wife was Mrs. Amelia Kichline of Allentown, Pa.

Bishop Stanford was of large physical frame and strong in endurance. He placed emphasis upon use of the Bible and urged memorization of Scripture. This he himself did, memorizing at least one verse each day until the time of his death. He died in his home in Harrisburg, Pa., April 8, 1923.

The Evangelical, Dec. 20, 1893.

Evangelical Messenger, April 23, 1923.

David Koss, Bishops of the Evangelical Association, United Evangelical Church, Evangelical Church. Unpublished thesis, Evangelical School of Theology, 1959.

R. M. Voh, Evangelical Bishops. 1939.

ALFRED JOHN THOMAS

STANGER, FRANK BATEMAN (1914-), American minister, historian and seminary president, was born at Cedarville, N. J., on Aug. 31, 1914, the son of Francis Albert, Jr. and Sarah Rush Bateman Stanger. He was educated at ASBURY COLLEGE, graduating magna cum laude in 1934. He attended ASBURY THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY 1934-35. He received his Th.B. at Princeton Theological Seminary in 1937; an S.T.M. in 1940 and an S.T.D. in 1942 from Temple University; a D.D. from Philathea College in 1953 and an LL.D. from Houghton College in 1962. On June 2, 1937 he was married to Mardelle Amstutz and they have three children, Marilyn, Frank Jr., and Jane.

Stanger joined the NEW JERSEY CONFERENCE in 1936 and served a number of pastorates including First, Collingswood, 1951-59. He served as Secretary and Vice-President of the New Jersey Conference Educational Society; Secretary of the Board of Directors of the Wesley Foundation at Princeton; as a member of the Conference Sustentation Fund Commission; the Conference Board of Education; as President of the Conference Historical Society, 1948-59, and as co-chairman of the special committee to celebrate the 125th anniversary of the Conference. He was a member of the Area Committee to celebrate the bicentennial of the arrival of PILMORE and BOARDMAN in America. He served as President of the Northeastern Jurisdictional Methodist Historical Society and as a member of the Executive Committee of the American Association of Methodist Historical Societies. He has been a delegate to JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCES, the GENERAL CONFERENCE, and WORLD METHODIST CONFERENCES.

In 1959 he became Executive Vice President of Asbury Theological Seminary and Professor of Preaching and Pastoral Work. Since 1962 he has served as President of the Seminary. He was the recipient of the Distinguished Alumni Award by Asbury College in 1961. He is a member of The Evangelical Theological Society, The Wesleyan Theological Society, The Association of Seminary Professors in the Practical Fields, and Theta Phi.

He has written The Pauline Doctrine of Conscience, 1940; The Life and Work of the Rev. Joseph Pilmore, 1942; A Workman That Needeth Not to be Ashamed, 1958; and was editor of The Methodist Trail in New Jersey, 1961.

Who's Who in America, Vol. 35.

Who's Who in The Methodist Church, 1966.

N. B. H.

STANFORTH, SAMPSON (1720-1799), British Methodist soldier, was born at SHEFFIELD, December 1720. Uneducated, without religion, he learned to bake, but enlisted as a soldier (1739); he fought in Flanders, FRANCE. Under Methodist influence he renounced swearing, drinking, gaming, and plundering. Purchasing his discharge, he settled in Deptford in 1748, prospered, becoming constable and overseer of the poor. Never formally itinerant, after 1763 he preached widely and frequently in London, did much pastoral work, sponsoring the Deptford and Rotherhithe Chapels. Ordained in 1764 by the Greek bishop Erasmus, and "called" by dissenting congregations, he would not forsake Wesley's connection. His Autobiography is vivid and moving. He died in March 1799.

N. Dews, History of Deptford. Deptford, 1884.

T. Jackson, Lives of Early Methodist Preachers. 1846.

GEORGE LAWTON

STANLEY, HERBERT HAVILL (1888-1965), prominent minister of the BELGIUM CONFERENCE, was born in Semley (England) on April 2, 1888. He studied architecture and theology in LONDON, and went to Brussels in 1921, entering the Methodist Mission in BRUSSELS in 1922. The same year he married Ruth Thonger. He served both as architect and pastor, and Belgian Methodism is grateful for his architectural ability. The most admired churches he built are Brussels Central (1924), Liege (1929), GHILIN (1933), HERSTAL (1947). He was pastor in charge of Ghlin (French), 1923-25; ECAUSSINNES (French), 1929-32; Brussels Wesley Church (American), 1933-40, and again from 1945-56. During Nazi occupation, he was kept in an internment camp, 1941-44. He retired in 1956 at Granges lez Valence, France. He died there on Nov. 30, 1965.

WILLIAM G. THONGER

JACOB STANLEY

STANLEY, JACOB (1776-1850), British Methodist, a noted preacher, was born at Alnwick, Northumberland, England, on Jan. 14, 1776. He joined the Methodist society at the age of eleven, became a Wesleyan itinerant in 1797, and was president of the CONFERENCE in 1845. He was regarded as one of the leaders in Conference of those opposed to the dominance of JABEZ BUNTING. He died on Sept. 8, 1850.

GEORGE LAWTON

STANNARD, GEORGE (1803-1888), NEW ZEALAND Methodist minister, was born in Yorkshire on March 13, 1803, and spent his early years in Ireland. Through the representations of Dr. Day, tutor to NATHANIEL TURNER's children at Mangungu, he left England in 1841 with three other Irish families to emigrate to New Zealand. Leaving the vessel at the Bay of Islands to walk overland to meet it at its destination, he arrived to learn that the ship, Sophia Pate, had been wrecked with all passengers lost, on the bar at the entrance of the Kaipara Harbor.

In 1844, George Stannard was received into the Wesleyan Mission, and subsequently labored at Newark, Ihipuku, Waitotara, Kai Iwi (where he began the native institution), Waikouaiti, Wesley Three Kings, and Raglan. In 1866 he retired from the active ministry, but from his home in Wanganui continued to work among Maoris and Europeans until his death on Dec. 8, 1888.

Minutes of the New Zealand Methodist Conference, 1889.

WESLEY A. CHAMBERS

STANSBURY, WALTER A. (See JUDICIAL COUNCIL.)

STANSTEAD WESLEYAN COLLEGE was founded in 1873, in the Eastern Townships of Quebec, an area then largely inhabited by English-speaking persons. The objective of its founders was to provide a broad secondary education "under wholesome Christian influences" for young men and women. To this end, extensive facilities were provided; an experienced staff was appointed; and the Methodist Church was asked to take the responsibility for the college's spiritual welfare.

Since its inception, Stanstead has remained a responsibility of the Methodist Church and later of The United Church of CANADA. Its facilities have been enlarged and improved continuously. Above all, it has sought to provide a sound education in a religious, but nonsectarian context.

G. H. Cornish, Cyclopaedia of Methodism. 1881, 1903.

Centennial of Canadian Methodism. Toronto, 1891.

G. S. FRENCH

STANTS, NELSON E. (1921-), American E.U.B. minister, was born at Ruffsedale, Westmoreland County, Pa., April 21, 1921. He worked for three years as lathe operator for United States Steel, McKeesport, Pa. This was followed with three years in the Army Air Corps during World War II. He graduated from NORTH CENTRAL COLLEGE and EVANGELICAL THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, and completed residence work for the Ph.D. at BOSTON UNIVERSITY. Stants was ordained by the WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA CONFERENCE of The E.U.B. CHURCH, May 1953 and served pastorates in Naperville, Ill.; Pawtucket, R.I.; Oil City and Youngwood, Pa. Elected Assistant Director of Stewardship, June 1, 1965, he became Executive Secretary, Jan. 1, 1967. He was a member of the following E.U.B. agencies and committees: The General Council of ADMINISTRATION, General PROGRAM COUNCIL, General Board of CHRISTIAN EDUCATION, Department of Communication, the Adult, Youth, and Children's Councils, General Church CURRICULUM COMMITTEE, and the Council of Executive Officers. He has also served as a member of the NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES, Division of Christian Life and Mission Program Board, as well as on the National Council Section on Stewardship and Benevolence. He is married to the former Alice Marie Dyer of Yukon, Pa., and they have two children. In The United Methodist Church Nelson Stants is the Assistant Secretary for Field Cultivation, Division of Interpretation of the Program Council. His membership is with the Western Pennsylvania Conference.

CRAWLEY H. STINE

STAPLETON, AMMON (1850-1916), American Evangelical churchman and historian, was born in Oley, Pa., Jan. 15, 1850 to William and Elizabeth Stapleton. He received his formal education at CENTRAL PENNSYLVANIA COLLEGE (A.B., 1871; M.S., 1888; A.M., 1895) and was awarded the D.D. degree by Ursinus College in 1907. His marriage to Sarah E. Crandall took place March 11, 1875.

During forty-five years of ministry, he was a pastor, presiding elder and prolific writer. Ordained in 1875 in the CENTRAL PENNSYLVANIA CONFERENCE, EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION, his life was invested in that area. As a writer he earned the reputation of being an expert historian. His particular genius lay in his tireless persistence in unearthing significant details. His works have been of worth to later historians. Books which enriched his own church were: Natural History of the Bible, 1885; Annals of the Evangelical Association of North America and History of the Evangelical Church, 1896; Flashlights of Evangelical History and Evangelical Daughters of Song, 1908; A Wonderful Story of Old Time Evangelical Evangelism, published posthumously, 1917. His more general works included Compend of Church History, 1885; "German Printing in Pennsylvania," article in Pennsylvania German Magazine, Vol. 5, p. 87 ff.; Memorials of Huguenots in America, 1901.

He was a life member of the Pennsylvania Historical Society and a member of the Pennsylvania German Society.

After having preached at both Sunday morning and evening services in St. Paul's Church at Williamsport, Pa., he died on Sept. 18, 1916.

R. W. Albright, Evangelical Church. 1942.

Shortess and Gramley, Central Pennsylvania Conference (EC). 1940.

Who Was Who in America, Vol. I. ARTHUR C. CORE

STAR OF ZION. (See AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL ZION CHURCH.)

STARKVILLE, MISSISSIPPI, U.S.A. First Church has the largest congregation in the NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE. Before the removal of the Indians from this area, one of the favorite spots of the Choctaw Indians was a spring which they called "Hicashabaha" which, according to tradition, means "sweet gum leaves on the water." Following the Indian removal in 1832, a settlement called Starkville grew up near this source of water. In 1834 Starkville was visited by a Methodist circuit rider, Jacob Matthews, who preached to a small group of people in the sweet gum grove. The people were seated on rails, and he used a stump for his pulpit. A Methodist society was formed in 1835 and the first church was built in 1839. The sweet gum grove has been the site of four Methodist church buildings. The second was built in the 1850's, the third in 1885, and the fourth in 1925. This church has a unique ministry since Starkville is the site of Mississippi State University. An educational annex was built in 1963-1964 which is one of the finest in the conference.

In 1970 First Church reported 1,592 members, property valued at $775,000, and $87,412 raised for all purposes.

General Minutes, UMC, 1970. GENE RAMSEY MILLER

STARR, LEE ANNA (1853-1937), noted advocate of women's rights and temperance, was one of the few women to be ordained into the ministry of the METHODIST PROTESTANT denomination. She was the daughter of David L. and Sarah Harper Starr and was born at Point Pleasant, W. Va. Dr. Starr was educated in the public schools at Athens, Ohio, and did further study at the University of Chicago, Augustana Theological Seminary, and NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY. KANSAS CITY UNIVERSITY conferred the D.D. degree on her and ADRIAN COLLEGE gave her the LL.D. degree. She was ordained at Princeton, Ill., on Sept. 5, 1895, and became a member of the ILLINOIS CONFERENCE of the M.P. CHURCH. She served a number of churches and charges in the Illinois Conference, including: Ohio, Canton, Paris, and Avalon Park, CHICAGO. She also served Plymouth Church in ADRIAN, Mich. Dr. Starr was a clear, logical and forceful speaker. For six years she was a national representative of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union; she also took an active role in the work of the National Temperance Alliance. In addition to numerous articles in denominational and temperance publications, she was the author of the booklet, The Ministry of Women, and the book, The Bible Status of Women. LYMAN E. DAVIS said of Dr. Starr: "... she occupies a place among the elect ladies of her denomination second only to that of Dr. Anna Shaw." Dr. Starr died in Pittsburgh.

L. E. Davis, Democratic Methodism. 1921.

Minutes of the Illinois Conference, MP.

FRANK W. STEPHENSON

STATE COLLEGE, PENNSYLVANIA, U.S.A. St. Paul's Church is rooted in the Methodist church which once flourished at Centre Furnace, about two miles from State College. This one room wooden structure with a seating capacity of about 100 was built on the side of the hill opposite the old charcoal-iron furnace, whose stone stack still serves as an historical landmark at the eastern approach to the town.

In 1888 a new church was built in the town proper. It was a one-story frame structure costing $3,500. Its most notable exterior feature was its red and white striped "barber pole" steeple, which served as a landmark of that day.

The present stone edifice, built at a cost of $45,000, was dedicated in 1912. Common contemporary comment was, "The Methodists will never get that church paid for, let alone fill it." Since that time the church has undergone various renovations, alterations, and enlargements, and the 1970 membership was 2,382. Two morning services have been conducted for the past ten years in order to accommodate the attendance.

A new education building was dedicated in 1958, and a further addition in 1965.

The WESLEY FOUNDATION was instituted in 1920, with Harry F. Babcock serving as the first student pastor. (Dr. Babcock is now minister emeritus of St. Paul's Church.)

The Wesley Foundation was formed in order to provide students of Methodist preference living on the campus of the Penn State University with "a church home away from home." It was first housed in a wing of the main church, but in 1957 a new building was consecrated for the use of the students. At that time the Wesley Foundation became separated from St. Paul's Church. It became an independent entity, supported by the CENTRAL PENNSYLVANIA CONFERENCE. At present there are about 2,000 students of Methodist preference attending the University.

MRS. J. R. DOTY

L. B. STATELER

STATELER, LEARNER BLACKMAN (1811-1896), American minister, was born of German parentage July 7, 1811, near Hartford, Ky., the youngest of the six children of Steven and Rhoda Pigman Stateler. His grandfather, Ignatius Pigman, was elected deacon by the CHRISTMAS CONFERENCE, and became a pioneer preacher in MARYLAND. L. B. Stateler joined the church at seven years of age, was licensed as an EXHORTER in 1829, admitted on trial into the KENTUCKY CONFERENCE in 1831 and ordained ELDER in 1835 in MISSOURI CONFERENCE. There he served the Cedar Creek, Bowling Green, Canton, and CAPE GIRARDEAU Circuits and organized work at Fort Madison and Burlington, Iowa. He married Melinda, daughter of Elijah Purdom, on Jan. 26, 1836. They had one adopted daughter, Eliza, who married A. D. Weaver.

Stateler responded to the Nez Perce-Flathead appeal for the Bible, but was not accepted. He was appointed teacher and preacher among the Creek Nation, Delaware, Shawnee, Wyandotte and Choctaw Indians for twelve years, becoming in 1844 a charter member of the INDIAN MISSION CONFERENCE, which adhered to the South in the 1844 Separation. In 1854 he became a charter member of the KANSAS MISSION CONFERENCE (MES), and served Wakarusha, Leavenworth City Mission, and Grasshopper Mission. In 1862 he was sent to DENVER, but found his church in Episcopalian hands. While there, his Kansas home was burned in the Civil War border warfare, and Mrs. Stateler set out for Denver, driving a team of mares and accompanied by one hired man driving an ox team and another driving the loose stock. Stateler met them at Fort Kearney. The 700-mile trip was made in mid-winter.

MRS. STATELER

In 1864 they went to MONTANA with the famous frontiersman Jim Bridger's sixty-two-wagon train. Stateler preached his first Montana sermon July 3, 1864. They subsisted on the sale of butter from the cows which they had driven through to Montana. On Christmas Eve 1864 he organized the church of Willow Creek.

In Montana Mrs. Stateler prudently hid her Southern sympathies, but on one occasion relieved her feelings by retiring to a deep canyon and shouting, "Hurrah for Jeff Davis!"—and was surprised and pleased to hear her words repeated by echo. Some twenty years later when Jefferson Davis, late president of the Confederacy, heard of the incident through Bishop JOHN C. KEENER, he sent from his home at Beauvoir, Miss., a cabinet-sized photograph inscribed "with grateful affection and admiration both for herself and her husband, whose devoted service in the cause of Christianity is meet for a monument higher than man could build."

In 1866 the Staterels went to OREGON where he was assigned the Albany Circuit by Bishop KAVANAUGH. But the climate affected his health, and in April 1867 he started back to Montana, having learned that Bishop ENOCH MARVIN of the Missouri Conference had appointed him "Superintendent of Missions in Montana and Colorado." He was presiding elder of Montana (Helena) District, 1867-74; and again presiding elder, 1880-89. He served Willow Creek, Gallatin City, Virginia City and Bozeman. He built Stateler Chapel at Willow Creek in 1873. He retired in 1892, and died at Corvallis, Mont., at the E. J. Stanley home, May 1, 1896. His funeral was May 4 at Stateler Chapel, Willow Creek, and burial was there beside his wife who died April 13, 1889.

Stateler served the church sixty-five years in eight Conferences, and never lived in a parsonage. He was twice delegate to GENERAL CONFERENCE, and attended the ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE in 1891. Though the Statelers lived frugally, their gifts to the church totalled $25,000, and they contributed to the building of every Southern Methodist church and parsonage built in Montana during their lifetime. L. B. Stateler planted Southern Methodism in Montana and nourished it for thirty years.

E. L. Mills, Plains, Peaks and Pioneers. 1947.

E. J. Stanley, L. B. Stateler. 1916. LELAND D. CASE
ROBERTA BAUR WEST

STATEN ISLAND, NEW YORK, U.S.A., is a fifty-seven square mile island in Richmond County at the gateway of New York Harbor. It early became the scene of Methodist preaching and Bishop FRANCIS ASBURY visited it on several occasions. His first visit was in November 1771, when he preached at the home of PETER VAN PELT November 9, twelve days after his arrival in America. On this trip he preached also at the home of Justice Hezekiah Wright in Rossville. By 1773 a circuit had been formed which has been called "Francis Asbury's first circuit in America."

The first CLASS MEETING was organized in 1771, with Israel Disoway as leader; from this developed Woodrow Church near Van Pelt's home, erected in 1787 under THOMAS MORRELL's ministry.

During the Revolutionary War, the island was occupied by British troops, and there is no record of Methodist services. Asbury resumed his visits after the war and preached at Woodrow Church on numerous later occasions. A pulpit Bible, still preserved, was presented to the church by Nancy Disoway in 1795, used by Bishop Asbury after that date. At Nicholas Crocherson's on May 24, 1802, after preaching at the new North End Church Asbury recorded in his Journal: "Several came forward and joined the society. I have visited upon the island for thirty-one years; and I am pleased to find there is a revival of religion."

Staten Island became part of the New Jersey Circuit in the PHILADELPHIA CONFERENCE in 1773; in 1792 it was a circuit alone, but from 1794 to 1809 it was in the Elizabethtown and Staten Island Circuit. HENRY BOEHM, who had been Asbury's traveling companion, was appointed to Staten Island and Woodrow in 1835. The NEW JERSEY CONFERENCE was formed that year and the island was included in that Conference. When the NEWARK CONFERENCE was organized in 1857 Staten Island was included therein. Growth of Methodism was steady. By 1850 there were five churches in the county, and a hundred years later there were a dozen.

F. Asbury, Journal and Letters. 1958.

V. B. Hampton, Francis Asbury on Staten Island. Staten Island Historical Society, 1948.

_____, Newark Conference. 1957.

A. Y. Hubbell et al., History of Methodism and the Methodist Churches of Staten Island. New York: Richmond Publishing Co., 1898.

World Outlook, November 1954. VERNON B. HAMPTON

STATION. In the colonial period all traveling preachers were appointed to CIRCUITS. NEW YORK, PHILADELPHIA and BALTIMORE were vast circuits. Some circuits required five or six weeks of constant travel for the itinerant in making his rounds.

Simpson says: "This term [Station] is used in Methodism and signifies a single church supplied by a pastor. It is used in distinction from circuits, where a number of appointments are united in one pastoral charge. In British Methodism the pastoral work is generally arranged in circuits, which embrace several important churches; but in the United States the larger churches are generally separated from each other, and are known in the appointments as stations."

It is not clear when the word station was first used.

At present in The United Methodist Church "a pastoral charge shall consist of one or more churches . . . to which a minister is or may be duly appointed or appointable as preacher in charge. . . . A pastoral charge of two or more churches is a circuit."

E. S. Bucke, History of American Methodism. 1964.

Discipline, 1964, 1968.

M. Simpson, Cyclopaedia. 1882.

JESSE A. EARL

STATIONING OF PREACHERS. During JOHN WESLEY's lifetime he determined to which CIRCUIT the TRAVELING PREACHERS should be assigned, and announced his decisions at the annual Conference, though he did in fact consider requests and solicit advice beforehand. In the early years a preacher's length of stay in any circuit was only a few months, but the normal period soon came to be one year, which occasionally might be extended to two, but might never exceed three. The "three-year-rule" was written into Wesley's 1784 DEED OF DECLARATION, and continued to be observed by many Wesleyan circuits well into this century, even after METHODIST UNION had rendered it obsolete.

With the establishing of the M.E. Church in America in 1784, it was acknowledged that the elected bishops should exercise Wesley's prerogative of stationing the preachers, and this has been true of most of the offshoots and divisions of this church, in both America and elsewhere. The refusal in 1792 of JAMES O'KELLY's plea for liberty of appeal against an appointment by a bishop led to the first major schism, and similar rebellion against hierarchical authority brought about the organization of the METHODIST PROTESTANT CHURCH nearly forty years later. Mainstream American Methodism, however, continued to regard the episcopal stationing of preachers as a key element in the Methodist system. Increasingly during this present century, however, Methodist bishops have taken others into their confidence, considering requests from the laymen and ministers concerned, and seeking advice from the DISTRICT SUPERINTENDENTS, though the final decision is episcopal. One of the major events at each annual conference is the bishop's reading of the appointments.

Matters took a very different course in Britain. At the first conference after Wesley's death a Stationing Committee was formed, consisting of one representative from each of the Districts into which that same 1791 Conference divided the country. A similar procedure was devised for Irish Methodism. The Stationing Committee met for three days during the week preceding the Conference in order to draw up a plan of the stations for the forthcoming connexion year. This was presented to the Conference itself, which accepted the majority of the recommendations, but usually altered a few, either because of peculiar circumstances unknown to the committee or because of special pleading.

Although many refinements have taken place over 180 years, this has remained the basic procedure for stationing British Methodist ministers. Circuits extend invitations to the ministers of their choice each year, and report those which have been accepted to the minister representing their District on the Stationing Committee—normally the CHAIRMAN OF THE DISTRICT. In their turn the representatives supply the Secretary of the Conference with these provisional arrangements, and he embodies them in a "Preliminary Draft of the Stations of the Ministers." This, together with a list of ministers who are expected to move and for whom no provisional arrangements have been made, is furnished to each member of the Stationing Committee, which meets to prepare a "First Draft" of the Stations for despatch to every minister in advance of the annual Conference. At the Conference in its Ministerial Session any appeals against this First Draft are considered, and occasional adjustments or emergency alterations are made. At the final (third) reading of the Stations no change may be made unless all parties are agreed upon it, but the President and the General Purposes Committee have the power to fill vacancies arising between one annual Conference and another.

Spencer and Finch, Constitutional Practice and Discipline. 1958. FRANK BAKER

Stationing Committee, American. The non-Episcopal Methodist Churches which continue the itinerant system usually have their appointments worked out, as the British do, by a Stationing Committee. The Methodist Protestant Church so managed it, as that Church had no bishops and no district superintendents. Each Conference (M.P.) elected a Stationing Committee upon which in many Conferences there were laymen sometimes in equal numbers with the ministerial members. The MARYLAND CONFERENCE of the M.P. Church empowered the president of the Conference himself to be its Stationing Committee.

The appointments in Methodist Protestant life were announced or placarded publicly sometime in advance of their final reading in order to allow for any appeals which might be made by ministers affected to be brought before the entire body. The Conference had the right to overrule its Stationing Committee when such an appeal came about, but as it turned out, it was almost unheard of for a minister's appeal against his appointment to be allowed. This was because the allowance of one such appeal would unsettle all other appointments—or threaten to unsettle them—and it was felt that after the Stationing Committee had worked out the entire pattern of appointments for the Conference, this pattern should stand unless there were very good reasons for overruling it in favor of one person. Usually in Methodist Protestant life, there was a second reading of the proposed appointments, then eventually a third and final one against which there was no appeal.

Other non-Episcopal Methodisms manage their appointment making in much the same way as did the Methodist Protestants. In Episcopal Methodism, of course, the bishop makes the appointments and his decision is final.

N. B. H.

STATISTICS, DEPARTMENT OF, formerly the Statistical Office (The Methodist Church, U.S.A.). An office with a director empowered to collect and publish the general statistics of The Methodist Church (see General Minutes) was formally set up in 1941 with Thomas P. Potter as editor. Previously the GENERAL CONFERENCE ordered the BOOK EDITOR to collect and publish the statistics of the church. In 1952 in the general reorganization of The Methodist Church, the office was placed under the direction of the COUNCIL ON WORLD SERVICE AND FINANCE. It was supported by the General Administration Fund of the Church.

Its duties were to distribute and collect the forms prepared by the Committee on Official Forms and Records for the Pastors Report to the Annual Conference. These were then processed by computer for the General Minutes, which is published by the METHODIST PUBLISHING HOUSE.

Those who were in charge of the office for The Methodist Church are: Thomas P. Potter, 1941-42; Albert C. Hoover, 1943-59; Frank Shuler and Warren Erwin, 1960; Frank Shuler and Douglas Crozier, 1961; Murray Leiffer and Douglas Crozier, 1962; Roy A. Sturm and Douglas Crozier, 1963-65; Roy A. Sturm and Lois B. Hart, 1966-68.

The office is continued in The United Methodist Church and is presently located in the Headquarters of the Council on World Service and Finance at 1200 Davis Street, Evanston, Ill. Vernon Sidler is now in charge of the Department.

ROY A. STURM

STATTON, ARTHUR BIGGS (1870-1937), American United Brethren teacher, pastor, conference superintendent, and bishop, was born March 27, 1870, in the parsonage of the church of which his father was pastor near Sycamore, Ill. His father, Isaac K. Statton, was one of four brothers who were ministers, all natives of WEST VIRGINIA. His mother was Hester Wallahan, also of West Virginia.

Arthur Biggs Statton was educated in San Joaquin Valley College, Woodbridge, Calif., and Western College, Toledo, Iowa (A.B. and A.M.). LEBANON VALLEY COLLEGE conferred the D.D. degree upon him in 1909.

While teaching Natural Sciences and Languages at YORK COLLEGE, York, Neb., Statton was married to a former classmate, Lola B. Brown, of Harvey, Ill. To their union two children were born, Philo A., and Madeline (Mrs. Edward Oswald).

Statton received his license to preach in 1892, and in 1893 he was received into the membership of EAST NERRASKA CONFERENCE, CHURCH OF THE UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST. He was ordained in 1896. Following brief pastorates in Iowa, he served the St. Paul's U.B. Church, HAGERSTOWN, Md., 1897-1917, with much success and distinction. From 1917 to 1925 he was a district superintendent in his conference. His spectacular success both as a pastor and administrator led inevitably to his being chosen as a bishop of the denomination, his assignment being the South West District, with headquarters in KANSAS CITY. From 1925 to the time of his death in 1937 his labors in the episcopacy were rewarded with continuous success. His administrative ability, his eloquence on the platform, his keen sense of humor, and his unfeigned piety left their impress upon the former United Brethren Church.

Bishop Statton died Dec. 8, 1937. Interment was in Rose Hill cemetery, Hagerstown, Md.

Paul E. Holdcraft, The Life of Bishop Arthur Biggs Statton. Chambersburg, Pa.: The Craft Press, 1948.

Koontz and Roush, The Bishops. 1950.

Minutes of the Pennsylvania Conference, 1938.

PAUL E. HOLDCRAFT

STAUFFACHER, CHARLES A. (1879-1956), American E.U.B. bishop, was born in an Iowa parsonage home, Oct. 29, 1879. Like his father, he became an ordained minister in the UNITED EVANGELICAL CHURCH, serving successively in five parishes. In these years, he was an enthusiastic promoter of the Christian Endeavor and for four years was president of this state-wide interdenominational Christian youth movement.

In 1921 he began his denominational administrative service with one year as Associate Missionary Secretary. In 1922 when the United Evangelical Church and The EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION joined to become The EVANGELICAL CHURCH, he became the Executive Secretary of the Forward Campaign. For four years he gave himself to this cause which, seeking evangelistic and financial goals, strove to strengthen the denomination and its programs. From 1926 to 1934 he was Field Secretary of the Missionary Society. The GENERAL CONFERENCE in 1934 elected him to the episcopacy, and he was stationed in KANSAS CITY, Mo. He was quadrennially reelected, continuing in Kansas City until ill health compelled his retirement from the episcopacy of The E.U.B. Church in 1954. He died in Cedar Falls, Iowa, Nov. 14, 1956.

The missionary operations of the denomination elicited his deepest concerns. In this cause he visited the Orient three times. In 1937 he presided over the meeting which brought into being the CHINA Conference of The EVANGELICAL CHURCH.

The Telescope-Messenger, Vol. 122, p. 14. PAUL H. ELLER

STAUNTON, VIRGINIA, U.S.A. Central Church is the oldest continuous Methodist church in the Staunton District of what is now the VIRGINIA CONFERENCE. It was founded in the 1790's in the blacksmith shop of Sampson Eagon with prayer meetings, which gave the name "Gospel Hill" to this area. The first church was built in 1797, although the deed was not recorded until 1806 when the congregation officially became a member of the BALTIMORE CONFERENCE. The church outgrew two buildings by 1860 and the present building, the fourth on the same location, was built in 1896. Educational buildings were added in 1927 and 1964.

In 1846 the congregation founded the Wesleyan Female Institute in a nearby building. An addition adjoining the church was erected in 1850. The Institute continued operation under difficulties during the Civil War years, later becoming a prominent college for young ladies, with a progressive curriculum and civic responsibility. In 1870 it was moved to new buildings, where it grew in student body, faculty and in its modern curricula, offering calisthenics, bookkeeping, typing and stenography, an early school to offer these to young ladies. Due to financial difficulties, it closed in 1896.

Central Church, which had both white and Negro members, has given birth to seven churches in the present Staunton urban area. In so doing, it has maintained its leadership in program, size, and benevolent giving while remaining a downtown church.

Meeting in Central Church in 1861, the Baltimore Conference voted to unite with the M.E. Church, South. One of the last meetings of the Baltimore Conference, M.E. Church, South was held in Central, which then became a part of the Virginia Conference of The Methodist Church.

RICHARD M. HAMBRICK, JR.

STEBBINS, GEORGE COLES (1846-1945), American hymn writer and churchman, was born Feb. 26, 1846, in a rural community near Albion in Orleans County, N. Y. The boy had the privilege of growing up in a Christian home. The example of his parents formed and guided his interests and concerns throughout his life. At the age of twelve, shortly after the death of his father, George participated in a "Singing School," and came under the influence of Dexter Manly, the vocal instructor of the group. This experience awakened his interest in music and was, in fact, the beginning of his musical career. In later years he traveled to Buffalo and then to Rochester to study singing. While at Rochester, Stebbins met and married Elma Miller, the daughter of a local preacher.

In 1869 the family moved to CHICAGO. There Stebbins became a charter member of the Apollo Club and directed the choir of the First Baptist Church. He later moved to BOSTON and, while there, was invited to meet Dwight L. Moody, who asked him to join him in evangelistic work. Stebbins did so, and travelled to many countries and cities directing the music. During his travels with Moody, he began to write gospel hymn tunes. Among the better known tunes he wrote for hymns are: Saviour Breathe An Evening Blessing, Saved By Grace, There Is A Green Hill Far Away, and True Hearted, Whole Hearted. A collection of his hymn tunes, manuscripts, letters, etc., collected by his long time friend, J. B. Clay, is preserved in the National Cathedral in Washington, D.C. It is known as "The George Coles Stebbins' Deposit of Gospel Hymns."

After the death of his wife and only son, Waring, Stebbins moved to Catskill, N. Y., where he lived with his sister, Mrs. Ella Miller. There he spent his last years editing his music, carrying on a large correspondence, reading and praying for those engaged in evangelistic work around the world. Though deaf, and unable to hear the music or the sermon, he went faithfully to the worship of God at the Methodist Church in Catskill as long as he was able.

In appreciation of his life's work, and in recognition of his contribution to Christian hymnody, the people of Catskill, assisted by friends across the land, raised a memorial fund to install a set of electronic bells in the steeple of the Methodist Church. Through them his music still proclaims the Good News of Jesus Christ, as it also does in the singing of congregations around the world. George Coles Stebbins died Oct. 6, 1945, having lived and served his God for nearly 100 years. Interment took place on Oct. 8, 1945, in the Maple Grove Cemetery, Kew Gardens, N. Y.

History of the Methodist Church, Catskill, N. Y. 1946.

George C. Stebbins, Reminiscences And Gospel Hymn Stories. New York: George H. Doran Co., 1924.

C. WESLEY CHRISTMAN, JR.

STECKEL, KARL (1913-), is a member of NORTH-WEST GERMANY ANNUAL CONFERENCE, formerly WEST GERMANY CONFERENCE of the E.U.B. CHURCH since 1936. He was born Jan. 27, 1913, the son of Richard Steckel, superintendent of the West Germany Conference (EUB), and Lydia Herrmann. He married Ruth Schneidereit in 1939. He was educated at the Universities of Münster i. Westfalen and Tuebingen; Theological Seminary (EUB) in Reutlingen, 1932-36. His appointment to circuits have been Bebra, 1936-37; Tabarz, 1937-39; HAMBURG, 1939-50; Bochum, 1950-52. In 1940-45 he saw military service during the war at the East and West front. He then became professor of Old Testament and Systematic Theology at the Theological Seminary in Reutlingen, 1952, and has been president since 1966. He was made president of the UNITED THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY in FRANKFURT/Main at the union in 1968. He was vice-president of E.U.B. Church Council in GERMANY, 1966-68, and a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE (EUB) in HARRISBURG, Pa., 1958. He was a member of the Working Association of Evangelical Youth in Germany, 1947-52; member of the GERMANY CENTRAL CONFERENCE since 1952; and a member of "Deutscher Ökumenischer Studienausschuss" since 1958. He was co-editor of a Christian education periodical, 1946-52; editor of the German E.U.B. Church weekly, Der Botschafter, 1965-67; contributor to Calver Bibellexikon, 1961-63; editor Die Evangelisch-methodistische Kirche—Was sie glaubt, 1968.

STEDFORD, CHARLES (1864-1953), was born in Bristol, England, and entered the BIBLE CHRISTIAN ministry in 1883. After twenty-six years in circuit work, gaining a reputation for fervent evangelism, he served continuously as Foreign Missions Secretary of the UNITED METHODIST CHURCH (BR.) from 1910 until Methodist Union in 1932. He traveled twice to CHINA and once to AFRICA in search of first-hand knowledge of missions in these countries. In 1928 he became president of the United Methodist Church Conference. He continued to preach into his eighty-eighth year and died at Wylde Green, BIRMINGHAM, on April 7, 1953.

H. Smith, United Methodist Church. 1933. A. W. G. COURT

STEEL, EDWARD ROBERT (1865-1933), American minister, was born in Lockesburg, Ark., on July 25, 1865, the youngest son of Thomas George Tucker and Phoebe Turrentine Steel. In September of 1887 he enrolled in Central Collegiate Institute at Altus, Ark. This school became HENDRIX COLLEGE, and was moved to Conway, Ark. in 1890. Because of the death of his father, he was forced to drop out of college in the middle of his senior year and did not complete his formal education. In 1893 he was admitted into the LITTLE ROCK CONFERENCE. He served the Peytonville Circuit, the Center Point Circuit, and then Asbury Church in Little Rock. Later he became chaplain of the State Penitentiary, where he served for two years.

In 1899 he married Katherine Tyler, the oldest daughter of Joseph K. Tyler and Harriet Marsh. They became the parents of four sons, Richard Tucker, Samuel Tyler, MARSHALL TURRENTINE, and David McIntosh.

In 1900 Steel was transferred to Bentonville in the ARKANSAS CONFERENCE. He served churches at Benton-ville, Fayetteville, and Fort Smith, later becoming presiding elder of the Fort Smith District. From here he was sent to Conway, Ark. In all of these pastorates except the one in Fort Smith, new church buildings were started under his ministry. In 1914 he was transferred once more to the Little Rock Conference, where he served First Church in Pine Bluff. Here another church building was constructed. On leaving Pine Bluff he served as presiding elder of the LITTLE ROCK District, later the Monticello District, and then the Pine Bluff District. In 1917 Hendrix College conferred an honorary D.D. degree upon him.

Edward Steel died in Camden, Ark., on Sept. 24, 1933 and was buried in Pine Bluff.

Journal of the Little Rock Conference, 1933.

MARSHALL T. STEEL

STEEL, MARSHALL TURRENTINE (1906-), American pastor and college president, was born at Fort Smith, Ark., on Jan. 2, 1906, the son of E. R. and Kate (Tyler) Steel. He was educated at HENDRIX COLLEGE, B.A., 1927; D.D., 1939; Union Theological Seminary, B.D., 1931; and SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIVERSITY, LL.D. (causa honoris), 1948. He married Ouita Burroughs on Sept. 4, 1930, and their children are William E., Robert T., and Sarah (Mrs. Norwood O. Hill). Dr. Steel joined the LITTLE ROCK CONFERENCE (MES) in 1927 and served in Bauxite, Ark., 1931-32; Monticello, Ark., 1932-33; LITTLE ROCK, 1933-36, at which time he became pastor of the large Highland Park Church, DALLAS, TEXAS, serving there as pastor from 1936 to 1957. The following year he became president of Hendrix College, Conway, Ark. He was a delegate to the JURISDICTIONAL and General Conferences of 1948, '52, '56, '60, and '64; and a member of the Board of Publication of The Methodist Church, 1944-61. He has also served upon the general Board of EDUCATION since 1961. He was a speaker at the Methodist Men's Broadcast, 1952-59, and was named the outstanding Man of the Year by the Dallas Junior Chamber of Commerce, 1939; also named Man of the Year in ARKANSAS, 1962.

Who's Who in America, Vol. 34.

Who's Who in the Methodist Church, 1966.

N. B. H.

STEEL, SAMUEL AUGUSTUS (1849-1934), American preacher, editor, and author, was born near Grenada, Miss., on Oct. 5, 1849, the son of Ferdinand Lawrence and Amanda Fitzgerald (Hankins) Steel. His parents educated him at the isolated MISSISSIPPI farm on which they lived during and after the Civil War. Licensed to preach at seventeen, he held a pastorate in Hickman, Ky., before entering EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE in Abingdon, Va., where he also served as a pastor. In 1873 he was chosen CHAPLAIN of the University of Virginia, and he was able to continue his education there. He was later awarded the M.A. degree by Emory and Henry College and the D.D. by EMORY COLLEGE in GEORGIA.

Between 1875 and 1918, S. A. Steel served many of the principal urban pastorates of the M.E. Church, South, in VIRGINIA, SOUTH CAROLINA, MISSISSIPPI, TENNESSEE, KENTUCKY, MISSOURI, TEXAS, and LOUISIANA. He was named a fraternal delegate to the 1888 GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M.E. Church. His pastoral duties were interrupted by appointment as the first secretary of the EP-

WORTH LEAGUE and editor of the Epworth Era (1894-1898); by extensive travel as a CHAUTAUQUA lecturer, and by the presidencies of the Manual Labor School at Lumberton, Miss., the Logan (Kentucky) Female College, and the Memphis Conference Female Institute.

Besides contributing widely to the church press, he wrote The Modern Theory of the Bible; En Route; Fraternity and other Addresses; the autobiographical The Sunny Road; and other books and pamphlets. In his years of retirement he prepared a weekly column, "Creole Gumbo," for the Memphis Commercial Appeal.

Grandson, son, and father of Methodist preachers, S. A. Steel exemplified in his career the vitality of the Methodist tradition in the American South in the era following the Civil War.

Journal of Louisiana Conference, MES, 1934.

EDWARD MARVIN STEEL, JR.

STEELE, DANIEL (1824-1914), American college president, theologian, and writer of holiness literature, was born on Oct. 5, 1824 in Windham, N. Y. He joined the NEW ENGLAND CONFERENCE in 1849, after he had graduated from WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY the previous year with high honors. In 1850 he married Harriet Binney, the daughter of Amos Binney, another Methodist theologian. He served pastorates in Boston, Lynn, Syracuse, and Springfield from 1850-61 and 1878-87. He spent twenty-five years as a teacher at such colleges as SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY, Wesleyan University, Genesee College, BOSTON UNIVERSITY and New England Deaconess Training School. In 1872 Daniel Steele became the first president of Syracuse University.

In 1870 Steele received what he affirmed to be the second blessing and immediately put his intellectual abilities to work on behalf of the rising HOLINESS MOVEMENT, of which he became the leading literary exponent. Several of his books became classics in this field. In 1875 Love Enthroned, his first book, was widely received. This was followed by Milestone Papers, Binney's Theological Compend Improved, and A Defense of Christian Perfection. All of these are still in print nearly 100 years later. The last mentioned book was written specifically against the idea of gradual perfection as expounded in a book by Steele's colleague JAMES MUDGE. Other books from this prolific writer include Half Hours with St. Paul, Half Hours with St. John's Epistles, The Gospel of the Comforter, Jesus Exultant, Commentary on Joshua, Commentary on Leviticus and Numbers, and A Substitute for Holiness. Steele died on Sept. 2, 1914, and it is the finest commentary on his life that the above mentioned James Mudge wrote Steele's obituary which appeared in the Minutes of the New England Conference.

Minutes of the New England Conference, 1915.

M. Simpson, Cyclopaedia. 1878. J. GORDON MELTON

STEELE, GEORGE MCKENDREE (1823-1902), American pastor and educator, was born in Strafford, Vt., April 13, 1823. The son of an itinerant with eleven children, he graduated from WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY in 1850, and the same year taught Mathematics and Latin at Wesleyan Academy, WILBRAHAM, Mass.

Joining the NEW ENGLAND CONFERENCE in 1853, Steele was engaged in pastoral work until 1865 at which time he was chosen president of LAWRENCE UNIVERSITY, Appleton, Wis., and held that position for fourteen years. He was an inspiring teacher and resourceful administrator, earnest, sympathetic, and full of humor.

Subsequently he was head of WILBRAHAM WESLEYAN ACADEMY for thirteen years. He was a member of the Board of Visitors to the U. S. Naval Academy in 1871, and a member of two General Conferences, 1868 and 1872.

A frequent and much appreciated contributor to Zion's Herald, he wrote at least twenty-five carefully prepared papers between 1855 and 1873 dealing with literary, biographical, scientific, metaphysical, theological, social, historical, and educational subjects. These were published in such magazines as the Atlantic, Boston Review, Christian Examiner, and theological quarterlies of different denominations.

George McKendree Steele died Jan. 14, 1902.

M. Simpson, Cyclopaedia. 1882.

W. F. Warren, George McKendree Steele, A Memoir. Chicago: privately published, 1902. JESSE A. EARL

STEELE, MARIANNE SHIRLEY TRABUE (1865-1961), an outstanding laywoman in the M.E. Church, South, and leader in the church's mission program, was born in NASHVILLE, Tenn., on Dec. 1, 1865, and was educated in Nashville schools and at Ward's Seminary, Nashville.

In 1889 she was married to Hume Steele, a prominent attorney of Pulaski, Tenn., and they had four children. Upon the death of her husband in 1906, Mrs. Steele became identified with the woman's missionary work of the M.E. Church, South. Because of this new relationship, it became necessary to change her residence from Pulaski to Nashville.

Mrs. Steele became one of the most distinguished women in the Southern church. From 1910-14, she was president of the TENNESSEE CONFERENCE Woman's Missionary Society; from 1917-19 she was president of the Federated Boards of the Women's Missionary Society of North America; and from 1914-33 she was educational and candidate secretary of the Women's Section of the BOARD of MISSIONS of the M.E. Church, South. In connection with her work, Mrs. Steele taught classes in missionary education in pastors' schools and training schools all over the United States.

She died on Sept. 4, 1961.

The Nashville Banner, Nov. 4, 1928.

Pacific Methodist Advocate, Aug. 5, 1926.

World Outlook, January 1934. CULLEN T. CARTER

STEINHAUER, HENRY BIRD (c.1820-1884), Canadian missionary, was born about 1820 near Rama, Ontario, into an Ojibway family. From 1829 to 1832 he attended school at the Indian mission on Grape Island in the Bay of Quinte, and subsequently spent some time at Cazenovia Seminary in New York state. He studied at Upper Canada Academy in Cobourg in 1837, and in 1836 helped WILLIAM CASE at the Alderville Indian Mission. In 1840 he went to Rainy Lake, in what became northwestern Ontario, to assist William Mason, a Wesleyan missionary. He was soon called, however, to act as interpreter, teacher, and translator in collaboration with JAMES EVANS at Norway House.

Steinhauer was received on trial in 1851 and ordained by the Wesleyan Methodist Conference, which met in London, Canada West, in 1854. In company with THOMAS WOOLSEY, who was ordained at the same Conference, Steinhauer went again to the northwest territories and took up the work begun by ROBERT RUNDLE at Lac la Biche. With the help of Benjamin Sinclair, Rundle's lay assistant, he established a new mission at White Fish Lake. Here Steinhauer remained, with the exception of one year, until his death on Dec. 30, 1884.

He taught the Indians how to grow crops and livestock in order to make possible a settled economy. His congregation numbered four hundred; it employed two local preachers. There were regular class meetings, a Sunday school and two day schools at the mission. Among his family of ten, one daughter married JOHN McDUGALL; Egerton and Robert became Methodist ministers. Steinhauer maintained his scholarly interests, and in 1865 helped to revise the hymnary and catechism in Cree syllabics. He was a man of great charm and energy who was revered by his fellows.

J. Carroll, Case and His Contemporaries. 1867-77.

G. H. Cornish, Cyclopaedia of Methodism. 1881.

J. Maclean, Henry B. Steinhauer. Toronto: Methodist Publishing House, n.d.

J. E. Nix

STEPHENS, DAVID S. (1847-1921), American minister and educator, was born May 12, 1847, in Springfield, Ohio, the son of Rev. and Mrs. O. P. Stephens. He was educated in the public schools, attended Wittenberg College, entered ADRIAN COLLEGE in his senior year and graduated in 1869. He secured his M.A. degree in Edinburgh, Scotland, and completed further graduate work at Harvard University. In 1870 he became a member of the Adrian College faculty, teaching Philosophy and Ethics. From 1882-88 he was president of the College, resigning to become editor of the Methodist Recorder. After eight years he was elected Chancellor of KANSAS CITY UNIVERSITY. He held this position for fifteen years, when ill health compelled him to resign. Stephens was ordained by the OHIO CONFERENCE of the M.P. CHURCH, representing that Conference at three GENERAL CONFERENCES. He was also a denominational representative to the ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE in LONDON. Besides granting him his earned Ph.D. degree, WESTERN MARYLAND COLLEGE conferred on him the honorary D.D. degree. He served four years as president of the General Conference.

FRANK W. STEPHENSON

STEPHENS, GRACE (1863?-1936), a saintly Anglo-Indian Methodist evangelist, was born in Fort St. George, Madras, INDIA, in 1863 or 1864. Converted while in her teens under the ministry of Bishop WILLIAM TAYLOR, she joined the Methodist Church and began a ministry of witness, visitation, and service that extended to many parts of Madras city. She began her church work in 1886 and was appointed a missionary of the WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY of the M.E. Church in 1891. She taught and preached; she fed the hungry, comforted the bereaved, warned the sinful, healed the sick, and took loving care of little children. She was known and loved by multitudes in Madras, and her influence was felt in all sections of India. After meeting her, an American businessman said, "One can't be in her presence without realizing that she has lived long with Christ Jesus." She died May 30, 1936.

J. WASKOM PICKETT

JOHN STEPHENS

STEPHENS, JOHN (1772-1827), British Methodist, was born in Cornwall, Feb. 8, 1772. He entered the WESLEYAN METHODIST ministry in 1792. He was elected president of the Wesleyan CONFERENCE in 1827, and warmly supported Protestant Methodists. He was strongly conservative in religion and politics, and was deeply distressed by the behavior of his son, JOSEPH R. STEPHENS, in 1834. He superannuated in 1834, and died at Brixton Hill, on Jan. 29, 1841.

B. Gregory, Sidelights. 1898.

JOHN KENT

STEPHENS, JOSEPH RAYNER (1805-1879), British Methodist, was the son of JOHN STEPHENS, president of the Wesleyan CONFERENCE, but he was expelled from the ministry in 1834. All his active life he was a stormy petrel, unwilling to temper enthusiasm for the causes he took up with tact or conformity. He called himself a Tory Radical and attacked the Poor Law Amendment Act of 1834; at the same time he was secretary of a liberation society, working for the disestablishment of the Church of England. It was his refusal to give up this work that led to his suspension by the Wesleyan CONFERENCE, which was anxious not to alienate Anglicanism. When Stephens joined the Chartists he became one of their outstanding orators, and so inflammatory was some of his eloquence that he was imprisoned for subversion, and the Methodist WILLIAM LOVETT denounced him in his newspaper. After release from prison in 1839, Stephens concentrated more on preaching and pamphleteering; it was too dangerous for a man on five-years' bail to go on making political speeches.

G. J. Holyoake, Joseph Rayner Stephens. 1881. E. R. TAYLOR

STEPHENS, MATTHEW (?-1928), was a beloved early pastor in North INDIA. A convert from Islam, he was noted for the dignity of his manner, the reverence of his services, the neatness of his dress, his respectful treatment of everyone with whom he dealt, and his instructive and inspiring preaching. He was pastor of Central Methodist Church in LUCKNOW for an aggregate of twenty-six years. He died on Oct. 24, 1928.

J. WASKOM PICKETT

STEPHENS, WILLIAM HENRY (1856-1941), missionary to INDIA, was born in Penns Grove, N. J., and was educated at Collegiate Institute. As a young man he had studied architectural engineering. One day, when he was studying the blueprint of a building, he was deeply impressed by the thought that life too ought to have a plan. He decided to give up planning buildings and began to build a life. This resolve led him to prepare for Christian service, and found him ready to respond when WILLIAM TAYLOR sought recruits for India. Bishop Taylor himself took the young man to the boat, put him on board, gave him blessing, and assigned him to Bombay.

When the BOMBAY CONFERENCE was formed in 1892, with the division of the SOUTH INDIA CONFERENCE, the name of William Henry Stephens was read out as one of the original members. His chief field of service was Bombay and the Marathi area of western India, with residence sometimes in Bombay and sometimes in Poona. Several years of his life were spent in the Central Provinces, building congregations of Anglo-Indian and Marathi people around Kampti. His willingness to help also took him to distant Karachi and Quetta.

After retirement he stayed on in India, so his lifetime of work extended over sixty years. He was always among those who do with their might what their hands find to do. In the words of Bishop B. H. BADLEY, "For Methodists to say Poona is to think Stephens." Over the door of his home in CAMDEN, N. J. was this motto: "Without Him, not over the threshold: with Him, anywhere." He died on June 25, 1941, and was buried beside his wife in Poona.

B. H. Badley, Indian Missionary Directory. 1892.

B. T. Badley, ed., Stephens, Missionary Extraordinary. Lucknow Publishing House, 1941.

JOHN N. HOLLISTER

STEPHENS, GEORGIA, U.S.A. Center Church, a very old church in Oglethorpe County, vested its authority at first in the following commissioners: David McLaughlin, David Patrick, George Williamson, George Moore and John Beasley.

On Oct. 13, 1813, one acre of land was purchased from Silas and Savannah Griffin, and on May 7, 1814, one-half acre of land was purchased from David McLaughlin on which was to be placed a "meeting house" where the various groups of Methodists, Baptists and Presbyterians would have a common center to worship Christ as Lord of all.

The Meeting House was named Center for three reasons: it was on the watershed between the Oconee and Savannah Rivers; it was on or near the central point between the six nearest churches, two each of the three denominations using it; and it was a place where the various groups could have a common center to worship Christ as Lord of all. This was indeed a unique and worthy aim, and "Center Meeting House," later to become Center Methodist Church, reflected both this brotherly spirit and adaptability.

The original house was built of hand hewn logs. In 1852 the log building was replaced by a frame structure, and dedication services were conducted by H. H. Parks in July of the same year.

Descendants of the original subscribers have contributed largely to the leadership of the church, J. Robert Campbell entering the ministry while a member there. The contribution of the women of the church has been considerable. The mothers of Joseph A. Thomas and J. Osgood Grogan, who served many years in the NORTH GEORGIA CONFERENCE, were members of Center Church in their girlhood. Two other members, descendants of the McLaughlin family, married ministers who served many years in the North Georgia Conference, George K. Quillian and O. B. Quillian.

The first Woman's Society was organized in 1894.

Today, Center Church has seventy-four members, is well-organized and manifests a fine spirit of devotion and loyalty.

ELIZABETH QUILLIAN WATTERS

STEPHENSON, FRANKLIN WILLIAM (1882-). American administrator, minister, educator, author and historian, was a leader in the work of the M.P. CHURCH on the GENERAL CONFERENCE level for sixteen years prior to Methodist unification. He is the son of Chandler Worth Stephenson, a M.P. minister who served pastorates in the MICHIGAN and OHIO ANNUAL CONFERENCES, and L. Alice Hathaway Stephenson. Dr. Stephenson received his bachelor's degree from ADRIAN COLLEGE in 1906, and graduated from WESTMINSTER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY (now Wesley Theological Seminary) in 1913. The D.D. degree was conferred upon him in 1926 by Adrian College.

Dr. Stephenson served pastorates in MICHIGAN and PENNSYLVANIA and from 1921-24 was the pastor of the M.P. Church in Muncie, Ind. From 1924 until 1940 he served as Executive Secretary, Department of Educational Institutions of the Board of EDUCATION of the M.P. Church, with headquarters in PITTSBURGH, Pa. He held the office of president of WESTMINSTER JUNIOR COLLEGE, Tehuacana, Texas, for six years. He served as president of the Council of Church Boards of Education for one term and after unification served for one year on the Board of Education of The Methodist Church in Nashville, Tenn. Following his official retirement in 1955, he continued in charge of several churches in western Pennsylvania and Michigan. In 1967 he published the book For Such a Time, described as "a brief account of Bishop [JAMES H.] STRAUCH's life and part in bringing the M.P. Church into The Methodist Church." Since 1965 Dr. Stephenson has been Curator of the DETROIT CONFERENCE Historical Society. In 1968 he was elected to membership in "The John Wesley Society" at Wesley Theological Seminary. The Adrian College Alumni Headquarters on the grounds of the College has been named in his honor.

Dr. Stephenson has been married three times: in 1910 to J. Mabel Darling; in 1959 to Elsie Bradshaw; and, in 1967, to Mrs. Walter Mallan. He resides in Adrian, Mich.

F. W. Stephenson, For Such a Time. 1967.

RALPH HARDEE RIVES

STEPHENSON, THOMAS BOWMAN (1839-1912), British Methodist, was born at Newcastle upon Tyne in

T. BOWMAN STEPHENSON

1839. He was educated at Wesley College, Sheffield, and trained for the ministry of the WESLEYAN METHODIST CHURCH, which he entered in 1860, at RICHMOND THEOLOGICAL COLLEGE. His ministry was devoted to the twin aims of evangelism and social service, which for him were two sides of the same coin. His pioneering work among deprived children in Lambeth led the Wesleyan Conference of 1871 to recognize his Children's Home (now the NATIONAL CHILDREN'S HOME AND ORPHANAGE), of which he was appointed full-time principal in 1873, and at which he spent the greater part of his ministry.

His work among children led him on to consider the training of women for the service of the church and community. He published a short book, Sisterhoods, in 1890, and in 1900 he began the organization of the Wesley Deaconess Institute, modeling it largely on the German Protestant Deaconess Home at Kaiserswerth. He was elected president of the Wesleyan Conference in 1891, and on resigning as principal of the National Children's Home, became superintendent of the Ilkley Circuit. Here he secured the college which is now the training center of the Methodist Deaconess Order, and from 1903 to his retirement in 1907 he was warden of the Deaconess Institute. In 1907 he published a short life of WILLIAM ARTHUR.

Stephenson was deeply interested in church music and hymnody, and was the author of the hymn, "Lord grant us like the watching five." A life of Stephenson, by Bradfield, was published in 1913. He died in 1912, and was carried to his grave in the Children's Home Cemetery in LONDON by twenty-four old boys of his home. He was one of a group of men who, entering the Wesleyan ministry after about 1860, found it impossible to accept the traditional Wesleyan circuit system, with its rigid itinerancy and its emphasis on the absolute authority of the superintendent. The FORWARD MOVEMENT, of which Stephenson's work among deprived children was one of the more positive aspects, resulted in part from this recognition that the great cities of the late nineteenth century required more varied methods of evangelism than those inherited from the past. Stephenson was also one of the first Wesleyan Methodist ministers not in a department to be exempted from the requirements of the itinerancy; the same policy was followed in the case of the superintendents of the new Central Halls.

JOHN NEWTON

STERLING, JAMES (1742-1818), American layman, preeminent merchant, and lay evangelist, was born in Coleraine, Northern Ireland, on Jan. 6, 1742 (some descendants give date of Feb. 14, 1743), the son of Archibald and Jane (Hunter) Sterling, subsequently of Caln Township, Chester County, Pa., U.S.A., where they are buried in the Brandywine Manor Presbyterian Churchyard.

At twelve years of age Sterling came to America, working with his uncle as a peddler and later in a store in PHILADELPHIA. About 1762 he opened a general store in BURLINGTON, N. J., where because of his imports and wealth he was called "New Jersey's first merchant-prince." Said John Jay Smith, "In early times no other like concern in Philadelphia could compete with his store."

By his two marriages, first with Mary Shaw (1748-85) and second with Rebecca Budd (1760-1841), he had eighteen children. Of these, John W. was a local preacher, and Mrs. Rebecca B. Cowperthwaite, founder of the church school in Burlington, became the wife of John D. Porter of the NEWARK CONFERENCE.

Major Sterling distinguished himself in public offices, principally as Burlington's third mayor (1801-06). According to family tradition he began his service in the New Jersey Militia (1775-77) by fitting out at his own expense the company he captained.

Brought up a Presbyterian, Sterling heard ASBURY preach about 1771 and became a fervent Methodist, providing the materials for the first meeting house (c.1787). His home in Burlington was a hostel for all Methodist itinerants, especially at Conference time. He was a close friend of ASBURY, EZEKIEL COOPER, who wrote his obituary, and all Methodist leaders of his day.

His most abiding influence is seen in the many Methodist societies which he and BENJAMIN ABBOTT together, in their travels as evangelists, established on the eastern seaboard, especially in NEW JERSEY. JOHN ATKINSON wrote, "Probably no layman in the State ever did more to advance the cause of religion and Methodism than Mr. Sterling."

He died on Jan. 6, 1818 and is buried with his second wife in the Methodist Graveyard on Lawrence Street, Burlington. A portrait, given by the writer, hangs in OLD ST. GEORGE'S, PHILADELPHIA.

American Daily Advertiser, Philadelphia, Jan. 19, 1818.

F. Asbury, Journal and Letters. 1958.

J. Atkinson, Memorials in New Jersey. 1860.

J. Firth, Benjamin Abbott. 1825.

A. M. Sterling, The Sterling Genealogy. New York, 1909.
F. ELWOOD PERKINS

STETLER, ROY HERBEN (1890-), American E.U.B. publisher, was born in Salem Township, Luzerne County, Pa., on May 10, 1890, to Samuel N. and M. Eudora (Pollock) Stetler. Following graduation from Berwick (Pennsylvania) High School in 1909, he worked one year as a clerk for the American Car and Foundry Company. In 1911 he moved to HARRISBURG, Pa., as assistant to the manager of THE EVANGELICAL PRESS, the printing arm of The EVANGELICAL CHURCH. That same year he married Dora E. Lohr, and to them were born three children. In 1922 Stetler was elected Publishing Agent of The Evangelical Church, and later was named a Publisher of the merged E.U.B. Church, in which capacity he served until his retirement in 1958.

Stetler, long active in community affairs, is a past president of the following: Harrisburg Kiwanis Club, Harrisburg Chamber of Commerce, Pennsylvania State Y.M.C.A., Harrisburg Central Branch Y.M.C.A., and he is a director of the Harrisburg Polyclinic Hospital and Harrisburg National Bank and Trust Company. ALBRIGHT COLLEGE conferred upon him an honorary Litt.D. degree in 1948.

He has been an active layman and teacher in Harrisburg's Harris Street E.U.B. Church for over fifty years, and he has preached in countless pulpits throughout the United States. He began writing for the official church paper of his denomination in 1931, and has published five books of his writings: Just Chats (1948), Seeing God In Little Things (1951), In The Strangest Places—God (1953), God Was There (1956), and With God We Can (1958). In retirement he and his wife live in Harrisburg.

EDWIN L. STETLER

ABEL STEVENS

STEVENS, ABEL (1815-1897), American church editor and leader and one who exerted enormous influence during the controversies and turmoil of the mid-nineteenth century in American Methodism, was born in PHILADELPHIA, Pa., on Jan. 19, 1815. He entered the NEW ENGLAND CONFERENCE in 1834, and after serving one year as agent of WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, Middletown, Conn., was the following year stationed in BOSTON. In 1837 he made a European tour. In 1848 he became editor of Zion's Herald, and in this position remained for twelve years, becoming known throughout the Church for the strong positions he took, and his great ability in the editorial field.

Stevens was counted as a moderate in opposition to the abolitionist party then growing in the M.E. Church, and as editor of Zion's Herald opposed strongly the attitude of ORANGE SCOTT and LUCIUS MATLACK for their actions and statements in furtherance of the American Anti-Slavery Society. It was partly because of such opposition that when in 1848 he was elected editor of The Christian Advocate, he declined to accept. However, in 1852 when The National Magazine was commenced, he was appointed editor. He was considered by the Southerners a somewhat balancing influence while he had charge of these papers, and he took the side of the M.E. Church, South following its organization under the PLAN OF SEPARATION, feeling that the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1844 had been competent to produce such a plan, and the Southerners empowered to act under it.

In 1860, Stevens became corresponding editor of The Methodist and retained this position until 1874. His writings were voluminous and widely circulated during his lifetime. These included The Memorials of the Introduction of Methodism into New England; Memorials of the Progress of Methodism in the Eastern States; Church Polity; The Preaching Required by the Times; Sketches and Incidents: A Budget from the Saddle-Bags of an Itinerant; Tales from the Parsonage; The Great Reform; Systematic Benevolence; and his enduring History of Methodism; and History of the Methodist Episcopal Church (four volumes, New York, Carleton and Porter, 1864-67). This monumental work has long been considered an authority regarding the overall life and sweep of Methodism at that period. Stevens also wrote Centenary of American Methodism; The Women of Methodism; and The Life and Times of Nathan Bangs.

Abel Stevens died at the Hotel Vendome, San Jose, Calif. on Sept. 11, 1897.

E. S. Bucke, History of American Methodism. 1964.
M. Simpson, Cyclopaedia. 1881.

N. B. H.

STEVENSON, DANIEL (1823-1897), American minister, was born at Versailles, Ky., on Nov. 12, 1823. He came from a long line of Methodist ancestry reaching back to the first days of Methodist work in MARYLAND under ROBERT STRAWBRIDGE. His grandparents were among the first settlers to come to Kentucky—migrating to Mason County on the Ohio River. Stevenson graduated from Transylvania College in 1847. He joined the KENTUCKY CONFERENCE on trial in 1850. In 1849 he married Sarah Hitt Corwine, the daughter of Richard and Sarah Hitt Corwine. A son, Richard Corwine Stevenson, was for many years professor of history at OHIO WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY.

Although Stevenson held a number of titles and served one term as a presiding elder in the Kentucky Conference, he is best known for his work as an educator. He was one of the founders of KENTUCKY WESLEYAN COLLEGE. Its charter was secured in 1858, but because of the war the school did not open until later. Stevenson served two years as a field agent for the institution. He was superintendent of public instruction in KENTUCKY from 1863 to 1867, being the first person to give full-time work to this office.

Stevenson will be remembered because of his connection with the founding in 1865 of the Kentucky Conference of the M.E. Church in COVINGTON. For some years there had been agitation on the part of a number of people in Kentucky asking for the Kentucky Conference to transfer to the M.E. Church. The records show several meetings between Bishop H. H. KAVANAUGH and Stevenson on this matter. However, when the conference refused to vote favorably on a majority report requesting such action, Stevenson along with seventeen other members relocated. In 1865, Bishop D. W. CLARK of CINCINNATI, Ohio, met with these eighteen and fourteen others making thirty-two assembled in Covington, Ky., for the formation of the Kentucky Conference.

While Stevenson was pastor of Trinity Church, LOUISVILLE, KY., he formed an acquaintance with Joshua and FANNIE SPEED. In later years the large bequest that came from Mrs. Fannie Speed made possible a substantial endowment for UNION COLLEGE at BARBOURVILLE, KY.

In 1879 Stevenson undertook to reestablish AUGUSTA COLLEGE which had been closed in 1850. He labored there until 1887 when Union College was taken over by the Kentucky Conference of the M.E. Church. He served from 1887-97 as Union College's first president under Methodist auspices. He died in Barbourville on Jan. 2, 1897.

JOHN O. GROSS

STEVENSON, GEORGE JOHN (1818-1888), British Methodist, was an expert on Methodist hymns. Originally a schoolmaster, he was a LONDON bookseller from 1855. He also edited the Wesleyan Times (1861-1867). He published City Road Chapel, London (1872); The Methodist Hymn Book and its Associations (1869), enlarged as The Methodist Hymn Book Illustrated (1883); Memorials of the Wesley Family (1876); Methodist Worthies (7 vols., 1884-86). He died in London, Aug. 16, 1888.

W. L. DOUGHTY

STEVENSON, WILLIAM (1768-1857), American preacher, was born near Ninety-Six, S.C., on Oct. 4, 1768. He was nurtured as a Methodist class leader and local preacher, 1800-09, under WILLIAM MCKENDREE and Bishop ASBURY in Smith County, Tenn. Moving to Bellevue, Mo., in 1809, he joined the TENNESSEE CONFERENCE in 1815. In the fall of the same year he preached the first Protestant sermon on TEXAS soil at Pecan Point, on Red River, northeast of present Clarksville. About the same time he preached the first Protestant sermon in what is now OKLAHOMA. In 1816 he moved to Mound Prairie, Ark., and in 1818 was named presiding elder of a new district named Arkansas in the recently created MISSOURI CONFERENCE. He pioneered the laying of Methodist foundations throughout the state for the next half-dozen years.

During these years he sent several of his preachers into east Texas unofficially to see if they would be permitted to preach, even though Roman Catholicism was the state religion there; he also carried on correspondence on the same topic with Stephen F. Austin, Texas political leader whom he had known in MISSOURI and ARKANSAS.

In 1826 he moved to Claiborne Parish, La., where he continued to establish churches and districts. He created a new Natchitoches District, and was made presiding elder, and later did the same for the Monroe District. He retired in 1832 but lived until 1857.

Stevenson's contribution lies in his strategy and courage in establishing outposts on the wilderness frontier of Arkansas, Oklahoma, LOUISIANA, and Texas. Horace Jewell wrote: "The history of Methodism west of the Mississippi is more bound up in his life and labors than perhaps any other man's." In 1970 the NORTH TEXAS CONFERENCE completed plans to have an official Texas State Historical Marker erected in honor of Stevenson on Interstate 30 some miles south of the site of the 1815 preaching.

New Orleans Christian Advocate, 1858.

W. N. VERNOR, William Stevenson. 1964. WALTER N. VERNOR

STEWARD (in American Methodism) was the designation of a lay officer of the Methodist Church who had official responsibility for managing many matters connected with the temporal well-being of his local church. The name came from an appointment by JOHN WESLEY in the early days of the Methodist movement who found it necessary to select men to receive, account for, and disburse the collections which had then begun to be taken in the societies.

Wesley tells in his Plain Account of the People Called Methodists that feeling the weight of the care of temporal things, especially the matter of distributing the collections, he "chose out first one, then four, then after a time, seven, as prudent men as I knew, and desired them to take charge of these things upon themselves, that I might have no incumbrance of this kind" (p. 185, Vol. V, Wesley's Works). He added that the business of these "stewards" is "to manage the temporal things of the society. To receive the subscriptions and contributions. To expend what is needful from time to time. To send relief to the poor. To keep an exact record of all receipts and expenses. To inform the minister if any of the rules of the society are not punctually observed. To tell the preachers in love if they think any thing amiss, either in their doctrine or life." (Ibid.)

It was a happy choice which led Wesley to choose the word "steward" for these lay administrators, and from that day to this the steward has played a prominent part in the ongoing of the whole Methodist movement. In American Methodism at its beginning the pastor in charge was empowered to appoint the stewards for each charge as Wesley had at first done. Bishop ASBURY defended this practice on the ground that the pastor would know better than anyone else who might serve acceptably in this position. The revolt against the strongly centralized administration of early Methodism brought about a change here so that eventually the stewards were elected by the quarterly conferences in each charge, but on nomination of the pastor.

The number of stewards allowed each charge differed from time to time as the General Conference has seen fit to determine.

History of The Office 1784-1968. Stewards in the Methodist Church were in time nominated by a nominating committee and elected at the last QUARTERLY CONFERENCE of the year for the year yet to come. They took their office at the beginning of the Conference year following their election. However, if a steward was elected to fill a vacancy in the Board of Stewards, he took office immediately after his election. Vacancies were filled by the quarterly conference in regular or special sessions, for the OFFICIAL BOARD of the Church could not elect stewards as this was the privilege of the quarterly conference only.

Stewards held office for one year, subject to reelection by the quarterly conference year after year, as is often done. The Discipline carefully outlined the duties of stewards, and these duties have, of course, grown enormously with the great growth of the organizational pattern and work of each local church. The stewards in each charge were organized as a Board of Stewards, or as was usually the case, as the nucleus and preponderant majority of the Official Board.

The "recording steward" in each local church was the secretary of the Quarterly (now Charge) Conference, and kept the records of each session of that Conference. These records or minutes were signed by the DISTRICT SUPERINTENDENT—or whoever acted as president—as he closed each Conference session and approved the minutes. The recording steward was elected such by the Quarterly Conference itself.

Another steward, known as the district steward which office is yet called for, represents in the District Stewards' Meetings the interest of his particular church. His especial duty is to meet with the other district stewards as each fiscal year opens, and see that the money, which must be raised during the year by the respective churches of the District, is allotted equitably to the different charges of the District. The district steward is said to be the only church officer in American Methodism for whom no rules of guidance whatever are outlined in the Book of Discipline, nor is there any specific delineation of his duties. Former Disciplines provided that stewards be "men of solid piety, who both know and love the Methodist doctrine and discipline, and of good natural and acquired abilities to transact the temporal business." (Discipline 1788, et seq.) The 1964 Discipline altered this to "stewards shall be persons of genuine Christian character who love the church and are competent to administer its affairs." All stewards had to be members of the local Methodist church except in certain situations in the Central Conferences in lands outside the United States.

Ex officio stewards known in the later years of The Methodist Church were those who served as stewards by virtue of their particular church office—the church lay leader, the church business manager, the director of Christian education or the educational assistant, the church-school superintendent, the chairmen of all commissions, the secretary of stewardship, the lay member and first reserve lay member of the Annual Conference, the president of the WOMEN'S SOCIETY OF CHRISTIAN SERVICE, the president of METHODIST MEN, the church treasurer or treasurers, the financial secretary, the membership secretary, the president of the Youth Adult Fellowship, and the president of the Methodist Youth Fellowship, or the president of the Youth Council if more than one fellowship is organized. These persons by virtue of their office enjoyed all the privileges of stewards in the meetings of the Board of Stewards. As most of these were and are elected to their respective church positions by the quarterly (now charge) conference, to that extent they too are elected persons.

In The United Methodist Church. In the reorganization of The Methodist Church when it became The United Methodist Church in 1968, the name steward largely disappeared from the Discipline of that year except in the case of the district steward. Those who were formerly called stewards were to be called members of the "Administrative Board" and certain specified persons, as the chairmen of various local committees, were specifically named rather than being called stewards as such. The other Methodisms, aside from The United Methodist Church, of course keep the name and in common parlance the officers of each local church and members of the administrative board will no doubt continue to be called stewards for some time to come.

The finances of the local church have traditionally provided the great work and care of the Board of Stewards. That Board's relationship to the Official Board in the local church will be described under that organization.

Disciplines.

R. Emory, History of the Discipline. 1844.

N. B. Harmon, Organization. 1962.

J. Wesley, Works. 1829-31.

N. B. H.

STEWARD (in British Methodism). This title JOHN WESLEY may have borrowed from the old RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES, and he began to use it almost as soon as the first truly Methodist society was organized at the Foundery, LONDON, in 1739. The original duty of the stewards he appointed for the London society was to collect and disburse money for paying off the debt on the Foundery and for keeping it in good repair. Shortly afterwards Wesley added the responsibility for distributing the money collected for the poor, so that they also functioned like the modern "Stewards of the Poor Fund," except that in that capacity they did not make the physical arrangements for the administration of the Lord's Supper. Soon all the financial affairs of most Methodist societies throughout England were in the hands of similar officers. They were really what are now known as "Society Stewards," but carried out also the duties which, after Methodism grew in size and complexity, were delegated to chapel and poor stewards. The CIRCUIT QUARTERLY MEETING was in effect a meeting of all the stewards and all the class leaders of the societies in each circuit, together with the preachers stationed there, and at the first such Quarterly Meeting (Oct. 18, 1748) from among the "particular stewards" serving the different societies two were appointed as "general stewards" to look after the finances of the circuit as a whole. This office underwent many developments, and after Wesley's death became that of "Circuit Steward." In 1753 two of the Foundery stewards, William Briggs and THOMAS BUTTS, were asked to take care of Wesley's bookselling business in London. They thus became the first of a long series of BOOK STEWARDS, this office also in origin being an extension of the work of a regular society steward, although it soon became a highly specialised responsibility. Although some division of the duties of the stewards came gradually to be accepted, during Wesley's lifetime the situation remained somewhat amorphous, and stewards at different times and in different places carried out varying duties or combinations of duties, and were accorded varying degrees of prestige and authority, although Wesley made it quite clear that they were superior in status to the class leaders. In 1794 the trustees of a society were empowered to choose their own steward to oversee the building or buildings for which they were responsible, but neither his title nor duties were fully defined, and several variants have remained, the most common titles being chapel steward and property steward. Only in the nineteenth century was the office of poor steward clearly separated from that of society steward, and not until 1867 was the title "circuit steward" officially accepted in Wesleyan Methodism in place of "general steward."

Davies and Rupp, Methodist Church in Great Britain. 1965.
W. Peirce, Ecclesiastical Principles. 1873.
Spencer and Finch, Constitutional Practice. 1951.

FRANK BAKER

STEWARDSHIP has come to be the term in present-day Methodist use and in that of other Christian bodies for a general attitude toward personal property as this is held by the Christian individual. It denominates an attitude toward earthly possessions, such possessions being considered not solely as private, personal holdings, but as values held in trust for God who is the Giver of all goods, as well as of life itself. Since the soul of each Christian admittedly belongs to God, so also he feels his possessions should also belong to God with he himself, of course, to administer and manage these in line with what he feels to be the will of God in property values, as in all the relationships of life.

Stewardship, as so denominated, occupies a position apart from the two prevalent driving forces in the realm of economics which the world has known for many centuries. One of these driving forces is the "profit motive" wherein each individual feels the need to acquire for himself—not always for selfish reasons—whatever he may gain in the way of goods of this world, in order first to support himself and family, and possibly to acquire the power and prestige which comes through the acquisition of money or other riches.

The other system is communism in which all theoretically share equally in all goods and values. In its pure form communism has always been quite intriguing to idealistic and Christian people. Indeed, the early Christians, as the Book of Acts tells us (4:32), for a time had "all things in common" with no one to have a claim more than another, and all to share equally "as each had necessity." This pattern of procedure, however, did not work out with such good people as the early Christians, nor is it believed that it will work any better today unless it be enforced by a ruthless police power which sooner or later comes to be the very breath of life to the communistic systems as the world now knows them. Many Christian groups through the ages and from time to time have endeavored to live as communistic colonies, but, while it seems to be quite noble in theory, in actual practice the system breaks down, as it broke down in the Book of Acts when the Greek Christians thought they were mitigated against by the Apostles (who were Jews) in the distribution of the daily goods and values (Acts 6:1).

However, again and again the communistic ideal has been before the Church, and at the time of the Reformation it was found necessary to formulate for the Church of England an ARTICLE OF RELIGION—"The riches and goods of Christians are not common, as touching the right, title, and possession of the same, as some do falsely boast. Notwithstanding, every man ought, of such things as he possesseth, liberally to give alms to the poor, according to his ability." (Article XXIV—UMC). John Wesley passed this article on to American Methodism with no change at all and it is now Article XXIV of The United Methodist Church.

Our Christian forebears in England considered this Article necessary as an affirmation that each Christian does have a right to his own possessions. Our Church, therefore, teaches that the title to one's private property is inherent in the individual, and this has been a fundamental precept among the Anglo-Saxon people, and among other peoples who are outside present-day communistic lands. The above Article of Religion does however guard against a rapacious capitalism—the "profit motive"—by affirming that every man out of his own private possessions must give to the poor according to his ability—and this means that there is a Christian obligation to share with others.

Stewardship for most Christians seems to be the answer to both these conflicting economic systems. The individual Christian truly and rightfully owns his own goods and values, and no one else may rightfully claim them; but in this world he holds all such in trust for God and for his fellow man. He is a steward keeping in trust his own share of this world's goods.

There is enormous literature on stewardship put out by the Methodist Churches, especially by the Board of the Laity, and other lay organizations in the different large Methodist Churches. Many Christian men of means sincerely feel their obligation to fulfill the ideal which Christian stewardship imposes upon them. Just as our wills are ours to make them God's, so our goods likewise are ours to use for God.

N. B. H.

STEWARDSHIP, CHRISTIAN. Br. (See CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIP ORGANIZATION; ETHICAL TRADITIONS, Br.; LAY MOVEMENT IN METHODISM.)

STEWARDSHIP, DEPARTMENT OF, E.U.B. Church, was established by the 1958 GENERAL CONFERENCE. Although the operations of the department were directed by a full-time Secretary of Stewardship, it was amenable to the Council of Administration until 1966.

This late emergence of a Department of Stewardship was the culmination of a variety of stewardship interests within other organizations of both the Church of the UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST and The EVANGELICAL CHURCH. Interestingly, in both bodies, the original stewardship emphasis came from the youth who in the early 1890's formed the Young People's Christian Union of the United Brethren Church and the Young People's Alliance of The Evangelical Church.

By 1901, the stewardship attainments of the Young People's Christian Union attracted so much attention that the General Conference of the United Brethren Church formed a Christian Stewardship Commission. It continued to function until 1913, when it became the Commission on Stewardship and Finance and assumed responsibility for shaping and promoting the general budget. In 1917 General Conference formed the Board of Administration and assigned the duties of the Commission to the new Board.

In 1922 when the Evangelical Association and The United Evangelical Church, which had separated in the 1890's, came together again, they formed a Commission on Finance similar to that which had been founded by the Association in 1915. The Commission was instructed to "emphasize the unity of the various departments and promote Christian stewardship and the principle of tithing." In 1938 the Commission was abolished and its responsibilities turned over to the newly formed Administrative Council of the General Conference; and in 1942, the promotion of Stewardship became the responsibility of the Executive Secretary-Treasurer of the Council. When the Church of the United Brethren in Christ merged with The Evangelical Church in 1946, the E.U.B. Church followed the stewardship policies of its predecessor.

BRUCE C. SOUDERS

STEWART, ANDREW (1851-1925), Canadian minister and educator, was born in Albion township, Peel county, Ontario, the son of John Stewart and Mary (Jamieson) Stewart. He was educated at Victoria College (B.D., 1879), and was ordained in 1879.

In the same year he was appointed to Rock Lake circuit in Manitoba. Subsequently he served at Crystal City, Killarney, and other points. In 1889, Stewart became a lecturer at Wesley College, which he served in various capacities until 1921. He was president of his Conference in 1887 and 1900 and a delegate to the fifth ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE (1921). He died in Winnipeg, March 25, 1925.

Andrew Stewart was given honorary degrees by Wesley College and the University of Manitoba. This was a small recompense for his work as a Methodist pioneer in northwestern Manitoba and as a teacher and member of the governing body of Wesley College.

G. H. Cornish, Cyclopaedia of Methodism. 1903.

T. G. McKittrick, Andrew Stewart of the Prairie Homesteads. Crystal City: Author, 1950.

J. H. Riddell, Middle West. 1946.

F. W. ARMSTRONG

CARL D. STEWART

STEWART, CARL DEVOE (1902-), American minister and missionary to Mexico and Cuba, was born at Sylvania, Ga., on Oct. 26, 1902. He was educated at EMORY UNIVERSITY, where he received the Ph.B. degree in 1928; the B.D. in 1929; the M.A. at the University of Denver in 1938; and the Th.D. from the LUFF SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY in that same year. He was given the honorary degree of LL.D. by ASBURY COLLEGE in 1954. On Dec. 15, 1928, he married Miriam Sarah Thacker, and their children are Barbara Joanne (Mrs. Hubert E. Floyd) and Joseph Thacker.

He was received on trial in the NORTH GEORGIA CONFERENCE in 1929 and appointed to the Moultrie circuit, 1926-27. He was then sent as a missionary to MEXICO to teach Bible in the LYDIA PATTERSON INSTITUTE, 1929-31. Later he was transferred to CURA where he served as pastor of five congregations. As District Superintendent he served the Havana and the Oriente Districts. He was president of the Board of Directors of CANDLER UNIVERSITY, 1959-61 and an instructor in the UNION SEMINARY, 1946-48. After leaving Cuba in 1960 he was director of Methodist Cuban Relief in Miami, Fla. for two years and later pastor in Lakeview, CHICAGO.

He was related to the General Board of Missions by being its treasurer in Cuba and having its power of attorney.

After the death of his first wife (1963), he married Lavetta E. Serott (1967).

Who's Who in the Methodist Church, 1966.

N. B. H.

STEWART, GEORGE WASHINGTON (1858-1915), tenth bishop of the C.M.E. Church, was born on Feb. 3, 1858, near Lynchburg, Va. He joined the church, and he was licensed to preach in 1880. Bishop Stewart attended Central Tennessee College in Nashville and GAMMON THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY in Atlanta. In 1882, he joined the Kentucky Conference and was transferred to the Indian Territory where he was an organizer of missions. In 1884, he was transferred to the Tennessee Conference where he served as pastor and PRESIDING ELDER. At the General Conference in 1910, he was elected to the office of bishop and presided over the state of ALABAMA. Bishop Stewart died on Sept. 20, 1915, at Birmingham, Ala.

Harris and Patterson, C.M.E. Church. 1965.

The Mirror, General Conference, C.M.E., 1958.

RALPH G. GAY

STEWART, JOHN (? -1823), made the first sustained effort by Methodists to evangelize the American Indians in 1815 or 1816. Dr. Wade Crawford Barclay has written a concise account of Stewart's work:

At the Ohio Conference held in September, 1814, Marcus Lindsey was appointed to the Marietta Circuit. Sometime later, at a camp meeting which he held near Marietta, one of his converts was John Stewart, a free-born mulatto—part Indian. He was living at the time—drunken and poverty-stricken—with a tavern keeper and was intent on suicide. But by his conversion he was set upon his feet and soon thereafter started upon a career so filled at once with romance and far-reaching influence that it has won a prominent place in Methodist history.

Following his conversion Stewart managed to rent a house for himself and set himself up in his trade—that of a dyer. He united with the Methodist Church in Marietta and soon thereafter was licensed as an EXHORTER. He was a man "of no learning," but "a melodious singer." Believing that he had a call from God, "his mind became much exercised about preaching." Following a severe illness, he went one day into the fields to pray:

It seemed to me that I heard a voice, like the voice of a woman praising God; and then another, as the voice of a man, saying to me, "You must declare my counsel faithfully." . . . They seemed to come from a northwest direction.

Much impressed, Stewart set off with his knapsack to the northwest. At "the old Moravian establishment among the Delawares" at "Goshen, on the Tuscarawas river," he heard of Indians living on a reservation farther north. Continuing his journey he finally arrived at the house of William Walker, Sr., at Upper Sandusky, a government Indian sub-agent and interpreter. Encouraged by Mrs. Walker, "a most amiable woman, of good education and half Wyandotte," Stewart began religious work among the Wyandotte tribespeople. He induced Jonathan Pointer, a Negro, to become his interpreter. Freely mixing songs with his exhortations and prayers, he succeeded in awakening considerable religious interest and, in time, won a number of converts—among others Pointer, his interpreter, and several of the Indian chiefs. He continued his labors, with two intervals for trips to Tennessee and to Marietta, until the spring of 1818. About this time objections arose because Stewart, though not ordained, had both administered baptism and performed the marriage ceremony. Learning that a QUARTERLY CONFERENCE was to be held near Urbana, he determined to attend and apply for license as a LOCAL PREACHER. Attestation of the granting of license is contained in a letter written to JAMES B. FINLEY some years later by Moses Crume, who in 1818 was PRESIDING ELDER of the Miami District, Ohio Conference:

John met me in the town of Urbana; from which place I went to the quarterly meeting, accompanied by that man of God, Rev. Bishop George. Here we found Stewart, with several of his red brethren, the Wyandotts, with a recommendation from the chiefs that had been converted, earnestly desiring to have him licensed to preach the Gospel, according to the rule and order of our church. At the proper time, and by the advice of the venerable Bishop George, his case was brought before the quarterly meeting conference, his recommendation read, and his brethren heard, who gave a good account of his life and labors in the conversion of many of their nation: those present testifying for themselves what God had done for them, through his instrumentality; and I think it was with the unanimous vote of that respectable body of men, that he was licensed: all believing that they acted in conformity to the will of God.

The report of his work and the licensing of Stewart created so much interest that several of the Local Preachers present volunteered to go in turn to assist him "until the ensuing session of the Ohio Annual Conference"—it apparently being agreed that when Conference came provision for permanent assistance should be made. Stewart continued to labor among the Wyandot, in association with the missionaries placed in charge, though with increasing ill health, until his death of consumption on December 17, 1823.

Reprinted from Wade Crawford Barclay: History of Methodist Missions, Vol. I, pp. 203-205. Methodist Board of Missions. 1949. Used by permission.

STEWART, LUTHER CALDWELL (1893-1962), twenty-second bishop of the C.M.E. Church, was born on June 26, 1893, at Pleasant Hill, Ala. He received an A.B. degree from PAINE COLLEGE in 1914 and was licensed to preach the same year. In 1916, he was ordained a deacon and in 1917 an elder. From 1917 to 1919, he served as a chaplain in the United States Army. He served churches in Florida, Kentucky, and Alabama. The General Conference elected him editor of The Christian Index, the official publication of the denomination, in 1938. Here, he served until 1946 when he was elected to the office of bishop. He died on Nov. 16, 1962.

Clark and Stafford, Who's Who in Methodism. 1952.

Harris and Patterson, C.M.E. Church. 1965. RALPH G. GAY

STEWART, WILLIAM ANDREW (1894-), bishop of the A.M.E. ZION CHURCH, was born to Eli and Allie Stewart in Evergreen, Ala. He attended public school in Conecuh County. He is a graduate of Phelps Hall Training School and Tuskegee. He also did undergraduate study at Howard University in Washington, D.C. Upon graduation from Tuskegee, he taught school in Macon County and Tuskegee, Ala.

He transferred to the Western North Carolina Conference (AMEZ) and became a pastor under Bishop Lynwood Westinghouse Kyles. During his pastorate he graduated from LIVINGSTONE COLLEGE and Hood Theological Seminary. He married Miss Sula Cunningham and to this union seven children were born.

His subsequent ministry proved successful, and he built churches and parsonages and paid debts wherever he was sent.

He was elected to the episcopacy on May 15, 1952. While pastor of Old Ship A.M.E. Zion Church in MONTGOMERY, Ala., he had been active in civic work and had brought about many transformations in the community; namely, the reforms of the attitudes and services of the L. and N. Railroad Company and the Western Railroad Company. His episcopal residence has recently been in WASHINGTON, D. C.

DAVID H. BRADLEY

STIDGER, WILLIAM LEROY (1885-1949), American preacher and professor of homiletics, was born March 16, 1885, at Moundsville, W. Va., the son of Leroy L. and Etta B. (Robinson) Stidger. He studied three years at ALLEGHENY COLLEGE and one at BOSTON UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY, and won the Ph.B. degree at Brown University in 1912. His honorary degrees were: D.D., Litt.D., and L.H.D. from Allegheny, KANSAS WESLEYAN, and Salem (Oregon) Colleges. He married Iva Berkey, June 7, 1910, and they had one daughter.

Stidger was admitted on trial in the NEW ENGLAND SOUTHERN CONFERENCE in 1911, was ordained DEACON in 1913 and transferred that year to the CALIFORNIA CONFERENCE where he was ordained ELDER in 1915. His appointments were: 1911-12, instructor, East Greenwich Academy; 1913-15, Calvary, SAN FRANCISCO; 1916-18, First, SAN JOSE; 1919, publicity agent, Centenary Campaign; 1920-24, St. Mark's, DETROIT; 1925-27, Linwood, KANSAS CITY, Mo.; and 1928-49, professor of homiletics, Boston University School of Theology. He served, 1929-37, as morning preacher first at Copley Church and then at the Church of All Nations in BOSTON.

As a pastor, Stidger had a flair for publicity. In San Francisco he installed a revolving cross on his church, perhaps the first one ever so used. He knew how to make news; it was said that he made the front page of the newspapers about once a week.

He demonstrated originality in preaching, introducing the dramatic book sermon, the dramatic art sermon, the hymn sermon, and what he called the symphonic sermon. The latter employed besides a text a rhyming couplet frequently repeated throughout like a symphonic theme. In 1938 he offered the first course ever taught on Radio Preaching. The National Federation of Press Women gave him a citation for producing a radio program of excellence and public service.

An omnivorous reader, Stidger began early in his ministry the practice of reading a book a day and kept it up. A facile writer, he conducted for years a newspaper column entitled, "Getting the Most Out of Life." He exceeded his aim of publishing one book a year, bringing out in all some fifty-three volumes. Some were books of sermons and poems while others dealt with preaching, church administration, and biography. Some of the titles were: Standing Room Only, 1921; There Are Sermons in Books, 1922; The Symphonic Sermon, 1923; Henry Ford—The Man and His Motives, 1923; God Is at the Organ, 1927; Preaching Out of the Overflow, 1929; Edwin Markham, A Biography, 1932; Those Amazing Roosevelts, 1938; Rainbow Born Is Beauty (poems), 1941; and Immortals of the Christian Ministry, 1947.

Stidger had a large capacity for friendship, knowing and making friends of people in all walks of life, and at times he quietly used that endowment to help persons who needed a friend. Bishop F. J. McCONNELL said Stidger was capable of getting men who had made bad breaks back on their feet and helping them to a new start; he helped some criminals to an honest life and found new chances for youths who had made fools of themselves. McConnell added that while Stidger was a great advertiser he was also the most secretly working helper of men on the edge of ruin he ever knew.

Stidger died suddenly in Boston, Sunday, Aug. 7, 1949, after having dressed in preparation for filling a preaching engagement.

Christian Advocate, Aug. 25, 1949.

General Minutes, MEC.

F. J. McConnell, By The Way. 1952.

Minutes of the New England Conference, 1950.

Who Was Who in America, 1943-1950.

Who's Who in the Clergy.

JESSE A. EARL
ALBEA GOBOLD

STIEFEL, KARL (1867-1948), German-American minister and college professor, was born at Hall, Württemberg, GERMANY on May 21, 1867 and emigrated to Burlington, Iowa. He enrolled at the MOUNT PLEASANT GERMAN COLLEGE from which he received a diploma in 1893 and an M.A. in 1904. In 1893 he was admitted to the ST. LOUIS GERMAN CONFERENCE of the M.E. Church and served a pastorate at St. Charles, Mo. (1893-1895). He was professor of Biblical Exegesis and Historical Theology at the Mount Pleasant German College (1895-1908). From 1908 to 1913 he was at the Eden German Methodist Church, St. Louis where he gained prestige as a writer and preacher. In 1913 he accepted a professorship of Exegesis and Ancient Languages at GERMAN WALLACE COLLEGE, Berea, Ohio, but upon his arrival he found that this college and its affiliate, Baldwin University, were being combined into BALDWIN-WALLACE COLLEGE with the emphasis on the English language. He became Professor of Bible here until his retirement in 1937. He wrote many articles in Der Christliche Apologete and Der Bibel-forscher, leading journals of German-American Methodism, as well as a historical survey of German-American Methodist writings. CENTRAL WESLEYAN COLLEGE conferred an honorary D.D. upon him in 1909. He died in Berea on June 26, 1948.

Haselmayer, The History and Alumni List of the Mt. Pleasant German College; Jubiläumsbuch der St. Louis Deutschen Konferenz; Minutes of the Annual Conferences 1893-1948; Baldwin-Wallace Alumnus, August 1948; Z. F. Meyer Collection of German-American Methodism (Iowa Wesleyan).

LOUIS A. HASELMAYER

STILES, LOREN, JR. (? -1863), was a co-founder of the FREE METHODIST CHURCH. He was a pastor and PRESIDING ELDER in the Genesee Conference of the M.E. Church, and co-founder with B. T. ROBERTS, of the Free Methodist Church in 1860. He was pastor of the independent "free church" at Albion, N. Y., prior to organization of the new "Free" church. He and his congregation joined the new denomination. He was a gifted preacher of superior culture. He died May 7, 1863.

BYRON S. LAMSON

STILLINGFLEET, EDWARD (1635-1699), some of whose writings influenced JOHN WESLEY, was born at Cranborne in Dorset and educated at St. John's College, CAMBRIDGE. He became Dean of St. Paul's in 1678, and although out of favor in the brief reign of James II, was made Bishop of Worcester after the Revolution of 1689. He was a Latitudinarian theologian whose Irenicon (1659) sought to reconcile Episcopalians and Presbyterians by showing that forms of church government were not of the essence of Christianity. Jesus did not institute a particular Church order; the New Testament references to Church order were ambiguous; the form of the Church might be decided by what was best for its spiritual welfare, unity and peace in any particular age. He envisaged the possibility of presbyterian ordination taking place within the framework of an episcopal Church in cases of necessity. This was what attracted John Wesley to his writings: in July 1756, for instance, he wrote to James Clark, an Anglican parson who had preached against Methodism, that he thought that Stillingfleet had unanswerably proved "that neither Christ nor his apostles prescribed any particular form of Church government, and that the plea for the divine right of Episcopacy was never heard of in the primitive Church" (Letters, iii, p. 182). There is no evidence as to when Wesley first read Stillingfleet's Irenicon. This letter is the first trace of his influence as such, though his name is mentioned in a letter to CHARLES WESLEY written in July 1755 (Letters, iii, 136). Opinions differ as to whether Stillingfleet or Lord Peter King had more influence on Wesley's opinions on ordination, but in the decisive Letter to the American Brethren (Sept. 10, 1784), he quoted King's Account of the Primitive Church, not the Irenicon.

J. H. S. Kent, Age of Disunity. 1966.

A. B. Lawson, John Wesley. 1963.

E. W. Thompson, Wesley: Apostolic Man. 1957. HENRY RACK

STILLWATER, OKLAHOMA, U.S.A. First Church ministers to students at Oklahoma State University and was the first union of northern and southern Methodist churches in OKLAHOMA. At times 1,000 students attend its two morning worship services. It has a membership of 3,060, plus 3,500 Methodist students at OSU.

First M.E. and First M.E., South, were both organized in 1890 and united in 1939 with pastors of both churches, John A. Callan and blind Wilmore Kendall, serving as co-pastors the first year. Joe E. Bowers became the first pastor of the new First Church, November 1940.

J. W. Hubbard, appointed to the First M.E. Church in February 1890, was the first minister of any church in Stillwater. In 1891 the church organized the first EP-WORTH LEAGUE in Oklahoma, with F. E. Miller as president. In 1892 the First M.E. Church erected a building, followed in 1893 by the First M.E. Church, South, a building rented in 1893 to the Agricultural and Mechanical College for school purposes. The southern church erected a new building in 1917 which was later sold to the Church of Christ. The northern church built the present sanctuary in 1923. A new educational unit was added in 1958 with a sunken court as a distinctive feature.

Bishops W. McFERRIN STOWE and KENNETH COPELAND are former pastors. In 1960 First Church was one of a number of churches with two lay delegates to the GENERAL CONFERENCE; they were M. A. Beeson and W. H. Wilcox.

IRVING L. SMITH

STILLWELL, SAMUEL, (1763- ?), and his nephew, WILLIAM M. STILLWELL (? -1851), were leaders of a schism in New York Methodism early in the nineteenth century. Samuel Stillwell was born in Jamaica, Long Island, Oct. 22, 1763, moved to New York in 1783, and became prominent in municipal affairs. In 1799 he was elected a member of the state assembly and four years later was city surveyor and had much to do with laying out the city of New York. It is not known when he became a Methodist, but by 1791 he was the leader of a class of Negroes. He was a strongminded, fearless man and became spokesman for some of the trustees of JOHN STREET CHURCH in opposition to what they thought to be the dictatorship of the M.E. Church.

His nephew, William M. Stillwell, joined the New York CONFERENCE on trial in 1814, and, becoming a pastor of two Negro churches in the city, was influential in getting them to leave the M.E. Church. He is said to have been an attractive man, of middle height, with a ruddy complexion, blue eyes and auburn hair. He was much influenced by his uncle.

As a result of the opposition of the Stillwells to what they thought was the arbitrary government of the conference over their property, between three and four hundred persons were led by the Stillwells to leave the M.E. Church. This group for a time grew quite strong numerically. The Stillwellites, as they came to be called, drew up formal Articles of Association making the Bible their rule of discipline. They established a completely democratic organization in which decisions were made by both male and female members of the congregation. For a time William Stillwell preached in a schoolroom on Chrystie Street until a new building was erected on the same street and occupied on Dec. 31, 1820. The group after a time approved a book of Discipline which followed the doctrine of the M.E. Church.

After a time William Stillwell revolted against the organization which he had helped found, and in 1826 the church in Chrystie Street declared its independence from the larger body. William Stillwell died in Astoria, Long Island, Aug. 8, 1851, and his church did not long survive his death. Meanwhile, the larger part of those who had withdrawn from the M.E. Church joined the METHODIST PROTESTANT movement which also was in revolt against the highly centralized M.E. organization. It is commonly assumed that most of the Stillwellites in time became Methodist Protestants, or certainly dropped out entirely from M.E. records. (See also the AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL ZION CHURCH.)

E. S. Bucke, History of American Methodism, 1964. N. B. H.

STILZ, EARL BAUER (1892-1960), American missionary to the CONGO, was born Oct. 8, 1892.

He was educated at VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY, and then was ordained a local preacher. Together with Rev. and Mrs. H. P. Anker and T. E. Reeve, he was with the second group of missionaries to arrive in the Central Congo in 1917, after a long journey starting Aug. 29, 1916.

He retired in 1954. His outstanding contribution was in linguistic work, doing the major part of translating the New Testament into Otetela, as well as translating numerous other books, such as H. E. Fosdick's Manhood of the Master, Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, as well as many hymns. He was in charge of the press and construction work mostly at WEMBO NYAMA but also at Tunda and Lodja. He also was actively engaged in agricultural work. He died on Sept. 4, 1960.

INMAN TOWNSLEY

STINSON, JOSEPH (1801-1862), Canadian minister, was born in Leicestershire, England. He came of a Methodist family and naturally gravitated to the ministry. After a period as a local preacher, he volunteered as a missionary and in 1823 was sent to Melbourne, Lower CANADA. He was received into full connection in 1827.

After a few years at GIBRALTAR, Stinson returned to Upper Canada in 1833 as general superintendent of missions. In 1839 he was, in addition, president of Conference. As missions superintendent he imparted new vigor to the development of the Indian work, and faithfully defended the Indians' interests with the local authorities.

In common with many of his Wesleyan brethren he was caught up in the disputes accompanying the dissolution of the union in 1840. He returned to Britain in 1842 and held circuits there until 1857. In the interval he was one of the first to regain his balance and to promote the reunion of the English and Canadian Conferences that took place in 1847.

When he came back to Canada in 1857 as president of the Conference, he was welcomed as a long-lost brother. He held office as president until 1861, during which time he labored unceasingly to fulfill the duties of his office.

Stinson (D.D., Victoria, 1856) gave his last public lecture on his favorite theme, "The Aborigines of Canada." After a short illness, he died on Aug. 26, 1862. He was remembered with affectionate warmth by his brethren.

J. Carrol, Case and His Contemporaries, 1867-77. Minutes of Conference of the Wesleyan Methodist Church in Canada, 1863. G. S. FRENCH

STOCKHAM, WILLIAM HENRY (1861-1923), American manufacturer and layman of the M.E. Church, South, was born at Lafayette, Ind., on Sept. 15, 1861, and received a degree in mechanical engineering at the University of Illinois. He was superintendent and secretary of the Illinois Malleable Iron Company in CHICAGO from 1887 to 1892 and then became president of the Stockham Manufacturing Company. In 1903 he went to BIRMINGHAM, Ala., as president of Stockham Pipe and Fittings Company.

Active in Methodist affairs, Stockham was Chairman of the Board of Trustees of the International SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, a member of the Executive Committee of the World's Sunday School Association, President of the Birmingham Sunday School Association, member of the Executive Committee of the Alabama State Y.M.C.A., and Trustee of BIRMINGHAM-SOUTHERN and ATHENS COLLEGES.

Stockham was one of the early supporters of the Southern Assembly at LAKE JUNALUSKA, serving as Vice President and one of the Commissioners or Trustees. He was Superintendent of the Assembly in 1919 and a few years thereafter. He died in Birmingham on Nov. 16, 1923.

Who's Who In America.

ELMER T. CLARK

STOCKHOLM, the capital of SWEDEN, lists 790,000 inhabitants (1965). It is the residence of the bishop of the Northern Europe Central Conference of The United Methodist Church.

Remarkable was the work of George Scott, an English Methodist minister in Stockholm from 1830-42 (see SWEDEN). His influence on the free-church movement in Sweden proved most astonishing, but for the organized Methodist Church in Sweden it became only incidental.

In the 1860's Methodism was founded anew through Swedish men converted on the BETHEL SHIP, "John Wesley," in NEW YORK harbor. When American Methodism celebrated its hundredth anniversary in 1866, Scandinavian immigrants there decided to start a college and a theological school in CHICAGO, and they decided to send Albert Ericson to Stockholm to prepare himself for his task as teacher in Swedish literature. He was asked to preach while in Sweden, and did so, and his friends rented a house in Benikebrinken in Stockholm. He felt himself, however, obliged to return to America.

Then came Victor Witting from America on a private visit to his homeland, and he was besought and consented to remain. With Bishop CALVIN KINGSLEY he paid a first visit to Stockholm. Bishop Kingsley preached, and the people asked him earnestly to send a missionary to Stockholm. They were later disappointed when A. J. Anderson, of the CENTRAL ILLINOIS CONFERENCE, was nominated but could not accept the invitation.

These Methodist friends had rented a house in the south part of Stockholm, at Wollmar Yskullsgatan; and Johan Kihlström, who some years earlier had been converted by Carl Olof Rosenius, a friend and helper of George Scott, consented to take care of the little flock of Methodists. Later Kihlström served as pastor in charge in several places, became the district superintendent of the Stockholm District in 1880, but was killed suddenly in a railway accident, April 29, 1882. He was a very gifted and earnest man and was much lamented.

On January 8, 1868, St. Paul, the first Methodist congregation in Sweden, was organized in Stockholm. It proved a worthy church, its architecture reminding one of an English chapel.

Soon it was deemed necessary to reach out to other parts of Stockholm. In 1879 a hall was rented in Rorstrandsgatan (later Wallingatan) in northern Stockholm, and a congregation was organized there in 1882. In the east section of Stockholm, Carl Hultgren in 1886 was named to begin work. Meetings were held in very uncomfortable rooms, but great crowds flocked around the gifted preacher, and a congregation was organized in 1890. Since this was the third in Stockholm, it was called Trinity.

Next year came a young man, Karl Edvard Norstrom (1859-1918), and he saw it as his first task to build a church. Among his hearers was a Mrs. Emma Benedicks, widow of a bank manager of a wealthy, very social-minded family, who did much for the poor. When the pastor visited her to get a gift for the new church, he secured the amazing sum of 100,000 Swedish kroner ($20,000), and was encouraged at once to start the building of the Trinity Church—still looked upon as one of the finest of the free churches built at that time. Mrs. Benedicks later offered the pastor another gift, 50,000 kroner, but the people decided to give the money to St. Peter's Church. The act proved an inspiration for this congregation, and they were enabled to complete their church building in 1901. Trinity Church was dedicated October 7, 1894. The 1894 Annual Conference had been held there the previous August. Mrs. Benedicks died the year after, age sixty-nine.

TRINITY CHURCH, STOCKHOLM, SWEDEN

INTERIOR, TRINITY

Other churches were organized and buildings erected: St. Marcus, 1890—its present chapel dedicated in 1904—and several smaller chapels in other parts of Stockholm. At present there is consideration of concentrating the work, as has been done in GOTHENBURG.

A Central Mission started in 1914 is still at work though under different conditions. A children's home was for some years maintained. Three of the congregations have had homes for the aged, two still at work. The Bethany Deaconess Institution has its headquarters and its hospital in Stockholm.

The Publishing House has been located in Stockholm ever since 1878, and a building was bought in 1924 to become the headquarters of the church.

The rapid growth of Stockholm brought on the need for reorganization and new planning for the future work in both city and suburbs. There has been a kind of community agreement among the different free churches, and in consequence the Methodists have undertaken to care for an ecumenical congregation in Bollmora in the south-east section.

MANSFIELD HURTIG

STOCKTON, THOMAS HEWLINGS (1808-1868), was born in Mount Holly, Burlington County, N. J., on June 4, 1808. His father, WILLIAM S. STOCKTON, was a noted preacher in the M. P. Church. The parents later moved to TRENTON, then to Easton, Pa., and later to PHILADELPHIA.

In 1826 Thomas H. Stockton joined St. GEORGE'S CHURCH in Philadelphia. He was a printer and a student of medicine, but in 1829 he united with the Associated Methodist Church, which became the M. P. Church the following year, and entered its ministry. He was placed on a circuit and in 1830 was sent to Baltimore. Then he was appointed to Georgetown in the District of Columbia and became CHAPLAIN of Congress, holding that position for three sessions. He was elected again in 1862.

While in Philadelphia he erected a church at Eleventh and Wood Streets. He moved to CINCINNATI in 1847, and while there he was elected president of Miami University but declined the position.

He was noted as an editor. In 1837 he compiled a hymn book, and in 1839 he established at Philadelphia a periodical called the Methodist Protestant Letter Press. His other publications included The Christian World (1840-1845), The Monthly Reporter (1846), The Bible Alliance (1850), and The Bible Times (1856-1858). He also wrote and published thirteen books, one of which appeared in print after his death. He received the D.D. degree from Gettysburg College.

In 1863 as Chaplain of Congress he participated in the dedication of the National Cemetery at Gettysburg at which Abraham Lincoln delivered the address.

He died on Oct. 9, 1868, and was buried in Mount Moriah Cemetery in Philadelphia.

T. H. Colhouer, Sketches of the Founders. 1880.

E. J. Drinkhouse, History of Methodist Reform. 1899.

M. Simpson, Cyclopaedia. 1878.

ELMER T. CLARK

WILLIAM S. STOCKTON

STOCKTON, WILLIAM SMITH (1785-1860), Methodist layman and editor and one of the founders of the M.P. CHURCH, was born at Burlington, N. J., on April 8, 1785. In 1822 he moved to PHILADELPHIA, where he lived for nearly the rest of his life.

He was identified with the controversy which gave rise to the M.P. Church in 1829-30. In 1822 he published a book entitled Truth Versus a Wesleyan Methodist in reply to a work entitled Methodist Error. In 1821 he founded The Wesleyan Respository, a periodical which became Mutual Rights and was the leading exponent of the position of the Reformers who organized the M.P. Church. He was invited to become the editor of Mutual Rights but declined. He was the author of Seven Nights, a book against alcohol. He was connected with a political paper called The People's Advocate, and also with the publication of the works of JOHN WESLEY.

In Philadelphia he was active in movements for the alleviation of poverty. He was in charge of the large institution in the suburbs called the Blockely Alms House and the old Alms House on Spruce Street which was immortalized by Longfellow in his Evangeline.

Stockton was twice married. His first wife was Elizabeth S. Hewlings of Burlington, whom he married in 1807, and in 1828 he married Emily H. Dream of Leesburg, Va.

In 1860 he returned to Burlington, where he died on Nov. 20, 1860. He was buried there near the grave of his father.

T. H. Colhouer, Sketches of the Founders. 1880.

E. J. Drinkhouse, History of Methodist Reform. 1899.

ELMER T. CLARK

STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA, U.S.A., population 102,663, was in early days considered the gateway to Southern Gold Mines. Beginning in 1849, a NEW YORK layman named James Westbay and a Rev. Hopkins of TENNESSEE held regular prayer services in Westbay's tent on the main channel of the San Joaquin River. On March 16, 1850, Central M.E. Church was organized from this nucleus by James Corwin who had driven oxen across the plains with ISAAC OWEN. CALIFORNIA was then a part of the Oregon-California Mission Conference. Central Methodists organized the city's first "classical" school. After various locations and buildings, Central Church is now located on Pacific Avenue across the street from the UNIVERSITY OF THE PACIFIC. Pioneer preacher Isaac Owen organized the University of the Pacific in Santa Clara, Calif., in 1851, the first chartered institution of higher learning in California. It moved soon thereafter to San Jose where the campus remained until 1924, when it moved to its present site on Pacific Avenue in Stockton.

The German M.E. Church was organized in 1855 by August Kellner and was discontinued in 1935. The original building for this work was said to be the first German Protestant church building in the State. A Chinese Mission was organized in 1870. This work became the Chinese Christian Center in downtown Stockton and was served by GEORGE H. COLLIVER of the University of the Pacific, 1938-48. At its peak the Center operated ten student clubs. In 1957 the Chinese Center was merged with Clay Street Church to become St. Marks. Wilbur Choy, a product of the Mission, was St. Mark's first pastor. Epworth Chapel was organized in 1892 by adults and Epworth Leaguers of Central Church and in 1923 became known as the Mexican M.E. Church. The name was changed to La Trinidad in 1957. Visser M.E. Church was begun as a mission Sunday School of Central Church in 1882. It was organized as Clay Street M.E. Church in 1886. In 1923 a Filipino Church was organized. It became St. Peter's in 1956.

In 1939 Monroe Hess, Sr., Executive Director for GOODWILL INDUSTRIES in SAN FRANCISCO, assisted by some of his board members, organized Goodwill Industries of Stockton. They were assisted in this project by Methodist laymen of Stockton.

St. Paul's Church was organized in 1950 when Methodist Men of the city canvassed the area west of the University. W. D. Nietman, Professor of Philosophy at the University, was the first pastor. The Hammer Lane Project was organized in 1957 through cooperative efforts of several churches in Stockton. The name was later changed to Holy Cross.

Missionaries of the M.E. Church, South, were appointed to a California Mission in 1849. They travelled by way of PANAMA and arrived in California in 1850. The Mission Superintendent was JESSE BORING and ALEXANDER WYNN was appointed first pastor in Stockton. Grace Church was organized in August of 1850. Under the California Oriental Mission of the Southern Church, a Korean Mission was organized in Stockton in 1922. It was discontinued in 1938.

E.U.B. Work. A San Jose pastor, Michael Guhl, organized a small Evangelical mission in Stockton in February of 1866, but it was discontinued later that year when Guhl transferred to work with the German M.E. Church in Stockton. No further Evangelical work was attempted here. A layman, W. W. Lucas, began a United Brethren Sunday school in the following year and L. S. Woodruff was appointed to serve the congregation. In 1927 a new building was dedicated and the church was named Woodruff Memorial. The membership grew to include several hundred members, but after World War II the members began to move to other parts of the city, the membership declined, and a new freeway was routed through the church property. The church was closed in June of 1968 by action of the California Conference, and the property was sold to the State of California.

In 1946 a mission was begun in north Stockton by the Woodruff Memorial congregation. At first it was known as the Vail Mansion E.U.B. Church, but was later renamed Grace E.U.B. Church. From 1946 until 1959 the congregation worshipped at Vail Mansion on Monroe Street. Ten acres were then purchased on Rose Marie Lane and a new structure built. After the Methodist-E.U.B. merger, the name was changed to Faith United Methodist Church.

In 1850, when California became a State and Stockton a city, the Ebenezer A.M.E. Church was organized with "Father" Peter Green as pastor. In 1860 a school for Negro children was opened in the A.M.E. Church, and soon property was given by a Captain Weber for a new school building. The first teacher was the pastor of the A.M.E. Church, Emmanuel Quivers, a son of a former slave, attended this school and the District School at Waterloo, but was rejected at Stockton High School by vote of the Board of Trustees. Superintendent George Ladd, who had supported his application, then was able to get young Quivers into Mission High School in San Francisco. It was through this episode and its aftermath that Negro schools were discontinued in Stockton and open enrollment established in the city's schools in 1879. The first enrollees were two Negro girls in that same year.

St. Matthews C.M.E. Church was organized by an Oakland pastor, Webster West, in 1947 under the California Conference of that denomination.

C. V. Anthony, Fifty Years, 1901.

Journals of the California-Nevada Conference and its predecessors.

A. MYRON HERWELL

B. FOSTER STOCKWELL

STOCKWELL, BOWMAN FOSTER (1899-1961), American bishop, theologian and writer, was born in Shawnee, Okla., on Sept. 17, 1899. Son of a Methodist minister of the OKLAHOMA CONFERENCE, he studied at OHIO WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY and BOSTON UNIVERSITY, majoring in theology at the Universities of Stuttgart and Heidelberg. He also served for two years as secretary to JOHN R. MOTT, traveling with him through the Orient.

Stockwell married Vera Loudon, an Ohio-born prospect for missionary work, and then served a short period as pastor in MASSACHUSETTS. In 1926 under the M.E. Board of Foreign Missions, he was sent to BUENOS AIRES, to teach in the Union Seminary (now FACULTAD EVANGELICA DE TEOLOGIA), a joint enterprise of Methodists, Disciples of Christ, and Waldensians. In 1927 he was elected principal of that seminary, which he was to direct—with short interruptions—until in May 1960, he was elected by the Latin America Central Conference to be a bishop of The Methodist Church. Assigned to the Pacific area, he made his residence in LIMA, PERU. Shortly after his inception in the charge, he was asked by the Latin America Central Conference to participate in a survey of the state of theological education throughout Latin America. In Buenos Aires while making this study, he became ill and after several weeks passed away on June 5, 1961.

Stockwell's two major concerns were theological education and Christian literature. He brought the Union Seminary of Buenos Aires to its present situation as a school of university level, and launched a program of publication of Christian literature that continues through the River Plate Commission on Christian literature, and has provided hundreds of Christian and theological books to the whole Spanish-speaking world. He founded two magazines for preachers, El Predicador Evangélico and Cuadernos Teológicos.

Bishop Stockwell was also a champion of ecumenism. He was instrumental in the founding of the River Plate Confederation of Evangelical Churches, was a delegate to the Tambaram Conference (1938), and attended the WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES assemblies at Amsterdam, 1948, and Evanston, 1954. His hobby was the study of old Spanish Protestant literature of the sixteenth century and the history of that interesting period in church history. He did great and systematic work for truth and enlightenment through his entire career. A son, Eugene L. Stockwell, is assistant general secretary of the World Division of the Board of Missions of The United Methodist Church in New York. Bishop Stockwell wrote ¿Que podemos creer? (What may we believe?); ¿Que es el protestantismo? (What is Protestantism?); and Nuestro mundo y la cruz (Our World and the Cross).

ADAM F. SOSA

STOKES, ELWOOD H. (1815-1897), American minister, was born of Quaker parents, Oct. 10, 1815 at Medford, N.J. He attended public school up to the age of thirteen and was then apprenticed to a book-binder in PHILADELPHIA. He rose to the position of foreman within a few years. To his experience in the book-binding he attributed his knowledge and love of literature. He was married to a Miss Neff on July 31, 1838 who died four years later. On Jan. 6, 1847 he was married to Sarah Anne Stout, who served with him throughout a long ministry.

Converted in 1834 in Union Church, Philadelphia under the ministry of the famous CHARLES PITMAN, young Stokes became a CLASS LEADER. Licensed to preach in 1843, he was at once appointed to the Salem (N.J.) Circuit. He joined the NEW JERSEY CONFERENCE in 1844 and spent fifty-three years in its service.

He was president of the Ocean Grove Association, 1875-97, guiding its development toward the erection of the great auditorium. He broke ground for this remarkable structure in 1893; four years later his funeral was held there. Bishops JAMES N. FITZGERALD and JOHN P. NEW-MAN conducted the service, which was attended by 7,000 people. Despite his limited formal schooling, Stokes was no mean scholar. His preaching was pictorial and marked by literary allusions and quotations. He published six books of verse. His many friends memorialized him by erecting a statue in bronze which stands between the great auditorium and the ocean.

Journal of the New Jersey Conference, 1894.

Newark Evening News, July 17, 1897.

New Jersey Tercentenary Almanac, p. 497.

HENRY L. LAMBDIN

STOKES, MARION BOYD (1882-1968), missionary to KOREA and to CUBA, was born in COLUMBIA, S. C., Dec. 12, 1882. He graduated from WOFFORD COLLEGE in 1903, and received the M.A. degree from EMORY UNIVERSITY in 1923, and the D.D. degree from ASBURY COLLEGE in 1933.

After two years teaching in the public schools at Jordan, S.C., and two years in the pastorate at ASHEVILLE, N. C., he went to Korea in 1907. He served as district missionary and district superintendent in assignments to Songdo, Wonsan, Choonchun and Seoul stations. In the latter station he also acted and was founder and superintendent of the Seoul City Mission. He was an able speaker in the Korean language and wrote a text for new missionaries, Korean by the Clause Method.

In 1941 he was appointed to the Isle of Pines in Cuba, where he was evangelist and pastor until his retirement in 1948. He then served as a supply pastor in NORTH and SOUTH CAROLINA. In 1952-53, as a civilian with the U.S. Armed Forces in Japan, he was a Korean translator.

Stokes was a member of the Korea and the WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCES. Son of a minister, he was the father of four Methodist ministers: Dr. Mack Stokes, associate dean at the CANDLER SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY, EMORY UNIVERSITY; Dr. James Stokes, editor of the North Carolina Christian Advocate; Dr. Lem Stokes, director of the quadrennial emphasis of The United Methodist Church, 1968-72, and Charles Stokes who serves as a missionary in Korea.

Stokes died in Charlotte, N. C., July 4, 1968.

CHARLES A. SAUER

STONE, FRED DENTON (1875-1956), American pastor, district superintendent, publishing agent, was born in Rock Falls, Ill., Jan. 18, 1875, the son of Daniel Delavan and Nancy (Bean) Stone. He graduated from the Normal School at Dixon, Ill., 1896, and studied at GARRETT BIBICAL INSTITUTE, 1896-97 (hon. D.D., LL.D.). On Oct. 19, 1898, he married Dora May Ashby and they had one son, Fred Denton, Jr. Ordained to the ministry of the M.E. Church, 1897, Stone joined the ROCK RIVER CONFERENCE and gave fifty-nine years of service to the Methodist Church, holding successively the following appointments in ILLINOIS: Erie; Mendota; Dixon; First Church, Elgin; and Irving Park, CHICAGO, 1924-36; superintendent of the Chicago Western District, 1918-24; Publishing Agent of the M.E. Church (1936-1940) and then of The Methodist Church, 1940 to 1948, when he retired. He served with distinction as a delegate in six GENERAL CONFERENCES, 1924-44, and at the Uniting Conference, 1939.

Stone gave valuable assistance to many committees and boards aiding greatly in the merger of the Chicago

Training School with Garrett Seminary. A life member of the Chicago Methodist Social Union, he served it for thirty-five years. His influence was felt in the helpful merger of the German, Swedish, and Norwegian-Danish Conferences into the Rock River Conference. While serving the general Church, he was always "a Methodist preacher," and his interests went out to the local church, to the annual conference, as well as the general Church, and world. Endowed with a remarkably alert mind, he frequently pointed out the way to solve problems and improve conditions. Serving as Publishing Agent before and after unification, he helped reorganize the former publishing corporations of the Uniting Churches into one Publishing House. The BOARD OF PUBLICATION of The Methodist Church formally declared: "He will always be remembered with affection and held in high esteem for his vital contribution to the very difficult task of bringing order out of chaos."

Bishop HARMON, then BOOK EDITOR, who was intimately associated with Stone, said of him: "He was a man short in stature but unusually sagacious and he and Mr. Whitmore (the other agent) ably saw the Publishing House through these early combining years, and through the troubles incident to the second World War."

After retirement in 1948 Stone lived in Evanston, Ill., the last years of his life. He died in Chicago on Oct. 4, 1956, and was buried in Memorial Park, Evanston.

Journal of the Rock River Conference, 1957.

Clark and Stafford, Who's Who in Methodism. 1952.

JESSE A. EARL

STONE, MARY (1872-1954), noted Chinese medical doctor, and one of the first two Chinese women to receive an M.D. degree in the United States, was born in Kiukiang, CHINA, in 1872, and died in CALIFORNIA on Dec. 29, 1954. Her Chinese name was Shih Mai-yu.

Her father was a Christian preacher, the first convert in the Yangtze Valley; her mother was principal of a mission school. She was educated in Methodist mission schools in Kiukiang, and received her medical degree from the University of Michigan in 1896. Returning to China, she founded the Elizabeth Denton Danforth Hospital under the auspices of the WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY. For twenty-five years she headed this institution, personally training more than 500 young Chinese women as nurses. Many of these continued their medical training in America and Europe. For some years she was national president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of China. In 1920, with financial help of American friends, she withdrew from Methodist work and founded the Bethel Mission in Shanghai; it included high school, four orphanages, a nurse training school, and a theological seminary. At the time of her death, it was reported that the mission had graduated more than 2,500 nurses. The mission buildings were badly damaged by bombs during the Sino-Japanese war.

W. W. REID

STONEHOUSE, GEORGE (1714-1793), British friend of JOHN WESLEY, was born at Hungerford Park, Berkshire, and was educated at Pembroke College, CAMBRIDGE. He became vicar of Islington in 1736, but influenced by a society at Islington which had been founded by JAMES HUTTON, he developed leanings toward Moravianism, resigned his vicarage, and retired to Woodstock, near Oxford, where THOMAS JACKSON, in his Life of the Rev. Charles Wesley, says that he "appears to have spent the residue of his days in inglorious 'stillness.'" He disbelieved in the doctrine of eternal punishment.

John Wesley had many meetings with Stonehouse, and wrote in 1781: "He is all original still, like no man in the world, . . . but perhaps if I had his immense fortune I might be as great an oddity as he." The suggestion that CHARLES WESLEY was at one time his curate (see Tyerman's Life of John Wesley, i, 305), has been disproved by an examination of the Islington vestry records (Proceedings of Wesley Historical Society, v, 238-39). John Wesley's Journal reveals the deep affection which Stonehouse had for the Wesleys. He died at Bristol in 1793.

JOHN T. WILKINSON

STONEHOUSE, W. J. (1909-), Canadian ordained elder of the East Ontario Conference of the FREE METHODIST CHURCH, was born at Bracebridge, Ontario. He attended public schools in D'Arcy, Saskatchewan area; was a student at McCord Bible School, Sask.; and received a B.Th. degree from Central School of Religion, Indianapolis, Ind. An honorary D.D. degree was conferred on him by GREENVILLE COLLEGE in 1960.

He served pastorates for twelve years in Alberta, British Columbia and Manitoba, becoming Conference Superintendent for twenty-four years in Ontario. He was a leader in the movement that resulted in the merger of Holiness Movement of Canada and Free Methodist churches in 1958. Later, he became General Missionary Board representative in overseas visitation with areas including IRELAND, EGYPT, HONG KONG, PHILIPPINES, TAIWAN and JAPAN. In 1960 he was official delegate to the Asia Fellowship Conference. He has been Superintendent of the East Ontario Conference since 1959.

BYRON S. LAMSON

STOODY, RALPH WAINMAN (1896-), American minister and long-time director and general secretary of the Commission on Public Relations and METHODIST INFORMATION (TMC), was born in Rochester, N. Y., on April 19, 1896. His parents were John Henry and Fannie (Wainman) Stooddy. He was educated at OHIO WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, receiving in 1917 a B.A. degree; was a student at GARRETT BIBLICAL INSTITUTE, 1917-18; and received the S.T.B. degree from BOSTON UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY in 1920. He studied further at Columbia University in the summer of 1930, and at Harvard in the summer of 1938. He was awarded the S.T.D. by Gordon College in 1939; the honorary D.D. degree by Ohio Wesleyan in 1947, and the Litt.D. by AMERICAN UNIVERSITY in 1958. He married Lucile Bennett on March 5, 1918, and they have one daughter.

For a time he was connected with the former Epworth Herald in CHICAGO, 1917-18; and then was ordained in the ministry of the M.E. Church in 1920. His pastoral record included South Walpole, Mass., 1919-20; St. Alban's, Vt., 1920-23; St. Johnsbury, Vt., 1923-26; Chestnut Street, Portland, Maine, 1926-34; and Union Methodist Church, Fall River, Mass., 1934-40. In 1940, upon the organization of the Commission on Public Relations and Methodist Information of The Methodist Church, Dr. Stooddy was made its general secretary and director, and in this position he served in NEW YORK for the next twenty-four years until his retirement in 1964.

RALPH STOODY

In connection with his work, he was a member of the Department of International Justice and Goodwill, and the Department of Religious Radio of the NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES; was a Methodist representative and consultant of the Church of the Air program of the Columbia Broadcasting System; a member of the WORLD METHODIST COUNCIL, 1947, '51, '56, and '61; and the president of the COUNCIL OF SECRETARIES OF The Methodist Church, 1956. During the first World War he served as a sergeant with the American Expeditionary Forces in France, 1918-19. He was briefly a war correspondent in the Mediterranean and North African theatres in 1945, and again in Japan and Korea in 1953. He was a press official at the organizing assembly of the WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES in Amsterdam, Holland, in 1948, and again in New Delhi, India, in 1961. He headed the press room of the WORLD METHODIST CONFERENCE in 1947, '51, '56, '61, and '66. He was also a member of the executive committee of the WORLD METHODIST COUNCIL, and of various organizations (Methodist, interdenominational and secular), having to do with public relations. He broadcast a series of religious addresses over radio through the American Broadcasting Company and the National Broadcasting Company networks during the second World War. His dissertation was a history of the United States, Religious Journalism (1939). In 1959 he published Handbook of Church Public Relations (Abingdon). Since retiring in 1964 he has divided his time between Cape Cod and Florida.

Who's Who in The Methodist Church, 1966. N. B. H.

STORY, GEORGE (1738-1818), British Methodist, was one of JOHN WESLEY's itinerants. He was born at Harthill, in the West Riding of Yorkshire. He was trained early in a bookseller's shop, and at eighteen was managing a printing office with the responsibility for printing a weekly paper and oversight of the staff. He was an insatiable reader: "I frequently read until eleven at night and began again at four in the morning," he said of himself as a young man. "Nor had I patience to eat my meat unless I had a book before me." His conversion was a long process, which is described by him in the autobiographical statement included in the Lives of Early Methodist Preachers. He began to itinerate in February 1763, and after serving on many circuits was appointed by the Wesleyan CONFERENCE corrector of the press (1793-94). He then became editor, from 1794 to 1804, when he was succeeded by JOSEPH BENSON. From 1804 Story undertook the oversight of the printing works. He died on May 22, 1818.

JOHN KENT

W. MCFERRIN STOWE

STOWE, WILLIAM MCFERRIN (1913-), American bishop, was born on Jan. 28, 1913, in Franklin, Tenn., the son of John Joel and Myra Anderson McFerrin Stowe. He received his B.A. degree from HENDRIX COLLEGE in 1932; the B.D. from DUKE UNIVERSITY in 1935; the Ph.D. from BOSTON UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY in 1938. He has received honorary D.D. degrees from OKLAHOMA CITY UNIVERSITY, 1955, and Hendrix College, 1956. On July 28, 1943, he was united in marriage to Twila Farrell. They have three children, William McFerrin, Jr., Twila Gayle, and Martha Elizabeth.

McFerrin Stowe, as he is usually referred to, was ordained to the ministry of The Methodist Church in 1940. He has served the following pastorates: Alta Loma, Texas, 1938-40; Garden Villas Church, HOUSTON, Texas, 1940-44; First Church, STILLWATER, Okla., 1949-51; St. Luke's Church, OKLAHOMA CITY, 1951-64. He was a staff member of the General Board of Education of The Methodist Church in Nashville, Tenn., 1944-49. He was elected bishop of the SOUTH CENTRAL JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCE in DALLAS, Texas in 1964, and assigned to the KANSAS Area.

He is past president of the Oklahoma City Council of Churches and the president of the Oklahoma Conference Methodist Board of Education. He was a member of the GENERAL and JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCES of The Methodist Church of 1956, '60, and '64. In 1958 and 1962 he was a delegate to the World Methodist Theological Institute held in Oxford, England. He is a member of the Oklahoma City's Mayor's Committee on Human Relations; Board of Directors of the Urban League of Oklahoma City; Board of Trustees of Oklahoma City University; Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees of Oklahoma City University; Board of Trustees of Scarritt College; COORDINATING COUNCIL of The Methodist Church; Board of Opera Association of Oklahoma City; Commission on Ecumenical Consultation (created by the COUNCIL OF BISHOPS of The Methodist Church, merged with another group in 1964); Executive Committee of Oklahoma Methodist Conference Council; and Board of Trustees of the Methodist Manor in Tulsa, Okla. He is president of the Oklahoma Conference of The Methodist Commission on Higher Christian Education and the dean of the Oklahoma Methodist Pastors' School. He has been a visiting professor at the following: ILIFF SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY, SCARRITT COLLEGE, special lecturer at Boston University School of Theology, PERKINS SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY, WESTMINSTER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, Graduate School of Religion, UNIVERSITY OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA and GAMSON SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY. He has been a lecturer in Pastor's Schools and speaker at Religious Emphasis Weeks throughout the nation. His counseling areas include religious, vocational and personal problems, as well as general pastoral counseling. He is the author of two books, The Characteristics of Jesus, published in 1962 by Abingdon Press, and The Power of Paul, 1963, Abingdon Press. For the 1968-72 quadrennium he was re-assigned to the TOPEKA (Kansas) Area.

Who's Who in America, Vol. 34.

Who's Who in The Methodist Church, 1966.

N. B. II.

STRANGERS' FRIEND SOCIETY, a British Methodist relief organization, was started in the eighteenth century and intended to look after the "destitute sick poor, without distinction of sect or country, at their own habitations." The original founder was John Gardner, of Smithfield, London, who in December 1785, wrote to JOHN WESLEY to say that "a few of us are subscribing a penny a week each, which is to be carried on the Sabbath by one of ourselves, who read and pray with the afflicted . . . Our benevolent plan is opposed by my class-leader; therefore we are constrained to seek your approbation before we proceed." In his reply, dated December 31, 1785, John Wesley immediately offered to subscribe threepence a week; similar societies were founded in other parts of the country, and in 1790 Wesley drew up their rules (see the entry in his Journal for March 14, 1790). Gardner became a doctor, and his tomb bears the inscription, "Dr. John Gardner, Last and Best Bedroom, 1807." The Strangers' Friend Society did much good work in the nineteenth century, and a few of the societies still exist.

L. Tyerman, John Wesley. 1890.

JOHN KENT

STRAUGHN, JAMES HENRY (1877-), American bishop and METHODIST PROTESTANT President, was born at Centerville, Md., on June 1, 1877, the son of James Henry and Laura Maria (Simmons) Straughn. In 1895 he entered WESTERN MARYLAND COLLEGE, receiving the A.B. degree in 1899, and from that same college the A.M. in 1902, D.D. in 1922, and LL.D. in 1949. From WESTMIN-STER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY he received the B.D. in 1901; ADRIAN COLLEGE, LL.D., 1937; WEST VIRGINIA WESLEYAN COLLEGE, LL.D., 1941; ALLEGHENY COLLEGE, LL.D., 1941.

On June 1, 1904, he was united in marriage to Clara Bellamy Morgan of Cumberland, Md., and they had one child, Laurlene (Mrs. Robert W. Pratt). Mrs. Straughn died July 27, 1965.

James Henry Straughn was admitted on trial to the MARYLAND CONFERENCE, M. P. Church, in 1901, full connection and ELDER in 1903. His pastorates included Mount Tabor Church, WASHINGTON, D. C., 1901-04; First Church, Lynchburg, Va., 1904-06; Broadway Church, BALTIMORE, Md., 1910-12; Christ Church, Laurel, Del., 1912-19; St. John's Church, Baltimore, Md., 1919-20; Rhode Island Avenue Church, Washington, D. C., 1923-26; and North Baltimore Church, Baltimore, 1932-36. He was president of West Lafayette College (Ohio), 1906-10; president of the Maryland Conference, 1920-23; treasurer and promotion secretary of the GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M.P. Church, 1928-32; and president of this Conference, 1936-39.

Straughn became chairman of the Methodist Protestant Commission upon the death of ALBERT NORMAN WARD, and in that capacity, according to Bishop JOHN M. MOORE, represented his Commission in preparing for and conducting the Uniting Conference "with remarkable ability, adaptability, geniality, and cooperative insight." At the Uniting Conference itself under the direction of the PLAN of UNION, which allowed the M.P. delegates to elect two bishops for The Methodist Church, James H. Straughn was elected a bishop, as was J. C. BROOMFIELD, and both these men were consecrated as bishops of The Methodist Church. This was an impressive ceremony participated in by bishops of the two Episcopal Methodisms. The famous photograph of the three leaders of the respective Commissions on Church Union, Bishop E. H. HUGHES for the M.E. Church, Bishop John M. Moore for the M.E. Church, South, and Bishop-elect James H. Straughn for the M.P. Church, has become well known over Methodism, and these three men standing together became a symbol of reunited Methodism.

Bishop Straughn at the UNITING CONFERENCE was assigned to the NORTHEASTERN JURISDICTION, whose College of Bishops and Jurisdictional Conference in turn assigned him to the PITTSBURGH Area. In this Area he served as bishop until his retirement in 1948.

Bishop Straughn is a trustee of Western Maryland College, a member of the Board of Governors of Wesley Theological Seminary in Washington, D. C. He is the author of Methodism, 1946, and Inside Methodist Union, 1958.

Since retirement, Bishop Straughn has lived in Baltimore. He was active in the decision to bring Westminster Theological Seminary to the campus of AMERICAN UNIVERSITY in Washington, D.C.

J. M. Moore, Long Road to Union. 1943.

J. H. Straughn, Inside Methodist Union. 1958.

Who's Who in The Methodist Church, 1966.

N. B. H.

STRAWBRIDGE HOUSE near New Windsor, Carroll County, Md., was designated as a Methodist historic SHRINE by the 1940 GENERAL CONFERENCE. ROBERT STRAWBRIDGE, the local preacher from IRELAND who, according to Asbury's Journal for April 30, 1801, "formed the first

ROBERT STRAWBRIDGE HOUSE,
NEW WINDSOR, MARYLAND

[Methodist] society in Maryland—and America,” lived with his wife Elizabeth in the log cabin from 1760 to 1776. The house, constructed of logs and later enlarged and clapboarded, was the meeting place for Strawbridge’s first class until 1768. Lost sight of for many years, the Strawbridge house was rediscovered in 1915 by Mrs. Arthur Bibbins, a Maryland Methodist historian. In 1924 the American Methodist Historical Society placed on the front porch of the house a plaque recounting the work of Strawbridge and listing the names of the first class and society members. A Strawbridge Shrine Association was formed in 1934 to purchase and preserve the house, a goal thus far not achieved.

A state historical marker on Maryland Route 31 south of New Windsor directs tourists to the Strawbridge house, while a marker on Route 407, another mile south, points to the site of the Strawbridge Log Meetinghouse which was built in 1764. A concrete monument installed on the latter site in 1914 was enlarged in 1934. The BALTIMORE CONFERENCE has owned the log meetinghouse site since 1909.

EDWIN SCHILL

STRAWBRIDGE, ROBERT (? -1781), one of the earliest Methodist preachers in America, was probably born at Drumsna not far from Carrick-on-Shannon, County Leitrim, IRELAND. His date of birth is unknown, but it is believed that he may have been converted through the influence of LAWRENCE COUGHLIN who, previous to his own conversion, had been a zealous Roman Catholic. Strawbridge began preaching at once, but his straightforward message aroused opposition which drove him to Sligo, where his efforts were more favorably received. In time he made Terryhugan his headquarters, and from here he itinerated throughout the neighborhood. He married Elizabeth Piper, a Methodist, and with her emigrated to America, settling on Sam’s Creek, Frederick County, Md.

The date of Strawbridge’s arrival in America has been a center of controversy. Court records in Frederick County show that there was as early as 1753 a grand jury presentment against a Robert Strawbridge for stealing a pig, but whether this is the same Strawbridge is debatable. Most Methodist historians believe that he arrived in America between 1760 and 1766. Shortly after his arrival, however, he began preaching in his own home to his neighbors. He is thought to have baptized Henry Maynard in 1761, '62 or '63 and to have begun organizing Methodist Societies in 1763 or 1764. His first class, consisting of seven or eight persons, met at his home. A second class was formed at JOHN EVANS’ house on Pipe Creek. These were among the earliest Methodist classes formed in America.

ROBERT STRAWBRIDGE

Around this time also Strawbridge built a log meeting house on Sam’s Creek about a mile southwest of his home. A subsequent owner of the property dismantled it and used the logs to build a barn.

Strawbridge soon began to preach out-of-doors beneath what came to be called the “Strawbridge Oak.” He also began itinerating in a wider and wider circle, leaving the care of his farm to his neighbors. He established Societies in many places, and he is the first Methodist to have preached on the Eastern shore of Maryland. Assisted by one of his spiritual sons, Richard Owen (or Owings), he also planted Methodism in Georgetown on the Potomac River and in several places in Fairfax County, Va. Through him or his followers several chapels were erected in the region of Aberdeen, Md., before the arrival in 1769 of JOSEPH PILMORE and RICHARD BOARDMAN, WESLEY’s first missionaries to America. Among the men influenced directly or indirectly by Strawbridge for the Methodist work were FREEBORN GARRETTSON, Richard Owen (or Owings), Sater Stephenson, Nathan Perigau, Daniel Ruff, Richard Webster, Joseph Presbury, and JOHN HAGERTY. These influenced others, including PHILIP CATCH and WILLIAM WATTERS, the first native born American to join the itineracy.

With little regard for church order Strawbridge had assumed the right to administer the sacraments. This was contrary to Methodist discipline and at the first conference of the Methodist preachers in America in 1773 at St. GEORGE’S, PHILADELPHIA, the practice was condemned. For some unknown reason Strawbridge was not present. ASBURY in his Journal says that Strawbridge was made an exception to the rule, but it was resolved that he would be permitted to administer the sacraments only under the direction of an assistant. Strawbridge generally ignored the action of the conference. (See COMMUNION, THE HOLY and ORDINATION.) Asbury, in particular, was displeased by this "irregularity," and the comments in his Journal about Strawbridge are seldom favorable.

Strawbridge's popularity, however, was tremendous, and in the early days of Methodism and for long afterward, in the region where Robert Strawbridge labored, more converts were won for the Societies, and more young men were inspired to become itinerant preachers, than in any other section of the country.

Strawbridge's name was dropped from the Conference Minutes in 1774, but was printed again in the Minutes of 1775. That was the last time his name appeared. Strawbridge, however, continued his work as a permanent pastor of the Sam's Creek and Bush Forest Societies until his death.

He spent the last five years of his life on a farm not far from BALTIMORE, the use of which was presented to him during his life by Captain Charles Ridgely, its generous owner. Originally buried on the farm of Joseph Wheeler, where he had died in the summer of 1781, Strawbridge's ashes and those of his wife were later removed and reinterred near the grave of FRANCIS ASBURY in Mount Olivet Cemetery, Baltimore.

The old Strawbridge home with an addition, both covered with clapboard, still stands near Windsor, Maryland. A tablet commemorates its importance for Methodism. The house was designated as a historical shrine by the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1940.

R. M. Bibbins, How Methodism Came. 1945.

W. Crook, Ireland and American Methodism. 1866.

Frederick E. Maser, "Robert Strawbridge, Founder of Methodism in Maryland," Methodist History, January 1966.

M. Simpson, Cyclopaedia. 1878. JAMES H. STRAUGHN

STRAWMAN, DANIEL (1830-1900), American Evangelical minister, preacher, counselor, and leader, was born Oct. 17, 1830, near Denmark, Morrow Co., OHIO, where his father and grandparents, Swiss immigrants, had settled in 1825. They were among the first fruits of the Sandusky Circuit of the EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION founded a year later. After a penitential struggle of six years Strawman was converted on Feb. 17, 1848. The next day while meditating on the preaching of God's servants he sensed his own inescapable call.

His biographer said he was a man of pronounced personality, sterling integrity, and sound judgment. He was an acknowledged authority on church government and wielded great influence as a member of the Board of Missions and General Conference in shaping the policy of the church in all her enterprises. . . . He insisted on the necessity of the new birth and Christlikeness. . . . (Evangelical Messenger, 1900, p. 314.)

He was a member of every GENERAL CONFERENCE from 1863 to 1887. Of him Editor S. P. SPRENG, said: "His advice was often sought by the highest officials of the Church. In General Conference his counsel was highly respected. In the Ohio Conference he towered above all others for years. . . . He preached with overwhelming power and swept everything before him by the flood-tide of mingled spiritual power, logic, and pathos." (Ibid., p. 296.)

The Ohio Conference, Evangelical Association, licensed him in 1850, ordained him DEACON in 1852, and ELDER in 1854. His wife Sarah was a daughter of David and Margaret Houser. Minerva Strawman, one of his daughters, at the age of seventeen, initiated the founding of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Evangelical Association. From 1855-88, Daniel Strawman was superintendent of the Orphan Home at Flat Rock, Ohio and contributed much to the modernization of that institution during that period. He died in 1900 at his home in Lindsey, Ohio and was buried in the family burial ground nearby.

Evangelical Messenger, 1900, p. 296.

R. B. Leedy, Evangelical Church in Ohio. 1859.

ROY B. LEEDY

STRETTON, JOHN, a local preacher from Limerick, IRELAND, arrived in Newfoundland in 1770 and established a fish business at Harbour Grace. He became one of the chief helpers of LAWRENCE COUGHLAN, who introduced Methodism into Newfoundland. After Coughlan's departure from the island in 1772, thirteen years passed before a Methodist missionary was sent. John Stretton, together with Arthur Thomey, another Irish merchant at Harbour Grace, conducted services, met the classes, visited the sick, and held prayer meetings. Stretton built at Harbour Grace a chapel which he gave to the connection. He appealed to WESLEY for a Methodist preacher, but his request was not granted until 1785 when John McGeary was stationed in Newfoundland.

T. W. Smith, Eastern British America. 1877.

William Wilson, Newfoundland and Its Missionaries. Cambridge: Dakin and Metcalf, 1866. N. WINSOR

WILLIAM P. STRICKLAND

STRICKLAND, WILLIAM PETER (1809-1884), American editor and author, was born at Pittsburgh, Pa., Aug.

17, 1809. He was the son of Peter and Mary W. Sheperd Strickland. He was a minister of the M.E. Church, 1833-67; assistant editor New York Christian Advocate and Journal, 1856-60; a prominent and prolific author of books and periodical articles of Methodist significance; and in later years a Presbyterian minister, 1870-84.

Rearred in the Presbyterian tradition, William Peter Strickland became a Methodist in 1830. He entered the Methodist ministry in Ohio in 1833, after receiving his education at the University of Ohio, at Athens. For several years he was stationed in CINCINNATI and for four years was an agent for the AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY. In 1856 he was transferred to the NEW YORK CONFERENCE, where he served both in the pastoral ministry, and from 1856-60 as assistant editor of the Christian Advocate and Journal. In 1861, at the outbreak of the Civil War, he joined the 48th New York Regiment as CHAPLAIN and until 1863 was stationed at Port Royal, S. C. From this point he wrote a series of articles for the Christian Advocate and Journal, colorfully documenting and describing the early phase of the Civil War (and the beginnings of Reconstruction) in this area.

Although returning to New York in 1863 upon the death of his first wife, Elizabeth Talbott Strickland, he continued until 1864 as a chaplain and as a writer for the New York Christian Advocate. In 1867 he assumed the supernumerary relationship with the M.E. Church, and by 1870 was a member of the Long Island Presbytery of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. Until 1878 he was pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Bridgehampton, Long Island, resigning in 1878 following the death of his second wife. In that year he was dismissed to the New York Presbytery and served until his death as an evangelist.

Awarded the D.D. degree by the University of Ohio, Strickland throughout his career was consistently literary. In 1849 his History of the American Bible Society was published. This was followed by many other books, among them the History of the Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church (1850); the Genius and Mission of Methodism (1851); Pioneers of the West (1856); and The Pioneer Bishop, or the Life and Times of Francis Asbury (1858). In 1856 the autobiography of PETER CARTWRIGHT, The Backwoods Preacher, edited by Strickland, was published. In his early career Strickland was editor of the Literary Casket and associate editor of the Western American Review. He was also a contributor to many other publications, among them the Methodist Quarterly Review and Harper's Magazine.

Strickland died at Ocean Grove, N. J., July 15, 1884, and was buried in Greenwood Cemetery there.

S. Austin Allibone, A Critical Dictionary of English Literature and British and American Authors, Vol. II. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott Co., 1891.

Appleton's Cyclopedia of American Biography.

Christian Advocate (New York), 1861-63; July 24, 1884; Sept. 9, 1926.

Journal of the New York Conference, 1856-1867.

Methodist Centennial Yearbook, 1884.

J. P. Pilkington, Methodist Publishing House. 1968.

JAMES P. PILKINGTON

STRINGFIELD, THOMAS (1796-1858), American minister and editor, was born in Barren County, Ky., on Feb. 13, 1796, the son of John and Sarah Stringfield. His parents came from NORTH CAROLINA to TENNESSEE, removed to KENTUCKY and then to ALABAMA.

Thomas Stringfield served under Andrew Jackson in the War of 1812 and received a forehead wound which left a scar for life. He joined the TENNESSEE CONFERENCE in 1816 and served the Elk River, Tennessee Valley, Cahawba, Limestone and Flint Circuits, and the Nashville and Huntsville Stations. In 1824 he became a charter member of the HOLSTON CONFERENCE and was appointed Presiding Elder of the Knoxville District. He subsequently served circuits, districts and stations in various parts of east Tennessee and southwest VIRGINIA.

Around 1825 when Stringfield was on the French Broad District the so-called Gallagher controversy over CALVINISM VS. ARMINIANISM swept the region and he became the leading defender of the Methodist position.

In 1836 he became the first editor of the Southwestern Christian Advocate published at Nashville, Tenn., and remained in this position until 1841, becoming well known throughout the country for his editorial abilities.

On Oct. 10, 1824, he married Sarah Williams of Strawberry Plains, Tenn. She died on April 5, 1842, and the following year he married Mrs. H. Cockville of Alabama. He was the father of four children.

Stringfield was a member of the GENERAL CONFERENCES of 1824, 1828, 1832, and 1844. He was a member of the LOUISVILLE CONVENTION of 1845 which accepted the Plan of Separation. He with the Holston Conference adhered to the M.E. Church, South, and he was a member of the General Conference of that Church in 1846 and 1850. He became an agent of the AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY in 1844 and in 1849 he was appointed to the Greenville District. His following appointments were the Knox Circuit, agent for Strawberry Plains College, Dandridge Circuit, and Loudon Circuit. He died on June 12, 1858, at Strawberry Plains.

Journal of the Holston Conference, 1858.

I. P. Martin, Holston. 1945.

R. N. Price, Holston. 1903-13.

L. W. PIERCE

STROH, BYRON FREEMAN (1909-), American minister and executive, was born in Akron, Ohio, on Dec. 20, 1909, the son of Freeman Wesley and Alice McIntosh Stroh. He received his collegiate training at ASBURY COLLEGE, A.B., 1935; DUKE UNIVERSITY, M.A., 1936; Yale University, B.D., 1939; and did post graduate work at the University of Chicago, 1943-45. Asbury College awarded him the D.D. degree in 1955. His wife was Mary Jean Newby, whom he married on July 23, 1941, and their children are John Alan, James Freeman, and Mary Gregory. He joined the NORTH INDIANA CONFERENCE in 1940, going into full connection and being ordained ELDER in 1942. His appointments were Daleville, Cambridge City, Main Street Church in Kokomo (all Indiana), and in 1955 he became superintendent of the Fort Wayne District where he served for five years. In 1960 he became the executive assistant of the INDIANA AREA, INDIANAPOLIS, in which position he served for five years. In 1965 he became the pastor of the North Church in Indianapolis.

Dr. Stroh was a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCES of 1956, '60, '64 and '66; to the WORLD METHODIST CONFERENCE, 1956, '61, and '66; has been the chairman of his Conference's Continuing Educational Committee; a member of the Indiana Governor's Commission on Youth; and serves as a trustee of DePAUW UNIVERSITY, Taylor University, and the METHODIST THEOLOGICAL SCHOOL IN OHIO; and also of the Methodist Hospital in Indianapolis and Parkview Hospital in Fort Wayne, Indiana. He served twelve years on the BOARD OF PUBLICATION, and in 1968 he was appointed to the General Council on WORLD SERVICE AND FINANCE.

Who's Who in The Methodist Church, 1966.

N. B. H.

STROHL, C. ORVILLE (1908-), American minister and college president, was born Sept. 18, 1908 in Meade County, Kan., the son of Clarence Elmer and Ida Rebecca Haywood Strohl. He graduated from SOUTHWESTERN COLLEGE in 1931, having served as a student supply pastor while attending college. He received the Th.M. degree from ILIFF SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY and the D.D. degree from IOWA WESLEYAN COLLEGE.

He was received into the IOWA-DES MOINES CONFERENCE in 1933 and transferred to the CENTRAL KANSAS CONFERENCE in 1954. He was pastor of the following churches in Iowa: Carlisle, Madrid and New London. He was an instructor at Iowa Wesleyan College, 1943-45. In 1945 he became Executive Secretary of the DES MOINES Area Commission on Christian Education and continued in this position until 1954 when he was elected President of Southwestern College.

Under his administration the institution has made decided advancement in buildings, endowment, faculty changes and enrollment. The faculty has grown, with a greater percent holding doctorates; enrollment increased from 325 to 749; endowment increased from $580,761 to $3,150,000; and eight new buildings at a cost of $3,123,573.

Dr. Strohl is an officer of the Association of Colleges for Inter-cultural-International Study; Chairman of the Committee on Tuition Grants for the State of Kansas; member of the Winfield Planning Commission; Educational Council, Kansas State Chamber of Commerce; American Association of Colleges; National Association of Schools and Colleges of The Methodist Church; and North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools.

Dr. Strohl has contributed to numerous religious publications.

Journal of the Central Kansas Conference, 1955, 1967.

WILLIAM F. RAMSDALE

STRONG, JAMES (1822-1894), American biblical scholar, was born in NEW YORK CITY, Aug. 14, 1822. His parents died when he was very young, and he was reared by an aunt and his maternal grandmother under Protestant Episcopal influences. He studied at Lowville Academy in New York, and then entered WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, Middletown, Conn., from which he received in due course three degrees. He taught for two years in the Troy Conference Academy at Poultney, Vt.

In 1847 he moved to Flushing, Long Island, where he projected and built the Flushing Railroad, of which he became president in 1852. Three years later he relinquished this post and became president of the Corporation of Flushing.

In 1858 he became professor of biblical literature in Troy University, where he served until 1863, part of this period as acting president. He became professor of exegetical theology in DREW THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, Madison, N. J., in 1868, and served in this post until his death.

At the 1872 GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M.E. Church he was largely responsible for securing legislation which admitted laymen to membership in the General Conference, and he himself was elected as the first lay delegate by the NEWARK CONFERENCE.

Strong is best known for his Exhaustive Concordance of the Bible, published in 1890, and his Cyclopedia of Biblical, Theological and Ecclesiastical Literature in ten volumes, which he edited with John McClintock. He was the author or editor of at least a dozen other important works in the field of biblical literature.

He was a member of the Anglo-American Bible Revision Committee for ten years and of the Palestine Exploration Society in 1872. In connection with the latter, he traveled extensively through Palestine and the Far East as the chairman of the Archaeological Council of the Oriental Topographical Society.

He died at Round Lake, N. Y., Aug. 7, 1894, and was buried at Flushing, Long Island.

Dictionary of American Biography.

V. B. Hampton, Newark Conference. 1957.

M. Simpson, Cyclopaedia. 1878.

M. W. GREEN

STROTHERS MEETING HOUSE, in Sumner County, Tenn., was erected about 1800 near Cottontown.

The GENERAL CONFERENCE which met at BALTIMORE, Md., May 1, 1800, made provision for the organization of the WESTERN CONFERENCE. It was organized by Bishops ASBURY and WHATCOAT at BETHEL ACADEMY in KENTUCKY, Oct. 6, 1800, and was formed from districts in OHIO, Kentucky, TENNESSEE, and MISSISSIPPI.

The log building, twenty by twenty-four feet, known as Strotchers Meeting House, was an appointment in the newly organized Western Conference. In it Bishop Asbury conducted the third session of the Western Conference, Oct. 2, 1802, which was the second Methodist Conference conducted in the State of Tennessee.

This building was moved from its original location to the Red River Pike and used continuously as a church until 1857, when it was supplanted by a new frame building, and its name was changed to Bethel.

Under an inspiring address delivered by Bishop HORACE M. DuBOSE at the Annual Conference in Gallatin, Tenn., Oct. 22-26, 1930, the Historical Society decided to preserve this historic building. Therefore, it was moved from near Cottontown to SCARBITT COLLEGE campus in NASHVILLE. It was formally opened as a Methodist Museum by Bishop DuBose, May 10, 1931.

CULLEN T. CARTER

STROUD, JOHN EDGAR (1905-), American missionary who with his wife, Hazel Hogan Stroud, has served in several mission fields and is now the pastor of the St. Croix Methodist Church in Frederiksted, St. Croix, Virgin Islands. John Stroud was born at Mooresville, Tenn. and was married on May 31, 1928.

John Stroud was student pastor at the University of Virginia one year and then went to CHINA in 1930. There he worked in the Institutional Church in Soochow, returning on furlough in 1935 to his homeland. From 1936 to 1943 the Strouds did mission work in the TEN-NESSEE CONFERENCE, but in 1943 went to CUBA to help develop a rural church there. They founded an Agricultural School, developed the Churchwell Clinic in Mayari, and built two camps (one of these being the first "church camp" which had been built in Cuba). They organized twenty-three churches in the seventeen years they spent in the island. Their service was terminated when they had to flee to escape arrest as spies after the Castro revolution. For three years they worked with Cuban refugees in MIAMI, Fla., and then John Stroud was assigned a pastorate at Cherokee, N. C., 1963-65. The Mission Board, however, requested him to go to St. Croix in the Virgin Islands to work in Spanish with the Puerto Ricans and others who had come there and to organize new work with English-speaking people coming to St. Croix from the mainland. An English-speaking church was organized in 1966 and a second one is at present underway.

N. B. II.

STUART, CHARLES MACAULAY (1853-1932). American clergyman, editor, and educator, was born in Glasgow, SCOTLAND, Aug. 20, 1853. He was educated at Kalamazoo College (Michigan), receiving an A.B., 1880 and an M.A. in 1883. He received a B.D. from GARRETT in 1885 and an A.M. from NORTHWESTERN the same year. He married Emma R. Littlefield on Oct. 10, 1883.

After a pastorate in ILLINOIS and another in MICHIGAN, he became associate editor of the Northwestern Christian Advocate in 1886 and continued in that post until 1896. In that year Garrett Biblical Institute called him to the chair of Sacred Rhetoric (sometimes called Homiletics and now often entitled Preaching). In 1909 Professor Stuart returned to the Northwestern Christian Advocate as Editor and continued at that task until 1912, at which time he was elected President of Garrett Biblical Institute, in which position he served until retirement in 1924.

His presidency at Garrett was marked by several distinct items of progressive achievement. The graduate work of the Institute was set apart as a separate school, with a larger and greatly strengthened faculty. It was at the beginning of this administration that the distinguished theologian, HARRIS FRANKLIN RALL, joined the faculty. Special attention was given to the rural and the urban church by the selection of specialists in those fields.

In 1914, Heck Hall, the school's only dormitory, burned to the ground and thus precipitated financial problems which overshadowed all others for years. The erection of new buildings on another sector of the campus of Northwestern University plus the increased cost of the expanded educational program called for more financial support than was forthcoming from the church of that day. The accumulation of these obligations became an oppressive burden which, when the depression came in 1929, precipitated a serious crisis for the school.

Stuart's work as a teacher, as indeed that as an editor or administrator, was characterized by distinctive personal factors. Frequently in the classroom, he left the rostrum and standing by the desk of a particular student, carried on a dialogue with him. His teaching, as was true of most of his work, was illuminated by a subtle humor.

His permanent literary output was not very large unless one includes his editorial work. He edited some of the papers of his colleague, Francis Hemenway, and more especially those of Charles Joseph Little. He was secretary of the Joint Hymnal Commission of the two M.E. Churches which brought out the issue of 1905. Stuart was a member of the Society of Biblical Research and a member of the Religious Education Association, a member of the Northwestern University Settlement Board, and a trustee of several other institutions. The widespread esteem in which he was held may be gauged in part by the honorary degrees awarded him—D.D., Garrett, 1885; LL.D., Northwestern, 1909; D.D., WESLEYAN, 1906; Litt.D., SYRACUSE, 1904; Litt.D., OHIO WESLEYAN, 1909; LL.D., NEBRASKA WESLEYAN, 1909.

Charles Macaulay Stuart served the church as a member of the DETROIT and the ROCK RIVER CONFERENCES. He retired as president of Garrett Biblical Institute in 1924 because of ill health and died Jan. 26, 1932.

HORACE GREELEY SMITH

STUART, GEORGE RUTLEDGE (1857-1926). American minister, evangelist and crusader, was born Dec. 14, 1857 in Talbott, Tenn., the son of Caswell and Maria M. Stuart, who had been prosperous but were stripped of all their possessions by the Civil War. They took up farming at which they were not successful and Stuart's father turned to drinking, increasing the family's problems. At fourteen years of age, living in New Market, Tenn., George Stuart was converted in a revival meeting. He brought his father to Christ and the whole family joined the Presbyterian Church. At a very early age he felt the call to preach, and began his education for that purpose. In 1880 he decided to join the M.E. Church, South, and to become a preacher. He entered EMORY and HENRY COLLEGE, and in the Spring of 1882 he received his diploma. On Sept. 6, he married Zellie Sullins, daughter of the college president, DAVID SULLINS.

Stuart joined the HOLSTON CONFERENCE in 1884. His first appointment was Cleveland, Tenn. While pastor there he undertook the task of raising money for the building of CENTENARY COLLEGE, with marvelous success. He accepted the chair of English and Natural Science in the college, where he taught for five years.

Evangelist SAM JONES invited George Stuart to join him in his evangelistic work. They were most successful for a number of years. Bishop JOHN C. KEENER then appointed Stuart as pastor of Centenary Church, CHATTANOOGA, in 1892. However, he felt the call to evangelistic work so strongly that when the authorities would not appoint him as an evangelist, he asked to be located, and then joined Sam Jones in campaigns throughout the nation. No greater voices were heard against sin and liquor than those of George Stuart and Sam Jones. After the death of Sam Jones, Stuart divided his time between revivals and the Chautauqua platform, for he was a great public platform man also, being a colorful, dynamic personality who was a natural master of assemblies.

In 1912, he was appointed pastor of Church Street Church, KNOXVILLE, by Bishop Keener. In 1916 he was transferred to First Church, BIRMINGHAM, Ala. For eleven years he filled this great Church to its capacity from Sunday to Sunday, and increased its membership to one of the largest in the denomination.

Stuart was largely responsible for establishing the Eva Comer Cooperative Home for young business women in Birmingham. While at First Church, he took the lead in establishing, with the help of some of his friends among both preachers and laymen, the Assembly grounds at LAKE JUNALUSKA, N. C. George Stuart was one of the original thirteen cottage owners on "The Lake" in 1913. His father-in-law, David Sullins, relates in his diary that in 1916, Stuart took public subscriptions for stock in the assembly and raised $106,000. The auditorium at Lake Junaluska, in which the WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE usually holds its sessions, was named Stuart Auditorium in his honor.

He published a volume of sermons, The Saloon Under the Search Light, What Every Methodist Should Know, and Methodist Evangelism—the last being the Sam Jones lectures at EMORY UNIVERSITY in 1923. In 1927 W. W. PINSON published a biography, George R. Stuart, His Life and Work.

He died in Birmingham, Ala., on May 11, 1926, when the GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M.E. Church, South, was in session at MEMPHIS, and that body paused to pay tribute to his memory. His body was carried by special train to Cleveland, Tenn., for interment.

C. F. Price, Who's Who in American Methodism. 1916.

ELMER T. CLARK
GEORGE F. COOPER

STUART, ROBERT MARVIN (1909-), American bishop, was born on Nov. 22, 1909 at Paullina, Iowa. He received the A.B. degree from Taylor University (Upland, Ind.) in 1931; the S.T.B. from BOSTON UNIVERSITY in 1934 and S.T.M. in 1935; and the D.D. from Taylor. On June 8, 1933, he was united in marriage to Mary Ella Rose. They have one son, Robert Lee.

Robert Marvin Stuart was ordained a DEACON in 1933 and an ELDER in 1934. His pastorates include Shideler, Ind., 1931; Woods Hole, Mass., 1932; El Cerrito, Calif., 1935; Trinity Church, SAN FRANCISCO, 1938; First Church, Palo Alto, Calif., 1942-64. He was elected a bishop of The Methodist Church at the WESTERN JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCE in PORTLAND, Ore., in July, 1964, and was assigned to the DENVER Area. In 1968 he was reassigned to the same area.

He was a delegate to the Jurisdictional Conferences of 1944, '48, '52, '56, '60, and '64; to the GENERAL CONFERENCES of 1948 (reserve), '52, '56, '60, and '64; to the WORLD METHODIST CONFERENCE at OXFORD, England in 1951 and at LAKE JUNALUSKA, N. C., in 1956.

He is a member of the Board of EDUCATION; the Inter-board Committee on Christian Vocations; and the Inter-board Committee on Town and Country Work. He is a trustee of the ALASKA METHODIST UNIVERSITY, the ILIFF SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY, and the UNIVERSITY OF DENVER.

Who's Who in America, Vol. 34.

Who's Who in The Methodist Church, 1966.

N. B. H.

STUART, WILSON (1873-1934), British Methodist, was a prominent temperance advocate. Born at Leek, Staffordshire, in 1873, he had a distinguished career at the Leeds Branch of the Victoria University, which he entered in 1892. He studied philosophy at St. John's College, Cambridge, 1898-1901. He entered the Wesleyan Methodist ministry in 1899. A passionate teetotaler, he was one of the English advocates of prohibition. In 1919 he became organizing secretary of the United Kingdom Alliance and spent the rest of his ministry entirely in total abstinence work. He died on Aug. 9, 1934.

J. Malins, Wilson Stuart. London, 1935.

JOHN KENT

STUBBINS, ROLAND CLINTON (1885-1967), American M.P. minister and historian, was born on Jan. 28, 1885, the son of George P. and Margaret A. Williams Stubbins of Hillsborough, N. C. He studied at Orange Grove Academy, Liberty Normal School, Trinity Park (now DUKE UNIVERSITY), Hoffman University, and the University of Chicago, and conducted research at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and Raleigh. He joined the NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE of the M.P. Church in 1908 and was ordained an ELDER in 1911. He was a member of the GENERAL CONFERENCE in 1924, 1928 and 1932, where he held several important positions. He served as president of the Young People's Conference of the North Carolina Conference, as well as president of the Pastors' Summer Conference, member of the conference faculty and the conference Board of Trustees. He served a number of churches and circuits in NORTH CAROLINA.

Among Stubbins's special interests was the history of Methodism and, as a result of his interest, WHITAKER'S CHAPEL was restored in 1965. He was a member of the Historic Hillsborough Association and, because of his great love of nature, was a member of the Audubon Society and was responsible for several towns and cities, including Greensboro, being designated as "Bird Sanctuaries." He was also active in Boy Scout work. Stubbins was possessed of a deep spiritual quality, a warm, vibrant, friendly disposition and a keen sense of humor that had endeared him to a host of friends throughout North Carolina.

On Dec. 22, 1908, he married Vera Williams, daughter of Cary and Maria Pinchbeck Williams of Ringwood, N. C. To this union was born one daughter. Stubbins died in DURHAM, N. C., on Feb. 17, 1967, and was buried in the Hillsborough Cemetery.

Clark and Stafford, Who's Who in Methodism. 1952.

Durham (N.C.) Herald, Feb. 19, 1967.

North Carolina Christian Advocate, Feb. 23, May 18, 1967.

RALPH HARDEE RIVES

STUBBS, JOSEPH EDWARD (1845-1914), American minister and educator, earned two degrees at OHIO WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY and studied in Berlin. He was school superintendent in Ashland, Ohio, and for eight years was president of Baldwin College in that state. He was president of the University of Nevada for twenty years.

Through his experience and ability Stubbs became the dominant force in shaping education in NEVADA. He secured the cooperation of the estate of Comstock millionaire John W. Mackay in building and endowment programs, and raised educational standards in the state. He was a member of the CALIFORNIA CONFERENCE of the M.E. Church. He was possibly the most constructive Protestant churchman in the first half century of Nevada's life as a state.

Governor Tasker L. Oddie said of Stubbs:

He was our greatest citizen. His monument for all time to come will be the University of Nevada, destined to become, as he had planned, more and more as the years go by, the center and source of Nevada's true development and awakening. He laid the foundations broad and deep.

Samuel B. Doten, An Illustrated History of the University of Nevada. Carson City: State Printing Office, 1924.

L. L. Loofbouroow, Steeple Among the Sage, 1964.

LEON L. LOOFBOUROW

STUDEBAKER, CLEMENT (1831-1901), American industrialist, philanthropist, and churchman, the son of John and Rebecca (Mohler) Studebaker, was born March 12, 1831, near Gettysburg, Pa. In 1835 the family moved to Ashland County, Ohio. Here he learned blacksmithing and wagon making from his father. In 1850 he came to SOUTH BEND, Ind. In 1868 the Studebaker Brothers Manufacturing Company was organized, with Clement Studebaker as its first president. It soon was the largest manufacturer of horse-drawn vehicles in the world. His home was one of culture and refinement. In 1878 he represented INDIANA at the Paris Exposition. He was a trustee and president of the Chautauqua Association. For twenty-one years he was trustee of DEPAUW UNIVERSITY. Twice he was a delegate to GENERAL CONFERENCE. He promoted Epworth Hospital in South Bend, and gave St. Paul's Church a new building. His first wife was Charity M. Bratt who died in 1863. In 1864 he married Anna Milburn Harper. Three children blessed their home. He died Nov. 27, 1901.

Dictionary of American Biography.

Who's Who in America, 1897-1902.

W. D. ARCHIBALD

STUDENT VOLUNTEER MOVEMENT, an interdenominational organization, was formed during the years 1886-89 in the United States under the influence of Robert G. Wilder, Luther D. Wishard, and Dwight L. Moody. JOHN R. MOTT served as the first chairman of this organization, which became the channel for the overseas missionary concern of American students for more than sixty years. In 1959 the Student Volunteer Movement became the Commission on World Missions of the National Student Christian Federation.

W. R. Hogg, Ecumenical Foundations. New York: Harper, 1952.

John R. Mott, Addresses and Papers, Vol. I. New York: Association Press, 1946.

C. P. Shedd, Two Centuries of Student Christian Movements. New York: Association Press, 1934. PAUL F. BLANKENSHIP

STULL, JOHN (1825-1894), American Evangelical minister, was born Nov. 20, 1825, in Bedford County, Pa. His parents located near Belleville, Ohio, in 1832. Deprived of an opportunity to attend any higher institution of learning, he unsuccessfully turned to farming, but found peace only when he yielded to his conviction of a call to the ministry.

Thirty-eight successful years followed, twenty-four as PRESIDING ELDER. On his influence and ability J. B. Kanaga wrote: "All admit his pulpit power which defies description or analysis. There was in his best pulpit efforts a might and majesty that bore all before it. His prayers often seemed to bring down the very hush of heaven and the solemnity of eternity." (Evangelical Messenger, 1895, p. 433.)

E. D. Paulin related that he witnessed the power of Stull's prayer at the Sunday morning service of one of his quarterly meetings. For fifteen minutes he prayed with such remarkable fervor and intercession that the whole congregation was wondrously stirred.

John Stull was licensed by the OHIO CONFERENCE in 1855. He was ordained DEACON by the same conference in 1857 and ordained ELDER two years later. He was living in Marion, Ohio at the time of his death and was placed in the family burial plot nearby.

Evangelical Messenger, 1895.

R. B. Leedy, Evangelical Church in Ohio, 1959.

ROY B. LEEDY

STUNTZ, CLYDE BRONSON (1886-1965), older son of HOMER CLYDE STUNTZ and Estelle Clark Stuntz, was born at La Grande, Iowa, Oct. 8, 1886, and three months later accompanied his parents to INDIA. He returned to Mt. Vernon, Iowa, with his parents in 1895 and completed high school there in 1902. He studied shorthand and typing during that summer, and in the fall went to Manila to become his father's secretary for three years. He returned to Mt. Vernon in 1905 to enter CORNELL UNIVERSITY, and a year later transferred to Middletown, Conn., to enter WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY. There he received his A.B. in English (1910) and D.D. (1945). Other degrees: M.A. Sanskrit from Columbia University (1913), and B.D. (1913) DREW THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY. Stuntz joined the NORTH DREW CONFERENCE in September 1913. His first and only appointment in the United States was Farley, Iowa, a two-point circuit. On Nov. 20, 1915, he sailed for CALCUTTA, India under appointment to be pastor of Thorburn Church in that city.

On Nov. 25, 1913, he married Florence Ada Watters, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. P. M. Watters of the New YORK EAST CONFERENCE, and they had five children. Florence was known as Sally by her college friends and kept that name.

Fearing that his German surname might bring suspicion on his loyalty to the Allies then fighting Germany, the official Board of that church asked the bishop in charge to transfer the Stuntzes elsewhere. Sent to Lahore, now in PAKISTAN, he soon showed ability in using the language, fluently speaking Urdu, the generally spoken language of north-west India; and Punjabi, prevalent in the Punjab; and Gurmukhi, the language of the Sikhs.

The Outcastes, who had become Christians a few years earlier, now needed education because of their general illiteracy. They also needed homes, with land of their own to cultivate, instead of continuing as tenant farmers. Clyde attacked both of these problems. In Lahore he was given supervision of a primary school for boys. He soon had it moved to a rural area twenty-five miles from Lahore, a small town named RAIWIND. The school developed into a high school, and now also has a teacher training department to train teachers for Rural Primary Schools. Clyde Stuntz served as the principal interchangeably with EARLE RUGG, a fellow missionary of similar age and training.

Stuntz also had responsibility for serving the church in the villages. With a ready memory for names he soon had the reputation of being able to call by name several thousand of the village Christians. Watching the efforts of the government of India to secure more arable lands, by providing canals to irrigate land where the average rainfall was about ten to twelve inches a year, Stuntz found it possible to secure some village sites for Christians who wished to become farmers. Each village was called chak (chuck) and had its own number. He settled many Christian families in other neighboring chaks also. The grateful Christians decided to give the first chak, which he secured for their settlement, the name Stuntzabad (more euphonious than its English equivalent—Stuntz-town). Stuntzabad has a well equipped rural high school, an excellent health center to provide for its medical needs, and a post office, thus giving it great importance.

In August 1947, Pakistan, as an independent nation, separated from India. Millions of the population moved, Muslims from the India side setting their goal in Pakistan, while Hindus and Sikhs left Pakistan to enter into the new bounds of India. Confusion and frequent dangerous clashes between the two sets of refugees created problems. Many Christians wished to move into the neighborhood of their relatives and had to cross the new dividing line. Stuntz and his wife operated free bus transportation for families who had urgent need for making such a change. Later the Pakistan government decorated Clyde Stuntz for service to the refugees during the disturbances.

The final term, 1951-56, consisted of one year in Karachi helping organize the developing Methodist work in Karachi, and the last four years in Lahore, where he served the West Pakistan Christian Council in developing the stability and efficiency of the expanding settlement program for Christians. He also served as hostel superintendent of the men's hostel for post graduates of Forman Christian College in Lahore.

In November 1956, even while the Centenary of Indian Methodism was being observed in Lucknow, Stuntz returned to the States to settle in Monroe, La. He died in December 1965, following a heart attack.

CLEMENT D. ROCKEY

STUNTZ, HOMER CLYDE (1858-1924), American bishop and outstanding missionary teacher, administrator and evangelist, was born at Albion, Pa., on Jan. 29, 1858. He was in the line of succession of several generations of Methodist preachers.

His education came mostly from his own efforts and self discipline. When a boy he worked on farms and in a blacksmith shop. As an older man, his rugged body and his dynamic preaching gave evidence of this early physical training. His ambition was to be an attorney at law, but he had an urgent call to the ministry, following an overwhelming conversion experience.

He joined the UPPER IOWA CONFERENCE in 1884. Shortly afterwards he married Estelle Clark of Chelsea, Iowa, and on Oct. 8, 1886 at La Grande, Iowa, their son, Clyde Bronson Stuntz, was born. Three months later the family started for INDIA. He served in that country for almost eight years, returning to the States in 1895.

H. C. Stuntz was evangelist, teacher, administrator and director of Methodist publications. He was transferred to the SOUTH INDIA CONFERENCE and stationed in BOMBAY, pastor of Grant Road Church. He also served on the Bombay Guardian, a Christian weekly published there. Two years later he was transferred to the NORTH INDIA CONFERENCE, and placed in charge of the English work in Naini Tal, in the Himalayas. For two years, during 1891-93, he was Editor of the Indian Witness, the official weekly of the Methodist Church in India. In 1893 he was sent to CALCUTTA and transferred to the BENGAL CONFERENCE, staying there until the family returned to the States in 1895. When the Board of the EPWORTH LEAGUE in India was organized in 1894, he was made General Secretary.

On the invitation of Bishop FRANCIS WARNE he went to MANILA in April 1901, and was made PRESIDING ELDER of the PHILIPPINES District of the MALAYSIA Mission Conference. He returned to the States in 1908.

In 1908 he was elected to be Associate Secretary of the Board of MISSIONS of which ADNA B. LEONARD was General Secretary. His main work during the quadrennium was to visit the churches in the interest of the work on the foreign field. His popularity and effectiveness as a preacher and orator brought him to the attention of many persons, and he was elected bishop at the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1912, and at his own request was assigned to South America, with his residence in BUENOS AIRES, ARGENTINA. He served this area with able dedication, and in 1916 was appointed to the OMAHA AREA with jurisdiction over churches of IOWA and NEBRASKA.

Bishop and Mrs. Stuntz had three children, Clyde, Hugh and Clara. Clara died in early womanhood within the first two years of her marriage. HUGH STUNTZ was a missionary to South America, and later president of SCARLETT COLLEGE for several years.

During his days in the Omaha Area, Bishop Stuntz gave stimulating and inspiring leadership, not only to his churches, but in financial campaigns for hospitals, homes and colleges. During his days in Omaha, the old building of Brownell Hall, an Episcopal school for girls, was purchased and made into a home for working girls of Omaha, and was known as Stuntz Hall. He personally guaranteed a note for $10,000 to start the West Nebraska Methodist Hospital in Scottsbluff. He made so many pledges to colleges, hospitals and homes, that on his death, they equalled three years of the amount of his entire salary. These pledges were paid in full by the members of his family over a period of years.

During the First World War, 1917-18, Bishop Stuntz was also Administrator of War Work for the M.E. Church.

In January 1924, Bishop Stuntz was stricken with a cerebral hemorrhage, and he died on June 3, 1924. He was laid to rest in Forest Lawn Cemetery in Omaha, Neb., the only bishop to be buried in Nebraska.

B. T. Badley, Southern Asia. 1931.

W. C. Barclay, History of Missions. 1957.

J. N. Hollister, Southern Asia. 1956.

F. D. Leete, Methodist Bishops. 1948.

Minutes of the Nebraska and Northwest Iowa Conferences, 1924. EVERETT E. JACKMAN

STUNTZ, HUGH CLARK (1891-), American missionary and college president, was born in Naini Tal, INDIA, June 29, 1891, the son of HOMER CLYDE and Estelle May Clark STUNTZ. Hugh Stuntz spent part of his boyhood in India and the PHILIPPINES. During the first World War he served as CHAPLAIN with the Rainbow Division of the A.E.F. He received his college education from WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, Middletown, Conn., A.B., 1914; B.D., GARRETT BIBLICAL INSTITUTE, 1920; and M.A., Columbia University, New York, 1926. The D.D. degree was conferred by Garrett in 1939. He was married to Florence Wolford, Nov. 28, 1917. They have three children, William W., Richard C., and Jane A.

He was admitted on trial to the ROCK RIVER CONFERENCE in 1918, and into full connection, 1920. He then transferred to the River Plate Conference. He served as field secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions of the M.E. Church, 1919-20. For twenty years he served in religious and educational work in CHILE, ARGENTINA, and BOLIVIA. He was appointed to the staff of interpreter-translators for the American delegation to the Peace Conference in BUENOS AIRES in 1936.

From 1940 to 1943, Dr. Stuntz served as Public Relations Director, and from 1943 to 1956, as president of SCARBITT COLLEGE for Christian Workers in NASHVILLE, Tenn. Upon retirement from this position, he served for five years as pastor of Emmanuel Methodist Church in MONTEVIDEO, URUGUAY, and later in public relations and as platform manager at the LAKE JUNALUSKA Assembly in North Carolina. He and his wife now live at 1338 Alcazer Avenue, Ft. Myers, Florida.

Dr. Stuntz published The United Nations, A Challenge to the Church, Abingdon Press, 1948, and A Cup of Kindness, Abingdon, 1968.

Clark and Stafford, Who's Who in Methodism. 1952.

D. D. HOLT

STUNTZABAD, a town of PAKISTAN, was named in gratitude for the efforts of CLYDE B. STUNTZ to secure land for Christian settlers. It is 165 miles southwest of Lahore, and is a focal center of rural work of the Methodist Church in this area. It was made possible through an elaborate system of canals providing irrigation for growth of wheat and cotton despite the low rainfall of ten to fifteen inches of rain a year. Stuntzabad provides leadership for five important projects usefully serving Christian farmers in a rural area of a twenty to twenty-five mile radius.

Central Methodist High School was founded as a village primary school almost thirty years earlier but was made a High School in 1953. Present enrollment, beginning with Kindergarten and through the High School, approximates 600. One-fourth are girls, and for these a girl's section is being organized and a hostel set up, so that there will soon be two High Schools, one for boys—the other for girls. P. R. Michael is the capable Pakistani headmaster. His wife, Mrs. Molly Michael, has been serving on the staff and is organizing the Girl's High School. The School has also sponsored within a fifteen mile radius the organization and development of ten or more Village Primary Schools.

Adult Literacy Center: An effective agency for development of the adult literacy program in Stuntzabad, producing and hand-printing literature for those just becoming literate. The program is effectively prepared and supervised by an American, Miss Helen Fehr, who had many years of experience in this type of work in India.

Stuntzabad Clinic: This is an excellent and effective Dispensary and Clinic with a modicum of hospital work. It is supervised by Miss Greta Wiseman, an American, who is aided by a well selected and trained group of Pakistani helpers. Emergency cases are handled as it is over fifteen miles to the nearest medical base. Serious hospital cases are motored to the nearest mission hospitals fifty to sixty miles distant.

Area Extension Service: This has been established to help in agricultural experiments and give assistance to farmers so that they may improve their farming and marketing of produce. There is also a Co-operative Grain Shop which provides cash advances to farmers for purchasing seed, for purchasing farm implements (including bullocks), and that they may purchase and store the new crop for resale to the farmers at prices below the market price.

CLEMENT ROCKEY

STURDIVANT, MATTHEW PARHAM (1776, circa-1850-52), the first Methodist minister ever sent into what is now ALABAMA, was born about 1776 somewhere in NORTH CAROLINA, and died after Aug. 30, 1850, and before 1852 in Nelson County, Va. He was buried at Massie's Mill (no tombstone). He married Agnes Kent, daughter of William, on Nov. 24, 1813, in Halifax County, Va. She died after 1860. There were six sons and five daughters to live to maturity.

Sturdivant joined the VIRGINIA CONFERENCE on March 1, 1805, and on Jan. 2, 1808, was assigned from the SOUTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE by Bishop ASBURY to the "Tombigbee River Settlements"—appointment, "Tombigbee," then being in MISSISSIPPI Territory, now in Alabama. It took him thirteen days to get to his charge through many hundreds of miles of new and uncharted wilderness. He reported no members the first year but was reappointed on Jan. 1, 1809 to Tombigbee, with Michael Burdge as his helper, and at the Dec. 30, 1809, Conference, reported seventy-one white and fifteen colored members. Thus began Methodism in what is now part of the ALABAMA-WEST FLORIDA CONFERENCE.

Sturdivant was assigned in 1810 to Fayetteville, N. C., and in 1811 to Sparta, Ga., and located in December of 1811. He joined the Virginia Conference again in 1813 and was sent to Franklin, N. C. He located finally on Feb. 20, 1814, and lived in Pittsylvania, Bedford, Amherst and Nelson Counties, Virginia. Lazenby's History of Methodism in Alabama and West Florida says of him: "He had complete self-abnegation, perfect consecration and dauntless courage" (p. 36).

M. E. Lazenby, Alabama and West Florida. 1960.

A. West, Alabama. 1893.

FRANKLIN S. MOSELEY

STUTTGART, in the South GERMANY Annual Conference, is the capital of Baden-Württemberg (650,000 inhabitants). It is the only city with the closest net of United Methodist local churches in West Germany. It is also the residence of the district superintendent of the Stuttgart District, and of fifteen pastors in twelve circuits. There are two hospitals—Bethesda (Motherhouse Elberfeld) and Staatsrat von Fetzner-Klinik (Martha-Maria Nuremberg)—offices of a radio and open-air mission, and broadcasting via Radio Luxembourg and through WTEL, Philadelphia, Pa., U.S.A., in German. Stuttgart also has the only German Methodist publishing house, Christliches Verlagshaus and Druckhaus West.

For more than one reason Stuttgart is historical ground for Methodism. It was the place where the Evangelical United Brethren (EVANGELISCHE GEMEINSCHAFT) had their first conference in Europe (1865), and now have about the same number of members in the city as the former Methodist Church. It was the first city where British Wesleyan Methodists founded a church. General superintendent J. C. Barratt started a meeting there in 1867. M. Class was the first pastor. The first Wesleyan Methodist communion service was held on Jan. 6, 1873, after forty years of society work within the Lutheran State Church. In 1873 came the dedication of the "English" chapel at Stuttgart-Bad Cannstatt, along with the residence of the general superintendent and the first Wesleyan training college for ministers. In 1879 came the dedication of the Sophienkirche (now Auferstehungskirche), the first Wesleyan city church, with much support

E. U. B. PUBLISHING HOUSE,
STUTTGART, GERMANY

AUFERSTEHUNGSKIRCHE, STUTTGART, GERMANY

by the missionary society in London. This was bombed in 1944, and rededicated by Bishop J. W. E. SOMMER in 1950, constructed with financial help from Great Britain.

Episcopal Methodists from the United States have worked in a suburb of the city since 1875. In Stuttgart the Church Union Conference took place, uniting the Wesleyan Methodists and the M.E. Church in Germany in 1897. That union was a great help; by 1906 the first church had grown to 561 members. Again in 1969 Stuttgart was the place of a Church Union Conference, that of South German United Methodism. The new church has about 10,000 people there. Therefore a new strengthening can be expected that will help to work more effectively in the growing new suburbs.

DIETER SACKMANN

JOHN A. SUBHAN

SUBHAN, JOHN ABDUS (1899-), Methodist bishop of INDIA, was born in CALCUTTA, India, on Aug. 8, 1899, the son of Hafiz Allah and Mariam (Chiragh Ali Bakhsh). He was born in a Moslem home, brought up in strict Islamic tradition, but was converted from Islam to Christianity and baptized in an Anglican Church in Calcutta on July 7, 1912. He was a member of the Church of England from that date to 1921, when he joined the Church of Rome. He studied for a time for the Roman Catholic priesthood, but returned to the Evangelical Church in 1924.

He united with the M. E. Church in 1926 and was received into full membership of the NORTH INDIA CONFERENCE and ordained as a DEACON in BAREILLY on Feb. 8, 1931, and as an ELDER on Jan. 8, 1933. Bishop J. R. CHITAMBAR ordained him a deacon, and Bishop J. W. ROBINSON, an elder.

His academic career included the B.A. degree from Allahabad University in 1923, where he majored in English literature, philosophy and Arabic; and the B.D. from Serampore College in 1931, where he majored in the Old Testament, New Testament in Greek, Arabic and Urdu literature. In 1952 ASBURY THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY in Kentucky gave him the D.D. degree, and in 1962 the same degree was awarded him by Serampore College, Serampore, Bengal.

Bishop Subhan is an accomplished linguist, being conversant with Urdu, Bengali, Hindi, Persian, Arabic, Greek (New Testament), as well as English, of course, and French to an extent. He has some knowledge of Gujarati and Marathi, the two among the major languages in India which are spoken in the States of Bombay and Gujarat, where he was appointed to serve during the first twelve years of his episcopacy.

He founded the St. John's Christian Union in St. John's High School, ACRA, forming a band of preachers, mostly senior students, who were to evangelize the non-Christians in surrounding villages. He became the secretary of the Student Christian Movement in the same college.

He was a delegate of the Methodist Church to the International Missionary Council at Tambaram, India, 1939; member of a Goodwill Mission organized by the National Christian Council of India to the United States and Canada, 1947; delegate to the International Missionary Council, Whitby, Ontario, Canada, 1947; chairman of the Board of Governors, Henry Martyn Institute of Islamic Studies, Jabalpur, M. P.; and chairman of the Board of Governors, Leonard Theological College, Jabalpur, M.P. In the CENTRAL CONFERENCE of the Methodist Church in Southern Asia, he has been chairman of Evangelism and Church Extension; of that on the Commission on the Course of Study; of that on the Commission of Church Union. He has been a visiting professor of World Religions, 1966-67, at BOSTON UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY at Boston, Mass. (U.S.A.); and has also been the lecturer in the Henry Martyn Institute of Islamic Studies, Lahore, which was an interdenominational institute for Islamic Research. He was offered its principalship in 1944, but his bishop appointed him to be the principal of the Methodist Seminary in Bareilly. He was, however, elected to the episcopacy in the Methodist Church by the Central Conference of Southern Asia in 1945 and served as bishop until his retirement in 1968.

He married on Oct. 21, 1926, Dorothy Sinclair Day of a well-known Anglo-Indian family in North India. They have three children, Malcolm (now living in Belgium); Stanley (an engineer in London, England); and Tara, the youngest, who married an American citizen and became Mrs. Ralph Vargas and now lives in the United States.

Bishop Subhan has written a number of books in English and a large number of books in Urdu. Among these are Sufism: Its Saints and Shrines, Islam: Its Beliefs and Practices, How a Sufi Found His Lord (his own autobiography which has been reprinted several times), The Episcopacy in the Church of England (as viewed by a Methodist), God in Islam and Christianity (Henry F. Nau Memorial Lecture at Concordia Theological Seminary, Nagercoil, South India).

Bishop Subhan retired in 1968, and is presently working in the rehabilitation of ex-convicts and the prevention of crime within the area of the entire state of Andhra Pradesh—a work partly supported by the Government of India and also largely by public subscription. He also supervises a teaching institution for destitute children.

How a Sufi Found His Lord. (Autobiography).
Who's Who in The Methodist Church, 1966.

N. B. H.

SUCASAS, ISAIAS FERNANDES (1896-), Brazilian bishop emeritus of the Methodist Church of BRAZIL, was born in Cataguazes, State of Minas Gerais, on Aug. 9, 1896, the fourth of thirteen children of devout Methodist parents (see JOSÉ SUCASAS). He studied at GRANBERY INSTITUTE in Juiz de Fora, Minas Gerais, receiving a Bachelor's degree in Science and Letters, and a degree in Theology. He was ordained DEACON in 1927, ELDER in 1929, and was elected as bishop in 1946.

Much of his activity was in his native state, where he served both as District Superintendent and as pastor. He was pastor of Catete Church in RIO DE JANEIRO, when elected bishop in 1946, and put in charge of the Second Region, which he administered for nine years. Following this, he presided for a period of ten years over the Third and Fifth Regions. He pioneered in the organization of two night SUNDAY SCHOOLS; the celebration of dawn services for laborers; the use of a loudspeaker in church; and the printing of a weekly church bulletin.

In recalling his experiences, Bishop Sucasas stressed three: 1) his evangelistic activities in what was then virgin territory along the Doce River in Minas Gerais; 2) the severe persecutions he and his family underwent in three different towns of the state, and 3) the founding of Methodist work in BRASILIA, at the time when the new capital was being built, and when he acquired for the Methodist Church 8,800 square meters of land. Almost alone, working with his bare hands, Bishop Sucasas cleared and fenced in one of the properties, drilled two wells, built two septic tanks and two frame houses—one to serve for Church and Sunday school, and the other a nine-room residence for pastor and teachers.

He held the first Methodist service in Brasilia on May 5, 1957, in a frame shed. The Methodists were the first group to raise the Brazilian flag in the new Federal District, and the solemn occasion was attended by the city's Mayor. (At this time, the capital had not been officially inaugurated.)

His great helper and co-laborer has always been his wife, Jacira Corrêa, who was the niece of a priest and had come from a staunch Roman Catholic family that had at first strongly opposed the marriage but relented when they came to know Isaias. She has become an outstanding leader among Methodist women of Brazil. At the time of Brasilia's official inauguration, "Dona" Jacira was present, her arms full of Methodist magazines, hymn books and leaflets which she freely distributed to all, even to the Cardinal and priests and nuns.

Bishop and Mrs. Sucasas have five sons and one daughter—Leslie, Wesley, Solon, Livingstone, Isaias Jr. and Magda-Luz. In July 1965, at the General Conference of the Methodist Church of Brazil, he retired and was given the title of bishop emeritus. He lives now in SÃO PAULO.

EULA K. LONG

SUCASAS, JOSÉ FERNANDES (1862-1952), naturalized Brazilian lay evangelist and outstanding religious leader, was born in Pontevedra, SPAIN, on March 19, 1862. His father was a rustic, nearly illiterate farmer and wine-maker.

Eager to have a son in the priesthood the family turned him over early in life to the care of priests, under whom he served as sacristan during fourteen years. Dissatisfied with what he experienced, he left them and apprenticed himself out to become a tailor, in which trade he excelled. After completing military duty, José left Spain and went to Paris, from where he eventually traveled to ARGENTINA and BRAZIL, where he became a naturalized citizen.

One Sunday afternoon in one of Rio's parks, he saw a young girl with her parents. She immediately appealed to him, and he found that they too had come from Spain, and were evangelicals, though not yet professing church members. Later, when he visited in their home, and when Sucasas let them know he was a Catholic, the father—Ezequiel del Riego—gave him a New Testament, telling him not to return until he had read it through. Sucasas read it with moderate interest, and with this done the girl's parents allowed him to visit the home once a week.

Before long, Riego was commissioned to do some fine sculpturing in the city of Cataguazes, state of Minas Gerais. Young Sucasas, deeply in love with Maria da Encarnação del Riego, followed, and before long they were married. They were the parents of thirteen children, ten of whom lived to maturity. Sucasas wanted to learn more of the Gospel, but there was no evangelical pastor in Cataguazes to whom he could turn for enlightenment. One day, as he worked in his tailorshop, he met a young man in the street offering books for sale. Curious, Sucasas spoke to him. The man was FELIPE DE CARVALHO, a Methodist preacher selling Bibles and New Testaments. José bought two and began reading. Some time later Felipe returned to the city looking for a hall in which to preach, and Sucasas, now living in a comfortable and fairly large house, offered him the use of his front room. Thus Methodist work was born in Cataguazes.

One Sunday a mob of fanatics armed with sickles, knives and guns attacked the house, screaming "Death to the Protestants!" They dragged out the preacher and his wife, then heavy with child, and kicked them through the streets. Though José Sucasas had not yet experienced a real conversion, he defended the couple as best he could until the police arrived. When the mob had finally dispersed, the policemen asked Carvalho what he wanted done to his attackers. "Nothing," he replied, "only see that order is maintained. Free them—for they do not know what they are doing." Then, torn and bleeding, Carvalho and his wife knelt on the dusty street and prayed to God for their persecutors. At that moment, Sucasas was truly converted, and from then on, he became a strong pillar of Brazilian Methodism. Everywhere he preached the Gospel he brought many to Christ. A distinguished lawyer was so impressed with his earnestness that he too was converted and later became a Presbyterian preacher.

In the local church Sucasas served in all capacities, even as preacher when needed. He was bitterly persecuted at times, once almost thrown into a hot furnace by an ignorant fanatical baker who wanted to stop his preaching. Yet he remained firm and unshaken. Maria died on Dec. 31, 1951, and José lived only a few months longer, until Aug. 5, 1952.

Two of the sons became outstanding ministers: ISAÍAS, who became a bishop of the Methodist Church of Brazil, and José, outstanding in the Methodist ministry for some years and editor of the official church weekly, Expositor Cristão.

Voz Missionaria, 1953.

EULA K. LONG

SUCRE, Bolivia, is the former political and cultural center of BOLIVIA. It is legally the capital of Bolivia, though actually LA PAZ has taken over this function. Sucre has a university older than Harvard. In this old city, which is the center of the Southern District of the conference, there was a church organized in 1957 which includes university as well as professional and working people. A missionary from the Division of World Missions of The United Methodist Church is usually appointed as pastor.

Sucre also has a Student Center and a Student Hostel, both of which are aimed at providing Christian influence for university and normal school pupils.

Barbara H. Lewis, Methodist Overseas Missions, 1960.

N. B. H.

SUE BENNETT COLLEGE, London, Kentucky, was opened in 1897 as a missionary school for youth of the Kentucky mountains and was named for Sue Bennett of Richmond, Ky. Her sister, Miss BELLE H. BENNETT, was a pioneer leader in promoting missionary work among the women of the Church, South. The school continues as a project of the Woman's Division of Christian Service.

For years it functioned as an elementary, secondary, and normal school. In 1922 it began work as a junior college, and has been accredited by the Southern Association since 1932.

The governing board has a maximum of twenty-five members elected by the Board of Missions, one half of whom must represent the Woman's Division of Christian Service of the Board of Missions.

JOHN O. GROSS

SUGDEN, EDWARD HOLDSWORTH (1874-1935), an English Wesleyan who became an influential leader in Australian Methodism, was the son of James Sugden, of Yorkshire, who had been for seven years assistant tutor at Headingley College, Leeds, and six years circuit minister in Bradford. Edward Sugden was appointed the first Master of Queen's College, Melbourne.

Sugden with his wife and family arrived to take charge of the College in January 1888. He was a comparatively young man when he became Master of the infant college, but he grew with it, and with him.

A genial, broadminded, scholarly man, and withal a most devout evangelical Christian, he was essentially a young man's man. From the outset he won not only the respect but also the affection and admiration of his students in all the faculties. He was a man of catholic tastes and of great versatility.

While being an arrestive theological teacher he was at the same time an expert in music, a master of English literature, especially of English drama, and of the literature associated with JOHN WESLEY, the founder of Methodism. Many of Sugden's works were published.

In 1906 he was elected president of the VICTORIA AND TASMANIA CONFERENCE and President-General of Australasian Methodism during 1923-26. For many years he had committed to him the charge of the theological training of students for the Methodist ministry. The gracious Christian character of his wife contributed to the inner life of the college.

His clear and scholarly expositions of Scripture, his large sympathy, charming simplicity of manner and manifestly evangelical zeal won him a ready welcome in the pulpits not only of his own but of other churches.

Outside his activities as a minister of his own Church and in addition to his publications, he did useful service as a member of the MELBOURNE University Council and as president, up to the time of his death, of the Trustees of the Public Library, Art Gallery and Museum.

After forty years of splendid service as Master of Queen's, Sugden retired in February 1928. He died on July 22, 1935.

AUSTRALIAN EDITORIAL COMMITTEE

SUKH, EMMANUEL (c1886-1929), was a member of the LUCKNOW CONFERENCE of the Methodist Church in INDIA. He came from among the Mazhabi Sikhs, as did many of the prominent Methodists of Northern India. He was educated in the Methodist Boys' School at Sitapur, the Centennial High School, LUCKNOW, and the School of Commerce of LUCKNOW CHRISTIAN COLLEGE. His wife Polly, from the same background, was a licentiate of medical practice, trained in the government medical college at Agra. Both held coveted posts in government employ in Agra, she in the woman's hospital, and he as confidential clerk to the district magistrate, when they decided that God was calling them to full-time Christian service. Bishop FRANCIS W. WARNE asked them to go to an unoccupied area in Bihar, Raghunathpur in Shahabad District, where some years before several families of Dhusiya Chamars had petitioned that someone be sent to teach them of Christ.

When the couple arrived, they learned that the long delay in the church's response had destroyed the interest of those who had petitioned. Instead of the welcome he had expected, Sukh was greeted with curses, and in several villages he was stoned. But the patient persistence of the preacher and the physician slowly brought results. First a few Chamars declared their faith and were baptized. Land was bought, and a small hospital and staff buildings were constructed. Thereupon, the combination of preaching and healing, supported by fervent witnessing by local converts, produced a mass movement in which thousands showed a desire to follow Christ.

Sukh acquired much influence both with the public and with officials. He was appointed an honorary magistrate; and a year or two later the governor of the state, Lord Sinha, a Hindu and the only Indian ever raised to the British peerage, appointed him to membership in the legislative council. When the council was first permitted to elect its presiding officer, and a deadlock developed after many ballots, the leading candidates withdrew their names and proposed that the council proceed to elect Sukh. This was done.

In 1923 he was appointed district superintendent. The unavailability of trained personnel and a severe shortage of money led to a policy of retrenchment at a time when thousands were calling for instruction and baptism. When Mr. and Mrs. Sukh were appointed to another district, and the hospital in Raghunathpur was transferred to government ownership and management, the Church was seriously hurt.

Sukh died in 1929 after a short illness. On his deathbed he gave a triumphant witness and urged his family and his associates to make greater efforts to bring India to Christ.

Journals of the Lucknow Conference. J. WASKOM PICKETT

SULLINS, DAVID (1827-1918), American preacher and educator, was born on July 28, 1827, near Athens, Tenn. He graduated from EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE in 1850 and became a member of the HOLSTON CONFERENCE the same year. His appointments were Burnsville, ASHEVILLE, N. C., Jonesboro, CHATTANOOGA, KNOXVILLE, Wytheville, Bristol and other leading charges.

He married Ann Rebecca Blair in 1855 and was the father of two sons and two daughters.

At Jonesboro he was pastor and also principal of the school from 1852 to 1857; at Blountville he was in war and educational work from 1859 to 1865, and at Wytheville he was school principal as well as pastor from 1865 to 1868.

He became president of Sullins College in Bristol in 1868 and served in that capacity until 1885. He was one of the founders and president of Centenary College at Cleveland, Tenn., from 1885 until his retirement.

He died in the home of his daughter, Mrs. GEORGE R. STUART, in Birmingham, Ala., and was buried at Cleveland, Tenn.

Journal of the Holston Conference, 1918.

I. P. Martin, Holston. 1945.

L. W. PIERCE

SULLINS, TIMOTHY (1812-1885), American minister and brother of DAVID SULLINS, was born on Dec. 4, 1812, in Blount County, Tenn. He joined the HOLSTON CONFERENCE in 1833 and served as pastor, presiding elder, and agent for EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE until 1846, when he suffered a stroke of paralysis.

On Jan. 28, 1858, he was married to Virginia Rogers of KNOXVILLE, Tenn., to whom he had been engaged before his stroke. He was an invalid during the last thirty-eight years of his life.

Sullins was a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE in 1844, which adopted the PLAN OF SEPARATION providing for the division of the Church into Northern and Southern branches, the LOUISVILLE CONVENTION which provided for the organization of the M. E. Church, South, and the Southern General Conferences of 1846 and 1854.

He died at Knoxville on Feb. 18, 1885, and was buried in the Old Gray Cemetery.

Journals of Holston Conference.

I. P. Martin, Holston. 1945.

L. W. PIERCE

SULLIVAN, LUCY W. (1854-1943), was born at DAYTON, Ohio, Feb. 19, 1854. At the age of sixteen, she was converted and began a life of witness and service that continued until her death in INDIA on Dec. 2, 1943.

Miss Sullivan studied for two years in Cincinnati Wesleyan College. Illness forced her to discontinue her college studies, but even in illness she was persistent in good works, teaching children, and exhorting people of all ages to be disciples of Jesus Christ. ISABELLA THOBURN and PHOEBE ROWE led her to an interest in missions in India, and when her health was fully restored, she volunteered for service there.

In 1888 she was appointed to LUCKNOW as a DEACONESS. Her next appointment in 1895 was to the Women's Training School at Muttra (Mathura now), and in 1902 she went to Pithoragarh in isolated Eastern Kumaun where she soon sensed that she had begun the work for which God had been preparing her from her childhood. She and two of her associates, the British Annie Budden and the American MARTHA SHELDON, acquired immense influence with all classes of the population. To Indian and British officials, to priests, landowners, merchants, artisans, and even to nomadic tribesmen from NEPAL and TIBET—these women became legendary, honored for their kindness and goodness and suspected of having unlimited power with God and man.

Perhaps nowhere in India do Brahmans compose a larger majority in the population than in Pithoragarh and its environs. A few of these Brahmans became avowed believers in Christ, but the overwhelming majority remained Hindus. Nevertheless most of them made many adjustments to the social ethics and religious practices advocated and demonstrated by Miss Sullivan and her associates.

An influential Brahman, wishing to adopt for himself the Hindu life of renunciation and asceticism but convinced that for others the Christian way of life is best, made over his two sons to Miss Sullivan. She adopted them and successfully transmitted to them her faith and conviction. They are today distinguished Christian educators, the elder Jai Datt Patial as principal of the Allahabad Christian College, the other Mani Datt Patial as vice-principal of the United Theological College at BAREILLY.

B. T. Badley, Southern Asia. 1931.

J. N. Hollister, Southern Asia. 1956. J. WASKOM PICKETT

SUMATRA. (See INDONESIA.)

SUMMERFIELD, JOHN (1798-1825), like many of the early preachers who guided the American Methodist Church in its first steps of organization and growth, was a native of England. Although born in Preston, Lancashire, England, on Jan. 31, 1798, he spent most of his life on Irish soil. Summerfield, much to the disappointment of his hard-working and religiously zealous father, William Summerfield, spent his teenage years in rebellion and waywardness. But in 1817, at the age of nineteen, he came under the spell of evangelical Methodism, and was converted. Immediately following his conversion, Summerfield began public preaching. He was boyish looking, delicate and pale due to physical weaknesses, but always eloquent and persuasive in delivery.

In 1821 he arrived in NEW YORK CITY, accompanied by his father, brother and two sisters. There he began a short but influential ministry. The youthful Summerfield was recognized immediately for his preaching ability. A sermon before the fifth anniversary of the AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY propelled him into national prominence. He was received into the TROY CONFERENCE in 1821, and was first appointed to New York City under the supervision of JOSHUA SOULE.

Summerfield's pulpit eloquence opened many doors to him, and invitations to preach came from TRENTON, PHILADELPHIA, BALTIMORE, and WASHINGTON. In the spring of 1821, the young minister preached at the Foundry Chapel in the capital, and John Quincy Adams and John C. Calhoun were in the congregation. The following Sunday, Summerfield preached to a vast number congregated on the steps of the Capitol Building and was compared to GEORGE WHITEFIELD by one of the Washington newspapers. Following an illness, and a trip to Paris as the American representative to an international Bible Society Congress, Summerfield returned to the United States and received his elder's orders at the 1824 GENERAL CONFERENCE in Baltimore.

He was later appointed a "missionary within the bounds of the Baltimore Conference." His life-long weakness and failing health did not permit him to serve actively for very long. John Summerfield died while visiting his father in New York City on June 18, 1825, being only twenty-seven years of age at the time. Bishop Joshua Soule composed the tribute which appeared on the cenotaph honoring Summerfield, which was erected not far from the JOHN STREET CHURCH, the site of his first American sermon:

The learned and the illiterate attended his ministry with admiration, and felt his preaching was in the demonstration of the Spirit and of the power.

M. Simpson, Cyclopaedia. 1880.

William M. Willett, A New Life of Summerfield. New York: J. B. Lippincott and Co., 1857. L. CARROLL YINGLING, JR.

SUMMERS, HENRY (1801-1883), pioneer American preacher, was born in VIRGINIA, was converted (1820) and licensed to preach in INDIANA in 1822. After serving as a LOCAL PREACHER for ten years, in 1832 he united with the ILLINOIS CONFERENCE, M.E. Church, and preached under PETER CARTWRIGHT's supervision. In 1836 Summers became presiding elder of Rock Island District, consisting of circuits in Illinois and in southern IOWA. After he traveled this district until 1839, BISHOP MORRIS assigned him to the newly formed Iowa District, composed of Fort Madison, Burlington, Rockingham, Dubuque, and missions at Manchester, Bellevue, Richland, and on the Fox and Iowa rivers.

With the division of the Iowa District (1840), he was presiding elder of Burlington District, ROCK RIVER CONFERENCE, and of Des Moines District in 1843, made up of scattered appointments in the Iowa interior along the Des Moines River.

For eight successive years Summers superintended the planting of Methodism in Iowa as a presiding elder. Revivals followed his work; it was reported that he had as many as a hundred conversions at a single quarterly meeting. In 1844 Summers, an original member of the IOWA CONFERENCE, transferred to the Rock River Conference and continued his ministry in Rock River, WISCONSIN, PEORIA, and CENTRAL ILLINOIS conferences until 1868, when he superannuated. He was a delegate to GENERAL CONFERENCE from the Wisconsin Conference in 1852.

S. N. Fellows, Upper Iowa Conference. 1907.

A. W. Haines, Makers of Iowa Methodism. 1900.

E. H. Waring, Iowa Conference. 1910.

Yearbook of the Iowa Conference, 1844. MARTIN L. GREER

SUMMERS, THOMAS OSMOND (1812-1882), American minister, author, editor, preacher, teacher, and theologian, was born Oct. 11, 1812 at Furbeck, Dorset, England, the son of James and Sarah Summers. He came to New York in 1830, sought admission to the Methodist Church in 1832, was converted in 1833, preached his first sermon at Bells' Meeting House in MARYLAND on Nov. 9, 1834, and was admitted on trial in the BALTIMORE CONFERENCE at Winchester, Va., in March 1835. He was ordained a DEACON at the 1837 session of the Baltimore Conference, in which he served until appointed a missionary to BUENOS AIRES in 1839. He was appointed to GALVESTON, TEXAS about the same time, and actually went to Texas in 1840, where he later also served HOUSTON. He toured much of the United States in 1842 seeking funds for the work in Texas. In 1844 he was appointed to Tuscaloosa, Ala., and there married Miss N. B. Sexton. In 1845 he was appointed to Livingston, Ala., and in 1846 to MOBILE, but about that time he was made assistant editor of the Southern Christian Advocate and moved to CHARLESTON, S. C. He was appointed chairman of the committee to revise the hymnbook for the newly organized M.E. Church, South, and under his leadership, many hymns were restored to their original form. Summers in this did the church a great service, despite the fact he impaired his health in pushing the work through the printers in NEW YORK in six weeks. His endeavors then and later in hymnology left the church richer in its music and worship. In 1855 he moved to NASHVILLE, Tenn., where he lived the rest of his life.

T. O. SUMMERS

Known to have little formal education, nevertheless, his capacity and accomplishment was such that he was early awarded the D.D. degree by Ruter College in Texas. Never strong in body, he suffered from poor eyesight and was permanently impaired in health as the result of a fall from a second story window in sleepwalking.

Summers possessed a catholic spirit, and he was equally at home in Methodist, Baptist, or Presbyterian churches, the penitentiary, insane asylum, or VANDERBILT Chapel, which he helped found and where he lived and taught during his last years. A partial catalogue of his various duties includes: Secretary of TEXAS CONFERENCE, 1840; permanent Secretary of the LOUISVILLE CONFERENCE, 1845; Assistant Secretary, GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M.E. Church South, 1846; and Secretary 1850-82. He was the BOOK EDITOR of the M.E. Church, South, 1850-82. He also served as editor of the following: Nashville Christian Advocate, 1866-78; Southern Quarterly Review, 1858-61, and 1880-82; all Sunday School publications, 1846-70; General Conference Minutes, 1858-78; Minutes of Annual Conference, 1858-81. He wrote, edited, and revised over 500 works of various sizes on such diverse subjects as theology, prayer, Commentaries, the Book of Worship, Disciplines, Hymnbooks, etc.

Summers was keenly interested in hymnology, worship, liturgy, and theology. He was a genius for literature and work, a gatherer rather than a creator. His was not an original mind. Editing suited his taste.

Having helped in the establishment of Vanderbilt University in 1874, he was made professor of Systematic Theology and Dean of the Theology Faculty in 1875, a position he held until his death. He was again elected Secretary of the General Conference in 1882, but served only one day. He died at his home in Nashville on May 6, 1882. His funeral was preached in the Chapel at Vanderbilt, and he was buried on the campus he loved so much.

O. P. Fitzgerald, Dr. Summers. 1885.

N. B. H.

SUNDARAM, GABRIEL (1900-), bishop of The Methodist Church, was elected by the CENTRAL CONFERENCE OF SOUTHERN ASIA in 1956. He was born in Hanumakonda, Andhra Pradesh, on Oct. 13, 1900. His high-school studies were in Wesley Boys High School, Secunderabad; his undergraduate college work in the Nizam College, Hyderabad; and his post-graduate studies in LUCKNOW. He was awarded the D.D. degree by BALDWIN-WALLACE College, U.S.A.

He joined the staff of Hyderabad Boys School in 1922 and became principal in 1932, when its student enrollment was 250. During his sixteen years as principal the enrollment grew to more than 1,000. It now has more than 4,000 students. Prior to his election as bishop, he was Executive Secretary of the Council of Christian Education of the Southern Asia Central Conference.

At different times, Bishop Sundaram has been president of the Hyderabad, Andhra and Uttar Pradesh Christian Councils and has represented Indian Methodism in many international organizations, including the INTERNATIONAL MISSIONARY CONFERENCE in Madras, India; the WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES General Assembly in Delhi; the EAST ASIA CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE in Singapore and Bangkok; and the WORLD METHODIST COUNCIL in Oxford. He has been president of the Boards of Governors of LUCKNOW CHRISTIAN COLLEGE, ISABELLA THOBURN COLLEGE, Allahabad Christian Institute, and the Henry Martyn Institute of Islamics.

He married Caroline John in 1923. She died in 1930 and subsequently in 1932 he married Pajabai Peter. His son, Ernest Sundaram, made a distinguished record as a medical student and is a fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons. The son is now superintendent of the Clara Swain Hospital at BAREILLY, India's first modern hospital established for women and children, now a general hospital. The bishop's daughter and son-in-law are also graduates of medical colleges and serve in Christian institutions.

Journals of the Hyderabad, Lucknow, Bengal and South India Annual Conferences.

Minutes of the Southern Asia Central Conference and Executive Board.

J. WASKOM PICKETT

SUNDAY SCHOOLS, CHURCH SCHOOLS, American Methodist. As early as 1737 while in Georgia, JOHN WESLEY taught the catechism to children on Sunday afternoon before the evening service (Journal, January 31, 1737). At the first Methodist CONFERENCE in 1744 the question was raised as to what and how to teach persons, including children. In 1748 the conference asked, "Might not the children in every place be formed into a little society?" and the answer given was, "Let the preachers try by meeting them apart, and giving them suitable exhortations."

In 1769 Miss HANNAH BALL gathered children together on Saturday and Sunday in a parish house at Wycombe, near LONDON, and taught them the Bible. She reported her activities to John Wesley. There were a few other such early efforts, and in 1780 ROBERT RAIKES started an experiment in instructing poor children in "the rudiments of learning and in religion" on Sundays. The children attended from 10 A.M. until 5:30 P.M. with an hour for lunch and time also for a church service in the afternoon.

John Wesley quickly saw possibilities in the new movement and encouraged it. In his Journal as early as 1784 he refers to visiting a Sunday school.

Gradually the Sunday school became a regular institution in the Methodist movement, not only in England but also in many areas overseas, including the United States. FRANCIS ASBURY is generally credited with starting the first Sunday school in America at Thomas Crenshaw's in Hanover County, Virginia, possibly in 1783 or 1784, with some accounts saying 1786. However, another claim for priority is a Sunday school started in 1785 by William Elliott, a Methodist, at his plantation home in Accomac County, Virginia.

Growth was slow in America in the beginning. Interdenominational efforts were widespread at first, through the American Sunday School Union. In 1827 the Sunday School Union of the M.E. Church was launched and it gave impetus to the work. The catechism was used as a teaching tool and, of course, the Bible. Large use was made of Sunday school libraries; many books were printed especially for them. In 1830 the American Sunday School Union had its imprint on two hundred such volumes.

The Methodist GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1840 created a Committee on Sunday Schools, and provided for the appointment of an editor for the "Youth's Magazine and Sabbath-Schools books." In succeeding years many teaching materials were provided, both magazines and books. Membership increased rapidly, and the whole movement gained strength.

From 1850 to 1900 American Methodists improved their teaching materials, cooperating in the planning of Uniform Lessons, and also moving toward graded materials. JOHN H. VINCENT, superintendent of Sunday School Instruction until elected bishop, introduced in 1870 a Berean Series of uniform lessons for the M.E. Church that were strongly biblical and changed subjects each quarter to provide variety. They encouraged daily Bible reading in the home, and the aim of each lesson was to point to Christ. These materials were instrumental in moving the emphasis away from the exclusive use of the catechism. They were also an important development in the move in 1871 toward producing descriptions of lessons interdenominationally, and these eventually became what is now called by Methodists the International Lesson Series. Both Northern and Southern Methodism used the International Uniform Lessons almost as soon as available.

Launched in April, 1873, in the M.E. Church was Sunday School Classmate, the oldest magazine now being issued with the original title by The Methodist Church as a church school publication. In the Southern Church, ATTICUS G. HAYGOOD, A. G. E. Cunyningham, and JAMES ATKINS were pioneer leaders.

Graded lessons were adopted in 1910 in the two larger Methodisms in the United States, and there was joint publication for some years between these two groups and the Congregational Churches. This example of cooperation was only one of many indicating the way in which Methodist groups have participated in all the major ecumenical Christian education movements. Among these movements were such as the American Sunday School Union (Methodists belonged from 1824 to 1827), International Lesson Committee (1871-), International Sunday School Convention(s) (1872-1958), Sunday School Council of Evangelical Denominations (1910-1922), Leadership Training Publishing Association (now Cooperative Publication Association) (1932-), International Sunday School Association (1905-1922), International Council of Religious Education (1922-1950), and, at present, the Division of Christian Education of the NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES of Christ in the United States of America (1950-).

Methodist educators have been influenced by significant studies across the years, such as Christian Nurture, by Horace Bushnell; The Varieties of Religious Experience, by William James; A Social Theory of Religious Education and What Is Christian Education? by George Albert Coe; A Project Curriculum for Young People, by Erwin L. Shaver; Can Religious Education Be Christian? by Harrison S. Elliott; Christ and Christian Education, by William C. Bower; Faith and Nurture, by H. Shelton Smith; The Clue to Christian Education, by Randolph Crump Miller; The Teaching Ministry of the Church, by James D. Smart; The Gift of Power, by Lewis J. Sherrill; The Gospel and Christian Education, by D. Campbell Wyckoff; The Church Redemptive, by Howard Grimes. Among influential Methodist leaders from 1915 to 1950 have been ARLO A. BROWN, E. B. CHAPPELL, C. A. BOWEN, JOHN Q. SCHISLER, CLARENCE TUCKER CRAIG, WADE CRAWFORD BARCLAY, and Donald M. Maynard.

A significant feature of the Sunday school movement has been that it is essentially a lay enterprise. It has enlisted hundreds and thousands of lay men and women as its leaders—teachers and administrators. This factor, in turn, has called for a strong leadership education system through which these lay persons could be trained for their tasks. In the 1860's Sunday school institutes were launched for training teachers, and under John H. Vincent's guidance courses of study were prepared, examinations conducted, and diplomas issued. A CHAUTAQUA Sunday-School Assembly was organized at the Chautauqua Lake Camp-Ground Assembly (New York state) in 1874 and it became a center for teacher training. Subsequently, scores of Chautauqua-type assemblies were set up throughout the United States. In 1901 the author of a book on Sunday-School Movements in America said, "The most prominent people in Sunday-school work are the Methodists." This was perhaps largely because of the great emphasis on training leaders.

The emphasis on leadership has continued. In the 1920's and 1930's in the Southern Church, it had a fresh impetus under the leadership of JOHN W. SHACKFORD and John Q. Schisler. This involved an effort to help teachers gain an understanding of how children, youth, and adults learn at various ages, with great attention to method. Large district schools for leadership training were held annually during these years in most of the major cities of the South.

Since about the 1930's the term church school has been used as a concept somewhat larger than Sunday school, for it embraces not only the Sunday school but also vacation church school, Sunday evening sessions, weekday—or night—meetings, and outdoor sessions.

One aspect of the Christian nurture of youth for some fifty years (before being merged in the Sunday school/church school) was the EPWORTH LEAGUE. Organized in 1890 in the M.E. Church and a few years later in the Southern Church, it was a powerful force in recruiting and training youth as Christian churchmen. It provided more of an opportunity for youth (and older children) to develop on their own initiative than was generally true in the Sunday school. Meetings were usually held on Sunday afternoon or night, preceding the evening worship service. The League developed yearly summer assemblies on an annual conference basis, combining study, inspiration, and challenge to full-time church-related work. It developed strong concern and support for the overseas mission program, and, in its later years, for social issues. Epworth Herald was the League magazine in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and Epworth Era in M.E. Church, South. The Epworth League was made a part of the church school in the Southern Church in 1930, and at Union in 1939 it was replaced by the Methodist Youth Fellowship (also a part of the church school).

Sunday school/church school leaders have always considered that the enlisting of new disciples—as well as their nurture—has been among their most important tasks. Thus the Sunday school/church school has in every era been the channel through which many new persons, especially children and youth, came into discipleship and into church membership. In 1964 about 200,000 church school members joined the church on profession of faith. The organization of new Sunday schools has often served as the means of starting new churches.

The educational ministry of the church has in the twentieth century made large use of several new forms of ministry. One of these has been the daily vacation church school. This type enterprise has been a graded school operating usually in the summer for a half day and for one to three weeks in a local church. Sometimes such schools are carried on jointly by two or more churches. Many children are reached through these schools who do not attend the Sunday church school sessions. About one and a half million pupils attended these schools in 1964.

Another new type ministry has been graded classes in Bible and religion during the week for public school pupils, often for one or more hours that are released (or made available) by the public school. This was for some years called weekday religious education, but is now being referred to as Through-the-Week Religious Education. It has gained new importance since the Supreme Court rulings regarding Bible reading or prayers in public schools.

A concern for the mission program of the church has always been an integral part of the Sunday school/church school. In the last twenty-five years especially there has been regular giving to mission work by church school classes. In 1964 church schools gave almost $4,000,000 for World Service and Conference Benevolences. This was about one-eighth of the total amount given for World Service by the whole church. There have also been regular curriculum studies of the mission work of the church, at home and abroad.

The Sunday school/church school has been a helpful movement in regard to the recruiting of persons for full-time church-related work. A high percentage of persons going into such work has come through the church school.

In recent years printed resources for teaching have been supplemented by frequent use of drama, music, and projected films. Wide use is also being made of such resources as maps, charts, models, recordings, flat pictures, murals, and puppets. All such resources are considered as tools to assist in the teaching-learning process. The teacher's basic task is conceived as essentially that of guiding persons in a group process of learning so as to encourage them to make such changes in attitude and behavior as will lead toward the purpose of Christian education (see below for a statement of purpose).

With the great increase in the number of people living in cities, there has come an expansion of facilities for conferences and retreats in rural areas, usually related to the program of Christian education. Almost every annual conference has a conference assembly ground, and the facilities of these are usually filled throughout the summer with older children, youth, adults, and family groups. The enterprises conducted in such centers are carefully structured to include worship, study, discussion, and recreation, often making particular use of the outdoor setting.

Special attention has been given since about 1950 to the religious needs of older adults, and efforts made to minister to their specialized situation. The magazine Mature Years is issued to appeal to this constituency.

The ministry to youth is now focused exclusively on teen-agers, with all those beyond high school considered young adults. A special ministry is being launched to these young adults (many of whom have difficulty adjusting to modern city life and contemporary culture) to whom conventional church programs seem to offer little appeal.

In view of the impact of changing cultural patterns, theological views, and educational methods, The Methodist Church is in the midst of the most sweeping reconstruction of its church school curriculum that has been made for some fifty years. In cooperation with other denominations, through the Cooperative Curriculum Project, Methodist Christian education leaders (Division of the Local Church and Editorial Division) helped to prepare a Design for the Curriculum of the Church's Educational Ministry which, with certain variations, was adopted and issued in 1965 as the Design for Methodist Curriculum. An earlier document, Foundations of Christian Teaching in Methodist Churches (1960), produced through the General Board of Education's Curriculum Committee, provided a basic statement on the nature and work of the church, the gospel the church teaches, the nature of Christian education, and the curriculum of Christian education. These two documents have provided theological and educational guidelines for the church's educational ministry, for new curriculum, and subsequently for a series of publications for children issued in 1964; new resources for adults issued in 1967 (and 1969); and new resources for youth issued in 1968.

Christian Advocate, Feb. 16, 1961.

Classmate, Dec. 8, 1917.

Frank G. Lankard, A History of the American Sunday School Curriculum. New York: Abingdon Press, 1927.

M. Simpson, Cyclopaedia. 1882.

WALTER N. VERNON

SUNDAY SCHOOLS, British Methodist. There have been four stages in the development of British Methodist Sunday schools. These cannot be distinguished by specific dates, but have tended to overlap, reflecting the degree of understanding and concern for the teaching and training of children felt within Methodism.

Concern for children's welfare. One fruit of the evangelical revival was a new sense of responsibility for others, especially those neglected by the society as a whole. The Industrial Revolution was accompanied by a rapid increase in the population, and children were often employed in the mills for twelve or more hours a day every weekday. So Sunday schools were opened to care for children on their one free day, Sunday, and so to occupy their time to prevent their running wild and committing crimes. Often these schools were promoted by Methodists and other Christians together, so gaining the widest possible support from society. This cooperation continued until the disturbances of the French Revolution led Anglicans to fear that Jacobite influences motivated schools conducted by Dissenters. Records suggest that HANNAH BALL, who opened a Sunday school at High Wycombe in 1769 (eleven years earlier than ROBERT RAIKES' first venture) deserves the title of Methodist pioneer in this field. John Wesley encouraged her and others, commending Sunday schools as "that blessed work," and terming them "nurseries for Christians." (Journal, vii, p. 3, July 18, 1784.) At first every school was experimental; the pioneers defined their own aim. If a Methodist church building existed, the school was erected as near as possible, so that the children could be taken to worship easily. These early schools were financed and maintained mainly by voluntary contributions. In contrast to other Sunday school workers, those in Methodism seldom received any payment, though they devoted several hours every Sunday to their teaching.

Concern to teach. Teachers were encouraged by their pupils' eagerness to learn. The first curriculums included writing, spelling, arithmetic, and other subjects as well as reading, the Bible being the only textbook. Many schools divided their pupils into four groups, namely, infants (up to age seven), ignorant (those of seven plus those unable to read well), instructed (those from seven to fifteen who could read), and adults (those of fifteen plus). School lasted for four hours or more, and provided the only education many children and adults received. The educational pioneer J. K. Shuttleworth believed a well-run Sunday school bore "its natural fruit" in a well-attended day school. So the early nineteenth century saw Methodists, in common with other Christians, opening day schools, often conducted in the same building as the Sunday school. In 1838 the Wesleys appointed an Education Committee with oversight of both, though a quarter of Wesleyan preaching places still have no Sunday school.

Concern to teach the Bible. The growing concern on the part of society that day-school education should be provided for all children led Methodists to revise the aims of their Sunday schools. They realized there was no longer any need to teach secular subjects on Sunday. Opposition grew to teaching these until the practice ceased. Teachers rejoiced they could concentrate on teaching the Bible, for, as William Cocker (1816-1902), a METHODIST NEW CONNEXION educationalist, put it, "polished intellects might not be unconnected with polluted hearts." Biblical lesson courses were introduced and magazines started both for the help of teachers and for the edification of children. In 1874 WESLEYAN METHODISTS appointed a minister to promote day and Sunday school work and the following year to concentrate on Sunday schools. Other branches of Methodism made similar appointments later, and by the time of the Methodist Union, in 1932, each had well organized Sunday school headquarters, with full-time ministerial and lay leaders serving their constituencies.

Concern for Christian discipleship. Throughout the history of the movement many Sunday school teachers had done more than teach facts, whether the ABC's or the life of Jesus. They brought children into a personal knowledge of Christ as Savior, and Methodism owes an incalculable debt to their witness and work. But the philanthropic motive dominant in the eighteenth century continued, and many were content if they could give children a knowledge of Christ. Church leaders allowed devoted enthusiasts to manage their Sunday schools, and even permitted the presentation in some areas of "going away" Bibles to children of fourteen.

Since Methodist Union, and especially since the establishment of the Youth Department in 1943, the concern has been to regard Sunday school teaching as the church doing its essential work of teaching and training its young disciples. Many attempts have been made to abolish the gap between Sunday school and church, the most promising being the transferring of the main teaching session to Sunday morning, so that more children can become active participants in morning worship. Teaching involves much more than talking. Methodist lesson notes, based on agreed courses prepared by Methodists and other Christian educationalists, seek to bring children into personal relationship with Christ, and to guide them to make ever fuller responses to him within the life of his church. A high percentage of new church members received is the justification for maintaining "this blessed work."

E. H. Hayes, J. K. Meir, The Child in the Midst. London, n.d. J. K. MEIR

SUNDAY SCHOOL/CHURCH SCHOOL PUBLICATIONS. The Methodists in America inherited John Wesley's commitment to the necessity for Christians to read, study, write, and publish. Wesley once said, "It cannot be that the people should grow in grace unless they give themselves to reading. A reading people will be a knowing people."

In January, 1823, The Youth's Instructor and Guardian was launched, designed for "all lovers of youth, as well as children and young people themselves . . . those who have superintendence of Sabbath-schools . . . and secretaries of Juvenile Missionary Societies." Send us, the readers were urged, "accounts of the Christian experiences and happy deaths of children and young persons."

By 1828 there was also a Child's Magazine being produced, and many Sunday school books and tracts. In May, 1838, The Youth's Magazine appeared. The first few issues contained features entitled "Sunday School Teachers Love Feast," "Anecdotes of Rev. John Wesley," "Education of Females," "Description of a Camp-Meeting" (a poem), "Hints to Sunday School Teachers," and "Grave-Yard Flowers."

The Sunday School Advocate was the next periodical to appear; it was issued for the Methodist Sunday School Union in October, 1841. It contained eight pages, appeared twice a month, and referred to itself as "this Sunday School friend." It carried articles, poetry, illustrations, stories, hymns, short sermons, book reviews, and Sunday school statistics.

Methodist Episcopal Church After 1845. After Episcopal Methodism divided in 1844-45, The Sunday School Advocate continued in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and was referred to as the only official Sunday school periodical of the denomination. In 1860 the General Conference authorized the issuing of a journal for teachers, and the publishing of "graduated lesson books for classes." This is presumably the beginning of graded materials for Methodists. Later there appeared the Sunday School Journal for Teachers and Young People. JOHN H. VINCENT started the Sunday School Teachers Quarterly which later was called The Sunday School Teacher. In 1869 Golden Hours was started for young people; it ran until 1880 when it was discontinued for lack of support.

In April, 1873, The Sunday School Classmate began as a weekly Sunday school paper; it is still being issued as Classmate on a monthly basis. In 1892 the Epworth Herald was issued to care for the concerns of the Epworth League. By 1902 there were study periodicals for younger children, older children, early teen-agers, older teen-agers, young people, the home department; as well as periodicals for teachers of primary and beginner children. Most of the lessons presented were based on the Uniform Lessons.

Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Meanwhile, the M.E. Church, South had launched a Sunday School Journal following the 1850 General Conference, and in 1851 the Sunday School Visitor appeared. In 1858 Home Circle began, but it and other publications were disrupted by the Civil War; the Publishing House in Nashville was taken over by Federal troops. But by 1871 the Sunday School Visitor was back in circulation, and new titles issued that year were Our Little People, Sunday School Magazine, and Lesson Papers.

By 1906 there was a special lesson periodical for younger and older children, early teen-agers, older teen-agers, and home department. Soon there were added Primary Teacher, Boys and Girls, and Adult Student. Most of the lesson treatments were based on the Uniform Lessons. As in the Northern Church, the Epworth League movement called for its own publication, the Epworth Era.

In 1910 the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the Congregational-Christian Churches cooperated in setting up the Graded Lesson Syndicate, producing jointly the first series of closely graded lessons. By 1915 the series was in use with children and youth. Some shifts were made in publications of the Southern Church in 1930, when the Sunday school and the Epworth League were merged.

The Methodist Church. The next major adjustment came in 1940 following Union in 1939. Publications of the three uniting churches were brought together as the publishing interests of all three were unified. They included a closely graded series, a group graded series, a uniform lesson series (for adults only, after the first few years), and, within a few years, a series for small churches. Best known titles of periodicals since Union have been Child Guidance in Christian Living, The Church School, The Christian Home, Highroad, Adult Student, Adult Teacher, Home Quarterly, Wesley Quarterly. Some new titles added since 1940 have been Mature Years, Studies in Christian Living, Roundtable, Christian Action, Music Ministry, Epworth Notes, Adult Bible Course, and Lecciones Cristianas, an adult quarterly in Spanish.

In the early 1960's the Methodists joined other Protestant groups in creating a Cooperative Curriculum Project, through which a basic curriculum plan or design for a Protestant curriculum for the teaching ministry of the church was developed. Out of this grew a new beginning in creating a Methodist curriculum plan, and, subsequently, new curriculum resources. In the fall of 1964 a completely new series for children was ready, under the title of Christian Studies for Methodist Children. It was immediately successful, having the widest acceptance that any Methodist curriculum for children has ever received. As these lines are written further plans are being made to enlarge and advance this whole program.

Methodist church school publications have shown a capacity for adaptability across the years. New approaches—sometimes radically new—have been made in almost every generation—both in pupil's and teacher's materials. A wide range of book publications for the educational ministry have been issued to serve church libraries, leadership education enterprises, vacation church schools, weekday religious education, camping situations, conferences, and assemblies.

Originally, editors of church school publications were on the staffs of the publishing houses or Book Concerns. By 1930 in the Southern Church and since 1939 in The Methodist Church, they have been staff members of the denominational boards of education, but having a working relationship to their publishing houses. Circulation of publications has followed rather closely the enrollment of the Sunday school/church school. In 1965 it reached its highest peak ever, at 7,888,868.

Since Union in 1939 the CURRICULUM COMMITTEE of The Methodist Church has studied its task and its field of operations a number of times. The result of the first study was a document called Some Points of Needed Emphasis in Making the Curriculum of Christian Education, issued in 1947. The second study resulted in a longer document called Educational Principles in the Curriculum. It contained four sections: Educational Principles Implied in Basic Christian Beliefs, Understanding the Nature of Christian Education, Christian Education and the Protestant Witness, and Implications for Methodist Curriculum Construction. Foundations of Christian Teaching in Methodist Churches, issued in 1960, dealt with The Nature and Work of the Church, The Gospel the Church Teaches, The Nature of Christian Education, and The Curriculum of Christian Education. The latest document, Design for Methodist Curriculum (1965), deals with The Objective of Christian Education, The Scope of the Curriculum for Christian Education, The Context of the Curriculum for Christian Education, and Learning and Learning Tasks in Christian Education.

The present base for curriculum planning for the educational ministry of the church is well expressed in the following statement:

"The objective of the church as manifested through its educational ministry is that all persons be aware of and grow in their understanding of God, especially of his redeeming love as revealed in Jesus Christ, and that they respond in faith and love—to the end that they may know who they are and what their human situation means, increasingly identify themselves as sons of God and members of the Christian community, live in the spirit of God in every relationship, fulfill their common discipleship in the world, and abide in the Christian hope."

WALTER N. VERNON

SUNDAY SCHOOL UNIONS or ASSOCIATIONS

were—and are—organizations for the encouragement of the formation of Sunday schools in connection with the church life of America. On Jan. 11, 1791 the first Interdenominational Sunday School Association was organized in PHILADELPHIA under the name of "A Society for the Institution and Support of First Day or Sunday Schools in the City of Philadelphia." The meeting had been advertised in Dunlap's American Daily Advertiser and representatives attended from several churches including St. George's Methodist Church. A constitution was drawn by which the Society met every three months. Three schools were opened: one for girls under the care of a John Ely, the other two for boys, one under the leadership of John Poor and a second under Thaddeus Brown. As time went on some of the schools that were opened met during the week, and it is thought by some that these were the forerunners of the nationwide public school system. Among the more prominent persons in the movement were Benjamin Rush, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, Matthew Carey, a liberal Roman Catholic and Bishop William White of the Episcopal Church who for forty-six years held the position of President. Spelling, writing and reading were taught besides the Bible, and the students came, for the most part from families of the poor and illiterate. The success of the enterprise was measured partly by how ably the schools kept young hoodlums and possible delinquents off the streets and gave them a useful occupation. One of the schools housed in the New Street building of Old St. George's continued to grow until by 1841 St. George's was responsible for three First Day Schools.

During the years following the War of 1812 with England, Sunday School Unions or Associations began to spring up in most of the states, the most notable one being the New York Sunday School Union established February 26, 1816. The following year a meeting was held in Philadelphia to draw together various Sunday and Adult School Associations that had come into existence. Eleven organizations united in 1817 under the name, "Sunday and Adult School Union." The growth of Sunday Schools under the new organization was phenomenal, and its work spread throughout the country. On May 25, 1824 a new name and constitution were approved to reflect this national character when the American Sunday School Union was organized. It is still a strong organization (1968).

During the year 1824 also a Committee on Education of the Methodist Episcopal Church urged the General Conference to give greater attention to the religious instruction of its youth, and three years later the Sunday School Union of the Methodist Episcopal Church was organized with the purpose not merely of instructing the poor and illiterate but with the broader purpose of establishing Sunday Schools in connection with every Methodist Episcopal Church in the country and of distributing tracts and books to assist toward this end.

In 1833 the Union was united with the Tract Society of the Methodist Church, becoming The Sunday School Union and Tract Society. The organization purchased its materials at cost from the Publishing House of the Methodist Church, and with the destruction of the Publishing House by fire in 1836 it became practically defunct. The Sunday School Union, however, was separately re-organized in 1840 and began another era of vigorous leadership in the establishing and support of Sunday Schools.

With the bisection of the Church in 1844 the Northern Church continued the activities of the Sunday School Union which by 1875 had accomplished one of its purposes in that every Church now had a Sunday School in connection with its work.

The Southern Church had always been a strong supporter of Sunday Schools and also formed a Sunday School Association. This organization performed its task effectively, and in the chaotic post war years was one of the means of providing many southern children with the only formal education they would know. Unfortunately, the rather loose affiliation which these schools, sponsored by the Sunday School Association, had with the local church gave rise often to friction between the pastor of the church and the Sunday School Superintendent. In 1866 the General Conference of the Southern Church removed the schools from the domination of the Association and made them an integral part of the church.

At the time of the union of the three branches of Methodism in 1939 all Sunday School work came under the Board of Education. In 1964 "Church Schools" as they came to be called, were placed under the Board of Education who "may" co-operate through the Inter-board Committee on Christian Education and such agencies as the National Council of Churches, the World Council of Christian Education and Sunday School Association and the World Council of Churches." (Discipline, 1964, P. 1426)

E. S. Bucke, History of American Methodism, 1964.

Edwin Wilbur Rice, The Sunday School Movement and the American Sunday School Union. Philadelphia, 1927.

FREDERICK E. MASER

SUNDAY SERVICE, THE, was the name which John Wesley gave to the edition of the Book of Common Prayer of the Church of England which he prepared for the American Methodists when he sent to them THOMAS COKE, RICHARD WHATCOAT, and THOMAS VASEY, as ordained men for the purpose, as American Methodists insist, of starting a Church in America. This was in 1784, and the gathering of the American Methodist preachers in Baltimore at the CHRISTMAS CONFERENCE with Thomas Coke, Whatcoat and Vasey, and the presentation of the Sunday Service and their acceptance of it was an important move in the formation of the Methodist Episcopal Church in America.

Mr. Wesley explained the Liturgy, as it was often called, as being an edition of the Book of Common Prayer. His preface to the book is as follows:

I believe there is no Liturgy in the world, either in ancient or modern language, which breathes more of solid, Scriptural, rational piety than the Common Prayer of the Church of England; and though the main of it was compiled considerably more than two hundred years ago, yet is the language of it not only pure, but strong and elegant in the highest degree.

Little alteration is made in the following edition of it, except in the following instances:

1. Most of the holy days (so called) are omitted, as at present answering no valuable end.

2. The service of the Lord's day, the length of which has often been complained of, is considerably shortened.
3. Some sentences in the offices of baptism and for the burial of the dead are omitted; and
4. Many Psalms left out, and many parts of the others, as being highly improper for the mouths of a Christian congregation.

John Wesley

Bristol, September 9, 1784

The exact name of the Liturgy as can be seen upon the title page was "The Sunday Service of the Methodists in North America, with Other Occasional Services;" London, printed in the year of 1784." Coke and his attending presbyters brought the Sunday Service to America in loose sheets to avoid payment of the much heavier duty on bound books, and after its adoption by the Christmas Conference, JOHN DICKINS, who subsequently came to be the first BOOK STEWARD in America, took these unbound copies and had them bound together with a collection of Minutes of the Christmas Conference in most of the respective copies. Certain of them seem to have been bound also with some of the hymns which were recommended for use of the Methodists in America.

The Sunday Service was an abridgement of the Book of Common Prayer and beside its ordering of worship and psalms, contained 24 of the 39 Articles of the Church of England. These Mr. Wesley selected and edited somewhat and as it came about these Articles forthwith were adopted by American Methodists as Standards of Doctrine. (See ARTICLES OF RELIGION for Mr. Wesley's changes and amendments.)

In editing the Prayer Book, Mr. Wesley changed the word Priest to Elder throughout; the word Bishop he always changed to Superintendent; he left out all directions for singing or chanting when these were found in the Rubrics of the Prayer Book; and he left out the entire Office for Confirmation, so that American Methodism had no form for the reception of members, save baptism, until 1864 in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and 1870 in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

The Christmas Conference adopted the Sunday Service formally, agreeing that its members would "form themselves into an Episcopal Church under the direction of superintendents, elders, deacons and helpers according to the forms of Ordination annexed to our Liturgy, and the form of discipline set forth in these Minutes." This became the plan of Church government which American Methodism was destined to adhere to. Richard Whatcoat in his memoirs, as quoted by Bishop TIGERT, states, "We agreed to form a Methodist Episcopal Church, in which the Liturgy, as presented by the Reverend John Wesley should be read and the Sacraments be administered by a superintendent, elders and deacons, who shall be ordained by a presbytery using the episcopal form as prescribed in the rear of Mr. Wesley's Prayer Book" (p. 44). A second edition of the Sunday Service came out in 1786, which edition was printed in London at the press of Frys and Couchman. It had 25 Articles, as by this time the American Methodists had inserted an Article of their own having to do with the obligation of the Methodist Church to the Civil ruler in America, since Mr. Wesley had naturally omitted the comparable Article which affirmed allegiance to the King.

There has been some confusion over the first editions of the Sunday Service, Bishop Tigert holding in the Making of Methodism that the editions of 1784 and 1786 are both American Methodist; but that in 1788 there was a third edition of the Sunday Service for the British Wesleyan Connexion, and in 1792 both an American and British edition. Whatever be the case for the Wesleyan Connexion in England, for America there appear to have been only two editions, and these were of 1784 and of 1786. The 1786 edition was destined to be the last, for the Sunday Service never proved popular and, indeed, was little used in early America. JESSE LEE said that the preachers tried for awhile to read prayers on the Lord's Day, and to read part of the morning service on Wednesdays and Fridays; but the same author said that the preachers were satisfied they could pray better and with more devotion with their eyes shut than they could with their eyes open. So the Prayer Book—as it is often referred to—was soon laid aside and has never been used since in public worship, though some of its material has been reprinted from time to time.

As can be seen clearly today no more incongruous idea presents itself in the history of Churches than that of expecting American Methodism in 1784 to be guided and directed by Book of Prayer forms. Methodism itself was a revolt against formalism, and the age in America was one of immense freedom in all departments of life. That the early Methodists should soon get rid of the stately forms of the English Church is not surprising. There were saved, however, out of the Sunday Service eight forms, or offices—now called the RITUAL—which to this day have been kept in those Methodist Churches claiming descent from the Christmas Conference. These forms are the Service of Holy Communion; the Infant and Adult Baptismal Offices; Matrimony; Burial of the Dead; and three forms for Ordination—of Bishops (as superintendents soon came to be called); of Elders; and of Deacons.

In discarding the Sunday Service, American Methodism was in the process of creating a book of its own, and one which embodies its own genius much more definitely than did the Book of Common Prayer—a book which American Methodism not inaptly named the DISCIPLINE. Not ordered worship, but ordered life and activity came to be the genius of American Methodism on its side of the ocean.

In connection with the first edition of the Sunday Service, it is interesting to note that the printed pages of the book were brought to America in loose sheets, and this gave American Methodists a chance to revise in certain instances Mr. Wesley's own edition of the Prayer Book. Making the sign of the cross upon the forehead of a child being baptised (the signation so called) was kept by Mr. Wesley, but the page containing that was reprinted in America so that that ceremony was done away and does not appear in the books John Dickins put out; likewise, the "manual acts" in Communion whereby the priest was told to take the patten containing bread in his hand, and again to take the vessel containing the wine in his hand during the Prayer of Consecration—these two ceremonies were left out by the American brethren. Also a great many sweeping changes were made in the Offices of the Ritual when these were taken from the Sunday Service and put in the Discipline of 1792. Most of these were in the interest of brevity, but some for reasons clearly which agreed more with American thinking along particular lines. Bishop Asbury was accused of destroying a large invoice of the Prayer Book which Wesley had sent to America, but this cannot possibly be believed. (The Times and the Teachings of John Wesley by Arthur W. Little, D.D.; Second Edition, The Young Churchman Co., Milwaukee, Wisconsin, 1905, quoting a Methodist in Search of the Church, p. 104. This reference states that a few copies escaped, and one is preserved in the Library of the General Theological Seminary in New York.)

While very scarce, several copies of the Sunday Service have been carefully preserved in various places. The Book Room at the Publishing House in London has a 1786 copy; and 1784 copies are in the Library of DREW THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, Madison, New Jersey; one in EMORY UNIVERSITY, Atlanta, Georgia; in the Public Library, New York; and in the Library of Congress in Washington, D. C.—kept in their Rare Book Room.

F. Baker, John Wesley. 1970.

R. J. Cooke, History of the Ritual. 1900.

N. B. Harmon, Rites and Ritual. 1926.

T. O. Summers, Commentary on the Ritual. 1874. N. B. H.

SUNDERLAND THEOLOGICAL INSTITUTION was a PRIMITIVE METHODIST theological college in England for the training of ministers which functioned between 1868 and 1881. The Primitive Methodist Conference of 1865 had decided to use the secondary school opened at Elmfield House, York, in 1864, as a venue for the introduction of ministerial training under JOHN PETTY. This was an interim measure, and in 1868 the Connexion bought what had been an infirmary in Chester Road, Sunderland, for £1,500, and spent a further £1,836 on adapting the building to its new purpose. Part of the money which was used for this came from the fund which had been raised to celebrate the jubilee of the Connexion. WILLIAM ANTLIFF was the first principal and tutor, remaining there until 1881. When HARTLEY COLLEGE was opened in MANCHESTER in 1881, it was found that there was not any need for two institutions and the work of ministerial training was concentrated in Manchester, which had the advantage of being a university center. The Sunderland building was sold; it still exists as a Roman Catholic school.

Wesley Historical Society Proceedings, xxx.

JOHN T. WILKINSON

SUNG, JOHN (Sung Shang-chieh, 1901-1944), evangelist in CHINA, was born Sept. 27, 1901 in a Methodist parsonage in the Hinghwa Conference. After graduation from the Methodist high school there he attended OHIO WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, where he graduated in three years with honors. By this time his earlier dedication of himself to the ministry had faded and he went to Ohio State University for a Ph.D. in chemistry. He decided to study a year at Union Theological Seminary in New York, with the hope that he might become an intelligent layman.

On Feb. 10, 1927, he had a nerve-shattering religious experience which overturned his plan of life. After six months in a mental hospital, and the intercession of his college teacher, Rollin Walker, he returned to China where for fifteen years he was a blazing evangelist. His first three years were spent in his home area, and during that time he joined the Hinghwa Annual Conference. But he soon asked for an appointment as evangelist-at-large and began systematic campaigns in other parts of China. For three or four years he worked in conjunction with the Bethel Evangelistic Band in Shanghai, and after that on his own. He visited almost every province in China and everywhere left behind him a revitalized church.

Outside the mainland he made at least six visits to SINGAPORE and MALAYSIA, and preached also in INDONESIA, Siam, Indochina, TAIWAN and MANILA. The Bible societies had no difficulty in following his trail, for the sale of Bibles and Testaments always doubled and tripled wherever he went.

In January 1940, he returned to Shanghai seriously ill. He was able to do a little more work the following year, but by June 1943 he had to stop public speaking altogether. He died Aug. 18, 1944.

Many found fault with his preaching: He was inclined to allegorical exegesis; especially in his earlier years, he was too censorious of others; for a time he overstressed faith healing. But, with it all, there was unquestionably a power of God to touch the conscience of his hearers. He made no attempt to gather his thousands of converts into Methodist churches. But all the churches of eastern Asia have felt the influence of his impassioned preaching.

Leslie T. Lyall, John Sung. London: China Inland Mission, 1954; Chicago: Moody Press, 1964. FRANCIS P. JONES

SUPERINTENDENT, American Methodist. The title and office of superintendent came over to American Methodism as part of the Connexional plan devised by JOHN WESLEY. THOMAS RANKIN and FRANCIS ASBURY were sent to America to be "general superintendents" of the work, and Wesley preferred that name to the title "bishop" for the office of general superintendent as this developed in the M.E. Church after 1784.

In the Sunday Service, or Prayer Book, which Wesley sent to American Methodism, he invariably changed the name "bishop" to "superintendent" in those offices where a bishop is called upon to ordain, or to be ordained. However in 1786—certainly by 1794—COKE and ASBURY adopted "bishop" in place of "superintendent"—much to Wesley's distaste, and to the objection of many Methodist ministers who had begun complaining at the arbitrary overlordship of Asbury. The title "bishop," however, became established, but with it also there has come down through the years a parallel definition of a bishop as "a general superintendent," and his work is called in the Constitution of The United Methodist Church "general superintendency." The third RESTRICTIVE RULE of the present United Methodist Church prevents the general conference from "destroying episcopacy or doing away with our plan of itinerant general superintendency." Each bishop today considers himself a general superintendent of the whole Church. (See EPISCOPACY.)

British Methodist. In English Methodist usage the CIRCUIT superintendent minister is the spiritual and administrative leader of the circuit to which he is appointed. He is chairman of all official meetings, including the circuit quarterly meeting; in consultation with his colleagues he makes the preaching plan; he is responsible for the working of Methodist discipline in the circuit; he is usually responsible for the care of candidates for the ministry in his circuit. The superintendent's authority is guarded against that of the Chairman of District, inasmuch as the Chairman of District may only enter a circuit officially either at the invitation of, or after consultation with, the superintendent minister. In modern English Methodist usage the word "superintendent" has no episcopal overtone; this belongs to the title of "Chairman of District."

District Superintendents—formerly called presiding elders in American Methodism—supervise and care for a district within their respective annual conferences. The change of name from presiding elder to district superintendent was done first in the M.E. Church in 1908, and then by the United Conference in Kansas City for The Methodist Church in 1939. The name and functions of the District Superintendents were continued in The United Methodist Church, about as they had been in The Methodist Church.

Development of the Presiding Eldership. On Oct. 24, 1769, Wesley sent RICHARD BOARDMAN to America as his "assistant" in order to superintend the work in America. Methodism in America was growing and becoming more complicated, so in 1771 Wesley sent one who turned out to be a more capable man in the person of Francis Asbury, with the explicit instructions to give strict attention to discipline (keeping all parts connected to the whole).

Asbury set about diligently to fulfill these plans, becoming Wesley's equal as a traveler on horseback. All the country districts, towns, and plantations became his parish. "But while he was thus engaged in visiting the plantations and villages, an undue eagerness to extend the work in the towns had unhappily led to a comparative neglect of discipline." (Tigert, p. 57.) When news of the neglect reached Wesley, he immediately set out to remedy the situation by sending Thomas Rankin, June 3, 1773, to America to serve as General Assistant or Superintendent with powers superior to any which had been vested in his predecessors in office. Rankin, a strict disciplinarian, with the aid of Asbury, did much to bring about the effective organization of connectionalism in American Methodism.

The first American Conference in 1773 did much to enlarge the superintending power for the General Assistant. The sixth rule of that conference was: "Every preacher who acts as an assistant (i.e., has charge of a circuit) to send an account of the work once in six months to the General Assistant." (Ibid., p. 69.) This provided a continuing touch with the spread and growth of Methodism.

There are hints of the beginning of the office of presiding elder in this desire for a connection with all the work. By the time the M.E. Church was organized in 1784 the office was virtually created, although the title was not explicitly given to it. "It came with the first Superintendents, the first ordinations, the first formal provision for the administration of the sacraments, and is, therefore, coeval with the organization of the Church," said Bishop Tigert (p. 213).

The twelve elected and ordained elders at the CHRISTMAS CONFERENCE, Dec. 24, 1784, were in reality "presiding elders," although the title does not appear in the Discipline until 1792. The title in fact does not appear regularly in the Minutes until as late as 1797. These twelve men were assigned to districts, or rather to groups of circuits. The Methodist system was determined by all organizational moves to remain connected.

During the period from 1784 to 1792 the "presiding elders" relieved the General Assistant of many duties. Yet, the bishop, as he now was, had no "cabinet," as such. The cabinet in a sense had its origin in the COUNCIL that Asbury formed in 1789, by which he hoped to avoid the necessity of a GENERAL CONFERENCE. The Council itself could only act in an advisory manner and soon vanished from the scene.

From the beginning the "presiding elder" could not act contrary to an express order of the superintendents. The elder acted as an advisor, a link in the connectional system. In 1786 this restriction was made definite in the Discipline, in answer to what the duties are of an ELDER: "To exercise within his own district, during the absence of the superintendents, all the powers vested in them for the government of our Church. Provided, that he never acts contrary to an express order of the superintendents."

The General Conference of 1792. It was in this conference the office and title of presiding elder was defined. The General Conference determined that there should be presiding elders, and that they should be chosen, stationed, and changed by the bishop, provided no elder should preside in the same district more than four years successively. The presiding elder was thus formally created to be in effect a sub-bishop, and an arm of the Church's disciplinary administration. The following section was framed by the General Conference of 1792:

Quest. 1. By whom are the presiding elders to be chosen?
Ans. By the bishop.

Quest. 2. What are the duties of the presiding elder?

Ans. 1. To travel through his appointed district. 2. In the absence of a bishop to take charge of all the elders, deacons, traveling and local preachers, and exhorters in his district. 3. To change, receive, or suspend preachers in his district during the intervals of the conferences, and in the absence of the bishop. 4. In the absence of a bishop to preside in the conferences of his district. 5. To be present, as far as practicable, at all the quarterly meetings; and to call together, at each quarterly meeting, all the traveling and local preachers, exhorters, stewards, and leaders of the circuit, to hear complaints, and to receive appeals. 6. To oversee the spiritual and temporal business of the societies in his district. 7. To take care that every part of our Discipline be enforced in his district. 8. To attend the bishop when present in his district; and to give him when absent all necessary information, by letter, of the state of his district.

Quest. 3. By whom are the presiding elders to be stationed and changed?
Ans. By the bishop.

Quest. 4. How long may the bishops allow an elder to preside in the same district?

Ans. For any term not exceeding four years successively.

Quest. 5. How shall the presiding elder be supported?

Ans. If there be a surplus of the public money in one or more circuits in his district, he shall receive such surplus, provided he does not receive more than his annual salary, after such surplus is paid him, or if there be no surplus, he shall share with the preachers of his district, in proportion with what they have respectively received, so that he receives no more than the amount of his salary upon the whole.

Tension immediately came about over the bishop's power to choose presiding elders. JAMES O'KELLY and WILLIAM MCKENDREE wanted the presiding elders to be elected by the annual conferences. The move failed in 1792 and O'Kelly withdrew from the Church. McKendree stayed on to become in time a bishop himself and next to Asbury the greatest champion of the Asburian episcopacy.

Coke and Asbury in their Notes to the Discipline of 1796 made reference to the office and duty of presiding elder as created in 1792:

And we believe we can venture to assert, that there never has been an episcopal church of any great extent which has not had ruling or presiding elders, either expressly by name, as in the apostolic churches, or otherwise in effect . . . The Conference clearly saw that the bishops wanted assistants; that it was impossible for one or two bishops so to superintend the vast work on this continent, as to keep everything in order in the intervals of the conference, without other official men to act under them and assist them: and as these would be only the agents of the bishops in every respect, the authority of appointing them, and of changing them, ought, from the nature of things, to be in the episcopacy. (Discipline, 1796; 1808.)

Asbury's great policy was to establish itinerancy in the new American Church, and to do this he saw that an episcopacy strong enough to command the appointments, both of all preachers and of all local congregations, must be had. The revolt against the episcopacy was destined to be fought out for several decades over the bishops' right to appoint the presiding elders. For should they be elected by vote of a conference, they would be beholden to the conference and controlled by it, not by the bishop. The episcopacy would be greatly minimized, the bishop himself becoming no more than a moderator.

Meanwhile the CABINET composed then—and now—of all presiding elders (district superintendents) had come about. In 1812 William McKendree, having become a bishop in 1808, summoned the presiding elders to meet with him to help make the appointments. Thus for the first time came the cabinet.

The question of electing the presiding elders was debated, but not settled in 1812 nor in 1816, but a more epochal move came at the General Conference of 1820. A resolution was passed ordering that when the appointment of one or more presiding elders should be required, the bishop must nominate three times the number out of which the Conference itself should elect the needed elders.

NICHOLAS SNETHEN had introduced this resolution back in 1812. It seemed to be a workable solution, until a few days later in the 1820 Conference JOSHUA SOULE was elected bishop. Soule refused the office saying that the episcopacy would be such a different entity under this mandate that he would not and could not consent to be ordained. Soule's move, coupled with a powerful protest by Bishop McKendree, caused the resolutions to be suspended for four years until the mind of the annual conferences upon them might be obtained. They became known as the "suspended resolutions." As it turned out, when the annual conferences discussed and voted upon this matter, the resolutions were in effect killed.

When the General Conference of 1824 convened, "the Reformers," as they were being called, met defeat, and moves for lay representation also seemed lost in the M.E. Church. Soule was again elected and consecrated bishop, he himself being destined to be a tremendous bulwark of the Asburian episcopacy in the great division coming later in 1844.

The M.P. CHURCH, composed largely of the reforming elements, then organized in 1828-30. This Church had no bishops at all and no presiding elders, but strongly incorporated laymen into all the conferences and councils of the Church.

This seemingly ended the struggle to make the eldership elective in episcopal Methodism; for while the Church divided in 1844 over the slavery issue, and the power of a General Conference to depose a bishop for holding slaves, there was no division over the presiding eldership continuing to be an arm of the episcopacy either South or North. True, in the M.E. General Conference of 1876, the elective presiding eldership was again brought up, and rather strongly supported, but again the move failed to pass.

From 1844-1939. Within both Episcopal Churches there was a continual struggle over the term a presiding elder might serve upon one district. Once in 1904, in the M.E. Church, J. W. Lambert presented a memorial to the General Conference to remove the time limit from the office altogether. This failed. In time in the M.E. Churches, limitation of six years was put upon the length of time a district superintendent might serve on any one district. This provision was continued in The Methodist Church and in The United Methodist Church. This measure effectually prevents a "self-perpetuating cabinet" in which the district superintendents were moved—or moved themselves!—from one district to another, year after year as was formerly the case, especially in the Southern Church.

The big change during this period was the change in title. In the General Conference of the M.E. Church of 1908, J. M. BUCKLEY presented the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Revision:

Whereas, the name "Presiding Elder" was attached to the office now known by it in part for a reason that no longer exists; and,

Whereas, in many parts of this country the name and the office are confounded with the uses of the word "elder;" and, Whereas, the functions of the office are not suggested to other denominations and the public by the word "presiding elder;" and,

Whereas, The proper dignity of the office is no longer conserved by its retention; therefore,

Resolved, That the title of this office be changed to "district superintendent."

Subsequently, its committee having acted favorably, the General Conference adopted the new title.

The Office Since 1939. The plan of union in 1939 preserved this historic ministerial office keeping it under the term "district superintendent." An attempt to adopt the name "district elder" at the Uniting Conference was rather weakly made, but this failed, and "the D.S." has come to be the presiding elder's name in modern American Methodism.

The duties of the office were increased by disciplinary direction in 1939. There were then sixteen expressed duties of the district superintendent; whereas, the Discipline of the M.E. Church, South listed only eleven in 1938 (it had nine in 1846); and the M.E. Church listed only twelve. In The United Methodist Church there are twelve listed duties, but these are very important. All of them may be summed up in the first item, "to travel through his district in order to preach and oversee the spiritual and temporal affairs of the Church." Duties of presiding, administering, supervising, and counseling pastors, and seeing that all the provisions of the Discipline are carried out, are all outlined in a quite definite way.

In negotiations leading to the PLAN OF UNION between The Methodist Church and the E.U.B. Church, the latter were found to have elective district superintendents, a move which had been made in that Church quite a few years before in answer to the same type of argument which had strongly been expressed in the earlier days of the M.E. Church. The Methodist negotiators, however, did not feel that the elective presiding eldership was wise for the enlarged Methodist Church nor that a plan of union which embraced it would be accepted by the Church as a provision of the plan of union. The E.U.B. brethren gave way on this, as they did upon the matter of term episcopacy.

Present regulations in The United Methodist Church are: "He [the bishop] shall choose and appoint district superintendents annually, but within the Jurisdictional Conferences of the United States he shall not appoint any minister or district superintendent for more than six years in any consecutive nine years." (Discipline, 1968, Paragraph 391.3.) The present Church, therefore, maintains the office of the district superintendents—formerly the presiding elder—pretty much as it has been through the long years of Methodist development in America.

The district superintendent is in effect a sub-bishop. He can do everything which a bishop does under certain conditions except ordain. Wise bishops state that a good cabinet is a key to successful administration in any annual conference. In spite of other organizations which are empowered to take over large divisions of the administrative work in an annual conference, the bishop with his cabinet are still the responsible parties for overseeing the spiritual and temporal affairs of the whole Church. They, and not a program committee, or any conference board or organization are to be praised or blamed accordingly as success and good administration is carried out.

A. H. Bassett, Concise History. 1877.

Disciplines.

R. Emory, History of the Discipline. 1844.

N. B. Harmon, Organization. 1962.

Journals of the General Conferences.

Powers McLeod, "A D.S. Speaks: We Ask the Wrong Questions," Christian Advocate, Oct. 5, 1967.

J. J. Tigert, Constitutional History. 1894.

N. B. H.

JOHN KENT

SUPERNUMERARY, British Methodist. In English Methodist usage a supernumerary is a minister who has retired, or "superannuated." He is not normally put in charge of a society or circuit, but there are a few "active supernumeraries," as they are called, who take charge of a society. A supernumerary minister will preach, however, as long as he is physically able. Permission to retire is normally given after forty years in the active ministry.

JOHN KENT

SUPERNUMERARY FUND, at Christchurch, New Zealand, deals with pensions and allowances for retired ministers.

Prior to the separation of the NEW ZEALAND Conference from the Australasian Conference in 1913, New Zealand ministers were members of the Australasian Supernumerary Fund. After the separation, the first balance sheet presented to the New Zealand Conference showed accumulated funds of £69,713, of which £52,770 had been transferred from the Australasian Fund. At the same time the Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist Churches in New Zealand having united, £8,752 was transferred from the Primitive Methodist Supernumerary Fund.

The 1966 capital fund stood at over £170,000. There were 46 supernumerary ministers and 43 widows of ministers who were annuitants, with 249 ministers who were contributing members. The personal payment of each minister was and is subsidized by his circuit or department. Substantial increases in the rate of contribution have been instituted to offset rising costs.

A supernumerary minister on his retirement may receive his benefits from the fund as an annuity, or he may commute a large portion of his interest in the fund. This latter provision enables him to benefit also from the social security benefits offered by the government, and it helps him very materially in setting up his own home.

In 1928, a subsidiary fund was established called the Ministers' Home Acquisition Fund, personal payments into which were subsidized by a grant from the Connexional Fire Insurance Fund. In addition there is the Supernumerary Benevolent Fund, which as its name implies exists to make ex gratia payments to annuitants under circumstances of special need.

In 1916, a retiring fund was established for home missionaries, and in 1921, a similar fund for deaconesses. The personal payments of members are subsidized in each of these funds by the home or overseas mission department, as the case may be, or by the circuit concerned. Because the basis of service is different here from that of the ministers, contributors receive their benefits in the form of a cash payment on retirement.

H. L. Fiebig; Inheritance. Wesley Historical Society, New Zealand, 1967.

HERBERT L. FIEBIG

SUPPLY PASTOR. (See MINISTRY, American Methodist.)

SURINAM (Dutch Guiana) is a Dutch territory on the Atlantic coast of northeast South America. Under the Charter of the Kingdom of The Netherlands, promulgated Dec. 29, 1954, Surinam became a partner with The Netherlands rather than a colonial possession. The capital is Paramaribo. The area is 55,198 square miles and the population approximates 265,000, including 100,000 creoles, 125,000 orientals, 35,000 Negroes and aborigines, and 5,000 Europeans.

The British made the first settlement in the early 1630's, a colony being founded in 1651. The Dutch captured it in February 1667, the Treaty of Breda confirming the tenure in exchange for New YORK (U.S.A.) to the British. Alternate control between The Netherlands and Great Britain persisted with several shifts. The Treaty of Paris in 1815 finally confirmed Dutch sovereignty. Under the Charter of 1954, Surinam is an autonomous and integral element within the Kingdom of The Netherlands.

Methodism is represented in Surinam by the small mission of the A.M.E. Church. The work is administratively connected with the larger field in adjacent British Guiana. The membership is quite small.

World Methodist Council, Handbook of Information, 1966-71.

ARTHUR BRUCE MOSS

SUSQUEHANNA CONFERENCE (EUB) traced its beginnings back to the mother conferences of both the CHURCH OF THE UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST and of the EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION.

Conference meetings of OTTERBEIN and his associates were held as early as 1774. It was from the 1789 conference, however, that Pennsylvania Conference of the United Brethren in Christ dated its history. This conference was held in the parsonage of Philip William Otterbein in BALTIMORE. On Sept. 25, 1800, in Kemp's farm house just a few miles west of Frederick, Md., the conference was formally organized: a name for the new church was chosen (United Brethren in Christ) and two bishops were elected—Philip William Otterbein and MARTIN BOEHM.

The work spread westward across the mountains into western PENNSYLVANIA and MARYLAND and into VIRGINIA and OHIO. The GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1830 divided this original conference into the Hagerstown Conference (later known as the Pennsylvania Conference).

Again in 1846, Pennsylvania Conference was divided. All territory east of the Susquehanna River became the East Pennsylvania Conference while the remainder was known as the West Pennsylvania Conference. (In time the "West" was dropped and only "Pennsylvania" was used.)

The Maryland Conference was formed in 1887 with the withdrawal of nineteen ministers and twelve charges from the Virginia Conference.

In 1901, the Maryland Conference merged with the Pennsylvania Conference. From that time until 1964, the boundary of Pennsylvania Conference extended from the mouth of the Susquehanna River northward to the mouth of the Juniata River, from this point westward along the Juniata to the Tuscarora Mountain, thence southward along the summit of the mountain to the Potomac River, thence southeastward along the Potomac to the District of Columbia and northeastward to the mouth of the Susquehanna River including the cities of Washington and Baltimore.

The first annual conference of the Evangelical Association was held Nov. 15, 1807 in the home of Samuel Becker near Kleinfeltersville, Pennsylvania. This conference chose "The Newly Formed Methodist Conference" as the name of the new church and elected JACOB ALBRIGHT bishop and GEORGE MILLER elder.

At the General Conference held in New Berlin, Pa., in 1826, the church was divided into two conferences. The territory in Ohio and the west formed the Western Conference, while the churches of Pennsylvania, NEW YORK, Maryland, and Virginia formed the Eastern Conference.

The Eastern Conference was again divided in 1839, when "the territory west of the Susquehanna (and the north branch of the same), Carroll County, Maryland, and Washington County in the western part of the State, the Shenandoah Valley in Virginia, as far south as Woodstock, and several of the counties in (now) West Virginia, along the Potomac River" formed the West Pennsylvania Conference. The Western Conference was re-named Ohio Conference.

A further division was made in 1851 when the western districts of West Pennsylvania Conference were transferred to the newly formed Pittsburg Conference. The name of West Pennsylvania Conference was changed to Central Pennsylvania Conference in 1859.

A minor change in boundary occurred in 1950 when the Western Pennsylvania Conference of The Evangelical United Brethren Church was formed. Churches of the former Allegheny Conference (UB) within the territory of the Central Pennsylvania Conference were exchanged for churches in Altoona. This had the effect of excluding Blair County from the Central Pennsylvania Conference territory.

On Jan. 1, 1965, the Pennsylvania and the Central Pennsylvania Conferences merged to form the Susquehanna Conference. The boundary of Susquehanna Conference was as follows: the territory west of the Susquehanna River from its mouth in Maryland up along the north branch of the same to the Wyoming County line in the northern part of Pennsylvania, thence westward to the juncture of the Tioga, Lycoming, and Potter County lines, thence southward to the juncture of the Centre, Blair and Mifflin County lines, thence eastward to the Juniata River at Lewistown, eastward to the Tuscarora Mountain, thence southward along the Tuscarora summit to the Potomac River, thence eastward along the Potomac to the District of Columbia, thence northeastward to the mouth of the Susquehanna River, including the cities of Washington and Baltimore. In 1967, there were 380 ministers in all classes with a total of 95,179 church members. In 1969, approximately sixty churches entered union with the BALTIMORE CONFERENCE while the remaining congregations joined with the CENTRAL PENNSYLVANIA CONFERENCE of the former Methodist Church and a number of congregations from the Eastern and Western Pennsylvania Conferences of the former E.U.B. Church to compose the present Central Pennsylvania Conference.

A. W. Drury, History of the U.B. 1924.

P. E. Holdcraft, Pennsylvania Conference. 1938.

A. Stapleton, Evangelical Association. 1900.

CHARLES R. MILLER

SUTCLIFFE, JOSEPH (1762-1856), British Methodist, was born at Baildon, Yorkshire. He is named fifth in the list of preachers at the BRISTOL Conference of 1790. In 1786 he was appointed by JOHN WESLEY to Redruth Circuit. A man of scholarly attainments, he published the following works: An Introduction to Christianity; A Grammar of the English Language; a Commentary on the Holy Scripture; a volume of sermons on regeneration; together with many pamphlets. He was also the author of a "History of Methodism to the Death of Dr. Coke," in four volumes, the manuscript of which has never been published and is in the Methodist Archives at City Road, LONDON. He composed "Lines on the Erection of a Statue to the Memory of John Wesley in the Wesleyan College, Richmond, June 14, 1849." He died in 1856 at the advanced age of ninety-four.

J. T. WILKINSON

SUTHERLAND, ALEXANDER (1833-1910), Canadian minister and historian, was born in Guelph Township, Upper Canada, Sept. 13, 1833. Educated at Victoria College, he was taken on trial in 1856 and ordained in 1859.

A man of great scholarly and intellectual ability, Sutherland soon became an outstanding preacher. He held a number of important charges, including St. James Methodist Church in Montreal, prior to his appointment in 1874 as Missionary Secretary of the Methodist Church, a post which he held until his death.

As Missionary Secretary, Sutherland presided over one of the most fruitful periods in the development of Canadian Methodist missions. During his years in office, the Northwest was opened effectively to the church, and missions were established in Japan and China. His vision, foresight, and tireless advocacy contributed much to this process of expansion and consolidation.

ALEXANDER SUTHERLAND

Alexander Sutherland was one of the first to realize that the Methodist Churches and, especially his own branch, would be unable to meet singly the missionary challenge of an expanding and changing Canada. Within the Methodist Church of Canada he fought vigorously and skillfully for acceptance of the general superintendency, which in turn opened the way for union with the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Despite his heavy burdens as preacher and administrator, he contributed to the volume entitled Centennial of Canadian Methodism (1891); he also wrote Methodism in Canada: Its Work and Its Story (1903) and The Methodist Church and Missions in Canada and Newfoundland (1906). These works present important aspects of Canadian Methodist history in a thoughtful and intelligible form.

Sutherland was a member of all general conferences from 1874 to 1906, fraternal delegate to the British Conference in 1903, and president of Toronto Conference in 1882 and 1884. He was given a D.D. by Victoria University in 1879, and in 1891 he was offered the principalship of MOUNT ALLISON UNIVERSITY. His greatest reward was the knowledge of the growth of Methodist missions under his responsibility.

He died in Toronto, June 30, 1910.

G. H. Cornish, Cyclopaedia of Methodism in Canada. 1881. Minutes of the Toronto Methodist Conference, 1911.

G. S. FRENCH

SWAIN, CLARA (1834-1910), was the first qualified woman medical practitioner in INDIA and established the first modern hospital for women and children in Asia. She was born in Elmira, N. Y., on July 18, 1834. A graduate of a woman's medical college in PHILADELPHIA, Pa., she left for India as a missionary of the WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY in November 1869.

Miss Swain taught school in western NEW YORK near her birthplace and childhood home. When a woman physician became very ill and wrote of the need for women doctors, Clara Swain considered this matter and prayed about it. She soon decided that God called her to qualify for and practice medicine. While studying in Philadelphia, she began to think of missionary service to India. She was informed that the Woman's Union Missionary Society was planning to send a woman doctor to India. Just then Miss Swain learned of the organization in BOSTON of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the M.E. Church, and on inquiry, she found that the society wanted to send her to India.

She and ISABELLA THOBURN were the first missionaries of the society, and they traveled to India together, arriving in BAREILLY, Jan. 20, 1870, during the session of the India Mission Conference.

While Dr. Swain was the first woman doctor in India and represented the newly established Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, the way had been prepared for her by the missionary men and women of the Board of Missions. In 1864 the board had reluctantly appropriated $100 for medicines to be used by Dr. J. S. Johnson, but in doing so explained that they did not intend to encourage the practice of medicine and declared that "the preaching of the Gospel to the heathen is the primary work of the mission."

Another ordained missionary, DR. JAMES L. HUMPHREY, had studied medicine while on furlough, and on his return had organized classes of Indian women to be trained as medical assistants. The first trainees were recruited from the girls' orphanage in Bareilly.

In her book, A Glimpse of India, Dr. Swain wrote, "My medical work began the day of my arrival. As I had no medicines with me, I procured a few simple remedies from Mrs. Thomas who had been obliged to care for the sick in the mission compounds."

Her boxes containing books, medicines, charts, and skeleton came to Bareilly one month after her arrival, and ten days later she began a medical class with fourteen girls from the orphanage and three married women. So extraordinary did this seem that within a few weeks the lieutenant-governor of the provinces, Sir William Muir, and Lady Muir came to see what was being done and how the people were taking it. Soon Rajahs, nawabs, and leaders in many walks of life were excited about this new thing, a foreign woman possessing knowledge of medicine and eager to help sick women and the children, and to train Indian women. In her first year she treated over 1,300 patients.

In six years after Dr. Swain's arrival in India, three more Methodist women missionary doctors arrived in India. All three married Methodist missionaries. Miss N. Monelle became Mrs. HENRY MANSELL, Julia Lore became Mrs. George Harrison McGrew, and Lucille H. Green became Mrs. Nathan G. Cheney. Except during a health furlough from 1876 to 1880, Dr. Swain continued her work in Bareilly until 1884, when she went to Khatri State in Rajputana to treat the Rani Saheba. Her treatment was so successful that she was asked to become physician to the Rani and the women of the court. She was given permission to open a clinic for women and a girls' school. She decided that this was a God-given opportunity to develop, without expense to the mission, a new center for Christian witness. She was appointed to Khatri and continued her Christian service from that vantage point until March 1896, when poor health dictated that she should give way to some younger and stronger woman, and she returned to America. The Rani and the entire court pled with her to remain and assured her that she and her Lord would be loved and honored by them all to the end of their lives.

Late in 1906, she returned to India for the celebration of the Jubilee (the fiftieth anniversary) of the beginning of the M.E. missions in India. She was received with acclaim and affection everywhere she went, and especially in Bareilly and Khetri. She remained in India until the second week of January 1908. She died in Castile, N. Y., on Christmas morning in 1910, and is buried in a cemetery near her childhood home in Canandaigua, N. Y.

In the ninety-six years since she began her work for India's women, hundreds of dedicated Christian women from India and other countries have followed her example, and two great Christian medical colleges are now training hundreds of both men and women to heal millions without discrimination on account of creed, caste, or sex.

J. N. Hollister, Southern Asia, 1956.

J. E. Scott, Southern Asia, 1906.

C. A. Swain, India, 1909.

J. WASKOM PICKETT

SWALLOW, SILAS COMFORT (1839-1930), American preacher, editor and reformer, was born March 9, 1839 near Wilkes Barre, Pa., educated in the public schools, WYOMING SEMINARY (of which his father was a trustee), and in Susquehanna Seminary, Binghamton, N. Y. Before entering the ministry he taught school, studied law and served as a Lieutenant in the Civil War.

He entered the BALTIMORE CONFERENCE of the M.E. Church in 1863, transferring to the CENTRAL PENNSYLVANIA CONFERENCE upon its organization in 1869, and in that conference served as pastor in a number of charges. He was eminently successful as a church builder, presiding elder and church financier. He was an eloquent and forceful preacher and revivalist, but also a vigorous and unrelenting foe of all types of evil. He opposed keeping open camp meetings on the Lord's Day because this required transportation facilities, and the selling of food on the grounds. To him the "arch enemy" was the traffic in spirituous liquors, and he fought this with every weapon he knew, sparing no one who supported the evil, or refused to join the Prohibition movement.

In 1892 he became Superintendent of the Methodist Book Room in Harrisburg and Editor of The Central Pennsylvania Methodist. Through this medium he supported the connexional interests of Methodism, but likewise wielded a cutting blade against all unrighteousness, as he saw it. He published an unrestrained exposé of graft on the part of Pennsylvania politicians in the state government and for this he was prosecuted and convicted, but later acquitted when the State Superior Court reversed the verdict. He was the Prohibition Party's candidate for mayor of Harrisburg, for the state legislature, for State Treasurer, for Governor and, in 1904, for President of the United States.

While he had no equal as a controversial figure in the Central Pennsylvania Conference, most of its members found him to be friendly and brotherly to them. He and his wife were very generous to the church, leaving to the Conference a home for retired ministers and other bequests.

Taylor University granted him the D.D. degree.

He represented his conference in the GENERAL CONFERENCES of 1880 and 1896.

Christian Advocate (New York), Nov. 3, 1904; Aug. 28, 1930. Journal of the Central Pennsylvania Conference, 1931.

Patriot-News, Harrisburg, Pa., March 7, 1965.

Who's Who in America, 1906, 1912-13.

CHARLES F. BERKHEIMER

SWAN FAMILY, Americans of Swedish origin, made important contributions to the development of Indian Methodism in the State of Bengal.

Hilda Marie (1880-1957) was the first of the family to arrive in INDIA. Her mother's sister, HILDA LARSON, had long been a missionary in the CONGO and in ANGOLA, Africa. Hilda Swan was born in a parsonage near Sutton, Neb., June 23, 1880. She prepared for missionary service at the Chicago Training School and, reaching India in 1904, was appointed to Pakaur. Her appointments were varied and her accomplishments numerous. She died in America, Sept. 30, 1957.

Henry Marcus (1876-1963), four years older than Hilda, followed her to India. He was born in New Sweden, Iowa, March 12, 1876, and was educated at NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY (Ph. B.), GARRETT BIBLICAL INSTITUTE (B.D.), and Chicago University (M.A.). He was highly trained in vocal and instrumental music.

He, too, was first appointed to Pakaur. Later appointments included the superintendency of three districts. He supervised the construction of many church and school buildings. At one time he was simultaneously manager of the Mount Hermon School estate, pastor of the Union Church, Darjeeling, and superintendent of the Pakaur District. He was editor-in-chief of the Bengali Methodist Hymnal. He returned to the United States on furlough in 1937, and because of his wife's ill health was unable to return to India. His wife, the former Edna Pauline Lundeen, was the mother of five sons and two daughters. She died April 4, 1948. He survived until June 3, 1963.

Beulah Marie Blomberg (1898-), a niece of Henry and Hilda, was born in Kansas City, Mo., Nov. 21, 1898. Her father was also a Methodist minister. She was graduated from Northwestern University (B.Sc.), and went to India as a missionary in 1923. Like her uncle and aunt, she began her work at Pakaur. Her appointments included the principalship of the Santali Boarding School, the supervision of buildings for the school, the management of village schools, and a hospital and district evangelism.

Charles Lundeen (1909-) is a son of Edna Lundeen and Henry Swan. He was born in CALCUTTA, India, Aug. 8, 1909, completed high school in India and continued his education in Chicago University (Ph.B.), Garrett Biblical Institute (B.D.), and Northwestern University (Ph.D.). He returned to India as a missionary in 1930 and was admitted to the Bengal Conference in 1932 and ordained there. In 1933 he married Kathleen Doucette, a missionary of the Canadian Baptist Mission in South India. His appointments have included teaching in the Mount Hermon School at Darjeeling in the Bengal Conference, and district superintendent of Sironcha and Hyderabad Districts, both now in the HYDERABAD CONFERENCE. Since 1942 he has been in the United States and is now professor of sociology in ALBION COLLEGE.

J. WASKOM PICKETT

SWANSEA, Wales. Those readers of the Journals who are acquainted with the geography of Swansea will remember the visits paid by John Wesley to "Oxwyrych" and will need no reminder that Methodism in and around Swansea had its birth not in the town itself but on the Gower peninsula. Of Gower, Wesley wrote, "Here all the people talk English and are, in general, the most plain, loving people in Wales." (Journal, vol. 5, p. 90, July 31, 1764.) Of Swansea, however, it is on record that "a man had need to be all fire who comes into these parts, where almost everyone is cold as ice." (Journal, vol. 5, August 27, 1763, p. 28.) As early as 1758 Wesley had touched on the borders of Gower while traveling from West Wales to Cardiff. He remembered the place, and at the Conference of 1760 proposed that the Yorkshireman THOMAS TAYLOR, subsequently president in 1796 and 1809, should explore possibilities of establishing the work in that area. This was done by Taylor in the winter of 1761-62—at his own expense, with no fixed abode and no circuit appointment. The work progressed slowly but surely until, at the Conference of 1795, Swansea appears as the head of a circuit consisting probably of Gower, Swansea, and Neath.

Our forefathers in the first decades of the nineteenth century are not famous for their written records. They were too busy living their Methodism amid the complex social changes of their time—but we have the record in the lives of those who have descended in almost unbroken sequence from the early pioneers. In Gower, for instance, Beynons, Bevans, Tuckers, and Jenkins have maintained a connection with Methodism over seven or more generations. The Wesleyan societies of Gower, having existed for nearly fifty years on cottage meetings, finally began to build their own chapels in the first years of the nineteenth century (Oxwich, 1808; Horton, 1813; and Pitton, 1833), and the first phase of Swansea Methodism was complete.

By this time, however, in Swansea itself, the Industrial Revolution was beginning to make its mark, and large numbers of Devonians and Cornishmen crossed the Bristol channel in search of employment. Soon after their arrival from the West Country the BIBLE CHRISTIANS of their number began to look for ways of practicing their faith in the English language, and in 1844 the mother church, Oxford Street, was built. The Vivian family, whose industrial enterprise begun in 1810 had drawn so many from over the water, began to expand their industry in Landore and Hafod, and from house meetings the Hafod society was born. The Vivians allowed land for the chapel, and Oxford Street gave generous support; and from the stone laying in 1873, the work and witness at Hafod began to consolidate. The Bible Christians' attempt to found a society on the east side of the Tawe in Delhi Street met with little success, and after about forty years it had to close for lack of support.

The earliest years of PRIMITIVE METHODISM in Swansea are not recorded, but it is known that in 1833-34, Henry Higginson, popularly known as "the roving ranter" or "six feet of eccentricity," tramped across from Blaenavon to mission Swansea. Within two months he had founded two societies, one in Swansea, the other at Mumbles. The Swansea society eventually grew into Pell Street, which in turn became the head of the "Prim" Circuit along with the West Country foundations of Pentrepoeth (1859), Plasmarl (1885), and Gorseion (c. 1910). Of the Mumbles society there is no trace, except possibly that the first Methodists in Murton, two miles away, were attached to the Primitive Methodist connection about 1840. The independent spirit of the "Prims" was so marked that even after Methodist Union they maintained their separate existence as the "Pell Street Circuit" until 1951.

The history of the WESLEYAN METHODIST movement in Swansea follows a pattern only slightly different from that of the other Methodist traditions which were almost wholly an "immigrant culture."

It was natural that Wesleyan Methodism should keep a strong hold in Gower, where Wesley himself had appeared—so strong in fact that in 1864 Gower became a separate circuit in the Wesleyan connection.

In the town of Swansea, the West-Country Wesleyans moving in were joined and strengthened by an indigenous Methodism as folk from Gower moved into the town, and they too began to work up their denominational causes. Almost simultaneously in the 1840's a little Wesleyan society at Sketty and Wesley, which became the circuit church, appear—and in Morriston, still the most Welsh area of Swansea, Glantawe Street (1840) had a society which was the center of the English-speaking community. At this time the Anglican Church was Welsh speaking, and a change of denomination meant a complete change of language and community.

As the second half of the nineteenth century began, the smaller Wesleyan societies which had now outgrown their meetings in houses and hired rooms committed themselves to a phase of building, and the older larger societies set their minds to rebuilding. And so there arose Landore (1861), missions at Greenhill and Sandfields, Murton (c. 1870), and Brunswick (1873); Sketty was rebuilt in 1876 and Mumbles, where HUGH PRICE HUGHES was converted, in 1877. At this point a tribute must go to the ministries of the Rawlings father and son, who guided the circuit through this massive expansion program. After this comprehensive plan, the Wesleyans built only three more chapels before METHODIST UNION in 1932, in Clydach, Brynmill, and Brynhyfryd.

At Union, Swansea found itself with two circuits. The Primitive Methodists showed the independence of the Welsh, and though they came into the connection they kept their (Pell Street) circuit. The United Methodists, the Wesleyans of Swansea, and the Wesleyans of Gower joined to form a "Swansea and Gower Circuit." This later arrangement, however, proved unsatisfactory, and in 1940 Gower received Synod's permission to resume the status of a separate circuit with a resident minister.

The Second World War and its aftermath caused some drastic reshaping of the circuits, for enemy action destroyed the Wesley, Pell Street, and Oxford Street chapels. The War Damage Commission made possible the erection of replacement chapels on the Townhill and Penlan Housing Estates, but the destructive effects of the war were deeper than damage to buildings only. The men who left the land in Gower, when they returned, returned neither to the land nor to the Gower chapels, and a considerably weakened Gower Circuit joined the town circuit again in 1962. The former Primitive Methodists, without their circuit church, had meanwhile joined the main Swansea Circuit in 1951.

The reshaping is still taking place. As a result of population shifts, old and proud chapels are becoming redundant. In contrast, on the housing estates the circuit has new buildings and the slow painstaking work of building up societies from the thousands of residents.

The circuit, though only too conscious of its weak points, is now unaware of its strength. Two hundred years of Methodism in continuous work and witness cannot easily be forgotten, and the same spirit of adventure and consecration that saw our fathers over the water and settled in the Land of Promise—the same Spirit guides their children.

PETER JENNINGS

SWARTZ, MORRIS EMORY (1868-1944), named after two bishops, was born in Pine Grove Mills, Pa. on Feb. 7, 1868. He was graduated from DICKINSON COLLEGE and DREW THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY with the A.B. and B.D. degrees respectively. Dickinson College honored him with a D.D. degree in 1910. Swartz served as pastor of a number of outstanding churches in the CENTRAL PENNSYLVANIA CONFERENCE and as Superintendent of the Harrisburg and Sunbury Districts. From 1919 to 1925 he was Secretary of the Washington Area and from 1925 to 1927, Editor of the Washington Christian Advocate. During the Centenary Movement he served as Director of the Speakers Bureau. He was a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1928 and 1932. He was also a member of the UNITING CONFERENCE of 1939 by virtue of his membership on the Commission on Union which drafted the PLAN OF UNION which united the three branches of Methodism.

He died on Easter Sunday, April 9, 1944, in York, Pa.

LESTER A. WELLIVER

SWEDEN. The Kingdom of Sweden comprises the greater part of the Scandinavian Peninsula in Northern Europe and has an area of 449,793 square kilometers, or 173,378 square miles, and a population of 7,978,000 (1969). The Lutheran Church is the state church. Several free churches count together 322,400 members, or 4.5 percent of the population. If they included youth members and Sunday school scholars, it would be 733,796 or 9.1 percent of the population.

JOHN WESLEY early had some positive connections with Sweden. Visitors from Sweden saw him and exchanged letters with him. Carl Magnus Wrangel, who had worked in the Swedish churches in America (1759-68), was returning home when he met John Wesley in LONDON and, inspired by him, organized a society for tracts and religious literature, Pro fide et Christianismo. There were also the learned professor Johan Henrik Lidén of Linköping and others.

In 1804 an English mechanical engineer, Samuel Owen (1774-1854), was invited by Swedish authorities to come to Sweden. He built and organized a workshop and a foundry and became "the father of the Swedish steam-fleet." He was a Methodist, as were several of his workers. For their benefit he asked the Wesleyan Missionary Society in London for a missionary to be sent to STOCKHOLM, and they sent J. R. STEPHENS from 1826-30 and then George Scott. During his time in Stockholm (1830-42) Scott played a most remarkable part in the free-church movement in Sweden. This is fully documented in the academic treatise by Gunnar Westin, a Baptist, who later became professor of church history at the University of Uppsala. Scott learned quite soon to preach in Swedish. His evangelistic fervor and zeal won many people, who gathered around his pulpit. By extensive traveling throughout the whole country Scott came into contact with many people. He made many friends, even among the nobility and the Swedish clergy. He influenced many who became leading men in the Swedish free-church movement: Carl Olof Rosenius (1816-68); F. O. Nilsson and Anders Wiberg, the first Baptist leaders; Carl Tellström, a missionary to the Laplanders and others. Scott was also one of the leading men in organizing a Swedish Tract Society, the Swedish Missionary Society (1835), and the Swedish Temperance Society in 1837.

He built a church in Stockholm, dedicated in 1840, first called the "English Church," later called Bethlehem-skyrkan, the Bethlehem Church. This became the headquarters of Evangeliska Fosterlands Stiftelsen (the "evangelical National Society for Home and Foreign Missions"), a historic religious shrine in Stockholm, unfortunately pulled down in 1953 to give room for modern skyscrapers. Traveling in England and America in order to collect money for this church and other evangelical enterprises, Scott painted a somewhat dark picture of the religious situation in Sweden, and this irritated the Swedes. The liberal press and some of the Lutheran clergy cooperated in making him and his work suspect and raised an outcry against him. A mob assaulted his church during a service on Palm Sunday in 1842. Scott himself escaped, but was compelled to leave Stockholm and his promising work. He died in Glasgow in 1874.

For the Methodist Church in Sweden, the work of George Scott became only an episode. The next visitation of Methodism to Sweden was through seamen and immigrants who were converted on the BETHEL SHIP, "John Wesley," in New York harbor. The leader of this important mission (1845-75) was a Swede, OLOF GUSTAF HEDSTRÖM (1803-77) from Småland. (See BETHEL SHIP.) During his leadership many Scandinavians were converted. Returning home to DENMARK, NORWAY, FINLAND, and Sweden, these began to witness about their personal experience of salvation in Jesus Christ, and gathered around them some groups of people. They used an American-Swedish Methodist hymnal edited in Chicago in 1862 by Jacob Bredberg, and in time asked for help from the Methodist Episcopal Church in America for the work thus begun in their homeland.

Johan Peter Larsson (1825-1915) was among the first Methodists to come in. Already in 1852-54 he had worked in Kalmar and other places on the east coast of Sweden. But he was sent to Norway and Denmark as one of the Methodist pioneers. He returned in 1866 and began work in GÖTHENBURG. C. Levander and John Lindquist worked in Gotland, in the Baltic Sea, and after many endeavors they persuaded the Methodist superintendent, CHRISTIAN VILLERUP, in COPENHAGEN to send them a helper in Adolf Cederholm. He, however, died early, only forty-five years of age, in 1867. At the same time Albert Ericson studied in Stockholm, preparing himself for a position as teacher and master of a Scandinavian educational institution in CHICAGO. He began to preach in a small hall in Benikebrinken, in Stockholm. Great crowds assembled to hear him, but he had to return to America.

On the very day when the friends in Stockholm "with weeping tears" bade Ericson farewell, a pastor in Chicago, and a leading man in the Swedish-American Methodist work and editor of its organ, Sändebudet ("Ambassador"), was invited to make a trip to his homeland. Victor Witting (1825-1906) came, preached to great crowds, saw the situation and the opportunity, and consented to stay. He returned to America to get his family and bring them with him to Stockholm. The Wittings arrived in November, 1867. In April, 1868, Victor Witting was appointed superintendent for the Methodist work in Sweden, which had before been under the superintendency of Christian Willerup in Copenhagen.

Born in Malmö in 1825, Witting became the organizer and founder of the Methodist Church in Sweden until it became an organized Annual Conference in 1876. Witting then returned to America, working there as one of the leaders of the Swedish-American Methodist work until his death in 1906.

New Year's Eve, 1867, the first Methodist WATCH-NIGHT service was held in Stockholm; and on Jan. 8, 1868, the first Methodist congregation was organized. This was St. Paul's, with fifty-seven members. A week later came the Emanuel Methodist Episcopal Church in Gothenburg with thirty-five members.

At a meeting in Stockholm, Sept. 17-24, 1868, seven men organized themselves and the Methodist work as Svenska Metodistmissionärsföreningen, the Swedish Methodist Missionary Society. Five places were mentioned in the proceedings: Stockholm, Gothenburg, Wallda, Wisby, and Kalmar. In Kalmar an old preaching house was bought in 1868. In Karlskrona the first Methodist chapel was built in 1869-70 and dedicated on Feb. 27, 1870. The word "missionary" was fortunately dropped. The first printed Minutes of the Annual Meeting reported about the Swedish preachers of the Methodist Episcopal Church (1874). That year there were already seventy-five places on the appointment list, divided among three districts.

Methodism spread like wildfire. It prompted, however, unrest and persecution. A preacher was sent to prison for some days. Another Methodist was killed. Numerous were the attempts by the Lutheran parish boards to hinder the Methodists and other free-church workers by forbidding them to preach and hold meetings. All kinds of conventicles (assemblies) were prohibited by the Edict against Conventicles (Konventikelplakatet) of 1726, and this edict was not cancelled until 1858 and 1860. It ordered even prison and expatriation for violators. In 1873 a new law about "confessors of foreign doctrines" was enacted, whereby dissenters were allowed to leave the state church, if they entered another Christian church. Only the Methodists, the Roman Catholics, and a few Baptist groups used this opportunity. There is a vivid description of an audience with the king by seventy-five Methodists from all over Sweden in February, 1875, when they presented a petition asking for the Methodists the right to be allowed to establish an independent denomination. The king was very gracious, but the permission was not given until March, 1876.

That same year, in August, 1876, in St. John's Church in UPPSALA, the Sweden Annual Conference was constituted, Bishop EDWARD C. ANDREWS presiding. Eight ELDERS, eighteen DEACONS, and twenty-three probationers were listed as charter members. Nine preachers were admitted on trial. Victor Witting returned to America. His task as superintendent was completed. He himself sums up later the results of the work during this period thus:

Less than nine years ago there had not been even one Class or Chapel, nor one congregation or Sunday School. Now there were fifty-five traveling preachers, of whom twenty-six were ordained. There were fifty-nine local preachers, who labour without salary or compensation. Out of their combined efforts during this brief period had come a membership of 5,563 persons and 4,931 children in 125 Sunday Schools. There were thirty-one churches and chapels. (Victor Witting, Memoirs from My Life.)

He also started in 1869 a church magazine, Lilla Sändebudet, a monthly which in 1882 was enlarged to a weekly periodical, Svenska Sändebudet, and, from 1873, Söndagsskolklockan for the SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

In 1873 a theological school was started in Örebro. It was moved to Stockholm in 1876 and to Uppsala in 1883, where it stayed until January, 1924, when the Union Scandinavian Theological School, Överås, in Gothenburg began its work.

The latter half of the nineteenth century was marked by great revivals throughout Sweden. Some of those reclaimed by these revivals stayed within the state church; others went into separate organizations. In 1848 the first Baptist congregation was organized; in 1856 came Evangeliska Fosterlandsstiftelsen, which, within the boundaries of the state church, desired to work for home missions and foreign missions; and then in 1878 came Svenska Missionsförbundet (the Swedish Covenant Church, Congregationalist).

But these decades were also years of unrest and dispute, and brothers in Christ exchanged not-too-kind pamphlets about dissenting doctrines and church orders. In 1905 the revival in WALES was felt as a wave of blessing and a new life all over the Scandinavian countries. Some years later the Pentecostal movement, in Scandinavia, introduced and prompted by a Norwegian Methodist minister, T. B. Barratt (1862-1940), awakened interest and hopes, but also caused serious divisions, especially among the Baptist groups. Under the strong leadership of Lewi Pethrus (1884-), however, it has grown to be the second in size among the Swedish free churches.

Through the decision in 1876 Sweden was incorporated as a full member in the world-wide Methodist Episcopal Church. American bishops presided at the annual conferences. Sweden was represented by delegates at succeeding GENERAL CONFERENCES. In Sweden as in all other lands it was always recognized as a great honor to be elected a delegate. A few were elected several times. THEODOR ARVIDSON, for instance, was six times a delegate, until he himself became a bishop in 1946. One of the lay delegates, Harold Lindström, has become widely known through his work, Wesley and Sanctification (London: Epworth Press, 1946). Representing only a small minority, the Swedish delegation could scarcely expect to exert too important an influence—except perhaps in one point: the influence and status of the laymen in the annual conferences, to which they were thoroughly committed.

More than thirty American bishops have visited Sweden in presiding at the annual conferences, most of them coming only once. The conference always found it interesting and inspiring to meet all these different and revered personalities.

In 1904 Europe got its first resident bishop in WILLIAM BURT, who lived in ZÜRICH; followed by the learned and greatly respected Bishop JOHN L. NUELSEN. In 1920 the first Scandinavian was elected bishop by the General Conference of that year—ANTON BAST from Copenhagen —whose evangelistic fervor and extensive social work inspired many. He had to withdraw some years later after a legal judgment, which by many is still looked upon as a great mistake. Bishop RAYMOND J. WADE then took over episcopal responsibility in 1928 and made Stockholm his residence. The Second World War prevented the bishop's visit to Scandinavia; and during the war years in 1942 Theodor Arvidson by a formal decision of the COUNCIL OF BISHOPS of The Methodist Church was entrusted with the right to represent the resident bishop, and even to ordain. In consequence of his superintendency, after the war was over he was elected bishop at the CENTRAL CONFERENCE held in Gothenburg in April, 1946.

Ninety-nine years after the first annual conference there are, as these lines are written, 188 churches (144 charges); 90 active ministers, 36 retired, 142 local preachers. Members including probationers are 9,977. There are 156 Sunday schools with 4,712 children. During the period from 1899 until 1920 the total membership reached a high point in 1920 of 17,000 or more. Sunday schools reached their highest point in 1918 with 22,485 scholars.

The last decade has been a decline period for all Sunday schools. Most of the free churches have experienced a more or less continuing decrease. The state church recognizes all people born within the boundaries of Sweden as its adherents, if they have not formally and explicitly withdrawn from the church. Even free-church members have to pay sixty percent of the church taxes to the state church under the pretext that their pastors are keeping the register for all citizens. There is a growing opinion calling for a more complete religious freedom. The status of the free church is now regulated by the Law of Religious Freedom passed in 1951.

There has also been a remarkable renewal within the Lutheran State Church from about 1910. There has come about a new activity, inspired by the watchword: the Church of our Fathers. There is also a strong High-Church movement. But on the other side, Sweden is seeing a strong trend toward a blatant atheism; there are endeavors from a political standpoint which would exert an undue influence on the Church; and all this may lead to a separation between Church and state. On the other hand these trends are working in favor of the ecumenical movement, and deepening the feeling among the several churches that all must stay together. Methodism has always been open to and for such discussions.

In 1905 the first free-church meeting was held, with the intention that it should be repeated every fifth year. In 1918 Baptists, Methodists, and Congregationalists (Svenska Missionsförbundet) organized a Free Church Cooperation Committee. Some years later this was enlarged to embrace eight of eleven Swedish free churches, as a Free Church Council. A suggestion that this council should form a free-church confederation has so far not won approbation.

Social work has played an important part in Swedish Methodism. The Bethany DEACONESS Institution has attracted the most public attention and acknowledgment. It dates back to 1900, when a society of eighty-five persons was formed in Gothenburg. They appointed Anna Kaijser as their first deaconess. By an agreement with the Methodist Hospitals and Deaconess Institutions in Hamburg and Frankfurt am Main in GERMANY, Swedish girls were trained as nurses there until 1920, when a new law for health service in Sweden came into force. In cooperation with state institutions, the Methodist deaconesses now prepare for an examination approved by the state. Since 1946 young women from all the evangelical churches of Sweden have been received for a three-year course of study. The School of Nurses has about one hundred students; 340 registered nurses are now working within the foundation in many parts of Sweden, as well as in the mission field. For nearly fifty years Louise Erikson, a daughter of the manse, was the inspiring leader of the whole institution. A hospital in Stockholm is the center of the work.

Göte Bergsten (1896-1954) inspired the organization of a special work, where surgeons and pastors cooperate in helping people. The "Society of Saint Luke" works on an ecumenical basis, also training pastors in this special type of soul curing.

For the work among destitute children, an organization, F.V.B.U. (the Society for Care and Training of Children and Youth) was started in 1903. The first children's home was opened in 1905. Five homes and two day nurseries are now administered by the institution. State and community now pay a great part of the expenses.

So-called "Central Missions" worked in Stockholm, Gothenburg, and Malmö for several years, but the greater social responsibility now devolving on the state and communities has made such missions more or less unnecessary. In Stockholm the Central Mission is still at work.

Homes for aged people are provided by several churches and meet a real need in the present situation.

During the World Wars and afterward, a very extensive relief work was done, especially among children, in AUSTRIA and Germany as well as in Sweden's neighbor countries—Norway and Finland. Thousands of children and other refugees were taken care of, and the Methodists took their part. Gideon Henriksson and Theodor Arvidson were the leaders of that work.

Both evangelistic and social has been the work by the missionaries in foreign fields. The Conference in Norrköping in 1907 was an important starting point. Bishop J. C. HARTZELL, who had just returned from Africa, awakened a great enthusiasm. Two young men volunteered to go to Africa. One died after only two years' work, but the other, JOSEF A. PERSSON (1888-1964), gave over fifty years of his life to a very important and greatly blessed work in Mozambique and South Africa. Other Swedish men and women have worked as pastors and nurses in different parts of the world under the auspices of the Board of Missions in New York. In North Africa, LIBERIA, CONGO, ANGOLA, ZAMBIA, RHODESIA, MOZAMBIQUE, and the Union of SOUTH AFRICA, in INDIA, MALAYSIA, and SUMATRA, Swedish men and women have given their lives in a useful and meaningful service. Egon Aström (1903-45) became a martyr in Sumatra in 1945. His companion, Ragnar Alm, has now returned home after more than thirty years in the same field. The last years he has been acting as professor at the ecumenical Nommensen University.

Swedish Methodism has always felt a special obligation to help the Swedish-speaking Methodists in Finland in their shortage of ministers. More than seventy-five members of the Sweden Annual Conference have worked in Finland for several years, for two to twenty, or even thirty. Some have stayed there for the rest of their lives.

A Home Mission Society was started in 1896. It has been a very important organization, helping financially small congregations throughout the land. At Borås in the west and several places in the far north are churches which have been under the special care of the Home Mission. Karl Karlsson (1887-1962) was called the "Evangelist of Norrland," and one of his sons is the present leader of this important financial agency.

Recent years have been noteworthy for the erection of many church buildings. Towns and cities are growing rapidly. New housing areas need strategy even in directing the work of the churches. In the last quadrennium five new churches have been dedicated: in Sandviken, Filipstad, Östersund, Eskilstuna, Gävle. In Gothenburg four congregations are united in the Trinity Church, and a great church edifice is to be built. In Stockholm also some reorganization has been made necessary. In one of the suburbs, Bollmora, Methodists are taking the responsibility for a congregation on an ecumenical basis. Associate Membership is practiced in several places in a progressive degree.

Negotiations have recently been made with the Svenska Frälsningsarmen (Swedish SALVATION ARMY), a national branch or outgrowth, dating from 1905, from the International Salvation Army, about a closer practical cooperation between them and the Methodists. It is a comparatively small group of fifteen hundred members (soldiers) with thirty-five officers and twenty-two halls.

Youth work has been well organized ever since 1892. For many years it operated in Sweden as in America under the name of the EPWORTH LEAGUE. Methodists have been pioneers in Sweden for a special work among the teenagers, "Juniors." Two laymen, Ernst Börjesson, a manager, and Paul Rosell, a teacher, have been the great and suggestive leaders in that work.

Swedish Methodism has fostered a great many personalities not mentioned above, leaders as K. A. Jansson (1854-1933), K. E. Norström (1859-1918), Axel Engström (1863-1944), Aug. V. Norman (1866-1952), J. M. Erikson (1848-1915), Gustaf Wagnsson (1857-1929), C. A. Gustafson (1865-1922), August Strömstedt (1880-1944), Simon Lindberg (1899-), Henry Atterling (1901-); great preachers as Gustaf Lindström (1850-1931), MAGNUS FREDRIK ÅHGREN (1851-1937), Eric Schutz (1852-1915), Herbert Lihndaker (1885-1955), David Sandberg (1895-), and Costa Rosenqvist (1908-), and many others. The work of Methodism in Sweden proceeds.

J. M. Erikson, Metodismen i Sverige. 1895.

Odd Hagen, Methodism in Northern Europe. 1961.

J. Julen, Metodistkyrkan i Sverige. 1923.

Minutes of the Annual Meetings of Swedish Preachers of the Methodist Episcopal Church, 1868-75. Ms.

Kyrkor och samfund i Sverige, omfattning och verksamhet (Official Statement about Churches and Religious Societies in Sweden), Stockholm, 1963.

Minutes of Sweden Conference, 1874-1965.

Svenska Folkrelöser, ii, Stockholm, 1937.

Gunnar Westin, Den kristna friförsamlingen i Norden. Stockholm, 1956.

_____, George Scott. 1928, 1929.

Victor Witting, Minnen från mitt lifå (Memoirs from My Life).

MANSFIELD HURTIG

SWEDESBORO, NEW JERSEY, U.S.A. Old Stone Church is one of the oldest Methodist preaching places in NEW JERSEY. It is located at the crossing of Bridgeport and Hendrickson Mill Roads near Swedesboro. The section was known in the eighteenth century as the Adams Neighborhood, or Oak Grove. Methodist preaching began in Oak Grove through the work of visiting local preachers, and by 1793 it had become one of the first regularly established preaching places in New Jersey. In that year "Old Stone, Oak Grove" was built. The ground was donated by the Adams Family who resided in the vicinity. The indenture reads: "John Adams of the Township of Woolwich, county of Gloucester, State of New Jersey and Francis Asbury and Thomas Coke, Superintendents of the Methodist Episcopal Church in America . . . under articles in or of Doctrine, contained in or of discipline, revised and approved of by the General Conference held at Baltimore in November Anno Dom. one thousand seven hundred ninety three." It was signed before Joseph Blackwood, "one of the Judges of the Inferior Court of Common Please for Gloucester County." It was recorded in the Clerk's office of the above named county.

As time went on changes came to the community and, for many years, the church was not used except by the members of one of Old Stone's children, Bethesda Church, Swedesboro, who held a yearly anniversary service in the stone structure. Still more recently the SOUTHERN NEW JERSEY CONFERENCE of The United Methodist Church purchased some land adjacent to the church in anticipation of a building development. "Old Stone" at "Oak Grove" which has stood for so long a time as a memorial to early Methodism in New Jersey may soon again become an active church witnessing for Christ.

FREDERICK E. MASER

SWEDISH METHODISM IN AMERICA. Methodist work among Swedish sailors and immigrants began aboard the "BETHESHIP John Wesley" in NEW YORK harbor with the first sermon May 25, 1845 by OLOF C. HEDSTROM. He came from SWEDEN in 1825, married, was converted, and joined the Methodist ministry, 1835, NEW YORK CONFERENCE. His assignment to "Betheship" was made because of an appeal to Methodists by Peter Bergner, converted sailor, for aid in his work among his countrymen. Hedstrom's work expanded, and soon (July 7, 1845) led to organization of Immanuel Church, Brooklyn, the first Swedish M.E. Church in the world.

Hedstrom's younger brother, Jonas, coming from Sweden in 1833, was also converted in New York. In 1838 he was a blacksmith in Victoria, Ill. Swedish immigrants were sent there by brother Olof, and Jonas was called upon to preach to them. This led to organization of Victoria Church, Dec. 15, 1846, and later other churches including Chicago, 1852.

Churches were founded in other midwestern states, in New England, along the Pacific coast, and in TEXAS. Greatest immigration from Sweden was in the 1880s. Census figures of 1920 showed Minnesota with over 112,000 foreign-born Swedes, Illinois over 105,000, New York over 53,000. Methodist work among them increased rapidly, especially in Chicago area. Churches were grouped as "Swede" districts in English-speaking conferences. A convention at Chicago, 1866, proposed Swedish conferences, and a theological seminary. The Northwest Swedish Conference was organized, 1877, for the north-central states. Rapid growth caused division in 1893 into the Central, Northern, and Western conferences.

EASTERN SWEDISH CONFERENCE, organized 1901, continued until merger 1941 with contiguous conferences. Pacific Coast Mission Conference organized 1908, merged 1928. Southern Mission Conference (Texas) existed from 1912 to 1926, and continued as a Swedish district several years, as did Pacific, before final absorption.

Peak of interest and action in the work and churches was reached about 1913-18. Statistics (1924) showed 208 churches in 179 charges, 20,622 members, 177 active pastors and 105 local preachers. Decreased immigration, disuse of Swedish language, and long distances in conferences were factors in the final dissolution of churches and conferences. Amalgamation into English-speaking conferences was facilitated by the 1924 General Conference Foreign-language Report, a result of anti-German feeling generated by World War I.

The Central, Northern, and Western conferences reunited in 1928 to strengthen their position. But their 1942 session, Chicago, was the final one, after 97 years as a language church. Theirs had been a vital mission among an immigrant people and their children. The parent church, which had mothered them, received them again. They had also been instrumental in founding Methodism in their native Sweden, also in supplying men and women for the ministry, and mission fields, especially INDIA and KOREA. An aggressive Woman's Foreign Missionary Society furnished funds and workers.

Education and benevolences were not forgotten. The Swedish Theological Seminary began in Galesburg (Illinois), 1870, moved to Galva 1872, Evanston 1875. First building was on NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY campus (1883), the second on Orrington Avenue, 1907. Seminary graduates numbered 366 by 1934, when the academy and theological programs ceased, and the resources were combined with those of the Norwegian-Danish Seminary, also in Evanston, to found a two-year Liberal Arts college. The new institution, Evanston Collegiate Institute, became KENDALL COLLEGE in 1950, which by 1967 had over 700 enrollment with quadrupled facilities. At Austin, Texas, Texas Wesleyan College functioned from 1912 to 1931, with High School and Junior College status.

Bethany Home and Hospital, CHICAGO, and Bethany Terrace, in nearby Morton Grove, continue the work begun in EVANSTON, 1890, relocated in Chicago, 1892. First building erected 1893, added to in 1920, with hospital addition, 1927. Two large apartment buildings for the aged were also erected, and Bethany Terrace in 1965. Susanna Home for Young Women ministered from 1907 until merged with Bethany in 1929. Emmanuel Home, Clay Center, Kansas, organized 1900, merged in 1929. Total Bethany facilities are: 850 beds and rooms, staff of 615, assets $13,000,000, budget $3,500,000. The Home, and Kendall College, are affiliated with Rock River Conference. In New York State, Bethel Home, begun in Brooklyn in 1911, moved to Ossining 1920, cared for 40 aged in 1941.

City Mission work among immigrants was conducted in Chicago 1904-23. Scandinavian Seamen's Missions at New York City and Galveston, Texas, continue the work of Hedstrom's Bethelship. An insurance society, with peak membership of 5,400, served its members from 1878 to 1928. Camp meetings and revivals were the meat and drink of Swedish Methodists. Their Book Concern published a Christmas annual, Vinter-Rosor, and other journals and literature, including a weekly, Sändebudet (The Messenger), founded 1862, now published monthly. Central Northwest Fellowship meets annually in Chicago, the center of activities over the years.

It would be difficult to list outstanding leaders, but these should be mentioned: Olof and Jonas Hedstrom, Victor Witting, N. O. Westergreen, Albert Ericson, C. G. Nelson, William Henschen, James T. Wigren, D. S. Sorlin, Alfred Anderson, Carl G. Wallenius, Leonard Stromberg, Winnie M. Gabrielson, O. E. Olander.

HENRY C. NYLIN

SWEET, EVANDER McIVER, SR. (1837-1932), American minister, educator and writer, was born in Quincy, Fla., Oct. 27, 1837. On June 9, 1862, Evander McIver Sweet married Cornelia Anna Brown, musician and artist, daughter of Col. James E. Brown, State Senator, and granddaughter of Rev. John Brown, second president of Franklin College (University of Georgia). Though an invalid twenty years, she organized thirty-eight WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETIES and related groups.

On May 28, 1873, Sweet, a school-teacher of eight years in Hemphill, TEXAS, was licensed to preach in Sabine County. Also the Beaumont District Conference elected him president of their school in Jasper County. This was the only church school in East Texas, founded eight years after the Civil War ended, when all schools had been disbanded.

In 1880-81, Sweet was president of Jefferson District Conference School at Daingerfield. Among his pupils were Senator Morris Shepherd, Governor O. B. Colquitt, and W. D. Bradford.

Sweet was transferred, in 1885, to CENTRAL TEXAS CONFERENCE, serving as pastor at Waxahachie, Arlington Circuit, and Manfield Circuit. Appointed president of Granbury College (Weatherford College) 1890-92, he also edited the Granbury Collegian. Church publications printed both his prose and poetry. He was superannuated in 1895. He died at the age of ninety-four, and is buried in Oakwood Cemetery, Forth Worth, Texas.

Granbury Collegian, October 1890.

Journal of the Northwest Texas Conference, 1909.

Journal of the Central Texas Conference, 1914, 1916, 1936.

O. W. Nail, Texas Centennial Yearbook. 1934.

PEARL S. SWEET

SWEET, WILLIAM HENRY (1843-1919), a pioneer KANSAS educator and minister, was born in Brown County, Ohio, on July 14, 1843, the son of Benjamin F. and Jane (Robinson) Sweet. He served briefly in the Union army, finished normal school, taught school a year and then graduated from OHIO WESLEYAN with an A.B. in 1872 and an M.A. in 1875. In 1885 Chaddock College, Quincy, Ill., awarded him an honorary doctorate. On Sept. 7, 1875, he married Rose A. Williams. Their children were Paul, WILLIAM WARREN, Emma, Ruth, and Ralph.

From 1872-77 Sweet was professor of mathematics at BAKER UNIVERSITY, and he served there as president from 1879-86. He accepted the presidency of Baker University at Baldwin City when it was at a low ebb with only forty students. During his term as president Century Hall was built, and in six years time the student body grew to 475—four more than were enrolled at Kansas University that year.

His pastorates in the KANSAS CONFERENCE were Centralia and Holton. In 1886 he joined the new KANSAS WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY faculty as professor of psychology and ethics. He taught there for two years, was field secretary for Wesleyan in 1909-10, and served as a trustee of that institution from 1889-1914. His NORTHWEST KANSAS CONFERENCE pastorates were: First Church, Salina; Minneapolis; Beloit; Downs; Lincoln; Marquette; University Church, Salina and Mentor. He served six years as PRESIDING ELDER of the Salina District. He was a member of the 1892 and 1896 GENERAL CONFERENCES.

In 1915 the Sweets retired to Centralia, Wash., where he died on Jan. 5, 1919, and she died nineteen days later on January 24. During his retirement, Sweet compiled and wrote A History of Methodism in Northwest Kansas, which his children published posthumously.

Alumni Record of Baker University, 1917.

Minutes of the Kansas and Northwest Kansas Conferences.

C. F. Price, Who's Who in American Methodism. 1916.

W. H. Sweet, Northwest Kansas. 1920. INA TURNER GRAY

SWEET, WILLIAM WARREN (1881-1959). American minister and noted historian, was born at Baldwin, Kan., Feb. 15, 1881. He graduated from OHIO WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY in 1902 and from DREW THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY in 1906. He earned the degrees of A.M. and Th.M. from Crozier Theological Seminary in 1907, Ph.D. from the University of Pennsylvania in 1912. He received a D.D. from CORNELL COLLEGE in 1922 and L.H.D. from DEPAUW UNIVERSITY in 1956. Most of his life was spent as a professor of history. He taught at Ohio Wesleyan, 1911-13; at DePauw, 1913-27; University of Chicago, 1927-46; GARRETT THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, 1946-48, and PERKINS SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY, 1948-52. He was the author of numerous historical books including History of the North Indiana Conference; Rise of Methodism in the West; Circuit Rider Days Along the Ohio; Indiana Asbury-DePauw University; Methodism In American History; A History Of Latin America, and others. He died at Dallas, Texas, Jan. 3, 1959, remembered as one of Methodism's outstanding historians.

HAROLD THRASHER

SWEET MEMORIAL INSTITUTE is a complex of Methodist institutions and services in SANTIAGO, CHILE, that has provided, from time to time, training for other Christian vocations; training for ministers; services to the community in the form of a day nursery, club work, and recreation; and training for workers in child care.

The institute began as a training school for pastors, but theological education has now been turned over to an interdenominational center, and Sweet Memorial Institute works entirely in the field of child care and the training of workers for child care.

In June 1914, a biblical seminary was organized in Santiago under leadership of GOOSIL F. ARMS. Its purpose was to provide a more thorough preparation for Chilean pastors than could be achieved through the conference course of study. It was begun as a joint project of the Methodist and Presbyterian churches, but almost always included students from other denominations. In 1938 the Presbyterian Church withdrew and, since the Methodist Church did not have financial resources to maintain the seminary, it was closed. Students who made preliminary studies as prescribed by the conference were referred to the Union Theological Seminary (FACULTAD EVANGELICA DE TEOLOGIA) in BUENOS AIRES, ARGENTINA.

In 1924 a donation by the Sweet family of TOPEKA, Kan., U.S.A., made it possible to organize the Sweet Memorial Institute in honor of Timothy and Annie B. Sweet. Its purpose was to prepare young women for various phases of local church activity. Emphasis was given to social service since the institute was located in a lower-income section of Santiago.

In April 1926, the first class of seven young women entered the school under direction of ARTHUR WESLEY. In June of that year a dispensary was opened, with emphasis upon the preventive aspect of medical care. The following year, under leadership of Mrs. Scott Hauser, a day nursery was established to care for the children of working mothers. The dispensary and day nursery gave students the opportunity to practice theories that were discussed in formal classes.

In 1928 the program was amplified to include club work with the neighborhood children, a library, and an organized recreation program. This development took place under the direction of Mrs. WALTER CARHART.

The medical work and day nursery were reorganized in August 1940, under leadership of Florence Prouty. The Sweet Memorial Day Nursery has become one of the outstanding pioneers in child care, not only in Chile but throughout Latin America.

The day nursery also is an observation and practice center and a postgraduate study center for the schools of nursing of the University of Chile and Catholic University, the National Health Service, and the schools of medicine of the two universities. The courses are attended by nursery school teachers, social workers, pediatricians, and midwives from all over Latin America.

In 1945 the training school aspect of Sweet Memorial Institute was reorganized as the Training School for Christian Workers. The course of study was revised to include the needs of young men who were preparing for the ministry. Thus the biblical seminary was reopened and formed a pre-seminary for those young men and young women who would complete their formal theological preparation in Buenos Aires.

In 1962 the training school was closed, to be incorporated into the new Theological Community. Sweet Memorial Institute continues to serve through the day nursery and the club program for the neighborhood.

Barbara H. Lewis, Methodist Overseas Missions. 1960.

JOYCE HILL

SWENGEL, URIAH FRANTZ (1846-1921), American Evangelical minister and bishop, was born on a farm near Middleburg, Pa., Oct. 28, 1846. The Christian atmosphere of this home is attested by the fact that not only he, but his three brothers, entered the ministry. In the latter years of the Civil War he joined the Union Army, and was present at the surrender of General Lee at Appomattox. Following a brief tenure as a teacher and a short period of time in college, at the age of twenty-one he sought and was granted a license to preach in 1867 by the Central Pennsylvania Conference of the EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION. He was ordained DEACON in 1869, and ELDER in 1871. For a period of thirty years he was the pastor of churches in central PENNSYLVANIA. Three times he was pastor of Trinity Church, YORK. He was then elevated to the office of PRESIDING ELDER, in which capacity he served for twelve years in what was then THE UNITED EVANGELICAL CHURCH. He was finally granted the highest office of the church, and served with faithfulness and distinction as a bishop for the eight year maximum permitted by the church.

Uriah Swengel was intensely interested in the work of the SUNDAY SCHOOL and Christian Endeavor. For the church's Leadership Training program he wrote a book, Modes and Methods of Work. He also served for a time as editor of Sunday school literature for his denomination. His interest in temperance is indicated by his active leadership in the work of the Anti-Saloon League.

He was one of the chairmen of the joint commission on union, which led, the year following his death, to the union of The United Evangelical Church and the Evangelical Association to form the EVANGELICAL CHURCH.

He was the author of several books and was awarded the honorary M.A. and D.D. degrees.

Swengel was married three times: to Mary Hipple, Lottie Antony, and Beulah Buck. The third union was blessed with two children, Clark and Ada.

After a lengthy and often painful illness he died at his home at HARRISBURG, Pa., March 8, 1921. He was buried at York with the funeral address being given by Bishop W. H. FOUKE.

Yearbook of the United Evangelical Church, 1922.

HOWARD L. ORIAN

SWITZERLAND is a federal republic of southwestern central Europe, bordered in the north by GERMANY, west by FRANCE, south by ITALY, and east by AUSTRIA and Liechtenstein. It contains 15,962 square miles, and in its habitable sections is densely populated by 5,700,000 (1966) inhabitants.

There are four national languages: in the north and east, German (69%); in the west, French (20%); in the south, Italian (9.5%); and in some sections of the east Rotoroman (1.2%). Formerly a federation of independent states, the Swiss Confederation is organized as a federal state, including twenty-five cantons (states). In 1291 the first three cantons signed their first covenant. It has had its present extension since 1815. Bern is the federal capital. Other important cities are Zürich, Basel, Geneva, Lausanne, St. Gallen, Lucerne, Winterthur, and Biel.

Because of its political neutrality Switzerland is not a member of the United Nations organization, but it is involved in all its humanitarian, cultural, and administrative institutions. GENEVA is of course the European site of the United Nations and the center of many of the above-mentioned institutions. Geneva is also the place where the Red Cross movement was initiated and still is its world center.

More than half of the population are Protestants (of the calvinistic type); forty-five percent are Roman Catholics; and about one percent are Old or Christian Catholics.

Protestantism. Switzerland, in the sixteenth century, was one of the most important centers of the Reformation on the European continent. The movement started in ZÜRICH through the labors of Huldrych Zwingli. His successor, Heinrich Bullinger, was the author of the Confessio Helvetica Posterior, the official confession of faith in a number of Protestant countries. Under the influence of John Calvin, Geneva became the center of the French-speaking and other reformed churches. Calvin's influence was so important that Geneva was called the "Rome of Protestantism."

The more industrial cantons, as Zürich, Basel, Berne, Geneva, Vaud, accepted the Reformation movement, while the so-called primitive cantons stayed Roman Catholic. For a long time, until the middle of the nineteenth century, there were serious tensions between the respective cantonal governments because of confessional questions.

Methodism. JOHN WILLIAM FLETCHER (Jean Guillaume de la Fléchère), a native of Nyon on the Lake of Geneva and a close friend of JOHN WESLEY, is considered to be the first Swiss Methodist. From 1777 to 1781, paying a visit from England to his home country, he preached there and organized SUNDAY SCHOOL classes for about 100 children.

In this French-speaking section of Switzerland, the influence of Robert Haldane, a Methodist from Scotland, was even greater. In Geneva leading church men, as Gausson, Frédéric Monod, Merle d'Aubigné, and César Malan, were deeply influenced by his preaching. Expelled from the Geneva national Protestant Church, these "Methodists" organized what is still known as the Geneva Free Evangelical Church. Their influence reached Bern and its vicinity, where the "Evangelical Society" was formed. This organization still exists as a part of the Bernese national Protestant Church.

In 1839 Henri Olivier, of St. Peter's Church in Lausanne, was influenced by John Wesley's and John William Fletcher's writings. Because of his new views he had to leave the church. In 1840 CHARLES COOK, a Wesleyan minister, was sent from England to Lausanne and a church organized. The work prospered for a certain time. In Lausanne the John William Fletcher Memorial Church, now called Chapelle du Valentin, was built and a theological seminary for the French-speaking work on the European continent established. In 1901 after a rapid decline in membership the last Methodist sermon in the French-speaking WESLEYAN METHODIST CHURCH was preached, and the beautiful building was sold to the German-speaking M.E. Church.

Methodist Episcopal Church. The year 1856 marks the beginning of the work of Methodism in Switzerland as it exists today. Ernst Mann, a young convert from the Palatinate (Germany) went to Geneva and Lausanne, having heard that Germans and German-speaking Swiss people were almost without spiritual care in these French-speaking cities. In the same year Hermann zur Jakobs-mühlen was sent to Zürich and began to hold services there. The work grew rapidly, circuits were formed, and QUARTERLY CONFERENCES were organized. The whole work then was a part of the Germany and Switzerland Mission of the M.E. Church, later of the Germany and Switzerland Annual Conference. Its very able leader was LUDWIG SIGISMUND JACOBY.

In 1887 the Switzerland Annual Conference was organized with thirty ministers and 5,634 members. The first session was held in Bern, Bishop W. X. NINDE being the presiding bishop. The conference territory was divided into two, sometimes three, districts. For nearly thirty years Bishop JOHN L. NUELSEN, who was born in Zürich but was an American citizen, was the able and much loved leader of Methodism in Switzerland. He resigned with honor his responsibilities at the UNITING CONFERENCE in May 1939, in KANSAS CITY.

The Methodist Church. During the Second World War, when no bishop could reach Switzerland, FERDINAND SIGG was regularly elected as the president of the conference. After the war Bishop PAUL N. GARBER and Bishop ARTHUR J. MOORE had oversight of the work. When the CENTRAL AND SOUTHERN EUROPE CENTRAL CONFERENCE (Geneva Area) was formed under the leadership of Bishop Arthur J. Moore, Ferdinand Sigg was elected as its first bishop. After his death in 1965, Bishop FRANZ SCHAFER, also a member of the Switzerland Annual Conference and a DISTRICT SUPERINTENDENT, was elected in his place.

In 1965 there were two districts, with sixty-three circuits, ninety-three ministers and 10,898 members. Twenty of these ministers are retired. The theological training of Swiss Methodist ministers takes place at the seminary maintained by the German and Swiss Conferences together at FRANKFURT, Germany, an institution that has been distinguished by the services of such teachers as J. W. E. Sommer, Paulus Scharpf, Theophil Spoerri, and FRIEDRICH WUNDERLICH. These men and others have formed and molded an entire generation of preachers. It is usual that one of the teaching staff is a member of the Switzerland Annual Conference. During the two world wars the border between Switzerland and Germany was closed, so it was necessary for Swiss Methodism to send its students to the theological seminary of the Basel Mission in BASEL.

Swiss Methodism shows a vital interest in missions. In connection with the Board of MISSIONS and the Women's Society of Foreign Missions in the United States, missionaries were sent especially to CHINA, MALAYA, and the Indies. In 1966 Swiss missionaries worked in connection with Methodist churches in North Africa, in the CONGO, and in ARGENTINA. Many Methodists work with interdenominational missions, as the Philafrican Missionary Society in ANGOLA (Africa), and the Swiss Missionary Society in SOUTH AFRICA. Some also went to PERU for the Swiss Mission to the Latin American Indians.

During the last few decades Swiss Methodists have developed a remarkable system of social concern. The Switzerland Annual Conference runs three Homes for the Aged in Horgen, Eschlikon, and Basel-Hammerstrasse. Local Methodist churches own smaller homes for the aged in Geneva and Basel-Allschwilerplatz. In Degersheim a fine orphanage is the home of about twenty-five children, who mostly come from broken families. "Viktoria," a former hotel, was purchased in 1933. It is a most beautiful vacation place at Teuti-Hasliberg, in the Bernese Oberland. By and by it became the important center of a most useful training of lay people.

The DEACONESS motherhouse "Bethany" (Diakonissenhaus Bethanien) is an organization of its own, but strongly related to the Methodist conference. The 256 sisters, most of them trained and registered nurses, are all members of the Methodist Church, and the two directors are ministerial members of the conference. Its center is at Zürich. It runs two hospitals and a number of homes for the Aged.

One of the most important arms of Swiss Methodism is its publishing house, the CHRISTLICHE VEREINSBUCHHANDLUNG. Founded very early as a branch of the German Methodist publishing firm in BREMEN, it now has its own important printing facilities, a book shop with branches in several towns, and a publishing firm, the Gotthelf-Verlag. In its buildings at the Badenerstrasse 69, in Zürich, are located the offices of the administration of the Swiss Methodist Church.

In spite of the fact that the Methodist Church is a minority church among the state-related Protestant, Roman Catholic, and Old Catholic Churches in Switzerland, its influence in the religious life of the country is greater than statistics indicate. Its voice is heard in the ecumenical organizations and groups. After union with the E.U.B. Church, the Evangelische Gemeinschaft, which body was only a little smaller, it became the largest free church in Switzerland.

Evangelische Gemeinschaft began its work in Switzerland when EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION ministers from America entered in 1865, following the sessions of the Germany Conference, seeking an opening for work in this country. When American missionaries were not accepted favorably, the Germany Conference (Evangelical Association) sent Jacob Schmidli, a native Swiss minister. His work was concentrated in the vicinity of Bern, which eventually became the center of denominational life in Switzerland. A district of the Germany Conference was formed in 1868, and in 1879 the Switzerland Conference was organized.

In 1868 the Germany Conference sent J. P. Schnatz as missionary to Alsace, France. It wasn't until Conrad Zwingli, a Swiss, assumed the work that it began to grow. The relationship with the Swiss conference continued in both Alsace and Lorraine, and today this area still remains an integral part of the Switzerland Conference.

A branch publishing house was opened by the Stuttgart plant of the Germany Conference in Bern in 1895. It soon developed into an independent enterprise under the auspices of the Switzerland Conference. Although it did not operate presses, it served as a center for editorial and publication work.

A Deaconess Society was established in Strassburg, France, by the Bethesda motherhouse in Germany in 1889. It became the center for deaconess work in France, just as later Basel was to serve for Switzerland. The earliest work of this society in Switzerland was begun in 1896 at Zürich. In 1923, the French and Swiss work became autonomous, although friendly relations have continued with the society in Germany. In 1966, there were 108 deaconesses in Switzerland, with two hospitals and several homes under their care, while in France there were forty-four deaconesses with a hospital and home to supervise.

Since there was no theological seminary established by the Swiss conference, ministerial students enrolled at the Reutlingen, Germany institution. The Switzerland Conference assisted in the control of this school along with the three conferences in Germany.

The Switzerland Conference (E.U.B.) in 1966 had 101 organized congregations and 128 unorganized appointments. There were seventy-one ministers on the roll, 6,219 members, and an additional 9,091 persons who were considered "friends of the church."

The Switzerland Conference met annually, but quadrennially it became a part of the European Central Conference of the church for the purpose of integrating the total work in Europe. It also sent representation to the quadrennial sessions of the GENERAL CONFERENCE of the denomination in America.

R. E. Grob, Bischöfliche Methodistenkirche in der Schweiz. 1931.

Minutes of the Switzerland Annual Conference.

John L. Nuelsen, Kurzgefasste Geschichte des Methodismus. Bremen, 1929. HERMANN SCHAAD

SWORMSTEDT, LEROY (1798-1863), American minister and Book Agent of the Western Book Concern from 1844 to 1860. He was the person named as defendant in the suit brought by the M.E. Church, South, to recover its share of the proceeds of the Book Concern following the division of the M.E. Church in 1844. He was born in MARYLAND in October 1798, converted at the age of eighteen, and later was admitted into the OHIO CONFERENCE. He filled a number of prominent stations and was presiding elder on the Lancaster, Zanesville, and CINCINNATI districts. In 1836 he was elected assistant agent of the Western Book Concern then located at Cincinnati, and in 1844 he was elected by the GENERAL CONFERENCE to be its principal agent. He became Book Agent at the time of the bisection of the M.E. Church and when in 1868 the General Conference of the Northern Church repudiated the PLAN OF SEPARATION, the Southern Church sued to recover their equity in the Book Concern. Swormstedt was necessarily named as defendant. The suit was eventually decided in favor of the South in 1857 by the Supreme Court of the United States. Swormstedt, however, continued to travel through the South representing the Book Concern while the Southern Conferences were organizing into a new connection. His presence was noted at the 1844 session of the MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE by its historian, John G. Jones, who in that era of bitter partisanship rather tartly observed that Swormstedt was one to whom "he would not like to owe anything but love, unless he could have the money ready as soon as called for" (Jones, Vol. 2, p. 504). Swormstedt, however, was a faithful servant of the Church and Bishop SIMPSON says of him that "he had systematic habits, fine business qualifications, and labored earnestly for the success of the Church in every department which he filled." He died on Aug. 27, 1863, after he had superannuated in 1860.

M. Simpson, Cyclopaedia. 1878.

N. B. H.

SYDNEY, Australia, capital of NEW SOUTH WALES, is the site of the first British settlement in AUSTRALIA which began under Governor Phillip in 1788. The first community consisted, in the main, of a convict colony. From such humble beginnings, Sydney has grown into a city of three million people.

Methodism began in Sydney under the leadership of devout Methodist laymen, who, sensing the spiritual needs of the colony, requested the British CONFERENCE by letter in 1812 to appoint a minister. (For his coming and the development of work in Sydney see NEW SOUTH WALES CONFERENCE.)

Special present day institutions in Sydney here follow:

Central Methodist Mission. In 1884 the historic York Street Methodist Church in downtown Sydney became the Central Methodist Mission. In outward appearance the stately old building remained unchanged, despite the new name, but the change represented a change in strategy and in emphasis. The church continued its preaching ministry but it added a new dimension of a practical down-to-earth service to the needy of Sydney. It became identified with the unemployed, the prostitutes, the orphans and unwanted children, the down trodden and the defeated, the deserted and the destitute.

Since 1884, the Mission has continued to serve the needs of all kinds of people, adapting its programme to meet changing circumstances. At present 730 people are cared for in the fourteen homes, hostels and hospitals controlled by the Mission. Their ages range from six months to the late nineties. Their needs cover a wide spectrum of human need.

A series of attractive buildings in delightful surroundings scattered throughout 100 miles of the Sydney metropolitan area provide a network of compassion for them.

The homes are: Frank Vickery Village, Sylvania. A self-contained village for the aged with accommodation for eighty people in single and double units and flats, together with a chapel and recreation area. Named in honor of Frank Vickery, a Mission benefactor and a descendant of the Hon. Ebenezer Vickery, M.L.C., who purchased the Lyceum property in 1906 and gave it to the Mission for its headquarters. Hoban House, Maroubra, a former private hotel providing accommodation in individual rooms for fifty aged men and women. Named in honor of S. J. Hoban, Superintendent of the Mission, from 1915 to 1921. Sunset Lodge, Enfield. A home providing accommodation and some nursing care for fifty aged ladies. W. G. Taylor Home, Narrabeen, provides single room accommodation for 100 aged men and women. Named in honor of the founder and first Superintendent of the Central Methodist Mission, W. G. TAYLOR.

Hospitals include Lottie Stewart Hospital, Dundas. A 114-bed geriatric hospital now financed by the State Government, but controlled by a board appointed by the Central Methodist Mission. Waddell House, Ashfield. A 35-bed private hospital specializing in psychiatric care and treatment. Australia's first Christian psychiatric hospital.

Children's Homes are Bernard-Smith Children's Home, Pymble. A large two-story residence providing accommodation and long term care for twenty-one children whose family life has been disrupted by social tragedy. Dalmar Children's Home, Carlingford. A settlement of cottages providing accommodation and long term care for 100 children in family style living. Most children are the victims of social tragedy; very few are orphans. One of the two features of the Mission's programme of institutional care that traces its origin back to the early days of the Mission. Although the Dalmar home has been located at three different sites it has provided an unbroken record of service for needy children for almost eighty years. Gateway Children's Home, Lewisham. The newest addition to the Mission's child care programme, this home, open in 1964, provides short term care for children whose family life is disrupted by sudden emergencies. It accommodates up to fifteen children and occasionally one or two mothers for up to three weeks while social workers arrange a long term solution to the problem which brings each child into the home.

Hostels are Evangelists' Training Institute. An Institute established by W. G. Taylor in the early days of the Mission to train young men in evangelism to prepare them for entry to the Christian ministry. The Institute offers practical experience, a formal lecture programme and study facilities for young men and women to gain entry to the theological course leading to the Methodist ministry in New South Wales. Men's Hostel, Francis Street, East Sydney. A Hostel offering cubicle type accommodation for thirty men who are being rehabilitated from "skid row." Night Refuge, Francis Street, East Sydney. A night refuge offering overnight accommodation for thirty derelict men. Youth Hostel, Francis Street, East Sydney. A Hostel for thirty-five Australian and overseas students living temporarily in Sydney for university and technical college training at a tertiary level. Margaret Hallstrom Home, Leichhardt. A home for unmarried mothers offering accommodation for up to twelve girls at any one time.

The headquarters of the Mission are now located in the two million dollar Wesley Centre, a nine floor office building in the heart of the city. The building includes three floors of community facilities where an extensive group dynamics programme is undertaken, a restaurant and dining room, a chapel and the Lyceum Theatre, used by the Mission as a church on Sunday evenings.

Life Line is the name given to a twenty-four-hour telephone counselling service established originally in Sydney by the Central Methodist Mission in March 1963, and now in existence throughout the world. The Life Line concept is based on a telephone manned by trained volunteers twenty-four hours a day with a well publicized number, "trouble team" facilities providing instant mobility in relation to suicide emergencies and an extensive follow up counselling programme staffed by professionals.

Other centers based on the Sydney pattern are now in existence in Adelaide, South Australia; Brisbane, Queensland; Morwell, Victoria; Broken Hill, Newcastle and Wollongong, New South Wales. Overseas there are centers in Canada, New Zealand, South Africa and the United States of America.

In the United States the centers are known by the name "Contact." All of the centers are affiliated with Life Line International, an organization set up in 1966 to promote the establishment of new centers, to act as a means of exchange for ideas, experience and know-how among existing centers and to coordinate standards of operation and training.

Newtown Methodist Mission. Newtown circuit was formed in 1855 by division from the Sydney South Circuit. As the suburbs of Sydney developed so it was found necessary to divide the circuit as in 1866 to form Ashfield, in 1884 Stanmore, and in 1886 Rockdale. Newtown itself became a Mission in 1928 under the leadership of A. E. Walker.

Population shifts have to a large degree determined its activities. Apart from normal circuit activities it is noted for its social work. It provides a specialized nursing service for Aged People and fellowship amenities for pensioners. It maintains two hostels which provide accommodation for country youth employed in Sydney.

Newtown Church was built in 1860 and is often spoken of as a Cathedral church together with Waverley. Well attended Youth Groups and Senior Citizens Societies are in its membership but with the exodus of young families there are very few indigenous couples within the 30-45 age group.

Wayside Chapel, King's Cross, has come to be a special institution in Sydney's religious life. The former William Street Methodist Church, built in 1871, was one of the landmarks of the city and located strategically where the main thoroughfare carried the traffic of the city to Kings Cross and beyond to the Eastern Suburbs. For many years, in common with many other noble religious monuments in the changing inner city, its decline in strength, both congregationally and in terms of influential witness, was a source of concern to the New South Wales Methodist Conference.

Baffled as to what to do, the Methodist Church sold the property in 1955. The final services in this grand old church edifice were held on July 24 of that year. A portion of the sale price was used to purchase another property (to be used as a hostel) on the eastern side of Kings Cross. This venture also failed, and in 1961 still another property was bought. The new property, comprising two two-story flats, was located at 27-29 Hughes Street, Kings Cross.

Here Ted Noffs and his wife, Margaret, began their work in the heart of a population of 100,000 people on Sunday, Jan. 12, 1964, with a congregation of twelve people sitting in two rooms on the ground floor of one of the flats. Noffs had been sent there by the Methodist Church "to conduct an experiment." There was no staff and, with the exception of the flats, no plant and equipment with which to work. Mr. and Mrs. Noffs and the small core of people who gathered around them—most of them were unchurched people—declared that they were prepared to "wander in faith" to seek God's will for this massively populated area of the city. The doors of the church were opened to the world.

Since that day the Wayside Chapel has developed into one of the major experiments in the Christian world.

A full-time staff of thirteen ably assisted by voluntary teams numbering some 250 people serve the needs of humanity in this complex area. Australia's first drug referral center was opened by the Chapel in 1967. A mobile unit, aimed at meeting the needs of migrant people in the inner-city, began operating in 1968. By the end of 1970 over 3,000 couples had been married at the Chapel and hundreds of children baptized.

Mr. Noffs' book, The Wayside Chapel, was published by Collins in London in December 1969. Newspaper accounts of this experiment have appeared across the world, including one which appeared in The New York Times on Jan. 18, 1970.

Leigh College, Enfield. During the early years of Methodism in Australia, the men for the ministry came from the British Conference and it was not until 1862 that the Australian church began to think in terms of training its own ministry. In 1863 "Newington House" on the Parramatta River became the "Provisional Theological Institution" with J. A. Manton as its first Principal. In 1883 theological students were moved to "The Hermitage" within Newington College, Stanmore.

It is interesting to read in the Minutes of Conference in the years between 1900 and 1914 the constant protests about the inadequacy of the training and the accommodation given to theological students. It was not until 1915 that major changes were made when about ten acres situated on Liverpool Road, Enfield, were purchased "for the purpose of establishing a Theological College, to be called Leigh College, this perpetuating the name of the noble Methodist Missionary, SAMUEL LEIGH." The first Principal was William E. Bennett, who was succeeded on his retirement in 1942 by S. R. Bowyer-

Hayward, who came from England to take up the appointment.

In 1919 a system of co-operative training for theological students of the Methodist, Presbyterian and Congregational Churches was introduced. Students from the three churches come together for lectures in St. Andrews College within Sydney University, teachers being appointed by each of the three churches. This system of united classes in the basic areas of theological training has continued up to the present time and has proved exceedingly valuable.

Many lectures are still given at Leigh College in areas not covered by the United Faculty and in specific subjects required by the Methodist Conference and, of course, the College is still the residential center for all men in training for the New South Wales Conference of the Methodist Church of Australasia.

The Methodist Ladies' College, eight miles west of Sydney, owes its origin to the annual Church Conference of 1883, but it was not until 1886 that the school was opened for day girls and boarders.

From the time of the erection of the "Towers" building, under Principal H. Kelnack, the school has steadily progressed. Today it provides education from Kindergarten to University Entrance level. The total enrollment is 840 of whom 145 are boarders.

Newington College, Stanmore, is the senior college of the Methodist Church in this State. It celebrated its centenary on Saturday, October 27th, 1962. Newington is situated on a twenty acre site and incorporates several splendid ovals, gymnasium and Olympic swimming pool.

Recognized as one of the great Public Schools, it has through the years produced leaders who have figured prominently in the political, judicial, medical, commercial and ecclesiastical disciplines of Australia.

Associated with it are the Preparatory Schools, Wyvern and Lindfield.

The College Council consists of ten clergy and fifteen laymen and is supported by the strong membership of the Old Boys' Union.

The 1968 enrollment: Senior School, 835; Preparatory Schools, 280 (including 220 boarders).

The present Headmaster is Douglas Trathen.

Ravenswood School for Girls was acquired and established as a Methodist School in 1924 and is on the Northern Shore suburban line about ten miles from Sydney. Up to the year 1949 the School had ministerial control, but since that date a Headmistress has been in charge. The School possesses a complete range of modern buildings, and provides a full course from Kindergarten to University Entrance.

The present total enrollment is 574 of whom 102 are boarders.

Wesley College within the University of Sydney. In 1855 the New South Wales University Act provided for assisting the four leading religious denominations of New South Wales to establish colleges at the University and offered about fifteen acres to each with a £1 for £1 subsidy towards buildings. The Wesleyans could not raise the cash and their fifteen acres went to the Prince Alfred Hospital.

In 1907 the New South Wales Conference decided to celebrate the Centenary of Wesleyanism in Australia by endeavouring to obtain about two acres from the University to build its Wesley College. The foundation stones were laid on Dec. 2, 1916 by GEORGE BROWN, President, Hon. William Robson, M.L.C. and Mr. Fred Cull. The College was opened in 1917 with eight resident students. Today the College, in large, impressive buildings, has 150 students.

AUSTRALIAN EDITORIAL COMMITTEE

SYMAYS, MAURICE A. (1879-), is a prominent lay member of the Belgium Conference of The Methodist Church, his home church being the Central Church, Brussels. He was born in Ghent, Belgium, August 2, 1879, and in time became a Doctor of Law and of Political Science. In the First World War in 1917 he won the Military Cross for distinguished service. He entered the Belgian Ministry of Finance in 1919, and was a director of that ministry at the time of his retirement in 1946.

Symays was an agnostic who was brought to Christ through reading a Bible which he purchased in the Methodist Building in Brussels. He joined the Church in 1924 and became a local preacher, and for some time was the Conference Lay Leader. In 1945 he was elected administrator and counsellor of the Belgian Methodist Mission Legal Corporation (A.S.B.L.). He has been the Methodist lay representative in a great many inter-denominational activities. Since retirement he continues to reside in his home in Brussels.

WILLIAM C. THONGER

SYRACUSE, NEW YORK, U.S.A., in 1970 had a population of 192,529. It is centrally located in the state which may account for its being a hub of religious activities. The new Church Center building completed in 1967 houses more different denominations under one roof than any other building in the world (N. Y. State Council of Churches, Church Women United, Syracuse Area Council of Churches, Baptist State Convention, Seventh Day Baptist, United Church of Christ, United Presbyterian Synod and Presbytery, Methodist Area, Conference, and District, and Lutheran Upper New York Synod).

Syracuse is both an educational and industrial center. It is the home of SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY, Le Moyne (Roman Catholic) College, Onondagua Community College, the State University College of Forestry, and the Upstate Medical Center for the State University.

Historically Syracuse is of interest as the seat of the Iroquois Indian Confederacy. Ephriam Webster, the first permanent white settler in the city, opened a trading post in the area in 1786. Syracuse was incorporated as a village in 1825 and as a city in 1845.

The first Methodist church in what is now the City of Syracuse was the First Ward Church founded in 1807. This Society was begun in what is now the North Side of the city but was then known as the town of Salina. In 1816 St. Paul's Church was founded on what is now the far South Side of the city. First Church, now located in the heart of the city, was the first Methodist church in the actual village of Syracuse. It began in the year 1824 with a class of nine members in a village that had a population of less than 400. In May of 1835 People's A.M.E. ZION CHURCH was organized, the first Negro Methodist church in Syracuse. It grew out of a class meeting in a small house on South Crouse Avenue. In 1849 some members from First Church broke with the institution on the question of HOLINESS. This group formed a church known as Hemlock Church until they later took the name of FREE METHODIST.

The second half of the nineteenth century saw further development in Syracuse Methodism. In 1852 another group left First Church; this time the division was over the question of abolition of slavery. The group leaving First Church founded a WESLEYAN METHODIST CHURCH. The first Methodist church on the west side of Syracuse was West Genesee formed in 1854. In 1868 a group from First Church founded Centenary Methodist, on the near west side of Syracuse. The following year (1869) another group from First Church founded University Methodist, which stands in the University section on the near east side of the City. During 1869 and 1870 Furman Methodist was organized on what is now the near south side of the City. In 1876 Brown Memorial was organized on the west side. Furman, Brown, and Hopps Memorial (a C.M.E. CHURCH, organized sometime later) are now yoked in the Syracuse Methodist Inner-City Project (M.I.P.). Bellvue Heights Church was organized on the West Side in 1888. Three years later (1891) another church was founded in what is now the University section—Erwin Methodist. In 1893 Lafayette Avenue Church was organized some ten blocks south of Furman Methodist. A year later (1894) Rockefeller Methodist was founded on the far east side of the city, and this is still an area of rapid development. Woodlawn Methodist was organized sometime during this decade on the far north side of the city.

During the twentieth century few societies have been organized in the city, but much expansion, new building, relocation, and some consolidation has taken place. The Church of the Redeemer, an Italian language church, was organized in the north side in 1905. James Street Methodist, located in the Eastwood section of the City, was formed in 1911. The summer of 1967 witnessed the organizing of Bright Memorial Chapel, an A.M.E. CHURCH.

All of the churches mentioned in this article are still in existence with the exception of Centenary, which united with First Church when the latter rebuilt in 1961 after a spectacular fire which totally destroyed the church building in 1957, and the Church of the Redeemer, which closed its doors due to the decline of Italian-speaking residents in Syracuse.

SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY, Syracuse, New York, was founded in 1870 by the Methodist Episcopal Church with financial assistance from the city of Syracuse. Classes began on September 4, 1871. The first permanent building, the Hall of Languages, was dedicated in 1873 and is still the home of the College of Liberal Arts.

A cosmopolitan institution, the university has attracted, within the space of one year, 1964, such speakers as the president of the United States, the vice-president, a Supreme Court justice, many other government officials, scholars, artists, novelists, and poets. Students are drawn from every state in the Union and more than eighty foreign countries. Nearly eight hundred international students are registered each academic year in undergraduate or graduate programs.

Unusual academic offerings include: a comprehensive program in continuing education, utilizing the resources of all colleges and divisions of the university. Included are professional and general education programs for adults in the Syracuse metropolitan area; a conference program for national and international groups at three Adirondack residential centers; four institutional branches with programs leading to a master's degree in engineering and science and business administration; a foreign studies program for undergraduates in other countries; an expanded theater program in downtown Syracuse, and a wide range of courses for teachers in the Central New York State; several programs in the Maxwell Graduate School of Citizenship and Public Affairs offering the student on-the-scene training in Africa and Asia; a joint university-community program carried out through the Youth Development Center and studying the causes of and exploring different methods for dealing with juvenile delinquency; semester and summer programs conducted by University College and the College of Liberal Arts for American students in France, Italy, and Japan.

The university is fully accredited by the Middle States Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools and by the Board of Regents of the State of New York. It has schools of Architecture, Art, College of Business Administration, Maxwell Graduate School of Citizenship and Public Affairs, Education, L. C. Smith College of Engineering, State University College of Forestry at Syracuse University, Graduate School, College of Home Economics, Journalism, College of Law, College of Liberal Arts, Library, Music, Nursing, Social Work, Speech and Dramatic Art, University College, Utica College, and Division of the Summer Sessions. The assets of this internationally known education center total well over $125,000,000 and include some forty new buildings erected since the Second World War. The governing board has fifty-eight members, fourteen nominated by the annual conferences in New York and elected by the board.

JOHN O. GROSS

JOSEPH SZCZEPKOWSKI

SZCZEPKOWSKI, JOSEPH (1890-), Polish Methodist preacher, was born in Brooklyn, N. Y., Dec. 12, 1890. He joined St. Paul's Methodist Church, Jersey City, N. J., at the age of sixteen and later entered the ministry. He served as pastor of St. Paul's Church, Hamtramck, Mich., and West Warren Church in MASSACHUSETTS.

In 1929 he moved to POLAND, where he became a teacher of English. He established the Department of English Philology at Copernicus University in Torun, Poland, and is still connected with this institution as a visiting deputy professor. During the Second World War he returned to the active ministry and served as pastor of several Methodist churches in Poland. He was the first principal of the Biblical Seminary in Klarysew, near Warsaw, and in 1957 he was appointed director of the English Language School in Warsaw. In that same year he was elected general superintendent of the Methodist Church in Poland. Later he was reelected twice, each time for an additional four-year term. He retired in 1969.

Szczepkowski graduated from Cazenovia Seminary, Cazenovia, N. Y., and SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY. He also studied at Michigan University Teachers' College, DREW UNIVERSITY, GARRETT BIBLICAL INSTITUTE, Union Theological Seminary in New York City, and Cambridge University in England.

Early in life he married Zofja Makowska. There were two children, a son Jan and a daughter Stefania (Bieniak).

GAITHER P. WARFIELD

TABERNACLE CAMP GROUND, an Alabama CAMP MEETING site which was established in 1828, has had great influence on the Methodism of that state. It was the result of a conversation between two hunters who accidentally made each other's acquaintance as they were separately hunting one day in the woods that then covered the state. The names of these two hunters were Henry and Joyner. They discovered that they were both Methodists and their conversation soon turned to building a meeting house for their respective families.

A meeting house was duly built just above the spring that now supplies water for the camp ground. The annual camp meeting sprang from this early meeting house, and has continued with only a few omissions to this day.

The early cabins where the camp meeting attendants stayed were called tents, and to many they are "tents" today, though they are now wooden or concrete block structures.

A camp meeting continues to be held here in August of each year, and so far as can be ascertained it has always been held in August. W. G. HENRY, SR., whose ancestor was the Henry mentioned above, said: "No one factor had done as much as this camp meeting to keep God and religion keenly in the minds and hearts of the people of this community."

Many of the great preachers of Methodism have been heard during these camp meetings. The writer of this note has seen as many as one hundred converted and join the Church at one of these camp meetings. In 1898 there were sixty or more cabins on the ground. The buildings were all burned in 1916, and again in 1962, but there now are about fifteen cabins on the ground. The descendants of these early campers still return for camping on the grounds.

EBENEZER HEARN was the first presiding elder of this area. The following are some of the early families to camp on these grounds—names that will be recognized as prominent for many years in Alabama Methodism: Henry, Joyner, Randall, Miller, Woods, Eubanks, McReynolds, Duncan, Leech, Ervin, Storey, Lavender, Bell, Lawrence, Franks, Wharton, Murrah, Ellis and many other families. Tabernacle is among the oldest camp grounds in American Methodism.

M. E. Lazenby, Alabama and West Florida. 1960.

R. B. LAVENDER

TABLE OF METHODIST ANNUAL CONFERENCES. (See Appendix.)

TACKABERRY, FOSSEY (1796-1847), Irish preacher, was born in the County of Wexford. He was converted in 1815 under the preaching of Andrew Taylor, one of the General Missionaries sent into south-east IRELAND by the Irish Conference. Even as a local preacher, still with farming as his livelihood, Fossey Tackaberry was more like an itinerant in his work of spreading the Gospel message. So he offered for the ministry and was accepted as a candidate in 1822. He then gave himself fully to preaching, in which he excelled, and had a wide circuit ministry covering all the main centers in Ireland. So much was he beloved of the people that Conference sent him to the BELFAST North Circuit in 1843, and there he healed disputes and misunderstandings that had occurred among Methodists in that city. His last circuit was Sligo, to which he was appointed in 1846 in the midst of the baneful effects of the Irish Famine. He threw himself wholeheartedly into the relief of distress, never forgetting the preaching of the Gospel as well. He rescued an orphan boy of ten years of age, after the death of the only surviving relative to care for him, an elder brother of fourteen. From this boy whom he rescued, Fossey Tackaberry caught typhus fever, and within a month was dead.

C. H. Crookshank, Methodism in Ireland. 1885-88.

Robert Huston, Life and Labours of the Rev. Fossey Tackaberry. N.p., n.d.

FREDERICK JEFFERY

TACOMA, WASHINGTON, U.S.A., a city of 151,061 (1970), is located on the east shore of Puget Sound.

Work of The United Methodist Church in Tacoma inheres in seventeen congregations with 8,508 members (1970); the Tacoma Community House, founded in 1910 to serve less fortunate children and families, and carried on by the Woman's Division of the Board of Missions in cooperation with local supporting agencies; and the UNIVERSITY OF PUGET SOUND. The University was founded in 1888 by the Puget Sound Conference of the M.E. Church. It continues a vital relationship with the PACIFIC NORTHWEST CONFERENCE.

Methodist work in the Tacoma area began in Steilacoom, five miles to the south, in 1853. In 1874 C. N. Hoxie was appointed to both Steilacoom and to a new preaching point—Tacoma. The Steilacoom work soon closed, as Tacoma boomed with its selection as the western terminus of the Northern Pacific Railroad. Services were held in a tent until the first building of First Church, a store building, was acquired. In 1878 Tacoma's first church building was erected by the new congregation. In the ensuing years five other congregations shared the use of the building during their formative life; hence Baptist, Catholic, Congregational, Presbyterian, and Episcopalian work in Tacoma began in the building of the hospitable Methodists.

During the pastorate of George C. Wilding, 1888-91, Methodism spread throughout the pioneer city. He persuaded his people that First Church should inaugurate an ambitious missionary program, and projected a plan for four additional Methodist churches. He located the churches and assigned to the proposed churches members of First Church who lived in those areas. The people responded and the churches were established. By 1910, most of the present day Methodist churches of Tacoma had been founded. One former Swedish Methodist congregation and one former Japanese Methodist church are among the present congregations.

Methodists founded the GOODWILL INDUSTRIES of Tacoma, an institution which continues today under an independent board. No work of the M.P. Church or M.E. Church, South, existed in Tacoma at the time of unification, nor has there been any predominantly Negro congregation of The Methodist Church. Other Methodist denominations are represented by one A.M.E. CHURCH, one C.M.E. CHURCH, and two FREE METHODIST CHURCHES.

Mason Church was established in 1891 and bore from the beginning the name of the land developer who gave the land for the original building. Mason and three other churches came into being through the missionary vision of the pastor of the First Church, George C. Wilding, who sent colonies of members from that church to establish new suburban congregations.

Mason Church's history parallels that of the University of Puget Sound, which is located in the same north-end community. The church has had close association through the years with this Methodist-related university. The congregation's several buildings were constructed in 1891, 1911, 1944, and 1960.

During the 1950's Mason Church became the largest Methodist church in Tacoma. The longest pastorate in the history of the church, that of J. Henry Ernst, was a period of remarkable growth, culminating in the construction of a large and substantial sanctuary-social building. A notable feature of this building is an eighty-foot long faceted-glass portrayal of The Lord's Prayer by glass artist Gabriel Loire, of Chartres, France.

John Martin Canse, Pilgrim and Pioneer: Dawn in the Northwest. New York: Abingdon Press, 1930.
Erle Howell, Northwest. 1966.

JOHN C. SOLTMAN

TADLOCK, CHARLES WILLIAM (1874-1942), American minister and church leader, was born on a farm near St. Joseph, Mo., Feb. 11, 1874. He was educated at CENTRAL COLLEGE, Missouri, receiving the Ph.B. degree in 1901. Central conferred on him the D.D. degree in 1915. Tadlock was admitted on trial in the MISSOURI CONFERENCE, M.E. Church, South, in 1900; was received into full connection in 1902, and was ordained elder in 1904. His appointments in the Missouri Conference were: 1900, Lebanon Circuit; 1901-02, Warrenton Circuit; 1903, Vandalia and New Harmony; 1904-07, Olive Street Church, St. Joseph; 1908-11, Fayette; 1912, Columbia.

In 1913 Tadlock was transferred to the St. JOSEPH CONFERENCE, and thereafter his appointments were in the City of St. Louis as follows: 1913-16, Centenary; 1917, Cabanne; 1918, St. Louis District; 1919-36, Centenary; 1937, St. Louis District; 1938-42, General Secretary, Board of Finance (Board of Pensions, Missouri Corporation, after 1940).

At different times Tadlock served as president of the St. Louis Conference boards of education and missions. He was a member of the board of curators of Central College. He was elected president of the Metropolitan Church Federation in St. Louis. The M.E. Church, South sent Tadlock as its fraternal messenger to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M.E. Church at DES MOINES in 1920. He was a delegate to the General Conference in 1926, 1934, and 1938, and to the Uniting Conference in 1939.

During Tadlock's second pastorate of eighteen years at Centenary Church, St. Louis, he became widely and favorably known in the M.E. Church, South. The period between the two world wars was the heyday of the "downtown" church in American Methodism. As such a congregation, Centenary grew in the 1920's to more than 3,500 members under Tadlock's able leadership. His pastoral and pulpit ministry inspired and won the loyalty of his people. The writer of Tadlock's memoir in the conference journal declared that from his youth the man "had the capacity to excel—and did excel." However, he was "devoid of desire for popular applause or acclaim or for mere honors." Always he devoted himself to doing well and honestly the work which fell to him. "The word which fit his character was sterling." He died on May 9, 1942 and was buried in Oak Grove Cemetery, St. Louis.

Journal of the St. Louis Conference, 1942.

C. F. Price, Who's Who in American Methodism. 1916.

ALBEA GODBOLD

TAFT, MARY BARRITT (1772-1851), British Methodist, a noted woman evangelist, exercised a wide influence over the North of England as a traveling preacher until her marriage to a Wesleyan minister, ZECHARIAH TAFT, confined her to circuit work. Among those who were converted through her preaching was THOMAS JACKSON. She died at Sandiacre, Derbyshire, England, on March 26, 1851.

Memoir of Mary Taft, By herself. London, 1827. G. E. LONG

TAFT, ZECHARIAH (1772-1848), British Methodist, protagonist of women preachers, entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1801. In 1803 he published Thoughts on Female Preaching "for the comfort and encouragement of an eminently pious female who thought it her duty to call sinners to repentance." (Scripture Doctrine, 1820, dedication.) In 1809 he published a Reply to an anonymous article in the Methodist Magazine which claimed that preaching by women was unscriptural. A revised and enlarged version of his Thoughts appeared in 1820, entitled The Scripture Doctrine of Women's Preaching, dedicated to his own wife, MARY BARRITT TAFT, one of the best examples of the practice which he was defending. This went through a second edition in 1826. His major work was Biographical Sketches of the lives and public ministry of various holy women, in two volumes (1825, 1828), a useful collection of the lives of nearly fifty women preachers in Methodism, beginning with SUSANNA WESLEY. Taft became a SUPERNUMERARY in 1828. He was arraigned before the Wesleyan CONFERENCE in 1835 for his sympathies with the WESLEYAN METHODIST ASSOCIATION, but the matter was dropped. He died Jan. 7, 1848.

FRANK BAKER

TAGG, FRANCIS THOMAS (1845-1923), American minister, was born June 2, 1845, in Union Mills, Md. He was educated at Carroll Academy, Union Mills, received his M.A. from WESTERN MARYLAND COLLEGE in 1915, and also received an honorary D.D. degree from ADRIAN COLLEGE in 1893.

Prior to entering the ministry, Tagg was a teacher and principal of Carroll Academy from 1863 to 1870. In 1870 he was ordained and received into the MARYLAND CONFERENCE of the M.P. CHURCH. He served pastorates in VIRGINIA, MARYLAND, and WASHINGTON, D. C. between 1870 and 1884.

He became Secretary of the M.P. Church's Board of Foreign Missions in 1884 when the JAPAN mission work was being organized and in need of experienced leadership. He continued in this position until 1892, when he returned to the pastorate for a short period.

In 1892 he was named editor of The Methodist Protestant, remaining in this post until his retirement. He was elected President of the GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M.P. Church in 1904 and in 1908.

He was a delegate to some of the most important conventions held in his time: the World's Sunday School Convention, held in 1879 in TORONTO, CANADA; the World's Missionary Congress held in LONDON in 1888; and the ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE, in LONDON in 1901.

Tagg was honored by his Conference as it elected him a delegate to all General Conferences from 1884 to 1916.

He died in BALTIMORE, Md., June 18, 1923. Interment was in Chester Cemetery, Centreville, Md.

Who Was Who in America, 1897-1942. JAMES H. STRAUGHN

TAHLEQUAH, OKLAHOMA, U.S.A., Oklahoma Methodist Home was opened for the reception of children on Jan. 1, 1918, in Britton, Okla. J. E. McKee and his wife were elected superintendent and matron. They served until June 1919. In 1920 it was reported that the frequency of the changing of superintendents and matrons in the Home had been a source of disturbance, and on Sept. 29, 1920, Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Hively were employed as superintendent and matron and put in charge of the Home and farm. They came from the state home at Pryor. At this time there were fifty children in the Home.

By 1938 an oil well had been drilled on the land at Britton, and because of the unsuitability and run down condition of the buildings there, it was decided that the Home should be moved to a new location just as soon as a suitable site could be secured. At the session of the Conference held in OKLAHOMA CITY in 1939, it was reported that 220 acres of land located at Tahlequah, Okla., had been purchased, through the efforts of W. B. Hubbell, who was superintendent at that time. Under his leadership plans were completed and the buildings started. Before these buildings could be completed the work was stopped by war conditions.

In October of 1941, H. H. Allen replaced Hubbell as superintendent, and on March 25, 1942, the old Home at Britton was closed and the sixty boys and girls were transported to the new Home at Tahlequah. This new Home was dedicated on Sunday, July 5, 1942 by Bishop CHARLES C. SELECMAN.

In November of 1945, E. C. Webb was appointed to be superintendent of the Home, and a five year expansion program was set in motion.

W. C. Mathes was appointed to follow Webb and during his administration and that of Virgil Alexander, who followed him in 1961, the Home continued to build and grow. In 1964 Howard Davis was appointed to be superintendent.

Rather extended services are now being offered to the young people of the Methodist Home. Among these is the expanded vocational program. A serious effort is being made to offer some vocational training to every boy and girl at the Home.

Clegg and Oden, Oklahoma. 1968.

Journal of the Oklahoma Conference.

Together, Oklahoma Area News Edition, December 1970.

HOWARD DAVIS

TAI TAPU, a small village twelve miles from Christchurch, NEW ZEALAND, contains a well-appointed Methodist church, on one wall of which is a plaque with this inscription:

The site on which this Church stands was formerly owned by the brothers William, Robert and George Rhodes, one of whose ancestors rescued John Wesley from the flames at Epworth Rectory, Lincolnshire, on 9th February, 1709.

This tablet was presented by their kinsman, Colonel the Honourable Sir R. Heaton Rhodes, K.C.V.O., K.B.E., M.L.C.

WILLIAM T. BLIGHT

TAIWAN (Formosa) is an island lying one hundred miles off the Fukien coast of CHINA. The name, Taiwan, means "Terraced Cove." It is separated from mainland China by the Formosa Strait, and from the PHILIPPINE ISLANDS by the Bashi Strait to the southeast. Sixty small islands nearby are known as the Penghu (Pescadores).

Taiwan is 250 miles north-south, and eighty miles wide, with an area of 13,885 square miles. The population is 10,661,000, including several hundred thousand aborigines of Polynesian origin living in secluded mountains, 7,000,000 Formosans or descendants of the fourteenth century migration from Fukien, 3,000,000 Mandarin-speaking Chinese who fled the mainland in 1948-49 during the Communist take-over, and 20,000 Americans, Europeans and others in diplomatic, military, business and missionary work.

Since 1949 Taiwan has been the "exile" seat of government of Nationalist China, a charter member of the United Nations, and one of the five permanent members of the Security Council. The capital is Taipei near the northern tip of the island.

The aboriginal Polynesians have been inhabitants since the beginning of history. Spanish and Portuguese navigators attempted settlements, calling the island "Formosa" because of its beauty. The Dutch held control for a time, but they were finally expelled by the Chinese. French footholds lasted only briefly. Chinese control was factual until the conclusion of the Sino-Japanese War in 1895, the Japanese ruling Taiwan for the next fifty years.

Taiwan served JAPAN as a major springboard for attacks to the south and east in the first phase of the second World War. The island was restored to China as a province after the Japanese collapse in 1945. Retreating from the Communist offensives until 1949, the Nationalist Government succeeded in escaping to Taiwan, and has maintained control there.

The complete autonomy and integrity of Nationalist China was guaranteed by the United States, and its Seventh Fleet has constituted a barrier in the adjacent waters. Despite continuous shelling and other harassment, Nationalist China has held certain off-shore islands along the mainland coast, notably Quemoy in Amoy harbor, and Matsu farther to the north. Generalissimo CHIANG KAI-SHEK continues as first president of the National Republic of China. He and MADAME CHIANG are Methodists.

WESLEY CHURCH, TAIPEI, TAIWAN

Among the Chinese who fled to Taiwan (1948-49), were Methodists and others related to Methodist institutions. Early in 1953, the Methodist Board of Missions sent missionaries to Taiwan to restore the church for the refugees under the leadership of Bishop RALPH A. WARD, who served until his death in HONG KONG. What was begun as "an interim ministry to the evacuees from Communist oppression" developed into an indigenous church.

The work centers in Taipei (north), in Taichung (center), and Tainan (south). Evangelistic efforts move out into the villages. At Taipei there is an important medical unit—the Water of Life Clinic—personally financed and founded by Dr. and Mrs. Edward Perkins, and named for the notable hospital they had maintained for many years at Kiukiang, China, prior to the Communist advance. The Law School of historic Soochow University was reactivated by its alumni in 1951 at Taipei. It developed five departments, and enrolled 1,500 students. The work was organized as the Taiwan Provisional Annual Conference, a commission of three bishops from America exercising presidency in rotation until 1964.

In 1952 the FREE METHODIST CHURCH of the United States began work in Taiwan at Kaohsiung, a port city thirty miles south of Tainan. The founders were experienced China missionaries, Miss Geneva Sayre, evangelist and administrator, and Miss Kate Leininger, a nurse. Miss Sayre had been United Nations Children's Fund director for the Honan Province, where she "risked her life after the political turmoil to establish the Bible School on a firm basis," before yielding to house arrest, from which she was permitted to be released in 1951.

Success attended the work. The first church was dedicated at Kaohsiung in 1953, and the average was one a year for a decade. A second center was established at Pingtung, fifteen miles inland. The Bible school was organized in 1955. The 1962 Annual Report of the Free Methodist Board of Missions indicates 1,212 members of the church and several thousand in the community.

Statistics of The United Methodist Church in Taiwan: Membership in 1968 was reported as 3,255; ministers, twenty-three elders (three retired), three deacons, four on trial, four theological students, and ten supply pastors. Churches reported were fourteen local churches, four chapels and two preaching points. Villages where work was being carried on consisted of two refugee villages, a Good News village, Kaohsiung, and Peace Village in Taipei.

Encyclopaedia Britannica.

Knetler, Methodism in Taiwan. N.d.

B. S. Lamson, Venture. 1960.

Barbara H. Lewis, Methodist Overseas Missions. 1960.

L. R. Marston, From Age to Age. 1960.

World Methodist Council, Handbook of Information, 1966-71.

ARTHUR BRUCE MOSS

HAZEN G. WERNER

TALBOT, SAMSON D. (1819-1872), a bishop of the A.M.E. ZION CHURCH, was born in West Bridgewater, Mass. He married Sarah De Groat of Onondaga, N. Y. in 1844. Following her death, he married Sarah Cassaway in December 1865. He was converted and called to preach in 1841, joining the New York Conference in 1844, at which time he was ordained a deacon by Superintendent CHRISTOPHER RUSH. The following year he was ordained an elder. His pastorates included NEW YORK, BOSTON, NEWARK, N. J., ROCHESTER, SYRACUSE, WASHINGTON, and Troy. For some time he was treasurer of the Book Concern. He was elected to the bishopric in 1864.

DAVID H. BRADLEY

TALLAHASSEE, FLORIDA, U.S.A. Trinity Church is the oldest of the larger churches of the FLORIDA CONFERENCE, having been first established as a Methodist Society in 1824 by missionaries and appointees of the SOUTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE. The Tallahassee District of this Conference was created in 1825, and included three charges: Chattahoochee Mission, Early Mission and Tallahassee Mission. The Florida Conference, having been authorized by the GENERAL CONFERENCE in 1844, was organized in the Tallahassee Methodist Church in 1845. Trinity Church now numbers 2,613 members, and serves a constituency made up of business and professional people of the community, government officials and employees, and university faculty and students.

GEORGE A. FOSTER

TALLEY, NICHOLAS (1791-1873), American pioneer preacher of SOUTH CAROLINA, was born near RICHMOND, Va., on May 2, 1791, and died on May 10, 1873. He was converted in Green County, Ga., in 1810, under the preaching of HOPE HULL, and was received on trial in the SOUTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE, 1812, and sent to the Little Peedee Circuit. This was then more than 100 miles in extent and contained twenty-eight preaching appointments. In his ministry, he was twenty-two years on districts, twelve on stations, nine on circuits, and fourteen on missions. For many successive sessions he was elected a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE. Chreitzberg states that he had the longest record of effective service in the South Carolina Conference of any man with the exception of one other who had received fifty-four appointments and had been a superannuate for five years. "Mr. Talley was above common height and of great physical endurance; his face was expressive of intelligence and benevolence; his voice was not musical, but rather nasal, and his delivery somewhat monotonous; yet in all his ministry, he was self-possessed, dignified, and refined. His preaching was hortatory in character and often powerful in effect, his ministry popular and successful. He lived to the age of 82 years. . . ." (Chreiztberg, p. 234.) According to Simpson, "The last entry in his diary was May 2, 1873, as follows: 'My birthday. Eighty-two years I have lived on the bounty and goodness of God. I feel grateful, and hope to believe he doeth all things well.'" He was buried in the Washington Street Cemetery in COLUMBIA, S. C.

A. M. Chreiztberg, Methodism in the Carolinas. 1897.
M. Simpson, Cyclopaedia. 1878. N. B. H.

TAMPA, FLORIDA, U.S.A., on FLORIDA's west coast, is the State's third largest city, and dates back to a place of settlement at the time of the first Spanish occupation or before 1763. Tampa became incorporated in 1855 in the newly established and growing State of Florida.

In January 1843, Andrew J. Deavers was appointed to the "Chickichaty and Tampa Bay" Circuit. In 1844 it became known as the "Hillsboro," but the following year when the FLORIDA CONFERENCE was organized, it was left out as an appointment because of a shortage of preachers. The next year the Hillsborough Circuit reappeared. In January, 1852, a new frontier district was begun and named the Tampa District. Tampa has remained through the years as a conference district.

The first Methodist services were held in Tampa in the Palmer House, perhaps as early as 1843. A society was finally formed there in July 1846, by John C. Ley, who was pastor of the Ocean Pond Circuit. The society met in the homes of its members and then later in the court house. In 1850, under the leadership of John R. Comer, the first church building was begun in Tampa; it was completed in 1852. This church, which was used by a number of other denominations, was known affectionately as "The Little White Church." This building, which stood on the corner of Lafayette and Morgan was used as the Methodist Church until a new structure was built in 1890. It is said that Andrew Jackson gave a contribution of a five dollar gold piece toward the construction of this church. Franklin Stewart, the first presiding elder of the Tampa District, was the first Methodist preacher to preach in the "Little White Church." In 1891 the appointment to Tampa began to read, "Tampa and Mission." In 1891 the membership was reported to be 439 members and two local preachers.

As the town spread out it became difficult for everyone who was a Methodist to come to the First Church. Some families in the Hyde Park Section became concerned that their children were unable to go to SUNDAY SCHOOL. On Sunday, March 12, 1899, thirty persons met to form the first Sunday school in a two-room red school house, located at what is now Platt and Magnolia. Two Sundays later John Dodwell of Port Tampa, newly established appointment, preached in Hyde Park both morning and evening, but regular preaching services were not scheduled.

The following year Henry Hice was appointed pastor of Hyde Park Church as it had become, and regular church meetings were held at a furniture store on Hyde Park Avenue at Cleveland. A little frame church building was erected that year, 1900, on the present site of the church. The present church was built in 1907 by generous gifts from members, at a total cost of $30,000.

Other churches began to organize as the city grew in population until by 1926 there were thirteen Methodist churches in Tampa. The number had increased to fifteen by the time of unification.

The M.E. Church never had a church in Tampa. They were very successful on the other side of Tampa Bay in St. Petersburg where they had five churches. Today, there are thirty United Methodist churches within the greater Tampa Area.

First Church of Tampa was established on July 26, 1846 under the leadership of John C. Ley with seventeen members present. This was ten years before the city of Tampa was established. The community at that time was known as Fort Brooke. The first church services were held in the Palmer House, the leading hotel of the community. Services were held later in the residences of some of the people and in the court house.

The first church building was begun in 1850 and completed in 1853. It was known as "The Little White Church" and was located at the intersection of Lafayette and Morgan Streets. The first pastor was Franklin Stewart. In 1890 a new sanctuary was erected under the leadership of J. C. Sale. This building was torn down in 1967 to make room for the construction of a new sanctuary and administration building.

The First Church of Tampa is the first Protestant church to be built on the West Coast of Florida and is the Mother of Methodism on the West Coast. Two pastors from this church have been elected to the episcopacy, the late JOHN BRANSCOMB in 1952; and EDWARD J. PENDERGRASS, in 1964.

The church reported 1,181 members in 1970.

Hyde Park Church was established in 1900. It has been instrumental in establishing several neighborhood churches and in providing young people for Christian ministry. It serves the west-end of Tampa, including the University of Tampa, and in 1970 reported 1,255 members.

Palma Ceia Church is a relatively young church. In April 1946 thirteen people met in a home in southwest Tampa, a rapidly growing area, to consider establishing a Methodist Church to serve the people there. Easter Sunday, April 16, 1946, the Church found its birthplace in the Palma Ceia Theatre, where it continued to meet for worship during the next two years. In 1948 the first unit of the church building was completed on the present Dale Mabry location. By this time there were 400 members of the congregation. In January 1949, Bishop Roy SHORT dedicated the first unit of the church, which was a fellowship hall and classroom area.

In January 1951, ground was broken for the Spanish-inspired modern masonry sanctuary. It was completed in time for Christmas services 1952. Additional educational space was provided in 1957 by the construction of two units that tied the existing building together.

Palma Ceia church has been active in serving the community, and it continues to grow and serve. At the present the church is building a new fellowship hall, recreation area, and administrative complex, the total cost to be $450,000. The membership of Palma Ceia Church was 2,581 in 1970, and it is expected to grow even larger.

Though a relatively young church, Palma Ceia has worked for purposes, goals, and desires, in line with the Christian faith of the ages. It is the firm conviction of the people of this church, that Palma Ceia will be able to continue to give dynamic leadership for Christian living in Tampa, and in the world.

A significant part of the church plant is the colorful stained glass rose window which crowns the altar of the nave at Palma Ceia and portrays the Old and New Testaments. The window was created and fashioned in Munich, Germany, shipped to Tampa and placed in the church. It was given in memory of one of the charter members by his wife and children. The huge window, designed in brilliant hues, creates an inspiring focal point in the church sanctuary. It gives a vivid picture of the foundations of Christian faith, and is a continual inspiration to all who worship in the sanctuary.

Seminole Heights Church is an influential church which followed the growth of this expanding city. The vision and foresight of First Church, Tampa, gave birth to a meeting place on the edge of the city. W. A. Meyers, presiding elder, and W. A. Cooper, pastor of First Church, as well as several other preachers, brought the vision to fulfillment. W. F. Dunkle preached the first sermon on June 19, 1921, and J. W. Windham, Jr., was put in direct charge. The Sunday school grew rapidly and in three months the attendance passed 200.

The annual conference met in ORLANDO on Dec. 17, 1921, and appointed R. L. Allen pastor in charge. He, with the presiding elder, organized the church with 112 charter members.

In March 1922, John B. Culpepper, Sr., and J. B. Culpepper, Jr., held a tent revival meeting for the church and new members made necessary a new building for worship. The new church seated 400, but in three years it was overcrowded and people were turned away. Sunday school classes met under the trees and in the school house. Ground was broken for a new sanctuary on June 16, 1926. Bishop HOYT M. DOBBS laid the cornerstone in the spring of 1927. The first service was held by R. L. Allen in the new sanctuary on March 11, 1928.

From the membership of Seminole Heights, thirteen young people have gone into full time Christian service. One of the former ministers, E. J. Pendergrass, is now a bishop of the Church.

The Alpha Auxiliary was organized in 1925 for the purpose of buying a pipe organ, a project that was completed in December 1934, after raising $10,000. The church labored for many years to pay out of debt and finally by devoted service and hard work of preachers and laymen alike, the church was dedicated by Bishop ARTHUR J. MOORE on January 14, 1945. It presently has a membership of 1,830 (1970).

Ybor City is situated in the heart of the city of Tampa. In its early history the population was basically Cuban, Italian, and Spanish. The Home Missionary Society of the UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST, in cooperation with their Florida Conference, opened a mission in 1942. The Rev. and Mrs. Plutarco Roa, who had served as missionaries in South America, were appointed as the first missionaries. After a long period of visitation in the homes of the community, a church of seventeen members was organized on Easter Sunday, 1945. In addition to the church a kindergarten and elementary school were added to meet the needs of the community. In 1965 approximately 330 children were enrolled in the schools. With a mission staff of thirteen and with the change in the community, the entire ministry has been under study, with a possible change in the area of mission.

In The United Methodist Church several former Methodist projects were united administratively to this work under the supervision of Hector Navas, successor to Plutarco Roa.

General Minutes, UMC, 1970.

Mrs. Paul Lake, History of Hyde Park Methodist Church. 1944.

WILLIAM E. BROOKS

THOMAS G. MITCHELL

HAROLD E. BUELL

MRS. S. J. OZBURN

ROY BEN RIDLEY

LOIS MILLER

TAMPERE, Finland (Tammerfors), is the second largest city in FINLAND, located about one hundred miles north of HELSINKI. Methodist work began under great difficulties in this city since the Methodist Church is a minority church in Finland, which has a state church. Only within comparatively recent years have people been permitted to join the Methodist Church without court procedures. Bishop ODD HAGEN, administering Finland as part of the Stockholm Area, encouraged the people to buy an old three story house in Tampere about 1957, and a sanctuary was arranged for on the third floor, while shops, offices, and apartments were in the lower stories of this building. The pastor and his family also lived in it.

Following a visit of Bishop HARMON in 1962, the WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE undertook to assist the Tampere congregation, then of about 100 members, to build a new church which would more adequately do the work of the church in this large and growing city. The Western North Carolina Conference assumed a $50,000 special for the Tampere church, and a new building was erected and the church consecrated on May 23, 1968. The church has a SUNDAY SCHOOL, a woman's society, and an organized men's group, and at present gives promise of growth and strength. The old building was taken care of by the Finnish Conference and was remodeled and the rent from its various offices presently assists in supporting the program of the church.

William Stokes of Reidsville, N. C., made a personal visit to Tampere while the rebuilding project was in a formative stage, and his representation before the Western North Carolina Conference, as well as the leadership of Bishop EARL G. HUNT, materially assisted in the raising of the $50,000 mission special within the allotted time.

N. B. H.

TANGITERORIA, Northland, NEW ZEALAND, was the site of a mission station in the Northern Wairoa district founded by JAMES WALLIS in 1836. He was succeeded by JAMES BULLER in 1840. Buller labored there for fourteen years, preaching in many villages round the Kaipara Harbor and on the Northern Wairoa River, and even crossing from time to time to preach in villages near Whangarei, on the east coast. While resident at Tangiteroria, Buller visited Auckland and conducted the first Methodist services there in September 1841.

The site of the station is marked by a simple cairn which stands about two chains (Ed. Note: a chain measures twenty-two yards) back in a farmer's paddock from the Whangarei—Dargaville Road.

W. Morley, New Zealand. 1900.

L. R. M. GILMORE

TANNER, BENJAMIN TUCKER (1835-1915), American bishop of the A.M.E. CHURCH, was born in PITTSBURGH, Pa., on Dec. 25, 1835. He was educated at Avery College and Western Theological Seminary, both located in PENNSYLVANIA. He was converted in 1856 and ordained DEACON and ELDER in 1860. He was pastor of a Presbyterian Church in WASHINGTON, D. C. from 1860-68. Following this pastorate he embarked upon a distinguished literary career as editor of The Christian Recorder (1868-1884) and founder-editor of the A.M.E. Review (1884-1888). In 1888 Tanner was elected to the episcopacy. After supervising the work of the Eleventh, First, Fifth and Ninth Episcopal Districts, he retired in 1908 and died in PHILADELPHIA in 1915. Bishop Tanner, the author of a standard work, Outline of A.M.E. Church History (1884) and other books, was the head of one of Philadelphia's most distinguished Negro families, including his son, the world acclaimed artist, Henry O. Tanner.

R. R. Wright, The Bishops. 1963.

GRANT S. SHOCKLEY

TAPPAN, JOHN (1799-1862), American bishop of the A.M.E. ZION CHURCH, was born June 20, 1799, in NORTH CAROLINA, later evidently moving to NEW YORK where (after his conversion, Sept. 5, 1830), he began preaching in 1832. He joined the conference June 18, 1833, and was made a DEACON May 20, 1834, and an ELDER May 20, 1844. The date given for his elevation to the superintendency appears as being June 4, 1854, which evidently means that he was elected in a special General Conference of that year. He died in December, 1862.

DAVID H. BRADLEY

TARBELL, MARTHA (1862-1948), American writer and author of Tarbell's Teachers' Guide for forty-two years, was born in 1862 in INDIANA. The daughter of Horace Sumner and Martha (Treat) Tarbell, she graduated from DEPAUW UNIVERSITY, A.B., 1884; A.M., 1887; D.Litt, 1933. Her father was a teacher and public school administrator. She collaborated with her father in the preparation of a series of school geographies in 1896, and various textbooks in language from 1891 to 1903. In 1907 she published The Geography of Palestine, and in 1910 In the Master's Country. In 1906 the first issue of Tarbell's Teachers' Guide appeared. This annual publication was destined to have great influence with Church School teachers. She continued as author of the Guide until her death, Oct. 27, 1948.

For many years Miss Tarbell taught a Bible class in Calvary Methodist Church in EAST ORANGE, N. J. A member of Phi Beta Kappa and the Garden Club and Woman's Club of the Oranges, she was active in both church and community work. Throughout her long life her devotion and service toward the Methodist Church never wavered.

Newark (New Jersey) Evening News, October 28, 1948.

HENRY L. LAMRDIN

TARBILL, ELMER ELLSWORTH (1861-1903), American scholar and clergyman, carried forward the tradition of hardy circuit-riding on the open range cattle country and mountains of WYOMING. He was born on a farm in OHIO, Dec. 23, 1861. OHIO WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY conferred his A.B. in 1887, A.M. in 1893, and Ph.D. in 1899; in 1889 he was given the S.T.B. degree by BOSTON UNIVERSITY. Ordained in 1886 by Bishop CYRUS

D. Foss, he was admitted on trial at Horton, Kan., and ordained as elder in 1894 at Abilene, Kan., by Bishop JOHN H. VINCENT.

After serving several charges in KANSAS, he was appointed superintendent of the Wyoming Mission on Nov. 18, 1896, at the age of thirty-five. Applying himself with ardor to the challenge of the unchurched cattle empire, in six years he traveled 10,500 miles by stage and 125,000 miles by rail. In one Wyoming town he was received with frontier hospitality and broadmindedness reflected in a sign over a saloon: "Tonight. Preaching at 7:30, Dance at 9. After Dance, Big Poker Game." His achievement of having all indebtedness paid on every church in Wyoming brought about a facetious threat of E. M. Mills, secretary of the Twentieth Century Thank-Offering Commission: "This is so contrary to Methodist practice that Brother Tarbill deserves to be arraigned for heresy!"

Tarbill's health broke under the strain and in 1903 he was stationed at Fort Collins, Colo., where he was stricken in the pulpit. A few weeks later he died in Kansas City, Kan., on Aug. 13, 1903, aged forty-one, leaving a widow and three children.

Central Christian Advocate, Sept. 9, 1903. LELAND D. CASE

J. W. TARBOUTX

TARBOUTX, JOHN WILLIAM (1858-1940), American preacher, missionary to BRAZIL, and first bishop of the autonomous Methodist Church in that country, was born in Georgetown, S. C., on Sept. 13, 1858. He graduated from WOFFORD COLLEGE, was ordained in December 1877, and soon afterwards married Susan Frances Kirkland. After a few years of pastoral work in the U.S.A., he went to Brazil with his wife and baby son, arriving in RIO DE JANEIRO in July 1883. He was one of the three preachers (JAMES KENNEDY, J. W. Tarboux and H. C. TUCKER), who in 1886 constituted the first Annual Conference of the Methodist Church in Brazil—the smallest conference ever to be organized in Methodism.

While in Brazil, Tarboux served as pastor, presiding elder, church organizer and educator. He was best-known and best-loved for his twelve years of service as President (Reitor) of Granbery College (INSTITUTO GRANBERY) in JUIZ DE FORA, State of Minas Gerais. His dream was to make it a Methodist University, and he founded Schools of Dentistry, Pharmacy and Law, which became well-known over Brazil. In this work, Mrs. Tarboux, called the "Mother of the Granbery Boys," was his invaluable helper.

Upon superannuation in 1921, he retired to MIAMI, Fla., where for seven years he engaged actively in the development of a church which was named later, in his honor, the Tarboux Memorial.

When the organizing General Conference of the autonomous Methodist Church in Brazil met in São Paulo, on Sept. 4, 1930, Tarboux, though long absent, was elected its first bishop. He sailed for Brazil immediately and was consecrated in Catete Church, Rio de Janeiro. He was re-elected in January 1934, since at that time bishops were elected for five years and not for life-tenure. On this occasion, he ordained CESAR DACORSO as the first Brazilian bishop. He thus ended thirty-seven years of service in Brazil. Broken in health, Bishop Tarboux returned to Miami where he died on May 2, 1940.

Tributes to his life of service were countless. One of Brazil's most famous journalists, the Catholic Austregésilo de Atayde, wrote in a Rio paper, "Never in the eyes of a foreigner, have I seen such tender remembrance of our country." Bishop Tarboux was survived by his wife, three daughters, and two sons.

Expositor Cristão, May 28 and July 9, 1940.

J. L. Kennedy, Metodismo no Brasil. 1928.

O Granberyense, May 31, 1940.

World Outlook, October 1940.

EPAMINONDAS MOURA

TASMANIA. (See VICTORIA AND TASMANIA CONFERENCE.)

TATE, WILLIS McDONALD (1911-), American educator and university president, was born in DENVER, Colo., on May 18, 1911. He spent his boyhood in SAN ANTONIO, Texas, graduating from the old Main Avenue High School. He then went to SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIVERSITY, where he received the A.B. degree in 1932, M.A. (in sociology) in 1935, and did further graduate work at the University of Texas and at the University of Chicago. He holds honorary degrees from TEXAS WESLEYAN COLLEGE, CENTENARY COLLEGE (Louisiana), the UNIVERSITY OF DENVER, OKLAHOMA CITY UNIVERSITY, and the University of Tulsa. As an athlete he was a member of Southern Methodist's championship football team of 1931, receiving strong nomination for the All-American football team.

Dr. Tate entered the teaching profession and for a time was principal of the Alamo Heights Elementary and Junior High Schools in San Antonio. In April 1943, he went to HOUSTON, Texas, where he became executive assistant to the pastor of the First Methodist Church there.

He married, in 1932, Joel Estes of Cleburne, Texas, a classmate at S.M.U. They have two children, a son, Willis, Jr. of Dallas; and a daughter, Mrs. John Withers of the same city, and three grandchildren. Dr. Tate's brother, Robert S. Tate, Jr., is pastor of the First Methodist Church in Austin, Texas.

In September 1945, Dr. Tate went to Southern Methodist University as assistant dean of students; on July 1, 1948, he was appointed dean of students. He was elected fifth president of Southern Methodist on May 6, 1954, succeeding UMPHREY LEE.

Dr. Tate is active in church and public affairs, being past chairman of the Council of Protestant Colleges and Universities; past president of the Texas Association of Colleges and Universities; past chairman of the Inter-

University Council of the Dallas and Fort Worth Metropolitan Areas, and vice president of the UNIVERSITY SENATE of The Methodist Church. He was a member of the GENERAL CONFERENCE of The Methodist Church of 1964 and '66, and being elected chairman of chairmen by the other committee chairmen, it was his duty to remain upon the platform to introduce properly and keep in order the reports of the various legislative and standing committees of the Conference. He is co-author with A. Q. Sartain and W. W. Finlay, of Human Behavior in Industry (McGraw-Hill, 1954).

Journal of the 1964 General Conference, TMC.

Who's Who in America. Marquis Co. J. DANIEL BARRON

TAUROA, MATARAE (1896-1956), NEW ZEALAND Methodist Maori minister, was born in Te Patunga, Whangaroa, and was educated at St. Stephen's Maori Boys' School (Anglican) and Wesley College, Three Kings. He trained for the ministry at the theological college at Dunholme, AUCKLAND.

He was a fluent preacher in both English and Maori and held a number of important circuit appointments. He retired to his birthplace, where he became a recognized elder of the people. He died at Kaeo, Northland, on Dec. 17, 1956.

New Zealand Methodist Times, April 27, 1957.

L. R. M. GILMORE

TAVARES, JOÃO EVANGELISTA (1869-1939), Brazilian Methodist preacher, was born Dec. 27, 1869, in the state of Minas Gerais. Though from a poor home, he managed to study at GRANBERY COLLEGE (now INSTITUTO) in JUIZ DE FÓRA; he graduated from the school of pharmacy in Ouro Preto, Minas Gerais, in 1907, and from the law school in RIO DE JANEIRO in 1915.

In 1890 he became an exhorter and local preacher, was ordained DEACON in 1892 and ELDER in 1895. He was pastor of more than ten churches in the Federal District (then Rio de Janeiro) and interior; for a term he was editor of the weekly Expositor Cristão, and was secretary of the Conference Board of Missions. In this post, he pioneered the cause of self-support for the Brazilian Methodist ministry, making the first motion to this effect at the Annual Conference in 1919.

Twice, in 1916 and in 1917, because of the absence of a bishop (the bishops then were North Americans), he was elected to preside over annual conferences. In 1930 he received an honorary diploma from the Y.M.C.A. in Rio de Janeiro, commemorating thirty years as member and worker for the same. He was known as a Latin scholar and proficient writer, was a good preacher, counselor, and friend. He retired in 1930, after forty years in the service of the Methodist Church. His wife was Cristina Bouças Tavares, by whom he had several children. He and his wife lived to celebrate their fiftieth wedding anniversary. He died in Todos os Santos, near Rio, Sept. 16, 1939.

J. L. Kennedy, Metodismo no Brasil. 1928.

ANTONIO DE CAMPOS GONÇALVES

TAWA, HIKA (? -1831), was the first convert of the NEW ZEALAND Wesleyan Maori Mission. He was a native of rank who had received instruction from SAMUEL LEIGH at Wesleydale in 1823. When the mission was reestablished at Mangungu, he came for further teaching. He was baptized on Feb. 16, 1831, but died shortly afterward.

W. Morley, New Zealand. 1900. L. R. M. GILMORE

CHARLES TAYLOR

TAYLOR, CHARLES (1819-1897), an American minister and physician who went to CHINA in 1848 as one of the very first missionaries of the M.E. Church, South. He was born in BOSTON, Mass., on Sept. 15, 1819, and was graduated from the University of New York with highest honors in 1840.

He went to SOUTH CAROLINA early in 1841, taught in a private school in Aiken, and then for three years taught in the COKESBURY CONFERENCE SCHOOL. At the close of 1844 he was admitted on trial into the SOUTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE, Bishop JAMES O. ANDREW presiding. He was appointed as junior preacher on the Darlington Circuit, and it was while serving that large circuit that a conversation with WILLIAM CAPERS led Taylor to volunteer to be a missionary. In 1845 he was pastor at Camden, S. C.

In 1846 he was married to Charlotte Jane Camewell, daughter of JOHN CAMEWELL, who had been ordained by Bishop ASBURY. The newly-wedded couple went to PHILADELPHIA, where Taylor studied medicine and received his medical doctorate.

Meanwhile various attempts were made to find another missionary to go to China with Taylor. BENJAMIN JENKINS, printer of The Southern Christian Advocate, volunteered in response to an editorial appeal by WILLIAM M. WIGHTMAN, editor. Jenkins was ordained DEACON and he and Taylor were ordained ELDERS the same day in Norfolk, Va. They sailed for China from Boston in April 1848. In China both men studied Chinese and began preaching. Taylor also served and witnessed through his medical ministry.

Ill health led Mrs. Taylor to return home in 1852, and Taylor rejoined her in 1854. Back home he spent much time traveling, telling the needs of the China mission and stimulating missionary interest. In 1856 he became a professor in Spartanburg Female College, and president in 1857. The GENERAL CONFERENCE made him the first SUNDAY SCHOOL secretary of the M.E. Church, South. In the straitened days of the Civil War, he returned to the Conference and was for four years presiding elder of the Wadesboro District, and in 1866 pastor of Sumter Circuit. That year he was elected president of KENTUCKY WESLEYAN COLLEGE. His last years were spent in ALABAMA. He died at Courtland on Feb. 1, 1897.

While in China he published a work on Harmony of the Gospels, as well as several tracts in Chinese. He also wrote Five Years in China, and Baptism in a Nutshell. Of Taylor's ministry in China, Bishop H. M. DuBOISE said "few had made footprints before him." DuBOISE classed Taylor with JOHN W. LAMBUTH and YOUNG J. ALLEN as constituting a trio of "master missionaries" preeminent in the history of connectional missions.

A. D. Betts, South Carolina. 1952.

H. M. DuBOISE, History of Methodism. 1916.

M. Simpson, Cyclopaedia. 1881.

N. B. II.

TAYLOR, CHARLES E. (? -1950), was a NEW ZEALAND Methodist layman. Badly crippled in childhood, he became by sheer courage, ability and faith a leading figure in legal and civic affairs and an outstanding layman of the Methodist Church of New Zealand. Following several years as mayor of Feilding, he declined nomination as candidate for a "safe" seat in Parliament. He was head of a well-known legal firm in the Manawatu district. But nearest to Charles Taylor's heart was the work of the Kingdom of God. He occupied, with conspicuous ability, nearly every office open to a layman of the Methodist Church, and was a valued member of numerous boards and committees. His greatest concern was overseas missions, and his able advocacy of this work was a constant challenge to the whole church.

ARTHUR H. SCRIVIN

TAYLOR, DEAN (1878-1943), American newspaper editor-owner and writer, and prominent layman, was born at Warren, Ohio, on Oct. 8, 1878, the son of Benjamin J. and Gertrude T. Taylor and grandson of Matthew B. Taylor and Adaline Adams Hapgood, all prominent Warren Methodists. Following in the footsteps of his maternal grandfather and his father, Taylor was a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCES of the M.E. Church in 1928, 1932, 1936, the Uniting Conference in 1939, and 1940. He was a member of the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension, 1928-43, Commission on EVANGELISM, 1932-1943, and Chairman of the General Conference sub-committee on LAY ACTIVITIES in 1932, 1936.

He graduated from MT. UNION COLLEGE, Alliance, Ohio, in 1902 and from Harvard University in 1903. He married Jessie I. Minneley of Meadville, Pa., in 1906. Their two sons, Ben J. Taylor of Fairfield, Iowa, and James S. Taylor, Bedford, Iowa, became newspapermen and served on the Board of Lay Activities of the SOUTH IOWA CONFERENCE. Ben J. was a delegate to the General Conference in 1948.

Dean Taylor was the author of The Aldersgate Call And The New Day and Centennial of Fairfield Methodism. He was a trustee of IOWA WESLEYAN COLLEGE at Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, and a member of the Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity and other organizations. After working on several OHIO daily newspapers, he with his father and brother, Alfred W. Taylor, purchased the Daily Journal at Fairfield, Iowa, in 1906; this was consolidated with the Weekly Ledger in 1920. He was postmaster at Fairfield from 1921 to 1930. He then repurchased the interest in the Daily Ledger. He died on Sept. 23, 1943, at Rochester, Minn., and was buried in Evergreen cemetery at Fairfield, Iowa.

Who's Who in Iowa, 1940.

Who's Who in Pan-Methodism, 1940.

BEN J. TAYLOR

TAYLOR, EDWARD THOMPSON (FATHER) (1793-1871), colorful American sailor preacher, was born of unknown parents near RICHMOND, Va. Leaving a foster home, he ran away at the age of seven to go to sea. For ten years he shared the common life of a sailor of his time. On a night in 1811 young Taylor was attracted by the interest surrounding religious services which were being conducted in BOSTON by ELIJAH HEDDING, a powerful Methodist evangelist, who later became the eighth bishop of the M.E. Church. Failing to gain entrance by the door of the building in which the services were being held, Taylor climbed through a window. The revivalist's message persuaded the young sailor to become a Christian in general and a Methodist in particular. Thereafter, he listed his birthdate as the date of his conversion.

Following his religious experience, Taylor returned to sea. During the War of 1812, he served on an American privateer, the Black Hawk, and was captured by the British. While he was imprisoned at Halifax, Nova Scotia, his fellow prisoners, tiring of the English chaplains, received permission from their captors to choose one of their own number to pray and to preach for them. Taylor was chosen. This chance to preach must have nurtured in him a fascination for the pulpit, but immediately after his release from the captivity of the British, he became a peddler of tin and iron ware in the small coast towns of MASSACHUSETTS. He stopped his selling anytime he had a chance to win a convert to his new-found faith, and yet he did not meet the minimum standards for entrance into the ranks of the Methodist itineracy; he could not read the Bible or the hymnbook. However, he often created his own opportunities to preach as a layman, expounding upon a Biblical text which another read for him.

Taylor's tremendous determination was exemplified by his efforts to learn to read. Around 1815 he became a farm worker for a woman in exchange for his lodging and for instruction in reading. As soon as he was able to read, he was sent by Amos Binney to Newmarket Seminary, but six weeks of formal education was all that Taylor could endure while studying with youngsters who were half his own age.

"Father" Taylor was admitted to the Methodist conference of his area after he had learned to read, and he was assigned to a regular circuit in 1819. He rode the circuit for about ten years until he was commissioned to start a campaign which would bring some redeeming influence to the sailors of Boston. He started his work in 1828 in a small Methodist chapel, and by 1833 he was preaching in the newly-built, nonsectarian Seamen's Bethel which was located in the North Square. From his pulpit there, he preached for nearly forty years.

Taylor toured Europe in 1832, and took a trip to the Holy Land in 1842. He was chaplain of the Macedonia when it sailed from America to IRELAND in 1846 to carry food to the Irish who were suffering the pains of a potato famine.

The work of Father Taylor brought him into contact with numerous famous people of his time. While he was seeking funds for Seamen's Bethel, the minister met Ralph Waldo Emerson—then pastor of the Second Church (Unitarian) of Boston—and a life-long friendship ensued. Emerson was impressed by the realism and vividness of the converted seaman's sermons. The famous poet and essayist declared that Taylor was made by the same hand that had made Shakespeare, Demosthenes, and Burns. Of the five sermons that Emerson wrote after leaving the ministry, one of them was delivered for his friend, Father Taylor, at Seamen's Bethel.

Walt Whitman wrote a newspaper article about Taylor. Charles Dickens devoted a whole chapter to him in his American Notes, and Herman Melville probably used the vibrant minister as his pattern for "Father Mapple" in the novel Moby Dick. Other notables who took advantage of opportunities to hear Father Taylor preach included: Daniel Webster, Richard Henry Dana, Jenny Lind, William Ellery Channing, and Horace Mann.

The Seamen's Bethel was run without sectarianism and without deference to the wealthy and influential people who came to hear Father Taylor preach. Well-dressed Bostonians had to stand or sit around the wall of the church, the pews being reserved for the sailors. Declaring that "the world is just large enough for the people. There is no room for a partition wall," Taylor often prayed: "O Lord, deliver us from bad rum and bigotry." His sermons were considered to be among the best of the times, but no complete one survives because he always spoke extemporaneously.

Edward Thompson Taylor was successful in accomplishing the task for which Seamen's Bethel was built—to bring a Christlike influence to bear upon the sailors of the area. One of Boston's mayors said about the ex-seaman, "He is worth a hundred policemen."

Dictionary of American Biography.

Gilbert Haven and Thomas Russell, Father Taylor, the Sailor Preacher. New York: Hunt and Eaton, 1871.

JOHN W. YEATES

TAYLOR, EDWIN LLEWELLYN (1924-), secretary of the Conference of the METHODIST CHURCH IN THE CARIBBEAN AND THE AMERICAS, was born on May 3, 1924, at St. Michael, Barbados, son of Edwin Hilton Taylor and Miriam (Kinton) Taylor. He married Marguerite Elaine Rogers of St. Andrew, JAMAICA, on April 29, 1953. She is Sister in charge of the Public Health Service of the Bahamas, 1959-65. They have one daughter, Jennifer Marguerite.

Edwin L. Taylor was educated at Harrison College, Barbados, 1936-1941; at Caenwood Theological College, Jamaica, 1946-50; and at RICHMOND COLLEGE, University of London, B.D., 1957-58. He served as circuit minister, Kingstown, St. Vincent, 1950-51; Tunapuna, Port-of-Spain Circuit, Trinidad, 1951-52; Bahamas District, June, 1952, to February, 1967; Andros and Windward Mission Circuit, 1952-57; superintendent of Circuit, 1955-57, residing at Orange Creek, Cat Island. He became minister in charge of Wesley Church, Nassau, 1958-67, and also 1964-67 at St. Michael's Methodist Church, Nassau, which was built in 1964. He became secretary of the Bahamas District Synod, 1962-64.

In 1958 and 1964, E. L. Taylor attended courses of study at the Ecumenical Institute, Bossey near GENEVA, SWITZERLAND. He attended the WORLD METHODIST COUNCIL Executive Committee in Jamaica, October 1964, and also as a member of the Council attended the WORLD METHODIST CONFERENCE, London, in August 1966. He has been a member since 1964 of the Methodist Committee in consultation with the Anglican Church of the Province of the WEST INDIES. He was secretary of the Provincial Synod of the Methodist Church, Western Area, 1962-67. Designated secretary of the newly organized Methodist Church in the Caribbean and the Americas in 1964, he took up that appointment in May 1967, and resides in ANTIGUA where that Church's headquarters are located.

HUGH B. SHERLOCK

TAYLOR, HERBERT JOHN (1893-), American manufacturer and leader of religious youth movements, was born at Pickford, Mich., April 18, 1893, son of Frank and Nellie (Salkeld) Taylor. After graduation from NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY in 1917, he served in World War I as lieutenant (j.g.) U.S.N.R.F.; then engaged in insurance and real estate business at Pauls Valley, Okla. Joining the Jewel Tea Company, in 1924, he rose rapidly to assistant to the presidency, then became vice president and in 1931 president of the Club Aluminum Company.

Associated with religious activities since college days, he for many years was chairman of the Board of Trustees of the First United Methodist Church of Park Ridge, Ill. He also has been chairman of the board of the Young Life Campaign of Dallas, the Christian Workers Foundation, Christian Service Brigade, Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship, the Christian Camps Foundation, National Boys and Girls Week, and other groups relating laymen, particularly young people, to Christianity. He served on the Price Adjustment Board of the War Department, seeking to renegotiate World War II contracts for reduction of excessive profits.

Rising rapidly in Rotary International, he became its 1954-55 president. Seeking to translate the Sermon on the Mount into modern terms as a code for businessmen he devised "The Four Way Test of the Things We Think, Say or Do." It asks "1. Is it the truth? 2. Is it fair to all concerned? 3. Will it build goodwill and better friendships? and 4. Will it be beneficial to all concerned?" The Four Way Test was copyrighted in 1946 by Rotary International, and now is routinely used as vocational service indoctrination of new members of Rotary Clubs.

Herbert Taylor and Gloria Forbrich were married June 21, 1919, and they have two children, Gloria Beverly and Ramona Estelline.

The Rotarian Magazine, Sept. 1957, pp. 26 ff.

Who's Who in America.

LELAND D. CASE

TAYLOR, ISAAC (1787-18 ?), British writer on philosophical and religious subjects, was born in 1787 at Lavenham, one of the most beautiful villages in Suffolk, and was the son of Isaac Taylor (1759-1829), an Independent minister at Colchester. He settled at Ongar in Essex, and wrote a score of works. As early as 1818 he was on the staff of the Eclectic Review, and he later contributed to Good Words. His writings include: Natural History of Enthusiasm (1829); Fanaticism (1833); Spiritual Despotism (1835); Physical Theory of Another Life (1836); Home Education (1838); Logic in Theology and Other Essays (1859); Ultimate Civilisation (1860); and The Restoration of Belief (1864). His connection with Methodism lies in his book, Wesley and Methodism (1851), which gives an independent approach to the subject, but is not of the first importance.

JOHN T. WILKINSON

TAYLOR, ISABEL ANNIE (? -1961), NEW ZEALAND Methodist laywoman, was born in Marton, but after her marriage to Charles E. Taylor, lived in Feilding for over forty years. She was a devoted worker in the Feilding Methodist Church—a Bible class leader for about thirty years, a local preacher, and an effective lay pastor. She served a term as national president of the Methodist Women's Missionary Union, and was for several years a member of the standing committee of the Conference on Spiritual Advance.

In addition to her work in the local church, she was vitally interested in the BRITISH AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY and the Women's Christian Temperance Union. As mayoress, during her husband's term as mayor of Feilding from 1929 to 1935, Mrs. Taylor gave herself unsparingly in organizing relief work for needy people during the depression. She died at Feilding on Sept. 18, 1961.

New Zealand Methodist Times, Dec. 2, 1961.

L. R. M. GILMORE

J. PAUL TAYLOR

TAYLOR, J. PAUL (1895-), American minister and an ordained elder of the Genesee Conference, FREE METHODIST CHURCH, is now bishop-emeritus of that denomination. GREENVILLE COLLEGE conferred upon him the D.D. degree in 1949, and Houghton College, N. Y., the Litt.D. degree in 1958. He served in the Central Illinois and Genesee Conferences of the Free Methodist Church, a total of fifty years—twenty-five as pastor, one as evangelist, seven as superintendent, and bishop seventeen. He was elected bishop in 1947. He is the author of The Music of Pentecost; Holiness, the Finished Foundation, and Goodly Heritage. Bishop and Mrs. Taylor live in Winona Lake, Ind.

BYRON S. LAMSON

TAYLOR, JAMES (1823-1913), was a New Zealand Methodist layman who was born in Tunbridge Wells, Kent, England, on Aug. 17, 1823, and arrived in New Zealand on Nov. 13, 1840.

Robust in mind and body, he proved an ideal pioneer. During the Maori disturbances in the Hutt Valley, he joined the militia, receiving his commission as captain in 1846. Settled in Tawa Flat, he followed farming pursuits and was appointed a justice of the peace. He established a SUNDAY SCHOOL of which he was superintendent for sixty years. One room in his hospitable home was known as "the prophets' chamber," and was almost exclusively used by visiting preachers. For many years treasurer of the Primitive Methodist connection in New Zealand, he died in 1913.

ARCHER O. HARRIS

TAYLOR, JOSEPH (1752-1830), British Methodist, was born at Duffield near Derby in 1752. He became a Wesleyan itinerant in 1777, and overwork during a revival in West Cornwall, in which it is said that there was an increase of six hundred members, left him with a permanently weakened constitution. He was one of the three preachers whom JOHN WESLEY ordained for SCOTLAND; the ordinations (as DEACON and ELDER) took place on Aug. 1 and 2, 1785; the certificates have disappeared. Taylor had already been included in the LEGAL HUNDRED under John Wesley's DEED OF DECLARATION, 1784, and was one of the seven trustees appointed to be John Wesley's literary executors under a deed of 1790. He was elected president of the Wesleyan CONFERENCE in 1802. For the last nine years of his life he was a super-numerary at Derby, where he practiced the strictest frugality, that he might be the more charitable. He died on June 22, 1830.

JOHN NEWTON

TAYLOR, LANDON (1813- ?), American pioneer preacher in Iowa, was born in New York state in 1813. As a young man he emigrated to Ohio in 1834. Converted three years later, he was licensed to preach in 1842. He went to Iowa in 1845 and was received into the IOWA CONFERENCE at the session held in Old Zion Church, Burlington, that year. Mount Pleasant circuit was his first appointment in Iowa.

The following year, 1846, with a co-pastor, John Jay, he was appointed to the Montezuma Mission, the first work in Poweshiek County. Upon coming to Montezuma, they found nearly everybody afflicted with the "chills." Many families had moved together in order to have enough well persons to care for the sick. Taylor himself was seized with the ailment and although severely afflicted, continued his preaching.

Taylor was one of five men received into the Conference in 1845, who became prominent workers in Methodism. The others: L. B. Dennis, M. H. Hare, John Norris and Michael See. With the division of the Conference in 1856, he became a member of the newly established UPPER IOWA CONFERENCE.

In the latter part of his life, he became the author of a book, The Battlefield Reserves. It was a portrayal of pioneer Methodism in Iowa. He is remembered and revered, not only by Methodism but in circles of other faiths, for his deep consecration and consuming zeal.

RUSSELL C. NYE

PRINCE A. TAYLOR

TAYLOR, PRINCE ALBERT, JR. (1907-), American editor and bishop, was born at Hennessey, Okla., on Jan. 27, 1907, the son of Prince Albert and Bertha Ann (Littles) Taylor. He attended Samuel Huston College in AUSTIN, Texas, where he received his A.B. degree in 1931. Further degrees have been: B.D. from GAMMON THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY; M.A. from Union Theological Seminary and Columbia University in New York City in 1940; Ed.D. from New York University in 1948; D.D. from RUST COLLEGE in 1949, Gammon Seminary in 1950, and DICKINSON COLLEGE in 1967; the LL.D. from PHILANDER SMITH COLLEGE; and Litt.D., UNIVERSITY OF PUGET SOUND. On July 18, 1929, he was united in marriage to Annie Belle Thaxton. They have one daughter, Isabella Taylor Butts of Atlanta, Ga.

Prince A. Taylor was ordained elder in 1931 at the NORTH CAROLINA (ME) CONFERENCE. He held pastorates at Kernersville, N. C., 1931; Northwest Greensboro Charge, 1931-34; St. Thomas, Thomasville, N. C., 1934-37; East Calvary, New York City, 1937-40. He was the summer pastor at St. Mark's Church, New York City, 1940-42, 1945-45.

At the CENTRAL JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCE in NEW ORLEANS, La., he was elected a bishop of The Methodist Church on June 16, 1956, and assigned to the Monrovia, LIBERIA Area where he spent eight years. In 1964 he was assigned to the NEW JERSEY Area.

Further work and positions have included teaching in BENNETT COLLEGE, 1940-43; Gammon Seminary, 1943-48; exchange teacher at CLARK COLLEGE, 1943-48; adult counselor for the Central Jurisdiction National Methodist Student Commission, 1944-48; director of the Correspondence School for Commission on Ministerial Training, Central Jurisdiction, 1945-48; editor of the Central Christian Advocate, New Orleans, 1948-56; president of the COUNCIL OF BISHOPS, 1965-66; chairman of the Board of Directors of Religion In American Life since 1967. He is chairman of the COMMISSION ON THE STRUCTURE OF METHODISM OVERSEAS; chairman of the executive committee of the WORLD METHODIST COUNCIL; a member of the General Board of MISSIONS; vice-president of the New Jersey Council of Churches; a member of the Commission on Ecumenical Affairs; General Board, NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES. He is a trustee of several educational institutions, including Union Theological Seminary, WESLEY THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, AMERICAN UNIVERSITY, and DREW UNIVERSITY. He served on Gov. Richard J. Hughes' select Commission on Civil Disorder, State of New Jersey, 1967-68; is a member of the New Jersey Youth Commission, and the Pennsylvania/New Jersey/Delaware Committee on Regional Development.

Bishop Taylor was decorated twice by the Government of Liberia, and in 1964 received the St. George's Award Medal for distinguished service in The Methodist Church.

His episcopal residence is at Princeton, N. J., and he presides over the New Jersey Area which includes the NORTHERN NEW JERSEY (formerly the Newark) and the SOUTHERN NEW JERSEY Conferences.

Who's Who in America, Vol. 34.

Who's Who in The Methodist Church, 1966.

N. B. H.

TAYLOR, SAMUEL (1711-1772), British Anglican, the vicar of Quinton in Gloucestershire, was one of the six clergymen who were members of the first Methodist conference held in 1744; he was third on the list at the Conference of 1746. He was the son of Abdias Taylor, incumbent of St. John's, Worcester, the town where he was born. He entered Merton College, Oxford, in 1728; his first appointment was at St. Clement's, Worcester, and his second at Quinton, near Evesham (not to be confused with another Quinton, near Birmingham), where he stayed until his death in 1772. His association with the WESLEYS extended from 1743 to May 1746. CHARLES ATMORE, in his Methodist Memorial, says that Taylor "went out into the highways and hedges, into the streets and lanes of the city, in order to compel sinners to come to the marriage supper of the Lamb" (p. 221), and adds that he suffered greatly in the Methodist persecutions in the Wednesbury and Darlston area in Staffordshire. In March 1772, John Wesley preached in Quinton Church. RICHARD WHATCOAT was under Taylor's ministry in his early years.

JOHN T. WILKINSON

TAYLOR, THOMAS (1738-1816), British Methodist, was born at Rothwell, near LEEDS, on Nov. 11, 1738, and after a careless youth was converted by the Methodists. He became one of JOHN WESLEY's preachers in 1761, and saw hard service, with privations and persecutions, in WALES, IRELAND, SCOTLAND (where he pioneered Methodist work in Glasgow), and England. His account of these experiences may be found in Lives of Early Meth- odist Preachers. He had little formal education, but by hard study mastered Latin, Greek, and Hebrew, and published numerous sermons, tracts of a controversial nature (including An Answer to Paine's "Age of Reason" in 1796), and a full scale History of the Waldenses and Albigenses.

THOMAS TAYLOR

Taylor was one of the inner group of preachers on whom John Wesley relied in the last decade of his life. In the controversy over the administration of the SACRAMENTS after Wesley's death in 1791, Taylor strongly favored their administration by the Methodist preachers. He was chosen president of the Wesleyan CONFERENCE in 1796, and in this capacity he pronounced sentence of expulsion upon ALEXANDER KILHAM, the final act of the drama which led to the formation of the METHODIST NEW CONNEXION. Taylor was elected president a second time in 1809, and died at Birch House, near Bolton, in Lancashire, on Oct. 13, 1816, after an itinerancy of fifty-five years. In the words of THOMAS JACKSON, "Next to Mr. Wesley, he filled the place of an effective man considerably longer than any other Methodist preacher." His desire, expressed in his last sermon shortly before his death, "to die, like an old soldier, sword in hand," was granted, and James Montgomery's ode, written in his memory, effectively conveys his indomitable spirit:

Servant of God; well done,
Rest from thy lov'd employ.

T. Jackson, Lives of Early Methodist Preachers. 1846.

JOHN NEWTON

TAYLOR, VINCENT (1887-1968), British Methodist biblical scholar, was born on Jan. 1, 1887, and was educated at Accrington Grammar School and at the University of London. He entered the Wesleyan Methodist ministry in 1909 and spent many years in circuit ministry before being appointed as New Testament tutor (and later principal) of WESLEY COLLEGE, Headingley, in 1930. He remained there until his retirement in 1953.

His early interest in New Testament scholarship lay in the literary and historical criticism of the Gospels; his writings in this period included The Historical Evidence for the Virgin Birth (1920); Behind the Third Gospel (1926), which was concerned with the Proto-Luke hypothesis; and The Formation of the Gospel Tradition (1933), which dealt with form criticism. His great commentary on Saint Mark's Gospel (1952) shared the same interest. In these works his conclusions were usually less radical than those of continental scholars like Rudolf Bultmann. His later writings on the Person and Work of Christ reveal a stronger theological interest. His work on the atonement appeared as a trilogy: Jesus and His Sacrifice (1937), The Atonement in New Testament Teaching (which was the FERNLEY-HARTLEY LECTURE for 1940), and Forgiveness and Reconciliation (1941). His trilogy on the Person of Christ was given as the Speaker's Lectures at Oxford (1951-56) and published as The Names of Jesus (1953); The Life and Ministry of Jesus (1954); and The Person of Christ in New Testament Teaching (1958). He also contributed to The Interpreter's Bible. He received a number of honorary doctorates; was elected a Fellow of the British Academy in 1954, and given the academy award of the Burkitt Medal for Biblical Studies in 1960. He died on Nov. 28, 1968.

PETER STEPHENS

WILLIAM TAYLOR

TAYLOR, WILLIAM (1821-1902), American missionary and bishop, whose "mission field" embraced six continents, was born on May 2, 1821, in Rockbridge County, Va. Although a church member for some years previously, he was "converted" at Panther Gap Camp Meeting in 1841. Before the CAMP MEETING closed he had entered upon that ministry of personal evangelism and "street preaching" which was to carry him to the far corners of the earth. In 1842 he received his first appointment, as "junior preacher" on the Franklin Circuit of the BALTIMORE CONFERENCE. The Conference received him on trial in 1843, and appointed him to the Deerfield Circuit.

At the session of the Conference in 1845 he was received into full membership, ordained a DEACON, and appointed to the Sweet Springs Circuit. His marriage to Annie Kimberlin occurred in 1846. Further appointments included GEORGETOWN, D. C. (1846) and North Baltimore Station (1848).

Taylor began his long and illustrious career as a missionary with his appointment to the CALIFORNIA Mission in 1849, by Bishop BEVERLY WAUGH. There a bar-room was often his chapel and a whiskey keg his pulpit, but much of his preaching was done out of doors in the streets of California's rapidly growing towns. Hundreds responded to his messages during his seven years among the adventurers and outcasts who had been led to California by the lure of gold. The years from 1857 to 1862 were spent in evangelistic tours through New England, the Midwest and CANADA. The first of his many missionary journeys overseas took him to AUSTRALIA, NEW ZEALAND and Tasmania, where he labored with great success until 1866. His plans to open evangelistic work in INDIA, to which he felt called at this time, were interrupted by the illness of his son, Stuart. At the advice of his doctor, Taylor, with his family, sailed to SOUTH AFRICA instead, where the climate was said to be more favorable.

An invitation to preach in a Wesleyan Methodist Church led to a two-year mission in South Africa (1866-1868), where Taylor began the program of preaching in English to the European settlers, a program that was to prove very effective during the many years of his ministry overseas. Welcomed by ministers and congregations of the Wesleyan Church (this had been true in Australia also), Taylor was able to preach to large audiences. But his heart was drawn to the non-whites, the Kaffirs and others, and he began the ministry through interpreters which would lead to the conversion of thousands in Africa, India and South America.

The years from 1868 to 1870 were spent in evangelistic campaigns in England and the WEST INDIES and again in Australia and in CEYLON. Having heard of the evangelistic successes of Taylor's preaching in Australia and South Africa, JAMES MILLS THOBURN, afterwards a bishop of the M.E. Church in India, invited William Taylor to conduct evangelistic campaigns in India as well. Taylor arrived in BOMBAY in November 1870, and began a ministry which was to reach thousands in the principal cities of India. He soon discovered that many of the Europeans and Anglo-Indians, though members of established churches, were only nominal Christians. These became the center of his attention, first in LUCKNOW, the headquarters of Methodist work in India, and later in other cities outside the area of the Methodist field. This incursion into areas already "occupied" by other denominations led to much misunderstanding. Small evangelistic bands, somewhat after the manner of the Methodist "CLASS MEETINGS," were formed of those who were converted under Taylor's preaching. In February 1872, in response to the request of some members of these bands, Taylor organized a Methodist congregation in Bombay. In quick succession similar congregations were formed in the larger cities of India. The various cities in which Taylor preached and established churches in India, and later in South America and Africa, are too numerous to list here.

In the larger cities of India, Taylor developed what he called a "Pauline Method of Missions." Counting on the fact that in every large town and city there were colonies of English-speaking people, he determined to form fellowship bands, which if requested might be organized into churches. These would voluntarily undertake the support of their own pastors, and would become centers for the evangelization of other English-speaking people, and eventually, of the masses of India. It was proposed that the churches would neither ask nor accept any funds from the Missionary Society of the Church in America, beyond the passage of missionaries to India. The ministers would have no stated salary, but would live on a subsistence allowance as near the level of the native Indians as health and efficiency allowed. An adequate development of Indian resources would make it unnecessary to depend on the Missionary Society. Appropriations in advance, he believed, might hinder a healthy development of the churches. New churches were organized so rapidly, however, that it was found difficult to supply them with pastors raised up in India; hence it was deemed legitimate to call missionaries from America, whose transit, in most cases, would be paid by the Missionary Society, but whose salaries would be paid in India by the churches to which they ministered.

The "Pauline Method" proved so effective in the beginning that it was soon possible to organize an independent Mission with Taylor as Superintendent. In 1874 this Mission became the Bombay and Bengal Mission of the M.E. Church and two years later became the SOUTH INDIA CONFERENCE. Taylor's effort to carry on a self-supporting mission in India, and later in South America, in the name of the M.E. Church, but not under the direction of its Missionary Society, led to heated debate with officials of that Society. Also, the bishops of the M.E. Church felt unable to ordain and appoint ministers to work in areas outside the control of the Missionary Society. This led Taylor to request that he be "located" by the South India Conference. Eventually, responsibility for all of the work established by Taylor was assumed by the Missionary Society because of growing difficulties in finding support within the Mission itself.

Taylor left India in 1875, at the request of Dwight L. Moody, to engage in an evangelistic campaign in LONDON, and to visit his family in California, whom he had not seen for over seven years. He had intended to return to India, but became convinced that God was calling him to plant missions on the West Coast of South America also. He arrived in Callao, PERU, in 1877. For the next seven years he was engaged in establishing a self-supporting Mission in Peru, CHILE, and BRAZIL. Finding that the European settlers were more interested in education than in evangelism, he recruited teacher-preachers to man his mission centers. The support for this work was to be given entirely by local residents. Some of the self-supporting centers became permanent, others did not.

Elected as a lay delegate by the South India Conference, Taylor attended the GENERAL CONFERENCE (ME) of 1884. In an unprecedented action, he was nominated, elected a missionary bishop, ordained, and assigned to Africa within the space of twenty-four hours. He was to supervise the work of the Missionary Society in LIBERIA, but was free to establish self-supporting centers outside that country. Soon a chain of mission stations was established in the valley of the CONGO and its tributaries, stretching inland from ANGOLA to Luluabourg. Centers were also opened in MOZAMBIQUE on the East Coast.

The General Conference of 1896 retired Bishop Taylor, then seventy-five years of age. He lived at Palo Alto, Calif., until his death in 1902.

While many evidences of the self-supporting missions of Bishop Taylor remain in Africa and South America, the well-established churches spread across India are to this day the principal monument to the vision and zeal of this great missionary statesman. Few men have traveled more widely, raised more money, or recruited more missionary workers for the cause of Methodist missions than did William Taylor.

W. C. Barclay, History of Missions. 1957.

M. H. Harper, India. 1936.

W. Taylor, Darkest Africa. 1898.

_____, India. 1875.

_____, South Africa. 1867.

_____, Story of My Life. 1895.

_____, Ten Years in India. 1882.

MARVIN H. HARPER

TAYLOR, WILLIAM GEORGE (1845-1934), was born at Knayton, Yorkshire, England, of Wesleyan Methodist stock. He was accepted for the ministry in England and sent to RICHMOND COLLEGE for training. Answering a call for men to go to AUSTRALIA, he was appointed to BRISBANE in 1870, later serving in several other QUEENSLAND circuits. In 1879 he transferred to the NEW SOUTH WALES CONFERENCE for the remainder of his ministry.

He was instrumental in promoting revivals of religion in several places, and throughout his years of service was in demand for the leadership of evangelistic missions. His gospel singing was a feature of his work.

In 1884 he was appointed to the Central SYDNEY CIRCUIT and he soon founded the Central Methodist Mission. It is authoritatively claimed that this was the first Central Mission, the English counterparts soon following.

He was a pioneer of the field of social service institutions, establishing eleven of these.

He also founded a Christian journal called The Weekly Greeting.

He was instrumental in establishing open air services in the heart of Sydney, for which he organized brass bands to provide the music and to lead the processions which were a feature of this work. He was later called to England to conduct missions there and in the U.S.A.

He served in the Central Mission for a period of twenty-five years during which he became President of the New South Wales Conference. He wrote his autobiography, entitled The Life Story of an Australian Evangelist. The English edition was called Taylor of Down Under. He became a supernumerary in 1913.

AUSTRALIAN EDITORIAL COMMITTEE

TEAS, GEORGE W. (1808-1864), American pioneer circuit rider, was born in 1808 at Sparta, Tenn. Entering the ministry of the M.E. Church, he served in ARKANSAS and MISSOURI before removing to BURLINGTON, Iowa, where he practiced law. When the Black Hawk Purchase became a part of MICHIGAN Territory (1834), Teas, failing to gain a seat in the Territorial Council, blamed the Methodists and withdrew from the Church, announcing:

Let all men know from shore to shore,
That G. W. Teas is a Methodist no more.

Afterwards he repented, returning to his church, and someone wrote:

Let all men know from California to Maine,
That G. W. Teas is a Methodist again.

In 1844 BARTHOLOMEW WEED, with a certificate of Teas' restoration to the Church, recommended that his credentials be restored, but the IOWA CONFERENCE restored Teas' parchments to him only after he personally renewed his request in 1846. He was appointed to Three Rivers Mission in 1849, having previously traveled six years in the itinerant ministry. Henceforth, the name of George W. Teas, listed as an effective elder (1850), appears frequently in the annals of early Iowa Methodism. He worked in Burlington, Oskaloosa (1850-1852), Keosauqua (1852-1853), Winchester (1853-1854), Wapello (1854-1855), Washington (1855-1857), Des Moines, and Indianola, where he was the first to preach. Granted a "worn-out" preacher's superannuate status from 1857 to 1861, he located then, making his home at Washington, Iowa, until his death in 1864.

R. A. Gallaher, Methodism in Iowa. 1944.

A. W. Haines, Makers of Iowa Methodism. 1900.

E. H. Waring, Iowa Conference. 1910.

Yearbook of the Iowa Conference. MARTIN L. GREER

TE AWATAIA, WIREMU NEERA (c. 1800-1866), NEW ZEALAND Methodist Maori layman, was in young manhood a noted warrior. He became chief of the tribes in the Aotea, Waipa, and Raglan districts. He was one of the first converts after JAMES WALLIS established a mission station at Raglan in 1835, when he took the name of Wiremu Neera (William Naylor).

In 1839, he felt constrained to preach the Gospel to the Maoris of Taranaki, an area which he had formerly assisted in laying waste. On his return home, he publicly released all the prisoner slaves his war parties had captured in their former campaigns.

He was among the first signatories of the Treaty of Waitangi, and remained loyal to the British Crown during the Maori Wars of the 1860's. Greatly honored both by Maoris and Europeans, he spent his closing years in Raglan. After his death in 1866, a monument was erected to his memory by the government on a centrally situated site in Raglan Township—a grateful acknowledgement of his many public services.

E. H. Schnackenberg, "Romance of a Rangitira" (manuscript).
L. R. M. GILMORE

TECUMSEH, MICHIGAN, U.S.A., was settled in May 1824, and named for the famous Indian chief. Methodism came to Tecumseh in the fall of 1826 when JOHN BAUGHMAN made Tecumseh a regular preaching point on the Monroe Circuit, a three-weeks circuit covering parts of MICHIGAN and OHIO. In January 1828, a Society was organized with eleven charter members. One of these, Margarette Cross, had been converted in IRELAND in her youth; her husband was a local preacher in Ireland under JOHN WESLEY and they had entertained him in their home. Later in 1828 came Joseph Bangs, brother of NATHAN BANGS; Joseph was a local preacher and a strong pillar of early Methodism in this area.

In 1831 Tecumseh was made head of a large four-weeks circuit covering six counties, and 400 miles in length. By 1836 the circuit had 483 members, the largest in Michigan. The circuit continued to have a large membership, though it was steadily cut down in geographical area. In 1851 Tecumseh was made a station.

In 1842 the first wooden church was built. Luther Whitney, senior preacher on the circuit, did manual labor that year and raised funds for four new churches at one time. In 1863-64 a large brick church was built at a cost of $10,376, and was dedicated on Aug. 11, 1864. It survived two fires and stood over a century only one block from the center of town. In 1905 a kitchen addition was built as a memorial to Lemon Barnes, a former member of the conference. In 1965-66 a new church costing $350,000 was built west of the Red Mill Pond.

In 1855 the LADIES AID SOCIETY was organized, one of the earliest such organizations. The first PARSONAGE was acquired in 1853; a second parsonage was built in 1860; the third in 1890.

Through the nineteenth century, Tecumseh was a place of Methodist importance; it was served by prominent ministers and was a favorite place for ministerial retirement. Several men have gone into the ministry from Tecumseh, including Donald Benedict, one of the founders of the East Harlem Protestant Parish.

E. H. Pilcher, Michigan. 1878.

RONALD A. BRUNGER

TEES, FRANCIS HARRISON (1875-1951), a well known American historian and pastor, was born in PHILADELPHIA in 1875. He was educated at Dickinson Preparatory School and DICKINSON COLLEGE and joined the PHILADELPHIA CONFERENCE in 1900. His greatest work was as pastor for sixteen years (1931-47) of historic Old St. GEORGE'S CHURCH in Philadelphia. His constant research about Methodism and particularly about early Methodism in Philadelphia resulted in the publication of a number of books on Methodist history: The Beginnings of Methodism in England and America; The Story of Old St. George's; Whitefield, the Methodist; Methodist Origins; and The Ancient Landmark of American Methodism.

His small stature, his pince nez glasses and his neat conservative dress became a familiar sight to historians and librarians in and about Philadelphia. He died Oct. 4, 1951 and was buried in Mt. Vernon Cemetery, Philadelphia.

A. W. Cliffe, Our Methodist Heritage. 1957.

Minutes of the Philadelphia Conference, 1952.

FREDRICK E. MASER

TEETOTAL METHODISTS. In 1837 teetotalism reached St. Ives, Cornwall, by advocacy from Shropshire, and by the following year had become well-established. By 1840 it claimed a membership of more than half the population, but found some opposition from the circuit ministers. In 1841 the MANCHESTER Conference voted against teetotalism, and this view was shared by Jonathan Turner, the newly appointed superintendent of the St. Ives Circuit. Early in September came a severe clash, and about 250 members of teetotal conviction broke away from the St. Ives Society, and about 150 from other societies. Organizing themselves as a Methodist society, they adopted Wesley's Rules, with the addition of a rule on abstinence, and took the name of Teetotal Methodists. By 1842 the number had reached some 600 members with twenty-four local preachers; a new circuit was formed. In St. Ives the group met in the room of a linen draper until the completion of the chapel in 1842; other chapels were erected later elsewhere, and class tickets and preaching plans were issued. After some years the large circuit was divided; each new circuit seems to have been largely independent, and there does not appear to have been any annual conference. The denomination was confined to West Cornwall and does not seem to have had a regular ministry, the desire for which ultimately became the cause of disintegration. In 1848 some societies passed over into the WESLEYAN METHODIST ASSOCIATION, on condition that abstaining preachers should be appointed to them; at St. Ives the crisis came in 1860, some societies joining the METHODIST NEW CONNEXION, and, from areas further west, others joining the UNITED METHODIST FREE CHURCHES. Probably by 1865 the separate denomination had ceased to exist. The unifying force had been the conviction of teetotalism, but probably the actual separation would not have occurred if there had not been the pressure of ministerial demand.

Wesley Historical Society Proceedings, xxxiii.

JOHN T. WILKINSON

TE KOPUA, Waipa, NEW ZEALAND, was the site of an early Wesleyan mission station founded by THOMAS BIDDLE in 1841, where he served a four-year term. Biddle had chosen an early site in the Waipa area during the previous year, but had been prevented from occupying it because it was a Maori sacred place. JOHN WHITELEY, who supervised the area, upheld the Maori objection, and the site at Te Kopua was chosen instead. Later George Buttle served at Te Kopua for many years, making the station almost self-supporting by keeping a flock of sheep. This was a European missionary's appointment until the Maori Wars in 1860, and a Maori minister's appointment from 1891 to 1921. The site is marked by a memorial erected in 1962.

W. Morley, New Zealand. 1900.

New Zealand Methodist Home and Maori Mission Records.

L. R. M. GILMORE

TELEVISION, RADIO AND FILM COMMUNICATION, an agency of The United Methodist Church, originated as and is an extension of the Television, Radio and Film Commission of The Methodist Church. It is an agency created by the GENERAL CONFERENCE to produce, distribute, research and in general supervise the church's efforts to communicate the Christian message through electronic and photographic mass media.

TRAFCO, as the Commission is commonly called, began in the work of the COUNCIL OF SECRETARIES of the church. For a number of years H. G. Conger had served the Council in the former M.E. Church in the preparation and distribution of missionary promotion materials (mostly slide lectures). After unification in 1940, these functions were transferred in part to the Board of Missions. At the close of the second World War, the increased availability of 16mm sound motion picture projectors and the newly developed filmstrip with recording made possible a wider utilization of audiovisuals in the churches. As a result, the Council appointed an interboard committee under the chairmanship of N. F. Forsyth to produce additional materials for the entire church. It was finally decided that an inter-agency and church-wide organization was needed.

Following an action by the General Conference in 1948, representatives of the agencies met and drew up a constitution which provided for a board of managers appointed partly by the agencies and partly by the bishops of the church. Bishop DONALD H. TIPPETT was elected the first president of the Commission.

The General Conference of 1952 approved the Commission as one of the agencies to be included in World Service funds. Approximately $100,000 were made available the first year. The Commission voted to establish an office in NASHVILLE, Tenn., and elected HARRY C. SPENCER executive secretary. The staff then consisted of four or five persons—now nearly fifty.

An important factor in the early development of the Commission was the interest of Bishop CHARLES C. SELEMAN in sponsoring a film on the life of JOHN WESLEY. With the funds which he was able to raise and money in the World Service budget, the film was produced by J. ARTHUR RANK in London in 1953.

In 1953, also, the bishops asked that TRAFCO make a study of the possible use of television by the church. As a result of this study, the TV-Radio Ministry was established with funds raised by a special appeal to the churches. It has been continued during the years since as a World Service Special fund, with the income averaging between $200,000 and $300,000 per year. Three significant TV series were produced, but unfortunately, the income was not sufficient to maintain a continuous production schedule in the expensive TV spectrum. TRAFCO has been forced in recent months, therefore, to concentrate on radio, a less expensive medium.

TRAFCO has maintained strong ties internationally through a special relationship with the World Division of the Board of Missions, through Radio Visual Education and Mass Communications Committee (RAVEMCCO) of the NATIONAL COUNCIL, and through the World Association for Christian Communications.

Certain main points seem evident:

1. The increased use of a wide variety of audiovisuals and teaching machines in the schools will require the church to use similar methods to have an effective influence on young people and children in the church school.

2. The lack of trained teachers in the churches will make it necessary that the material be conveniently packaged. At the same time, the content of the film must be especially designed to be used by volunteer (frequently untrained) teachers.

3. To use radio and television effectively is demanding. Broadcasters commonly believe that they must sell products and they do it by entertaining audiences, and thus with them an educational approach is not appropriate. Yet the church was not founded to provide amusement and entertainment for the multitudes. Its purpose is the proclamation of the gospel of Christ. Some hearers—unbelievers—at first resent and reject this message. The Commission has always taken as its task to present the Christian position in such a way as to gain a hearing from an audience that at the beginning at least may be partly antagonistic. Minds and attitudes must be changed not by manipulation but within the context of the Christian faith and its emphasis on human worth—an assignment more difficult and complex than preaching to a "captive" audience of friendly hearers in church on Sunday morning. Yet it is felt that unless the church undertakes seriously to meet the world where the people live, it cannot hope to present its faith to the millions who never darken the church door.

In June 1968 and 1969, TRAFCO produced Night Call, a radio program which was in the nature of a nationwide telephone call-in, broadcast late at night. A guest and host in the studio would be open by long distance telephone calls to answer questions of import to anyone in the nationwide audience who wished to ask such questions. Night Call received numerous awards.

An office of TRAFCO has been established in New York due to the importance of that city in mass media. The original headquarters continue to be in Nashville, Tenn.

Disciplines, TMC, 1952, 1956, 1960, 1964; UMC, 1968, Paragraph 834, 835. HARRY SPENCER

TELFORD, JOHN (1851-1936), British Methodist and renowned editor, was born in Wigton in 1851, trained at DIDSBURY COLLEGE; thence to WESTMINSTER COLLEGE and to many circuits. He was Wesleyan CONNEXIONAL EDITOR for twenty-eight years from 1905 (with one year as book steward after Robert Culley's death in 1910). Telford had a life-long interest in the Wesleys and the Methodist revival, and his biography of JOHN WESLEY (London, 1886) became the standard work. He also edited Wesley's Letters (8 vols., London, 1931) and produced the volumes of Wesley's Veterans (7 vols., n.d.) compiled from Lives of Early Methodist Preachers. He died July 25, 1936.

FRANK CUMBERS

TELFORD BEQUEST. JOHN TELFORD's career is briefly described above. As a long-term result of his interest in the WESLEY family, he bequeathed 23,000 pounds towards the establishment of a Methodist ministerial training seminary in OXFORD, a place intimately connected with the Wesleys themselves. This college was never built, chiefly because the expansion of Methodism, which it was hoped would follow Methodist Union, did not take place. After consultation with the Charity Commissioners, however, it was agreed that the money should be held in trust and used to provide bursaries for ministerial training students, and to further specific schemes, such as libraries, at the existing colleges.

JOHN C. BOWMER

TE MAHOE, early NEW ZEALAND Wesleyan mission station, was situated on the banks of the Mokau River about two miles from the sea. It was opened by George Buttle in 1841, "there having been urgent and repeated applications to be favored with the services of a resident Missionary" (Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Report, 1842, p. 59). He was succeeded there by CORT HENRY SCHNACKENBERG, who served there as a catechist from 1844 until his ordination in 1857. A Maori catechist—Hone Eketone—then superintended the station from 1858 until his death in 1862. Shortly after this the station was closed because population had moved from the area. The site was marked by a memorial cairn in 1966.

Cort H. Schnackenberg, "Unpublished Diaries" (held by Wesley Historical Society, New Zealand). L. R. M. GILMORE

TEMPERANCE IN AMERICAN METHODISM. (See ETHICAL TRADITIONS IN AMERICAN METHODISM.)

TEMPERANCE MOVEMENT IN BRITAIN. "Are you a man? God made you a man; but you make yourself a beast." These words are part of JOHN WESLEY's appeal in "A Word to a Drunkard" (Works, xi, 169-71). This powerful tract sought to show its readers that by succumbing to the power of liquor they were throwing away their reason and understanding and preparing themselves for every work of the devil. Wesley called for repentance from a habit which, he claimed, made a man an enemy to his king, his country, his fellows who saw him in such a state, and his God. The temperance movement as such had not begun in the eighteenth century, but Wesley's observations of his fellows left him only too aware of the danger into which many could fall through drink. There were times when he felt it necessary to reprove those who were drunk. He lodged at an inn on a journey westward in 1744:

there was a company of men exceeding drunk. Nature suggested, "Why should you speak to them? It will be, at best, labour lost; for you may be well assured none of them will mind one word you say." However, we spoke a few words to them: one of them immediately rose up and said it was all true, followed us as well as he could into our room, and appeared deeply convinced and strongly desirous to serve a better Master. (Journal, iii, 1953-54.)

Wesley's personal attitude seems to have varied from time to time as regards the taking of wine. As a young man he had for a while, under the influence of the famous Dr. Cheyne, drunk only water (Journal, v, 373). But in 1771, after reading Dr. Cadogan's book on Chronic Distempers, he said: "Why should he condemn wine toto genere, which is one of the noblest cordials in nature?" (Journal, v, 430.) Wesley could see that in the whole pattern of nature there was a use for alcohol, but its abuse brought him to say that it was best avoided. The sermon, "The Use of Money," contains a passage which discusses the kinds of work in which a Christian may properly engage:

Neither may we gain by hurting our neighbour in his body. Therefore we may not sell anything which tends to impair health. Such is, eminently, all that liquid fire, commonly called drams, or spirituous liquors. It is true, these may have a place in medicine. . . . But all who sell them in the common way, to any that will buy, are poisoners general. (Sermon, xlv.)

By 1787 Wesley was clear in his judgment on the matter of liquor: "Distilled liquors have their use, but are infinitely overbalanced by the abuse of them; therefore, were it in my power, I would banish them out of the world." (Letters, viii, 26.) It was left to the nineteenth century to produce what we now understand as temperance movements. The "Pledge of the Seven Men of Preston" was made in 1832, written by Joseph Livesey (1794-1884). On the history of this subject one may consult The English Temperance Movement, by HENRY CARTER (London, 1933); the movement received much stimulus from its American equivalent. In Britain, the national drinking habits had been altered by the Beerhouse Act of 1830, which allowed any retailer to sell beer, and rapidly nearly doubled the number of places where beer could be sold. Livesey was concerned about the human tragedy involved in drunkenness. Confronted by someone who said, "I hate a drunkard," his response was, "On the contrary, I love a drunkard, and pity him from my heart" (quoted by Carter, op.cit., p. 24). Livesey's method of advocating abstinence was that of moral suasion: such a presentation of the facts of alcohol's effect on the physical and moral welfare as would appeal to men to abstain from it and join him in his crusade. His popular lectures were full of dramatic appeal. Setting fire to the spirit taken from a quart of ale he would argue:

The effect of the alcohol, which you now see burning on the plate, is to destroy the coats of the stomach and to injure the livers of those who drink it, and to produce externally a red-hot face and a nose covered with brandy blossoms. . . . I remember, when lecturing at Burnley, a man observed, when he saw the spirit on fire, "I have drunk as much of that as would have lit all the lamps in Manchester." There is, my drinking friends, one consolation on this subject for you, that if from your ale you do not get much food, you get plenty of fire. (Quoted by Carter, op.cit., p. 41.)

Alongside Livesey's efforts at moral suasion came another approach, that of the United Kingdom Alliance, which was formed in 1853. The aim of the alliance was to press for legislative reform, and unlike Livesey's work, it appealed for support even to those who were not abstainers themselves but who could see the necessity of some reform.

We can now attempt to glimpse how these movements affected the Methodism of the nineteenth century. The non-Wesleyan bodies were more attracted to temperance (and especially to teetotalism) than were the Wesleys. The PRIMITIVE METHODIST Conference rejected in 1827 the intriguing suggestion that trustees should provide wine for the use of the preachers before or after service; HUGH BOURNE often spoke on the issue, with a result that part of the connectional magazine was set aside to deal regularly with the question; and in 1832 the question was formally asked: "What is the opinion of Conference in regard to Temperance Societies?" (Primitive Methodist Conference Minutes, 1832) and the answer was given, "We highly approve of them, and recommend them to the attention of our people in general." After Hugh Bourne became a SUPERNUMERARY in 1842, he devoted his attention largely to teetotal preaching (cf. H. B. Kendall, Origin and History of the Primitive Methodist Church, London, n.d., i, 470). The first Primitive Methodist Connexional Temperance Secretary was appointed in 1897 (Kendall, op.cit., ii, 531). There even arose a group who called themselves the "TEETOTAL Wesleyan Methodists"; this body sprang up at St. Ives, in Cornwall, in 1841, as a reaction against the views of the parent body. Few Wesleyans, however, seem to have been initially attracted to the temperance and teetotal movement. The Conference of 1841 forbade the use of unfermented sacramental wine, and declared that preachers were not allowed to advocate total abstinence in a circuit other than their own without the permission of its superintendent. JABEZ BUNTING spoke of the "annoyances arising from teetotalism" (cf. B. Gregory, Sidelights on the Conflicts of Methodism, London, 1898, p. 318). Cornwall was spoken of as being in a state of "fermentation" on the subject, and teetotal tracts in that county could arouse high passions (Gregory, op.cit., pp. 318, 514-15). In 1873 the Wesleyan Conference appointed a committee on the question of intemperance; in 1875 the Temperance Committee was formed; HUGH PRICE HUGHES, whose practical work among victims of alcohol provides a stirring chapter in the history of the West London Mission, was appointed secretary of the Temperance Committee in 1882; the mood of the connection changed in the last quarter of the nineteenth century, and by 1911 this committee could rejoice in its report to Conference that so many churches used unfermented wine, hoping that all would follow (Wesleyan Methodist Conference Minutes, 1911, p. 521). In 1918 the name of the committee was significantly changed to that of Temperance and Social Welfare. This brings us to the period of Methodist temperance thought which was dominated by HENRY CARTER. Carter was appointed secretary of the Wesleyan Temperance Committee in 1911, and continued this work into the united church until 1942. MALDVYN EDWARDS sees four significant parts to Carter's contribution to temperance work: he promoted effective temperance work within the Methodist Church; he communicated his enthusiasm to other churches; he was adept at employing the approach of moral suasion in conjunction with that of practical legislative reform; and he refused to isolate alcoholism from other evils (Methodism and England, London, 1943, p. 115). A result of the last emphasis is that the British Methodist Church now has a Department of CHRISTIAN CITIZENSHIP, which is able to consider temperance work in the context of wider social issues. The 1935 Methodist Conference passed a standing order on the use of unfermented wine in Communion Services, and in 1942 it was laid down that intoxicants should not be supplied, sold, or used on Methodist trust premises. But total abstinence is not a condition of membership of the British Methodist Church, although it is commended to members by a Conference Declaration and is one of the requirements for membership of the Order of Christian Citizenship, which is connected with the department of that name. There is evidence, however, that the feeling of Methodists in general is by no means as strongly in favor of total abstinence now as it has been in the past: the change in drinking habits and the decrease in open drunkenness as compared with conditions at certain times in the nineteenth century have a great deal to do with this. The question of the use of unfermented communion wine also arises in the context of Anglican-Methodist relations in Britain, and is one of the practical problems which would have to be solved in order to make organic union possible. (See also ETHICAL TRADITIONS, BR.)

B. GALLIERS

TEMPLIN, LESLIE G. (1894-), was a missionary in INDIA from 1921 to 1944. His appointments were all in the GUJARAT CONFERENCE.

He was born in Salina, Kan., Sept. 26, 1894. His uncle, Fred M. Perrill, and his aunt, Mary Louise Perrill, were missionaries in India. His younger brother, Ralph, also served the church in India, while a twin brother, Lester, and another brother were Methodist ministers in America. In 1940, he and his twin brother were both delegates to the GENERAL CONFERENCE, and being identical twins, were subjects of much confusion. It is claimed that even long-time friends and close relatives had difficulty in telling them apart.

Leslie made lasting contributions to the church in Gujarat by a distinguished service as principal of the Methodist Boys High School at Baroda, 1921-26, 1928-34, and 1937-39, and as founder and first director of the Village Educational Service. He was superintendent of the Godhra District from 1929 to 1931 and of the Ahmedabad District from 1939 to 1944. He was secretary of the Gujarat Annual Conference for fifteen years and treasurer for four years. He represented his conference in the General Conference in 1940 and 1944. On retirement from the staff of the Board of Missions in 1946, he became a professor at SOUTHWESTERN COLLEGE in Winfield, Kan.

Gujarat Annual Conference Minutes. J. WASKOM PICKETT

TENNANT, THOMAS (1741-1793), British Methodist preacher, was born in LONDON in 1741 of East Anglican parents. He first preached in St. George's Fields, and after accompanying WESLEY from March to August, 1770, was received on trial and appointed to the Newcastle Circuit. For many years he suffered from nervous debility, but as "a man of a meek and quiet spirit" (Minutes of Wesleyan Methodist Conference, 1793), he was widely accepted as a preacher. A member of the original LEGAL HUNDRED, he was one of the signatories of the HALIFAX CIRCULAR in 1791.

T. Jackson, Lives of Early Methodist Preachers. 1846.

J. A. VICKERS

TENNANT, THOMAS HARDESTER (1772-1886), pioneer American preacher and centenarian, was born in VIRGINIA in 1772 and died in Washington County, Ark., 114 years later, in 1886. He was admitted on trial in the MISSOURI CONFERENCE in 1818 and assigned to the ARKANSAS circuit. This vast wilderness stretched from Fort Smith, Ark., down the valley of the Arkansas River to Arkansas Post on the Mississippi. He was appointed in 1819 to the Pecan Point circuit, a swamp-and-cane-brake section of eastern Arkansas, based at Pecan Point, a river port fifty miles up-river from MEMPHIS, the circuit ranging across the valleys of the St. Francis, Black and the White rivers to LITTLE ROCK.

In this second year of his ministry he was married to Christine Haek and by the dowry of his bride he became responsible for ownership of several slaves. The M.E. Church had interpreted such ownership as morally wrong and barred slave owners from official position. Despite a plea that legal conditions, particularly the requirement that an owner liberating a slave must give bond for the conduct of the freedman, made it impossible for him to meet the requirements of the church, Tennant was discontinued in the traveling connection—in effect his actual dismissal.

Thomas Tennant's long life furnishes a frame for the image of the church in sharing and shaping the direction of the infant American nation. In 1844 the same charge against Bishop JAMES O. ANDREW had led to a division of the church; Tennant's case provided a parallel incident which points up clearly the struggle for dominance in the interpretation of the gospel. Here, even in the south, at the lower levels of official power, the law of the church prevailed.

Because slavery was an accepted factor in this wild and raw society, Tennant's influence was but slightly impaired by his forced location. He continued to the end of his strength to preach in CAMP MEETINGS and REVIVALS and his family grew into the leadership and usefulness of the local church.

BENJAMIN C. FEW

TENNESSEE, sometimes called the "Volunteer State" because of the number of Tennesseans who volunteered for the Mexican War, is in the south central part of the United States. It is bounded by KENTUCKY and VIRGINIA on the north, by NORTH CAROLINA on the east, by GEORGIA, ALABAMA, and MISSISSIPPI on the south, and by the Mississippi River on the west. Because of its length and the nature of its terrain, it has three distinct sections, east, middle, and west. The Cumberland Mountains divide east and middle Tennessee, and the Tennessee River separates middle from west Tennessee.

The first white men to visit Tennessee were Spanish and French explorers and missionaries. The territory was granted to Sir Walter Raleigh in 1584, and to the Proprietors of Carolina in 1663. England, France, and Spain claimed the region until the Treaty of Paris in 1763 gave England full possession. In 1776 the territory was united with North Carolina at the request of its inhabitants, and it continued as a part of that commonwealth until it was admitted to the Union in 1796 as the State of Tennessee. Casting its lot with the South in the Civil War, Tennessee, like Virginia, was the scene of many conflicts, some 454 skirmishes and battles occurring within its boundaries.

Tennessee's agricultural products include tobacco, corn, cotton, hay, dairying, and cattle. Among its manufactures are chemicals, cement, coal, copper, textiles, lumber, and metal products. Water power developed under the Tennessee Valley Authority produces electricity, assures flood control, and helps to maintain navigable channels.

Organized Methodism entered Tennessee in 1783 when JEREMIAH LAMBERT was appointed to the Holston Circuit which included southwest Virginia and east Tennessee. Among preachers who followed Lambert to the region were Henry Willis, Mark Whittaker, Mark Moore, and Reuben Ellis. In 1786 the Nolichucky Circuit was formed. A year later BENJAMIN OGDEN crossed into Tennessee from Kentucky to organize the Cumberland Circuit. In 1788 two more circuits, the French Broad and the New River, were set up in east Tennessee, and a year later the Holston District was established.

In 1802, the year that annual conferences were first listed in the Discipline, the Tennessee work was a part of the WESTERN CONFERENCE. In 1812 that conference was divided to form the OHIO and TENNESSEE CONFERENCES. The Holston, Cumberland, Nashville, Wabash, Mississippi, and Illinois Districts then fell within the Tennessee Conference. In 1824 the HOLSTON CONFERENCE was set off from the Tennessee Conference. The new body included east Tennessee, southwest Virginia, western North Carolina, and northeast South Carolina. In 1840 the Tennessee Conference was again partitioned to form the MEMPHIS CONFERENCE which included west Tennessee, west Kentucky, and north Mississippi.

When the M.E. Church was divided in 1844, all of the Tennessee conferences adhered South and kept their same boundaries. Since many people in east Tennessee favored the North in the Civil War, the M.E. Church had no difficulty in organizing a Holston Conference of its own at Athens, Tenn., on June 1, 1865, the boundaries of which were the same as the Holston Conference of the Southern Church, except that it did not include any Virginia or Georgia territory. At the outset the new conference included both white and Negro ministers and churches, but in 1880 the Negro work was set off as the East Tennessee Conference. In 1866 the Tennessee Mission Conference (ME) was organized. Including middle and west Tennessee, it became the Tennessee Conference in 1868. In 1877 the white work of this conference was set off as the Central Tennessee Conference which continued until unification. It brought about 9,500 members into The Methodist Church in 1939.

In 1829 the M.P. Church organized a Tennessee Conference with eight ministers. In its first decade the conference sent missionaries to ARKANSAS and TEXAS. In 1870 the Holston Conference (MP) was formed, but four years later it was absorbed by the VIRGINIA CONFERENCE (MP). In 1858 a West Tennessee Conference was created; it continued twenty years and was then absorbed by the Tennessee Conference (MP). A Spring Creek Colored Mission Conference was set up in west Tennessee in 1884; it dissolved in 1920. In 1938 at its last session prior to unification, the Tennessee Conference had seven ministers, six pastoral charges, and 860 members.

Other Methodist bodies have work in Tennessee. The A.M.E. CHURCH has one conference embracing the entire state. The C.M.E. CHURCH has headquarters at Jackson and maintains LANE COLLEGE in that city. A few circuits of the Tennessee-Kentucky Conference of the FREE METHODIST CHURCH are in Tennessee. The WESLEYAN, CUMBERLAND, EVANGELICAL, INDEPENDENT, and SOUTHERN METHODIST CHURCHES have small memberships in the state.

At unification in 1939, the three merging denominations had a total of eight conferences in Tennessee. Six of the eight included some territory in adjoining states. The conferences of the M.E. Church, South brought 323,523 members into The Methodist Church, the M.E. Church 75,987, and the M.P. Church 860 for a grand total of 400,370.

As The Methodist Church began in 1939, the number of conferences in Tennessee was reduced to five. Three—Holston, Memphis, and Tennessee—were in the SOUTHEASTERN JURISDICTION, and two—East Tennessee and Tennessee—in the CENTRAL JURISDICTION. In 1964 the two Central Jurisdiction conferences merged with part of the LEXINGTON CONFERENCE to form the Tennessee-Kentucky Conference. In 1968 when The United Methodist Church was organized, the Central Jurisdiction was abolished and the Tennessee-Kentucky Conference was absorbed, its ministers and churches being placed in the conferences of the Southeastern Jurisdiction in which they happened to be located.

NASHVILLE was the headquarters of the M. E. Church, South from 1846 to 1939, and it has continued as an important center for Methodism as well as for several other denominations. Agencies of The United Methodist Church located in Nashville include the BOARD OF PUBLICATION and the Publishing House, the ABINGDON PRESS and the Parthenon Press, the Board of EVANGELISM, the UPPER ROOM, the BOARD OF EDUCATION, and the TELEVISION, RADIO AND FILM COMMISSION.

Tennessee Methodists support three junior colleges, HIWASSEE at Madisonville, MARTIN at Pulaski, and MORRISTOWN Normal and Industrial College at Morristown. They have three senior colleges, LAMBETH at Jackson, TENNESSEE WESLEYAN at Athens, and SCARRITT at Nashville.

The Holston Conference also supports EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE at Emory, Va., which is in its territory. The church maintains WESLEYAN FOUNDATIONS and campus ministries at the state higher institutions of learning. VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY at Nashville and the UNIVERSITY OF CHATTANOOGA, once Methodist related schools, have long since passed from church control.

Other Methodist institutions in Tennessee include Methodist hospitals at MEMPHIS and Oak Ridge, a children's home at Greenville, and McKendree Manor at Nashville and several other homes for the aged.

In 1968 the membership of The United Methodist Church in Tennessee was about 375,000, some 10.5 per cent of the 1960 population of the state. The four conferences had a total membership of 465,200 and property valued at $187,818,682.

J. B. McFerrin, Tennessee, 1895.

Minutes of all the Tennessee Conferences, ME, MES, MP, TMC

Outline of Development of Methodism in Tennessee. Nashville: Tennessee Historical Records Survey, 1940.

H. T. FOWLER
JAMES R. COX

TENNESSEE CONFERENCE was organized Nov. 12, 1812 at Fountain Head, near present day Portland, Tenn., in the home of a man named House, with Bishops ASBURY and MCKENDREE in charge. At the time it was the largest conference geographically in America, embracing the states of TENNESSEE, southern KENTUCKY, INDIANA, ILLINOIS, MISSOURI, ARKANSAS, LOUISIANA, MISSISSIPPI, and ALABAMA. At the beginning its membership was 22,699. During the first session seventeen men were admitted on trial. (See TENNESSEE for history of early Methodism in the state.)

In 1813 the MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE was carved from the Tennessee Conference, and in 1816 the MISSOURI CONFERENCE, composed of Illinois, Missouri, Arkansas, and part of Indiana, was taken from it. The Tennessee Conference was further reduced in size by the creation of the KENTUCKY CONFERENCE in 1820 and the HOLSTON CONFERENCE in 1824. This limited the Tennessee Conference to four districts, Nashville, Forked Deer, Caney Fork, and Huntsville (north Alabama). The conference then had thirty-four charges and 13,537 members. In 1840 the MEMPHIS CONFERENCE was organized, three of its districts being taken from the Tennessee Conference.

Outstanding leaders in the Tennessee Conference in the period before and after the Civil War were A. L. P. GREEN and JOHN B. MCFERRIN. Green was elected to the GENERAL CONFERENCE eleven times, and McFerrin wrote a three-volume History of Methodism in Tennessee.

On the division of the M.E. Church in 1844, the three Tennessee Conferences adhered South. Recognizing the strategic importance of middle Tennessee, the M.E. Church, South made NASHVILLE its headquarters. Throughout most of their history the Nashville Christian Advocate (1832-1940) and the Methodist Quarterly Review (1847-1930) of the Southern Church were published in Nashville.

In 1850 the Tennessee Conference (MES) reported some 43,300 members. During the next six years there was no growth; indeed the total dropped to about 41,000. The conference was then divided into twelve well-manned districts, emphasis was placed on deepening the spiritual life of the people, and by 1860 the membership had risen to nearly 49,000.

The Civil War was disastrous for the Tennessee Conference due partly to the fact that beginning in 1862 a large portion of middle Tennessee was in the hands of the Union army. In 1865 the conference reported a total membership of about 33,000. The plant of the Publishing House in Nashville was badly damaged by the Union forces. After the war the Southern Church sought reparations from Congress, and in 1898 that body granted $288,000. While negotiations were in progress it was charged in the church papers that the publishing agents had acted unethically, that some individuals were receiving unduly large commissions for their services in pressing the claims of the church on the federal government (see PUBLISHING HOUSE CONTROVERSY).

After the war the Tennessee Conference (MES) recuperated slowly at first and then more rapidly. In 1870 it reported about 34,000 members, in 1875 about 41,000 and in 1885 some 53,000. At unification in 1939 the conference had eight districts, 625 churches, 98,970 members, and property valued at $5,621,255.

Today the conference supports a Methodist chair at VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY, and it maintains MARTIN JUNIOR COLLEGE at Pulaski, a series of WESLEY FOUNDATIONS and campus ministries, a number of camps and youth projects, and McKendree Manor for the aged at Nashville. SCARRITT COLLEGE and a number of the general boards and agencies of The United Methodist Church are located in Nashville.

In 1970 the Tennessee Conference had six districts, 365 ministers, 730 churches, 133,358 members, and property valued at $52,259,716.

C. T. Carter, Tennessee Conference. 1948.

General Minutes, ME, MES, TMC, UMC.

J. B. McFerrin, Tennessee. 1888.

Minutes of the Tennessee Conference. CULLEN T. CARTER

TENNESSEE CONFERENCE (EUB) traces its beginning to April, 1856, when the VIRGINIA CONFERENCE appointed John Ruebush as a missionary to upper East Tennessee. Ruebush preached in schoolhouses, homes, and churches of several denominations. On recommendation of the BOARD OF MISSIONS, the Virginia Conference appropriated funds for the erection of church buildings in TENNESSEE; and the first structure, Otterbein Chapel, was dedicated in 1859. The first annual conference session, with Bishop GLOSSBRENNER presiding, was held in 1866.

Active in the early years of the conference were R. J. Bishop and Enos Keezel, both of whom came from Virginia. In 1865, Andrew Elliot Evans from the White River Conference (Indiana) and Daniel Beauchamp of the Upper Wabash Conference (Indiana) were sent by their respective conferences to aid in the mission work in Tennessee. The first annual conference elected Ruebush as presiding elder and recognized Keezel, Bishop, Beauchamp, and Evans as members.

During the years following the Civil War the church grew steadily and began to move westward across the state. On November 26, 1896, the Tennessee River Conference (later known as West Tennessee Conference) was organized at Parsons, Tenn., with W. M. Bell, Missionary Secretary, presiding. The original conference then became known as the East Tennessee Conference. In 1918, the two conferences were merged to form the Tennessee Conference.

In 1896, the Chickamauga Conference was organized at CHATTANOOGA. The conference was under the auspices of the Board of Missions and was organized for the purpose of ministering to Negro groups in that portion of the state. The conference was dissolved in 1913, because, in the words of A. W. DRURY, the Chickamauga Conference was "more a hope than a realization."

The Tennessee Conference reached from Johnson City, the eastern terminal, to the Tennessee River, 100 miles west of Nashville. In 1966, it had twenty-five charges with thirty-three churches, thirty-two ministers including four probationers, and a membership of 4,825. The conference owned a church camp, Trinity Hills, located forty miles south of Knoxville, which accommodated eighty campers and workers and where the entire camping program of the conference was conducted. In 1970, it was united with the Holston and Tennessee Conferences of the former Methodist Church.

A. W. Drury, History of the U.B. 1924. J. CASTRO SMITH

TENNESSEE-KENTUCKY CONFERENCE was organized in Nashville, Tenn., Aug. 18-19, 1964 with Bishop CHARLES F. GOLDEN presiding. It was formed by merging the Tennessee and East Tennessee Conferences (see Tennessee) and a part of the LEXINGTON CONFERENCE, all of the CENTRAL JURISDICTION. Its boundaries included the states of KENTUCKY and Tennessee and southwestern VIRGINIA. The conference began with five districts but reduced the number to three the next year. In 1965 it reported 105 ministers, 118 pastoral charges, and 16,531 members.

The conference supported Morristown College at Morristown, Tennessee, an accredited Methodist junior college which in 1968 had an enrollment of about 350, an endowment of over $200,000, and a plant valued at more than $1,000,000.

On the abolition of the Central Jurisdiction in 1968, the Tennessee-Kentucky Conference was absorbed by the several conferences of the Southeastern Jurisdiction in Kentucky and Tennessee.

In its last year the Tennessee-Kentucky Conference reported three districts, Knoxville, Lexington, and Nashville; 115 pastoral charges, 16,042 members, and property valued at $6,710,778.

General Minutes, MEC, and MC.

Minutes of the Tennessee-Kentucky Conference.

Discipline, MC.

ALBEA GODBOLD

TENNESSEE WESLEYAN COLLEGE, Athens, Tennessee, was established as Athens Female College in 1857 under the sponsorship of the M.E. Church, South. During 1866-68 it was transferred to the HOLSTON CONFERENCE of the M.E. Church, made coeducational, and renamed East Tennessee Wesleyan University. Following the death of General and President ULYSSES S. GRANT, the name was changed in 1886 to Grant Memorial University. This same year the FREEDMEN'S SOCIETY, broadening its educational program to include Southern white people, opened a university in CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. In 1889 the two institutions were merged, with the plan that the Athens campus would be used for a college of liberal arts and a secondary school while graduate professional schools would be developed at Chattanooga. The new name of the older school was continued for the combination, and in 1892 was changed to U. S. Grant University. During 1904-6 the college was moved to Chattanooga; and in 1907 the name became UNIVERSITY OF CHATTANOOGA, with the branch at Athens called the Athens School of the university—a secondary school with some junior college courses.

In 1925 the Athens School was separated from the university and became a junior college and secondary school with its present name. Since 1954 it has been a senior college, offering the B.A. and B.S. degrees. Its governing board has fifty-five members, plus a maximum of five honorary and six ex officio, who are elected by the Holston Conference of The United Methodist Church on nomination of its Board of Education.

Gilbert E. Govan and James W. Livingood, The University of Chattanooga: Sixty Years. Chattanooga, Tenn.: the university, 1947.

LeRoy A. Martin, A History of Tennessee Wesleyan College, 1857-1957. N.p., 1957. JOHN O. CROSS

TENNEY, MARY ALICE (1889-), American FREE METHODIST author, scholar, and teacher, was born at Nora Springs, Iowa. Her baccalaureate degrees are: A.B., GREENVILLE COLLEGE; A.M., University of California; Ph.D., University of Wisconsin; later Greenville College conferred the Litt.D. She has been professor of English at Los Angeles Pacific College, at Houghton College and Greenville College. Dr. Tenney is a member of the Modern Language Association and the Conference on Christianity and Literature. She is author of Still Abides the Memory, 1942; Blueprint for a Christian World, 1953 (translated into Japanese and Chinese); Adventures in Christian Love, 1964; and she collaborated in writing Spiritual Renewal for Methodism. She is a special writer of Sunday school materials and of articles for religious periodicals. Now retired, she resides at Greenville, Ill.

Directory of American Scholars.
Who's Who in American Women.

BYRON S. LAMSON

TENT METHODISTS. In 1814 two LOCAL PREACHERS of the Methodist society in BRISTOL who had found it difficult to procure village rooms for preaching conceived the idea of a traveling tent to be used during the summer months. The first was erected at Whitchurch, near Bristol, on April 24, 1814. Among those who conducted the service was John Pyer (1790-1859). In 1815 the work spread to Bedminster; and in April, 1816, on the occasion of a public hanging, the tent was pitched in Gallows Field, Bristol, and a nightly service was held, some thousands attending. In July, 1818, following a mission to Southampton and the Isle of Wight, it was deemed necessary to appoint a regular missionary, and Pyer was chosen. In the same year a tent mission at Dursley, in Gloucestershire, added some 450 members to the Wesleyan society in a few months. This was followed two years later by the building of a new chapel. About this time charges of irregularity developed and regulations were set up: a tent should only be used in any circuit by consent of the superintendent, and should be under his direction; only accredited local preachers should serve; all persons converted should be brought into the Methodist society. Eventually the leaders of the movement were expelled; and converts who gathered around them formed themselves into a distinct community, taking the name of Tent Methodists. The mission work continued in Bristol; in 1820 Pyer was invited to LONDON and had large success. Coming to MANCHESTER in 1821, he remained nine years and built the Canal Street Chapel in Ancoats. In 1830 he was engaged in London as a missionary of the Christian Instruction Society. Four years later he became the settled pastor of a Congregational Church at South Molton, in North Devon; in July, 1839, he came to Davenport, where he remained for twenty years until his death on April 7, 1859. The Tent Methodists labored in Salford, Lancashire; and one, Peter Arrive, a local preacher, was expelled in 1822 because of his "association with tent-folk." By this time the new society numbered nearly three hundred; two tents and one large chapel were in continual use in different parts of Salford.

Christian Reformer, 1822.

London Christian Instructor, 1822.

K. P. Russell, Memoir of the Rev. John Pyer. London, 1865. JOHN T. WILKINSON

TERRELL, JAMES MILAS (1868-1943), American preacher and missionary to BRAZIL, was born in Pigeon Valley, near Waynesville, N. C., on Oct. 1, 1868. His father, Capt. William Terrell, was a strict Presbyterian, his mother a devout and loyal Methodist. Their home nevertheless was a haven for traveling Methodist preachers; and it was there, at the age of twelve, that James came to know and admire a young circuit rider, JAMES L. KENNEDY, who a few years later went to Brazil as a missionary. Kennedy's life, Terrell later testified, influenced him into missionary work.

His education was first at EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE in southwest VIRGINIA, and then at VANDERBILT, from which he graduated in three years, in 1897. He was ordained by Bishop ALPHEUS WILSON, served three charges in NORTH CAROLINA, and left for Brazil in June, 1900. His first appointment was to an English-speaking congregation in Petropolis, state of Rio de Janeiro. There he met May Umberger, a missionary heading the Methodist Woman's Board school in that town, and they were married on July 18, 1901.

Few missionaries have served in more capacities, lived more sacrificially, or influenced more Brazilians into the ministry than James Terrell. During forty-three years in Brazil, he was circuit rider, pastor, presiding elder; editor of a church periodical (O Testemunho, organ of the Rio Grande do Sul Conference); professor of Greek, Hebrew, and ecclesiastical history in Methodist seminaries; builder of churches and parsonages. Wherever they lived, the Terrells opened their home to young Brazilian students and many of these have been—and are still—prominent Methodist preachers. Among them was CESAR DACORSO, who lived with six others in the Terrell home while attending COLEGIO (now Instituto) UNIAO. Dacorso became the first Brazilian bishop of the Methodist Church in that country.

Always aware of the need in interior points of the state, Terrell opened new trails and preaching points, skimping and sacrificing, using his own salary for the building of a church or parsonage, or for the upkeep of needy students. Once in a small city of Santo Angelo, after several Methodists had been arrested for holding services and were being held in the basement of a hotel, Terrell dared to stand up against the mayor, claiming support from the laws of the land and of God. Then he preached in the hall of this hotel while grains of corn were being pelted in his face, and sang loudly so those in the basement could be cheered and encouraged to stand firm. Often when no money had been allotted to start work in a new place, Terrell himself paid the rent for a small hall, built some benches, and when Sunday night came, would attract passersby, by singing solos or duets with his wife. Because of the personal debts Terrell often incurred for these projects, Bishop WALTER LAMBUTH threatened to recall him to the United States. Today several churches and parsonages stand as monuments to his devotion and sacrificial spirit.

In 1907-08, while pastor of Central Church, PORTO ALEGRE, he acquired the property on which a fine church now stands. Terrell was a founding member of the South Brazil Conference, now called the Second Region. This was organized by Bishop Lambuth in the Terrells' home in Santa Maria. He was also founder of the seminary in connection with Porto Alegre College, and had as his first pupil, SANTE UBERTO BARBIERI (later bishop of The Methodist Church).

His health due to overwork, a sunstroke, and minor accidents forced Terrell to return with his family to the United States several times. But once well, Terrell was back working hard in Brazil. James Terrell died Sunday morning, January 3, 1943, after running to catch a bus for Ipiranga Church of which he was pastor. He died in the bus. He was buried in the Protestant Cemetery of the Redeemer, near the grave of his long-time friend and inspirer, J. L. Kennedy.

Expositor Cristão, Jan. 12, 19, and 23, 1943.

E. M. B. Jaime, Metodismo no Rio Grande do Sul. 1963.

EULA K. LONG

TESTIMONY was a term that came into its greatest use in nineteenth century Methodism. It referred to the custom of persons, at CLASS MEETINGS, PRAYER MEETINGS or REVIVAL meetings, arising, at the invitation of the leader, to tell the group how they came to be saved, or what special blessings God had given them. It was believed a person was not "walking with God" if he were not ready to stand up and testify in this way concerning his faith. "Testimony Meetings," frankly so called, were often held.

As time went on the "testimonies" became stereotyped rehearsals of former statements, and they lost their power to influence others who had heard them repeatedly at the meetings. During the last half century various attempts have been made to revive the custom but without much success. The first testimony or fresh testimony of any sincere Christian always has great effect.

FREDERICK E. MASER

TETER, EBER (1846-1928), American Wesleyan minister, was born near Boxley, Ind., Jan. 28, 1846, the son of Eber Teter, Sr., a devout Methodist who had led in the organization of a WESLEYAN METHODIST CHURCH in Boxley in 1844. The younger Teter's childhood home was a station on the Underground Railroad.

Eber Teter, Jr. was converted as a child. Although quite young, he served in the Union Army during the Civil War. At the war's end, he answered the call to preach and studied at Wheaton and ADRIAN Colleges. In 1870 he served six months as an assistant on the Westfield Circuit, and was ordained. His leadership ability was recognized immediately. But for the next seventeen years he vacillated between the ministry and a business career, apparently because of inadequate pastoral salaries.

In 1887 Eber Teter proposed a new type of Wesleyan conference government—a full-time president with superintending authority. The Indiana Conference of his church adopted the proposal and permanently ended his inactive status by electing him its first full-time president. He served for fourteen years with great effectiveness. Organized churches increased by forty-two percent, membership by thirty-one percent, church buildings by eighty-seven percent.

In 1889 Eber Teter was elected General Conference President, which position he held longer than any other man—until 1927. From 1901-19, he served as General Missionary Secretary, responsible for denominational missions at home and abroad. Churches multiplied, conferences were organized, new foreign fields were added, two Wesleyan colleges were founded. He became the theologian of the church and stamped indelibly upon it his beliefs and principles. In 1927 a grateful church elected him General Conference President Emeritus. He died June 29, 1928, known already as the "Grand Old Man of the Church."

LEE HAINES

TETER, ISAAC PEARL (1829-1900), Iowa preacher, was born in Lewis County, Va. (now W. Va.), May 11, 1829. He joined the M.E. Church at the age of sixteen and was granted a preacher's license in 1851. Removing to Iowa, he was admitted in 1855 into the IOWA CONFERENCE on trial, ordained DEACON in 1855, and was received into the Conference in full connection. He was ordained ELDER by Bishop AMES in 1857.

Teter spent forty-seven years in the active ministry, all in the Iowa Conference, serving Troy, 1853-54; Montrose, 1854-55; Winchester, 1855-56; Ft. Madison, 1856-57; Drakeville, 1857-58; Albia, 1858-59 and 1883-84; East Des Moines, 1859-60; Sigourney, 1860-62; Oskaloosa, Simpson, 1862-63 and 1888-93; Keosauqua, 1865-68; Mt. Pleasant Circuit, 1872-75; Danville, 1875-76; Main Street, Ottumwa, 1876-79; Kirksville, 1879-80; Centerville, 1880-83; South Ottumwa, Willard Street, 1893-97; and New Sharon, 1897-1900. He was PRESIDING ELDER of Burlington District, 1868-72, and of Ottumwa District, 1884-88.

Isaac Pearl Teter was commissioned a CHAPLAIN of the Seventh Iowa Infantry during the Civil War, as a member of Oskaloosa Quarterly Conference. Returning to Iowa in 1864, as a member of Chatham Square, Keokuk, QUARTERLY CONFERENCE, he was appointed Chaplain in the U. S. Post Hospital, Keokuk, Iowa, by President Lincoln and remained in that position until the close of the war. While he was pastor at Sigourney, in the fall of 1861, Teter was elected to the Iowa Senate. In 1896 he was a delegate to GENERAL CONFERENCE. He died in New Sharon, Iowa, March 6, 1900, and was buried at Ottumwa, Iowa.

A. W. Haines, Makers of Iowa Methodism. 1900.

Minutes of the Iowa Conference, 1853-1900.

E. H. Waring, Iowa Conference. 1910. MARTIN L. GREEB

TEVIS, MRS. JULIA A. (1799-1880), American educator, was born in Clarke County, Ky., Dec. 5, 1799. The daughter of Pendleton and Mary Heironymus, she was chiefly educated in WASHINGTON City and GEORGETOWN, D. C.

In 1820 she became governess in the family of General Smythe of Wytcheville and later in the family of Captain Frank Smith of Abingdon, Va.

She married John Tevis, presiding elder of the Holston District, in 1824, and the same year moved to Shelbyville, Ky., a small town about twenty miles from Frankfort, where on March 25, 1825 they founded Science Hill Female Academy.

Through this institution Mrs. Tevis became widely known over the South and West. She presided over the Academy until near her death. Through the years more than 3,000 young ladies were under her care.

Mrs. Tevis was the mother of Benjamin P. Tevis, M.D., who was associated for a long time with his mother in conducting Science Hill Academy. In 1876 he was elected a lay delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M.E. Church. Mrs. Tevis died in June 1880.

M. Simpson, Cyclopaedia. 1882.

JESSE A. EARL

TEWARSON, SUBARNO BIDYOTAM (1897-), is a layman from the Garhwal District of the Indian Himalayas. He has achieved distinction as an educator and as a manager of church and mission finances. He was born in Pauri, Garhwal, Sept. 16, 1897. His parents were early converts from the Kohli caste of Hindus. He completed high school studies in the Methodist High School at Pauri, which was then the only high school in Garhwal. The distinguished missionaries JAMES H. MESSMORE and PRESTON S. HYDE were his teachers of English and Bible, and profoundly influenced him. The school now is known as the Messmore Intermediate College.

Tewarson earned the B.S. degree in 1918, the Licentiate of Teaching in 1927, and the M.A. degree in 1930. He began teaching in the LUCKNOW CHRISTIAN COLLEGE, continued in the Messmore High School at Pauri, and in 1923 became the headmaster of Ramsey High School at Almora. In 1947 he was appointed principal of the Parker Intermediate College at Moradabad.

On reaching retirement age in 1956, he became the first Indian associate treasurer of the Methodist Church in Southern Asia and a secretary of the Inter-Mission Business Office in Bombay.

This new career was opened to him because he had served efficiently as unpaid treasurer of the North India Conference for ten years. His work in Bombay was so much appreciated that he was made branch treasurer and directed all financial operations of the Board of Missions throughout the area of the CENTRAL CONFERENCE OF SOUTHERN ASIA.

For nine years he was a government-nominated commissioner of the Municipality of Almora.

Journals, The North India Conference, 1923, 1927, 1956. Minutes of the Executive Board of the Methodist Church in Southern Asia, 1956-64. J. WASKOM PICKETT

TEXARKANA, ARKANSAS, U.S.A., First Church. On Dec. 2, 1902, JAMES THOMAS arrived in Texarkana to be pastor of the First Methodist Church. All he had was a name for the church, no members and no real estate. On December 14, he organized the church with forty-eight members.

On Dec. 7-12, 1904, two years later, the LITTLE ROCK

ANNUAL CONFERENCE met in what remains today as a churchy sanctuary, debt free.

The first year of its existence this church paid the second highest amount of benevolences of any church in the Conference, and has continued to be a leader in all phases of the Church program. First Church, Texarkana, boasts some of the most beautiful windows in the world, with their great expanse of superb Belgian glass, valued at over $100,000. There are over 600 different tints and hues in these windows. The roster of pastors include some well known names in American Methodism, James Thomas, Phillip Cone Fletcher, FORNEY HUTCHINSON, and Bishop AUBREY G. WALTON.

The membership of 1,275 in 1970 includes prominent people of all walks of life in the city, and at the same time, the largest percentage of laboring people of any of the eight Methodist churches in these twin cities. The church, while located in ARKANSAS, near the State Line between TEXAS and Arkansas, draws forty percent of her members from the Texas side of the line. Dr. Robert H. Chappell, son of CLOVIS G. CHAPPELL, went from this church as a medical missionary to INDIA.

TEXAS, U.S.A., population 10,989,123 in 1970, is in the southwest. It is bounded by OKLAHOMA on the north, ARKANSAS and LOUISIANA on the east, the Gulf of Mexico on the southeast, MEXICO on the southwest, and NEW MEXICO on the west. With an area of 267,339 square miles, it is by far the largest of the forty-eight contiguous states. Its terrain rises slowly from the Gulf of Mexico to 4,000-foot mountains in the north and west, and its climate ranges from subtropical to mid-temperate. Texas leads the nation in the production of oil, cattle, sheep, cotton, rice, and some other categories. Manufacturing is now an even greater contributor to the state's economy than minerals and agriculture. Successively under Spain, France, and Mexico, the Texans won their independence in 1836 and formed a republic which was admitted to the Union in 1845. Counting the Confederacy, 1861-1865, six flags have flown over Texas.

Methodism first entered Texas in the fall of 1815 when WILLIAM STEVENSON, a member of the TENNESSEE CONFERENCE, traveled from Bellevue (Caledonia), Missouri, through Arkansas as far as Pecan Point, Texas on the south side of the Red River. Stevenson preached to American settlers there and formed a society. Pecan Point became a preaching place for the circuit riders. In 1816 the MISSOURI CONFERENCE was formed, and it appointed Stevenson to the Hot Springs Circuit in Arkansas. In 1818 he was appointed to "Mt. Prairie (Ark.) and Pecan Point"; it was the first time any place in Texas was included in a list of Methodist appointments. THOMAS HARDESTER TENNANT was the second preacher appointed to Pecan Point, and the circuit was eventually enlarged to include DeKalb, Clarksville, Paris, Bonham, Honey Grove, and other places.

In 1833 James P. Stevenson, son of William, went into east Texas from the Sabine Circuit in Louisiana which he was traveling. He preached near present day Milam and organized a society at the home of Samuel McMahan. In 1834 McMAHAN'S CHAPEL, recognized today not only as the oldest continuing Methodist but also the oldest continuing Protestant congregation in Texas, was organized. In 1837 Bishop ELIJAH HEDDING appointed MARTIN

RUTER, president of ALLEGHENY COLLEGE at Meadville, Pa.; LITTLETON FOWLER at LA GRANGE COLLEGE, Ala.; and ROBERT ALEXANDER, pastor at NATCHEZ, Miss., as missionaries to Texas. They were attached to the MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE, and east and south Texas became a part of the ARKANSAS CONFERENCE which was formed in 1836 by dividing the MISSOURI CONFERENCE.

In 1840 the Texas Conference (ME) was formed to include all of the state except the northeast. Between 1840 and 1968 the M.E. Church, the M.E. Church, South, the M.P. Church, and The Methodist Church organized a total of fifty annual conferences, missions, and mission conferences in Texas (see Table of Methodist Conferences), far more than in any other one state. In 1844 the GENERAL CONFERENCE authorized the division of the Texas Conference to form the Eastern and Western Texas Conferences, both of which adhered South. In 1846 Western Texas changed its name to the Texas Conference, and in 1847 Eastern Texas became the East Texas Conference.

In 1859 the Rio Grande Mission Conference, covering west and southwest Texas, was carved out of the Texas Conference. Three years later it was designated as the RIO GRANDE CONFERENCE, and in 1866 it became the WEST TEXAS CONFERENCE. In 1866 the NORTHWEST TEXAS CONFERENCE was formed by merging the northern parts of both the Texas and Rio Grande Conferences. In 1867 the East Texas Conference was divided to form the Trinity Conference in northeast Texas. Trinity changed its name to NORTH TEXAS CONFERENCE in 1874. Then in 1910 the Northwest Texas Conference was divided to form the CENTRAL TEXAS CONFERENCE. No other significant changes were made in the names or boundaries of the five Southern Methodist conferences which served Anglo-Saxons in Texas between 1910 and unification in 1939. Moreover, after unification the names and boundaries of the five conferences continued essentially the same, except that the name of the West Texas Conference was changed to SOUTHWEST TEXAS CONFERENCE.

The M.E. Church, South had work among the German- and Spanish-speaking people in Texas. In 1874 the German Mission Conference was organized to include work in Texas and Louisiana. The name was changed to Southwest Texas Conference in 1918, and the next year the conference disappeared and the German work was absorbed by the overlying English-speaking conferences. In 1855 a Mexican Border Mission Conference was formed which included work in Texas and over the border in Mexico, and in 1891 a Northwest Mexican Mission Conference was organized to include work in the southwestern United States and part of Mexico. In 1914 conference lines were redrawn and the Mexican Border Conference included the Mexican work in Texas west of the Pecos River, NEW MEXICO, and part of MEXICO, while the Texas Mexican Mission (Texas Mexican Conference after 1929) included all Mexican work east of the Pecos River. Then in 1918 the Pacific Mexican Mission which had included the Mexican work in ARIZONA and CALIFORNIA, was merged with the Mexican Border Conference to form the Western Mexican Mission (Western Mexican Conference after 1929). Thus at the time of unification in 1939 the Southern Church had two conferences for Mexican work—the Texas Mexican Conference and the Western Mexican Conference.

Following the Civil War, the M.E. Church organized work in Texas, as it did in all of the southern states. In 1867 it formed the Texas Mission Conference (Texas Conference after 1868) by dividing the Mississippi Mission Conference which had been organized at New Orleans in 1865. The Texas work included both white and Negro ministers and churches. In 1874 the SOUTHERN GERMAN CONFERENCE was established in Texas, and in the same year the West Texas Conference was set off from the Texas body. In 1877 the white ministers and churches in the West Texas Conference were organized as the Austin Conference. The Austin Conference continued until 1911 when part of it went with the Gulf Conference which for some years had included the denomination's white work in Louisiana and Mississippi. The remainder of the Austin Conference went with the newly formed Southern Swedish Mission Conference in Texas. Both the Gulf Conference and the Southern Swedish Mission Conference were absorbed in 1926 by the Southern Conference which continued until unification in 1939. Thus the M.E. Church came to unification with three conferences in Texas—Southern, Texas, and West Texas.

The M.P. Church organized the Texas Conference in 1848, setting it off from the Louisiana Conference. Though the denomination organized twelve other conferences and mission conferences in Texas between 1848 and 1920, the Texas body was the basic conference in the state, most of the others being formed from it and a number of them being absorbed by it as the years passed. The more important ancillary conferences of the denomination in the state were Central Texas (1878-1912), Colorado (1860-1880), Colorado Texas (1880-1912), and the Colorado Texas Colored Mission Conference (1920-1939). Thus the M.P. Church came to unification in 1939 with two conferences in Texas—Texas and Colorado Texas Colored Mission Conferences.

Other Methodist denominations have work in Texas. The A.M.E. CHURCH has several conferences in Texas along with PAUL QUINN COLLEGE at Waco, founded in 1872. The C.M.E. CHURCH has four conferences in the state and TEXAS COLLEGE at Tyler, founded in 1894, while the A.M.E. ZION CHURCH has one conference. The FREE METHODISTS also have one conference in Texas.

The M.E. Church, South was of course the largest of the merging denominations in Texas in 1939. Its five Anglo-Saxon conferences had 445,159 members and its two Mexican conferences 5,993 for a total membership of 451,152. The M.E. Church had 14,760 members in its Southern Conference, not all of whom resided in Texas, plus 33,791 members in its two Negro conferences. The M.P. Church brought about 75 churches and some 4,000 members into The Methodist Church.

Sixteen members of Texas conferences have been elevated to the episcopacy: SETH WARD (1906), EDWIN D. MOUZON (1910), JOHN M. MOORE (1918), HIRANI A. BOAZ and SAMUEL R. HAY (1922), PAUL B. KERN and A. FRANK SMITH (1930), WILLIAM C. MARTIN and CHARLES C. SELECNIAN (1938), PAUL E. MARTIN, WILLIS J. KING, and W. ANGIE SMITH (1944), KENNETH W. COPELAND, W. KENNETH POPE, and O. EUGENE SLATER (1960), and ALSIE H. CARLETON (1968). Six other bishops were at some time members of Texas conferences before their election: HOYT M. DORBS (1922), ARTHUR J. MOORE (1930), H. BASCOM WATTS (1952), W. RALPH WARD (1960), and LANCE WEBB (1964). In addition, two bishops though never members of any Texas conference, served Methodism in the state before their election: ENOCH M. MARVIN (1866), and IVAN LEE HOLT (1938).

Since unification in 1939 Methodism has grown in Texas. The Highland Park Church, DALLAS, and First Church, HOUSTON, are probably the largest Methodist churches in the world, the one reporting over 9,182 members in 1969, and the other 9,280. In Texas The United Methodist Church owns and operates one university, six colleges, and two training schools, and it supports seven hospitals, 13 retirement and nursing homes, one children's home, one home for unmarried mothers, and one church paper, The Texas Methodist (see Texas Christian Advocate).

In 1968 the eight annual conferences in Texas reported 782,088 members and property valued at $350,811,673. Add 30,000 members and property valued at $9,575,000 from the part of the New Mexico Conference which is in the state of Texas, and the 1968 figures for Texas are approximately 812,000 church members and property valued at $360,386,000.

General Minutes, ME, MES, TMC.

Minutes of all Texas annual conferences.

O. W. Nail, Texas Centennial Yearbook. 1934.

———, Texas Methodism. 1961.

———, Southwest Texas Conference. 1958.

M. Phelan, Methodism in Texas. 1924.

W. N. Vernon, North Texas. 1967. OLIN W. NAIL

TEXAS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. The Methodists of TEXAS had a paper as early as 1847 when Robert B. Wells started in the town of Brenham the Texas Christian Advocate and Brenham Advertiser. It was partly a church paper and partly a regular weekly newspaper, as its name suggests. At the end of the first year the paper was moved to HOUSTON and ORCENETH FISHER edited it under the name of The Texas Christian Advocate. About a year later Chauncey Richardson became editor, and he renamed it the Texas Wesleyan Banner. The GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1850 gave it official recognition. It carried much general news, and was not exclusively a religious paper. The editor claimed for it the largest circulation in Texas—1,500. But it had financial troubles, and when the salary was reduced Richardson resigned. A loyal layman, Charles Shearn, helped to steady the paper financially, as did DAVID AYRES a few years later. Various preachers served as editors, and it was moved to Galveston in 1854 and renamed the Texas Christian Advocate. When GALVESTON was blockaded during the Civil War the paper was moved back to Houston, but soon suspended publication, not to resume until December 1864.

In 1866, I. C. John was elected editor and served for eighteen years. In the same year a youth started working for the printers who eventually became the publisher and an outstanding Methodist churchman—LOUIS BLAYLOCK. Blaylock and his partner, William A. Shaw, as publishers, and John as editor made the paper strong and popular. It was militant against gambling and saloons. By 1884 it had 10,500 subscribers and was the outstanding religious paper in the state.

In 1887 the paper was moved to DALLAS, with Blaylock still the publisher and with a circulation of 18,000. In 1898 GEORGE C. RANKIN was chosen editor and became the most popular editor in the paper's history. During his seventeen-year tenure he fought gambling, prostitution, dancing, liquor, and Sabbath disrespect, and rallied Methodists and others in favor of prohibition laws.

After Rankin's death in 1915, editors included W. D. Bradfield, A. J. Weeks, and E. A. Hunter. During these years (until 1924) Louis Blaylock as publisher provided a stable base for the finances of the paper, and is remembered with gratitude for his loyalty and integrity.

In 1932 the name was changed to The Southwestern Advocate, serving for a time OKLAHOMA and NEW MEXICO as well as Texas Methodism. Twenty years later it was again named the Texas Christian Advocate. In 1960 it became The Texas Methodist and assumed newspaper format and size, under the editorship of Carl E. Keightley. By arranging for a large number of local church editions of the paper, the circulation during the next five or six years reached over 60,000. In 1965 a RIO GRANDE CONFERENCE edition in Spanish was begun, and the paper set up its own printing plant. In 1967 the first layman was chosen editor in the person of Jon Kinslow, a former newspaperman.

O. W. Nail, Texas Methodism. 1960. WALTER N. VERNON

TEXAS COLLEGE, Tyler, Texas, was founded in 1894 by a group of ministers of the C.M.E. CHURCH. Instruction began in 1895 with O. T. Womack as the first president. The name of the institution was changed to Phillips University in 1909, but resumed the name of Texas College in 1912. The institution has a four-year undergraduate liberal arts program. It has a governing board of twenty-four regular members, not including ex-officio members and advisory members. Members of the governing board are nominated by the five annual conferences of the C.M.E. Church in the state of TEXAS and confirmed by the board of trustees.

Library, 32,583 volumes; total enrollment, 500; number of foreign students, one; total faculty, forty; campus acreage, sixty-six; number of buildings, twenty-five (two buildings are now under construction); value of physical plant, $1,455,000; endowment, book value, $408,000; market value, $457,000; current income, $955,000; current expenditures, $936,000.

TEXAS CONFERENCE goes back to the organization of Methodism in Texas. (See TEXAS for beginnings of Methodism in the state.) The Texas Conference (ME) was organized at Rutersville, Texas on Dec. 25, 1840 with Bishop BEVERLY WAUGH presiding. The conference territory included all of Texas except the northeast which was then in the ARKANSAS CONFERENCE. The Texas Conference began with three districts—Galveston, Rutersville, and San Augustine. It had sixteen charges, and 1,623 white and 230 colored members.

The Texas Conference was divided in 1845 to form the Eastern Texas and Western Texas Conferences. In 1846 the Western body changed its name to the Texas Conference (MES). Both Texas conferences adhered South. In 1859 and 1866 more conferences were carved from the Texas Conference territory, and in 1902 the East Texas Conference, which had given up part of its territory in 1874 to form the Trinity (NORTH TEXAS) CONFERENCE, was absorbed by the Texas Conference. There has been little change in the boundaries of the Texas Conference since that time. Its territory is east Texas.

In 1902 the Texas Conference had 171 charges, 54,107 members, and churches and parsonages valued at about $850,000. By 1920 there were 230 pastoral charges, 82,477 members, and property valued at $3,792,903. The conference came to unification in 1939 with 274 pastoral charges, 123,658 members, and property valued at $8,938,642.

The Texas Conference (MC) was organized at First Church, Houston, on Nov. 8, 1939, with Bishop A. FRANK SMITH presiding. After the second world war the population of Texas grew rapidly. In 1940 the population of the state was 6,414,000. By 1967 the estimated population was nearly 11,000,000. The Texas Conference grew with the population, its membership nearly doubling in the same period of time.

MCMAHAN'S CHAPEL near San Augustine is both the oldest continuing Protestant and Methodist congregation in Texas. Bishop A. Frank Smith presided over the Texas Conference from 1934 to 1960, a record of continuous supervision of one conference by one bishop.

LON MORRIS, a Methodist junior college at Jacksonville, is within the bounds of the Texas Conference. In 1968 the conference contributed $187,707 to the Texas Methodist College Association. The conference supports the Methodist Hospital and the San Jacinto Hospital at Houston. It has three retirement homes, Crestview at Bryan, Moody House at Galveston, and Happy Harbour at La Porte. In co-operation with other conferences, the Texas Conference supports eight WESLEY FOUNDATIONS in the state, the Methodist Home for Children at Waco, the Methodist Mission Home for unmarried mothers at San Antonio, and The Texas Methodist at Dallas.

In 1970 the Texas Conference reported eleven districts, 527 pastoral charges, 718 ministers, 232,517 members, and property valued at $123,318,432. During that year the conference raised for all purposes $17,827,840.

General Minutes, ME, MES, TMC, UMC.

Minutes of the Texas Conference.

O. W. Nail, Texas Methodism. 1961. ALBEA GODBOLD

TEXAS CONFERENCE (CJ) began as the Texas Mission Conference (ME) which was organized at HOUSTON, Jan. 18, 1867 with Bishop MATTHEW SIMPSON presiding. It was formed by dividing the Mississippi Mission Conference, and the territory was the state of TEXAS. At the outset the body was composed of both white and Negro ministers and churches. The mission conference began with fourteen charges and 491 members, but in the first session it created three districts, one of which was German, and listed a total of nineteen charges. On Jan. 25, 1869 the mission conference became the Texas Conference with Bishop Simpson again presiding. At the time it had five districts, forty-four charges, and 3,547 members.

In 1874 the Texas Conference was divided to form the WEST TEXAS CONFERENCE and at the same time the SOUTHERN GERMAN CONFERENCE was organized to include all the German work of the denomination in Texas and LOUISIANA. Thereafter the Texas Conference was a Negro conference and its territory was east Texas.

In 1873 WILEY COLLEGE, named for Bishop ISAAC W. WILEY, was founded at Marshall. Wiley is the second oldest college for Negroes west of the Mississippi River, the first school west of the river to receive a Carnegie Library, and the first Negro college west of the river to be granted "A" rating. It has an endowment of $1,000,000 and an enrollment of about 700.

The Texas Conference came to unification in 1939 with five districts, 102 charges, 22,356 members including inactive ones, and property valued at $698,400. As a conference in the CENTRAL JURISDICTION of The Methodist Church it had in 1968 four districts—Beaumont, Houston, Marshall, and Navasota—102 charges, 106 ministers, 19,421 members, and property valued at $5,360,319.

One member of the Texas Conference was elected bishop, WILLIS J. KING (1944).

In 1968 the name of the Texas Conference was changed to Gulf Coast Conference, and it was placed in the Houston Area of the South Central Jurisdiction pending merger with the Texas Conference of that Jurisdiction.

General Minutes, MEC and MC.

Minutes of the Texas Conference.

O. W. Nail, Texas Methodism. 1961. F. E. MASER

TEXAS WESLEYAN COLLEGE, Fort Worth, Texas, had its beginning as coeducational Polytechnic College, established in 1891. The name was changed to Texas Woman's College in 1914. Then in 1935, it returned to coeducational status as Texas Wesleyan College.

This institution passed through several periods of change, and its future was uncertain for a time because of the founding of SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIVERSITY, as well as a heavy debt incurred during the depressed 1930's. In 1935 the resources of Texas Wesleyan Academy in Austin were transferred to Texas Wesleyan College.

Credit for the survival and ultimate progress of Texas Wesleyan College is due to the leadership of Law Sone, who served as president from 1935 to 1968. Degrees offered are the B.A., B.S., B.M. (Music), B.S. in Business, and Master of Education. The governing board has twenty-five trustees elected by five annual conferences in Texas.

JOHN O. GROSS

THACORE, CYRIL MADHAVLAL (1905-), president of LUCKNOW CHRISTIAN COLLEGE, was born at Nadiad in Gujarat, May 1, 1905. His father, Madhavlal N. Thacore, was a pioneer Methodist minister serving both rural and city churches in Gujarat. Two of Thacore's uncles have also been pastors, and two of his sisters are married to Methodist ministers.

His academic career is replete with honors. He earned the B.A. honors degree from Bombay University in 1928, was made Dakshina Fellow of Gujarat College in Bombay University (1928-29), and was awarded the M.A. degree in 1930. In 1933 he won a teacher's diploma from London University, and in 1948 obtained the Ph.D. from Lucknow University. In 1951 he was awarded an honorary LL.D. degree by OKLAHOMA CITY UNIVERSITY. He joined the faculty of Lucknow Christian College in 1930 as a lecturer in English and three years later became head of the department. In 1937 he was elected vice-principal and in 1949, president, the designation being changed from principal that year.

During his presidency various departments of the college have been upgraded and expanded. Bachelor of Arts courses, which had been closed in the reorganization that set up Lucknow University, were reopened in 1954 with the full approval of the university. The college of Physical Education inaugurated a postgraduate diploma course in 1955. Facilities for science courses have been strengthened by the addition of much new equipment. The University Grants Commission of the government of INDIA and the Kresge Foundation of DETROIT have joined the State government and the Methodist Board of Missions in providing the necessary funds. A beautiful chapel has been constructed as a memorial to Bishop J. W. CHITAMBAR. The hostels have been reconstructed and enlarged.

Thacore was married in 1934 to Josephine Desai of Nadiad, Gujarat. Their three children have made distinguished records in universities in India and abroad.

Dr. Thacore has been president of the Uttar Pradesh Christian Council, chairman of the North India Board of Christian Education, member of the Uttar Pradesh Board of High School and Intermediate Education and of both the academic and executive councils of Lucknow University, and of the executive board of the Methodist Church in Southern Asia. He was the lay delegate of GUJARAT CONFERENCE to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1932.

J. N. Hollister, Southern Asia. 1956. J. WASKOM PICKETT

THAKUR, NARAIN SINGH, a landowner in Budaun District of the United Provinces, was converted in 1864. He lived in a village near Budaun City where he was a recognized leader. He embraced Christian teaching eagerly and became a zealous nonprofessional evangelist. There was persecution from the time of his baptism but his courage never wavered. He built a small chapel near his house and invited people to it for worship and study. After years of devoted service he was attacked one night. The next morning he was discovered with his head almost severed from his body. The identity of his assailants was never discovered.

J. WASKOM PICKETT

THEOLOGICAL COLLEGES, British. The Methodist Church in Great Britain owns and maintains several residential colleges for the training of its ministers for home and overseas service. The WESLEYAN METHODIST CONFERENCE allocated grants from the CENTENARY FUND of 1839 for the erection of two theological institutions, one in the vicinity of LONDON and the other in the neighborhood of MANCHESTER, to replace the centers of ministerial training then in existence in rented properties at Hoxton and Abney House, both in London. Estates were acquired near the two large cities, and buildings were added to the existing houses, with accommodations for between sixty and seventy students and houses for tutors in each place—DIDSBURY COLLEGE, Manchester, opened in 1842, and RICHMOND COLLEGE, Surrey, opened in 1843. In 1868 the denomination opened another such institution, WESLEY COLLEGE, Headingley, LEEDS, to which in 1881 was added HANDSWORTH COLLEGE, BIRMINGHAM. In 1926 they added another for postgraduate ministerial training, Wesley House, CAMBRIDGE.

The METHODIST NEW CONNEXION opened a theological institution at RANMOOR, SHEFFIELD, in 1862, and the UNITED METHODIST FREE CHURCHES at Manchester in 1872. With their incorporation into the UNITED METHODIST CHURCH in 1907 these institutions were amalgamated in Victoria Park College, Manchester. After years of cooperation between this institution and Hartley College, Manchester, which in 1881 took over the ministerial training of the PRIMITIVE METHODISTS, the two colleges joined forces in 1934 as HARTLEY-VICTORIA COLLEGE.

The curricula of the larger colleges are similar. Students normally stay for three or four years, under the guidance of a principal, three or four tutors, and an assistant tutor. Each college works in close cooperation with the local university. When places are available, it is common for men from overseas or non-ministerial university students to live in the colleges and to share in their life. In the interests of economy and efficiency The Methodist Church decided that it must reduce the number of six theological colleges which it took over at METHODIST UNION in 1932. In 1968 Wesley College, Headingley, was amalgamated with Didsbury College, and renamed Wesley College, Bristol. In that same year Handsworth College was closed, joining forces with The Queen's College, Birmingham, an Anglican institution, to form the first English ecumenical theological college.

NORMAN P. GOLDBAWK

THEUER, DONALD A. (1927-), American E.U.B. layman, was born in Cleveland, Ohio, on Jan. 20, 1927. His grandfather, CARL HAUSER, was publisher for the EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION and his father, Charles J. Theuer, was manager of the Cleveland publishing house for THE EVANGELICAL CHURCH. Elected publisher by the 1966 GENERAL CONFERENCE of The E.U.B. Church, Donald Theuer served in that position until the formation of The United Methodist Church in 1968, when he was elected by the BOARD OF PUBLICATION as Vice President and Assistant General Manager for Administration.

In 1950 Theuer received the A.B. degree from NORTH CENTRAL COLLEGE. In 1952 he received the M.B.A. degree from the School of Business, University of Chicago. He served with the U.S. Air Force occupation forces in Germany in 1945-46. Theuer held positions at Ford Motor Company, Detroit, in the divisional controller's office (1952-1956) and with the marketing staff (1962-65). From 1956 to 1962, he served the BOARD OF MISSIONS of The E.U.B. Church as treasurer and business agent for the West Africa Mission, SIERRA LEONE. Sharing this missionary service with him was his wife, Lilburne Ruth Kaiser. They are the parents of three children: Marlynn, Marc and Jon.

Theuer joined the staff of the E.U.B. Board of Publication in 1965 as director of literature and periodicals. In 1966 he became assistant publisher and on Jan. 15, 1967 he assumed the office of publisher. Other responsibilities include: trustee of EVANGELICAL THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, delegate to the Consultation on Church Union, member of the executive committee and program board of the Division of Christian Education of the NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES of Christ in the U.S.A.

CURTIS CHAMBERS

THIRKIELD, WILBUR PATTERSON (1854-1936), American educator, FREEDMEN'S AID SECRETARY, and bishop, was born at Franklin, Ohio, on Sept. 25, 1854, his family of Norse origin coming from England to America. The son of Eden Burrowes and Amanda Thirkield, he was educated at OHIO WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY (A.B., 1876; A.M., 1879), BOSTON UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY (S.T.B., 1881; later honorary D.D., LL.D.). On Oct. 27, 1881, he married Mary Haven of Malden, Mass. She was the daughter of Bishop GILBERT HAVEN and they had five children.

After a pastorate in CINCINNATI, he was called to CLARK UNIVERSITY, a Negro school at Atlanta, Ga., to organize, help establish and serve as dean of GAMMON THEOLOGICAL SCHOOL, the first theological school in the South open to Negroes. The school opened with only two students, and for two years Thirkield was the only professor. During the first year Gammon Hall was erected, and in the second year the enrollment reached twenty-nine.

In 1888 Elijah H. Gammon gave the school $200,000 for endowment and it became independent of Clark with Thirkield as first president, serving 1883-1900, and securing an endowment and equipment totaling $700,000. Upon making Gammon the leading institution of its kind in the South, Thirkield resigned, but remained chairman of its board of trustees until his death. He was elected General Secretary of the EPWORTH LEAGUE, November 1899, and General Secretary of the Freedmen's Aid and Southern Education Society, 1900-06.

At the solicitation of President Theodore Roosevelt and others he became president of Howard University, WASHINGTON, D.C., 1906-12. Here he enlarged the endowment, doubled its annual income, increased enrollment from 936 to 1,409 and faculty from 90 to 132 and added to the plant additions valued at $500,000.

He was elected bishop in 1912 with his residence in NEW ORLEANS, where, of course, the M.E. Church, South, was the dominant Methodism. Thirkield gave himself largely to uniting and to guiding Negro Methodists in the South.

He made many official visits to Latin America and MEXICO and founded several farm schools to prepare peons for land ownership, and centers for training in the care of children.

A member of the Phi Beta Kappa and Beta Theta Pi fraternities, Bishop Thirkield wrote seven books and published several addresses, including: The Higher Education of the Negro; The Personality and Message of the Preacher, 1914; and the Book of Common Worship for the Several Communions. This last as well as a book, Service and Prayers for Church and Home, gave him something of a reputation as a liturgist, a field of interest then in its incipency in Methodism.

He was a trustee of a number of colleges. Bishop Thirkield died in Brooklyn, N. Y., on Nov. 7, 1936, and was buried in Franklin, Ohio.

He was an energetic, progressive educator, an eloquent public speaker and a man of great force of character, broad scholarship and high ideals.

Clergy Who's Who.

F. D. Leete. Methodist Bishops. 1948.

National Cyclopaedia of American Biography, The.

JESSE A. EARL

THOBURN, C. STANLEY (1902-), is president of the North India Theological College at BAREILLY, INDIA. This college was established in 1964 by action of the Methodist Church in Southern Asia, the Punjab and North India Synods and the Malwa Church Council of the United Church of North India, and the Church of India, Burma, and Ceylon. It continues the work of the Bareilly Theological Seminary, founded in 1872 and of theological schools previously serving the other cooperating churches. The property of the Bareilly Theological Seminary is now used by this college.

Thoburn is the younger son of the late Rev. and Mrs. Lyle Thoburn. The father came to India as a missionary of the M.E. Board of Foreign Missions in 1893, and the mother came as an appointee of the WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY in 1894. They were married in 1899. Stanley was born in Almora, India, in 1902. An older brother was born in LUCKNOW in 1900. The father died of cholera in Lucknow in 1905 while serving as agent of the Methodist PUBLISHING HOUSE. The widow remained in mission work, and the sons completed high school in India. The brothers both returned to India as missionaries. Their father was a nephew of Bishop JAMES MILLS THOBURN and of ISABELLA THOBURN, founder of the college that bears her name.

Stanley Thoburn holds the following degrees: B.A. from ALLEGHENY COLLEGE; S.T.B., M.A., and Th.D. from BOSTON UNIVERSITY; and D.D. from Serampur University. He returned to India as a missionary in 1928. His appointments in India have included: professor, Bareilly Seminary; pastor, Naini Tal English Church; superintendent, Naini Tal District; district missionary, Sitapur; and Leonard Theological College professor for twenty years.

His brother, Wilbur Thoburn, served as a lay missionary in India and in PAKISTAN, at LUCKNOW CHRISTIAN and Forman Christian Colleges, and since 1961 has been a professor at Iowa State University.

J. WASKOM PICKETT

ISABELLA THOBURN

THOBURN, ISABELLA (1840-1901), was the first missionary appointed by the WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY of the M.E. Church. Her eagerness to go to INDIA and her obvious qualifications for missionary service contributed largely to the organization of the society. Accompanied by Dr. CLARA SWAIN, the second appointee of the society, she arrived at BAREILLY on Jan. 20, 1870. The Annual Meeting of the India Mission was then in session. These extraordinary women were joyfully received by the mission and especially by Miss Thoburn's brother, JAMES, whose letters from India to the family at home had first awakened her interest in missionary service.

Isabella was the ninth child in a family of five boys and five girls. The parents emigrated from the North of IRELAND to America and settled on a sixty-acre farm near St. Clairsville, Ohio. After reaching the top in local schools, she entered Wheeling Seminary in VIRGINIA. Her brother David wrote to their brother James that "Bella is the genius of the family. She excels in painting and as a writer." After Wheeling, she studied for a year in the Cincinnati Academy of Design. These were the tragic years of America's Civil War, and she spent much time caring for the wounded. But after leaving school, she gave most of her time to teaching, and in that found her vocation.

In 1866 her brother James, by then the recognized leader of Methodism in India, wrote Isabella a personal letter in which he expressed the conviction that there could not be a vigorous church in India so long as the women remained untaught. He asked if she would like to come and help educate Indian girls. She replied promptly that she would come when the way opened. Immediately she began to pray and work for opening. Others also prayed and worked, with the result that the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the M.E. Church was organized on March 30, 1869.

On her arrival and that of Clara Swain in 1870, Miss Thoburn was appointed to LUCKNOW. Nothing was said as to the nature of work expected of her. She started to Lucknow immediately. Within a month she had settled, learned a little Hindustani, and decided to give first place to the education of girls, second place to evangelistic work with women secluded in their homes. On April 18, 1870 she opened a school for girls in a tiny, dark room on a crowded, dusty and noisy street. "It seemed a great mistake to start a school there," her brother wrote later, "but the venture was made on the principle that the best possible is always the right thing to do." On the first day there were but six girls enrolled. Within six months, after two moves to better locations, the six had grown to twenty-five. The next year the house of the treasurer of the last King of Oudh was purchased. With it came nine acres of land. By the end of 1872, the school had twenty boarders and forty-five day students. The school was then named Lal Bagh Girls' School.

From these humble beginnings two great institutions have developed—the ISABELLA THOBURN COLLEGE on property known as Chand Bagh (Moon Garden), and the Lal Bagh Higher Secondary School.

Miss Thoburn's creative personality is also reflected in other institutions in India and in America. She assisted in the founding of Wellesley Girl's School in Naini Tal and Cawnpore Girls' High School, now the co-educational Methodist High School of Kanpur. During a four-year health leave in the United States she made massive contributions to deaconess work in CHICAGO and CINCINNATI. When a hospital grew up out of the deaconess work in Cincinnati, she became its first superintendent.

Miss Thoburn started holding college classes in India in 1886. Progress was slow. Ten years later she wrote, "seventeen girls have passed the entrance examination and ten the intermediate examination. The first B.A. candidate will appear [in the university examination] this year. Eleven college students are now in attendance."

Miss Thoburn died of cholera in Lucknow, Sept. 11, 1901. She had called her college the "Lucknow Woman's College," but after her death the authorities quickly and unanimsly decided that it should be known as the "Isabella Thoburn College."

M. A. Dimmitt, Isabella Thoburn College. 1963.

J. N. Hollister, Southern Asia. 1956. J. WASKOM PICKETT

JAMES M. THOBURN

THOBURN, JAMES MILLS (1836-1922), was the first bishop of the Methodist Church to reside in INDIA. He was elected missionary bishop for India and MALAYSIA by the M.E. GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1888.

Thoburn's parents migrated to America from IRELAND early in the nineteenth century and settled on a farm near St. Clairsville, Ohio. James was born there March 7, 1836. When he was fourteen years old his father died, leaving his wife with ten children and a mortgaged farm. A year later James enrolled at ALLEGHENY COLLEGE. He was converted through the preaching of Bishop CALVIN KINGSLEY. A book on early piety awakened his interest in missions. He joined the PITTSBURGH CONFERENCE and was ordained in 1858.

The next year he arrived in India with four new missionary couples. One of the men, J. R. Downey, died eleven days after reaching Lucknow. Mrs. Downey remained in India and later married Thoburn. She died in 1864 and Thoburn returned to America to place his son with relatives. He attended the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1864, and there began to develop remarkable influence as a spokesman for missions.

After returning to India in 1866, he soon became a recognized leader of Methodist missionaries. He helped to start The Indian Witness, and was its first editor. He and WILLIAM TAYLOR joined forces and became an influential team for evangelism and church growth. Coming home several times, he acquired wide recognition in America.

When the General Conference decided to elect a missionary bishop for India and Malaysia, there was quick agreement that Thoburn was the man. His election on the first ballot was acclaimed throughout Southern Asia, but the Methodists there objected to the limitations placed upon the authority of missionary bishops.

Of his influence in America it was said that "Thoburn put India on America's heart." JOHN R. MOTT called him "possibly the greatest ecclesiastic of the nineteenth century." Twelve years after his election as bishop, the General Conference decided that India should have three bishops and elected E. W. PARKER and F. W. WARNE.

Parker died without holding a Conference session. Thoburn suffered a serious break in health but remained in office until 1908. He died at Meadville, Pa., on Nov. 28, 1922.

A letter to his sister, ISABELLA THOBURN, was in part responsible for her coming to India. She there founded the college known by her name.

Bishop Thoburn's many writings included My Missionary Apprentice, 1886; The Deaconess and her Vocation, 1893; Christless Nations, 1894; The Church of Pentecost, 1899; Life of Isabella Thoburn, 1903; The Christian Conquest of India, 1906; India and Southern Asia, 1907; God's Heroes Our Examples, 1914.

William Henry Crawford, ed., Thoburn and India: Semi-centennial Sermon and Addresses Delivered at the Thoburn Jubilee. New York: Eaton & Mains, 1909.

J. N. Hollister, Southern Asia. 1956.

F. D. Leete, Methodist Bishops. 1948.

William Fraser McDowell, Creative Men: Our Fathers and Brethren. New York: Abingdon Press, 1934.

W. F. Oldham, Thoburn. 1918. J. WASKOM PICKETT

THOM, WILLIAM (1751-1811), British Methodist, was the first president of the METHODIST NEW CONNEXION. He was born at Aberdeen, SCOTLAND, in September, 1751, had a good education, and was brought up in the Church of Scotland, but early joined the Methodists. Wesley took him out to travel in 1774, and in his circuits he often saw real revivals. Wesley appointed him as one of the first LEGAL HUNDRED in the Deed Poll. In the disputes after Wesley's death about the observance of the Sacraments, Thom was a reformer, and joined with ALEXANDER KILHAM in founding the Methodist New Connexion, of which he was an early statesman. Altogether he served as president of conference six times, and as BOOK STEWARD from 1803 to his death. He died at Shooter's Hill, Hanley, Staffordshire, on Dec. 16, 1811.

O. A. BECKERLEGGE

THOMAS DAVID W. (1833- ?), was a pioneer Methodist missionary in North India. He and Mrs. Thomas arrived in January 1862, along with H. D. Brown and W. W. Hicks and their wives. Mr. and Mrs. Brown and Mr. and Mrs. Hicks served only a few years, but Mr. and Mrs. Thomas gave long and distinguished service. In 1865, the India Mission was organized as the first Methodist Annual Conference in Asia. Bishop EDWARD THOMSON appointed Thomas principal of the girls' orphanage in BAREILLY. As in many other missions, the care of orphans quickly became a major concern. The need was compelling, and the church had an unmistakable duty to meet the need. But Thomas was one of the first to recognize the limitations the work had in evangelism because the orphanage children were separated from their countrymen.

In 1868 Thomas made another effort to help needy people when he founded an industrial institution to give employment. It was abandoned a few years later as unsuccessful. Mrs. Thomas took an active part in the effort that led to the appointment of Dr. CLARA SWAIN as the first woman missionary doctor sent to India, and when Dr. Swain organized her first class for medical training fourteen of the seventeen in it were girls from the orphanage. Thomas led a deputation, which included Dr. Swain, to ask the Nawab of Rampur for a hospital site. The Nawab gave his entire estate of forty-two acres and two buildings in Bareilly.

Thomas took the lead in organizing the theological seminary at Bareilly (now North India Theological College). He gave $20,000 to purchase land and construct buildings and the Board of Foreign Missions gave the same amount. He then served as the first principal.

He wrote a commentary on Genesis, a book on the Trinity, and a pamphlet in Roman Urdu on miracles.

B. H. Badley, Indian Missionary Directory. 1892.

B. T. Badley, Southern Asia. 1931.

J. N. Hollister, Southern Asia. 1956.

J. E. Scott, Southern Asia. 1906. J. WASKOM PICKETT

THOMAS, FRANK MOREHEAD (1868-1921), American preacher and editor, was born in Bowling Green, Ky., July 3, 1868, the son of R. C. and Elizabeth Thomas. At an early age he consecrated his life to Christ and joined the M.E. Church, South. He attended the public schools of Bowling Green and at the age of eighteen graduated from Ogden College. He received the M.A. degree from VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY in 1892 and the B.D. degree the next year. In 1906, at the age of thirty-eight, KENTUCKY WESLEYAN COLLEGE conferred upon him the D.D. degree.

Thomas was admitted to the LOUISVILLE CONFERENCE of the M.E. Church, South, in 1893. As CHAPLAIN of the 3rd Regiment, Kentucky National Guards, he served with his company in the Spanish American War in CUBA in 1898. He held the leading appointments of his conference, including the Louisville District, 1910-14. He was a delegate to four GENERAL CONFERENCES and was fraternal delegate of the Southern Church to the General Conference of the M.E. Church in MINNEAPOLIS in 1912. He was a member of the FEDERAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES of Christ in America, a member and in certain meetings secretary of the Joint Commission then dealing with church union, and had served longer than any other man on that commission at the time of his death. In 1918 he was elected by the General Conference as BOOK EDITOR and Editor of the Quarterly Review, which position he held with distinction until his death in 1921.

He wrote many articles for religious publications and in 1915 published one volume entitled The Coming Presence. He was a man of outstanding intellectual endowments and attainments, a philosopher and a theologian of deep consecration and unusual spiritual insight.

Journal of the Louisville Conference, 1921. HARRY R. SHORT

THOMAS, JAMES (1860-1943), American preacher, was born in Chambers County, Ala., April 8, 1860. He went to ARKANSAS in 1887 and conducted a private school in the mountains west of Hot Springs. He engaged in the practice of law during that time, having been admitted to the bar in the circuit court at Hot Springs. He was licensed to preach in 1890 and was admitted on trial into the LITTLE ROCK CONFERENCE (MES) in 1891. He served pastorates at Hot Springs, LITTLE ROCK, TEXARKANA and Pine Bluff. He was the founder of First Church at Texarkana and served it as pastor for two quadrennia. He served fourteen years as a PRESIDING ELDER; two years as Centenary Secretary and nine years as Commissioner of HENDRIX COLLEGE.

Thomas raised the first permanent endowment for Hendrix College and for seventeen years was Chairman of its Board of Trustees. For meritorious service in the field of education Hendrix conferred upon him the D.D. degree.

James Thomas was one of the founders of the Arkansas Methodist Orphanage (now children's home) and served that institution as superintendent for twenty years, most of that time in connection with other positions of responsibility. He was Secretary of the Little Rock Conference Board of Trustees from its organization in 1899 until his death. For more than twenty years he was Secretary of the Conference Board of Missions. For many years he was one of the commissioners in charge of the publication of The Arkansas Methodist.

He represented his conference in five GENERAL CONFERENCES: 1906, 1922, 1926, 1930, 1934, in the special session of 1924, and several times as an alternate delegate. He was a member of the General Board of CHURCH EXTENSION from 1910 to 1943. He twice represented his conference at ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCES at LONDON in 1901 and at ATLANTA in 1931.

He died at his home in Little Rock, Ark., July 10, 1943, and is buried in Oakland Cemetery in that city.

Journal of the Little Rock Conference, 1943.

HAROLD DAVIS SADLER

JAMES S. THOMAS

THOMAS, JAMES SAMUEL (1919-), American bishop, was born at Orangeburg, S. C., on April 8, 1919, the son of a Methodist minister, the late James S. Thomas, Sr.

He received the following degrees: B.A. from CLAFLIN COLLEGE, in 1939; D.D., 1953; B.D. from GAMMON THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, in 1943; M.A. from DREW UNIVERSITY, in 1944; Ph.D. from Cornell University, New York, in 1953; and LL.D. from BETHUNE-COOKMAN, in 1963.

On July 7, 1945, he was united in marriage to Ruth Naomi Wilson. They have four daughters: Claudia, Gloria, Margaret, and Patricia.

In 1939-40, James Thomas was a rural school principal in Florence County, S.C. He was ordained an elder of

The Methodist Church in 1944, and became a member of the SOUTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE of the CENTRAL JURISDICTION. From 1942 until 1947 he was a pastor in the South Carolina Conference, Central Jurisdiction. At Gammon Theological Seminary, he was a professor of Rural Church, director of field work, and head of the practical studies division (1947-53). In the summers of 1948 and 1952 he acted as president of Gammon. From 1953 until 1964 he was associate director of the Department of Educational Institutions of the BOARD OF EDUCATION of The Methodist Church, NASHVILLE, working with Methodism's thirteen Negro colleges.

He was chairman of the Committee of Five created by the Central Jurisdiction in 1961 to look after and make recommendations concerning the moves being made to integrate the Conferences, churches, and membership of the Central (Negro) Jurisdiction with the five geographic Jurisdictions of The Methodist Church. He was elected a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1964 and subsequently in June 1964, was elected bishop by the Central Jurisdiction at its meeting in Daytona Beach, Fla., after a record-breaking seventeen ballots. He was assigned to the DES MOINES Area in July 1964, and became the second Negro Methodist bishop to lead a predominantly white area of 300,000 Methodists and 916 churches. Methodism is Iowa's oldest and largest denomination. The episcopal residence is in Des Moines.

Who's Who in America, Vol. 34.

Who's Who in The Methodist Church, 1966.

N. B. H.

THOMAS, JOHN (1796-1881), was a pioneer British missionary to the Friendly Islands. Born at Worcester, England, he was converted under Wesleyan preaching and offered for missionary work after reading the life of Henry Martyn. Both the London Missionary Society and the Wesleyan, WALTER LAWRY, had failed to establish work in the Friendly Islands, and Thomas was sent to begin again. With a Tasmanian, James Hutchinson, and their wives, they landed at TONGA in June, 1826. Persevering and tactful, quickly learning the language, he established happy relations with islanders and chiefs. For twenty-five years he was "the father of the mission," witnessing a remarkable change from intertribal warfare to settled government, and from paganism to Christian faith. A decisive event was the baptism of King Taufa'ahau and his wife, in 1831, as King George and Queen Charlotte (Salote). After four years of missionary deputation in England, Thomas returned to Tonga in 1854, when the South Seas were handed over to the new Australasian Conference until 1860. He was a true "father of God" to Tonga, and his influence is still felt in the Christian basis of the Tongan constitution and laws. He died on Jan. 29, 1881.

G. S. Rowe, A Memoir of J. Thomas. London, n.d.

CYRIL J. DAVEY

THOMAS, JOHN SAUNDERS LADD (1875-1959), American preacher, educator, was born at Pembroke, South Wales, May 1, 1875. He was educated in WALES, LONDON and America, studying also in the graduate school of Chicago Theological Seminary. He was ordained deacon in the ROCK RIVER CONFERENCE in 1902, received into full membership in 1905, and ordained an ELDER in 1906. In 1922 he was called to First Church, GERMANTOWN, PHILADELPHIA, then one of the commanding Methodist churches in the East, remaining there until 1942 when he became Dean of the School of Theology of Temple University, Philadelphia. He served in this last capacity for ten years. He was elected to four GENERAL CONFERENCES, and was also active in the Faith and Order Movement, attending the World Conferences of Faith and Order in 1927 and again in 1937. He was also a delegate to the ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE in London in 1921, and that in Atlanta, Ga., in 1931. He served with distinction on the Commission on Ritual and Orders of Worship of The Methodist Church, 1940-44. He was also a trustee of both DREW UNIVERSITY and of DREW THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, as well as of Temple University, and the Methodist Hospital in Philadelphia.

Thomas received many honors including the Conwell Award from Temple University in 1957. His chief contribution to Methodism was as a pulpit orator. His forthright, picturesque language, his challenging message, and his warm spirit evoked an appreciative response from hearers who filled the churches wherever he preached. He died July 14, 1959.

Minutes of the Philadelphia Annual Conference, 1960.

FREDERICK E. MASER

THOMAS, T. GEORGE (1909-), British Methodist Member of Parliament, was born of devoted Methodist parents in Port Talbot in 1909. After education at Tony-pandy Grammar School and the University College of Southampton, he became a school teacher, first in LONDON, then in Cardiff, where he was elected President of the Cardiff Association of the National Union of Teachers. For five years he served on the National Executive of the N.U.T., which proved a stepping-stone to a fruitful political career. He was elected Labour Member of Parliament for Central Cardiff (1945-50), and from 1950 to the present time has been the Member for West Cardiff. From 1951 he has served as Chairman of the Welsh Parliamentary Labour Party and in various government positions. In 1951 he was appointed Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Civil Aviation, and in more recent years has been Joint Parliamentary Under Secretary of State, first at the Home Office (1964-6), next at the Welsh Office (1966-7), and then at the Commonwealth Office (1967-8). In 1968 he was made a Privy Councillor and became the Secretary of State for Wales.

For over forty years he has served Methodism in various offices, including that of LOCAL PREACHER. He was elected Vice President of the Methodist Conference in 1960. He has also served as President of the National Brotherhood Movement, and has been active in the work of the WORLD METHODIST COUNCIL. In 1959 he delivered the BECKLY LECTURE at the British Methodist Conference, on the subject of The Christian Heritage in Politics.

FRANK BAKER

THOMAS, WILLIAM (1889-), a minister of the Belgian Conference of The Methodist Church, was born in Mezieres (Switzerland) on March 20, 1889, the son of a prominent pastor of Geneva, Frank Thomas. He graduated in Letters and in Theologie at universities both in Geneva and Berlin. He studied in America and obtained the Ph.D. degree from DREW UNIVERSITY in 1948. He was assistant to his father in his ministry from 1914 to 1919, and was then appointed a missionary of the M.E. Church, South, in Belgium in 1922.

He was thereafter pastor of the Antwerp (French) Methodist Church (1922-47), and again in 1949-53. He became district superintendent of the Flemish work, 1925-50, and has been professor in the Brussels Protestant Theological School since 1950. He became president of that school in 1952, and served in that capacity until 1958. He married Adrienne Blauben in Antwerp in 1922. He was honorably retired by and in the Belgian Conference of the Methodist Church in 1961.

WILLIAM G. THONGER

THOMAS, WILLIAM NATHANIEL (1892-1971), Rear Admiral and Chief of CHAPLAINS, United States Navy, was born in Rankin County, Miss., March 21, 1892, the son of John C. and Annie Laura (Thompson) Thomas. He won the B.A. degree with honors at MILLSAPS COLLEGE in 1912. In 1935, Millsaps awarded him the D.D. degree, and in 1941 AMERICAN UNIVERSITY so honored him. He married Martha Ellen Fondren, Feb. 18, 1913, and they had two sons, William N. and John E.

Thomas began his ministerial career in the MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE in 1911, serving several pastorates, including Summit, 1914-17. He was commissioned a chaplain in the United States Navy in January, 1918, and in succeeding years served at a Navy hospital, a naval station, on battleships, and at the Naval Academy, Annapolis. He was chaplain at Annapolis, 1924-27, and again 1933-45. His ministry to the midshipmen was so highly esteemed that the rule limiting chaplains to three years at any one post was set aside and his second tour of duty ran twelve years. Moreover, he was elected an honorary alumnus of the Naval Academy, a distinction accorded few non-graduates.

In 1945, Thomas became the first chaplain ever elevated to the rank of Rear Admiral, and in that capacity he served four years as Chief of Chaplains. In recognition of his service in the navy he was given the victory medal, the legion of merit, and other important citations.

On retiring from the navy in 1949 at fifty-seven years of age, Thomas was offered but declined the presidency of several institutions of higher learning. He was a trustee of American University, an advisory member of the Methodist Commission on Chaplains, an advisory member of the Naval Council of the Service Men's Christian League, and was on the board of control of the United States Naval Institute. He moved to LAKE JUNALUSKA, N. C., and was for twenty years a member of the board of trustees of the Lake Junaluska Methodist Assembly. He assisted in raising funds for that institution, and served as Dean of the Memorial Chapel. In the latter capacity he conducted the early morning communion services. While in retirement he served several interim pastorates in churches of different denominations in NORTH CAROLINA and MISSISSIPPI. He died at Lake Junaluska, April 27, 1971, and after funeral services in the Naval Academy Chapel at Annapolis, was buried with military honors in the Chaplains' Lot, Arlington National Cemetery.

Who's Who in America, 1946-47.

Waynesville Mountaineer, Waynesville, N. C., Apr. 28, 1971.

ALBEA GODBOLD

THOMPSON, PETER (1847-1909), British Methodist, was born at Esprick, Lancashire, in 1847. Converted at the age of eighteen, he entered the ministry of the WESLEYAN METHODIST CHURCH in 1871. After successful work at Broughton-in-Furness, in 1885 he was sent by Conference to East London, where in response to The Bitter Cry of Outcast London (1883), the East End Mission was born. With St. George's Chapel as his headquarters, he founded, organized, and developed the mission, and, concerned with all social problems, served on the local Board of Guardians (who were concerned with the administration of poor relief). He became the first promoter of the Anti-Sweating League (which wanted to improve conditions of work in London). Amid a scene of incredible depravity he established social services: soup kitchens to provide cheap nourishment for those on the verge of starvation, outings in the country for children and their mothers, gospel temperance propaganda to combat drunkenness; and under his influence two notorious gin palaces and music halls were purchased and turned into mission centers. He died in 1909.

R. G. Burnett, Story of the East London Mission. London, 1946.

JOHN T. WILKINSON

THOMPSON, ROBERT FRANKLIN (1908-), American minister and university president, was born at Primrose, Neb., on May 30, 1908, the son of John F. and Sophia (Maxwell) Thompson. He was educated at NEBRASKA WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY (A.B., 1930; LL.D., 1947); and received his B.D. at DREW UNIVERSITY in 1931, M.A. there in 1934, and Ph.D. in 1940. He took post-graduate work at OXFORD, England, and at the University of Zürich, SWITZERLAND, and received the honorary L.H.D. degree from the AMERICAN UNIVERSITY in 1960, a D.P.S. from the UNIVERSITY OF THE PACIFIC, and a D.H. from WILLAMETTE UNIVERSITY, both in 1967. His wife was Lucille Burtner, whom he married on June 30, 1931. They have two daughters.

Dr. Thompson joined the NEW YORK EAST CONFERENCE for a time, but became a professor of Willamette University in OREGON, 1937-42, and then the president of the UNIVERSITY OF PUGET SOUND, Tacoma, Wash., in 1942.

He was a dean at the Pacific Northwest Pastors' School; a member of the executive committee of the General Conference COUNCIL ON WORLD SERVICE AND FINANCE, (1952-64, and 1968-); a general secretary of the National Board of Education of The Methodist Church, 1964; a member of the executive committee of the WORLD METHODIST COUNCIL; chairman of the Finance Committee of the American Section of the World Methodist Council, 1968; president of the World Affairs Council, 1945-46; and on the Board of Directors of Pacific First Federal, Nebraska Wesleyan University, and Tacoma General Hospital, the Washington State Historical Association, and the National Association of Methodist Colleges and Universities. He resides in TACOMA, Wash.

Who's Who in America, Vol. 34.

Who's Who in The Methodist Church, 1966.

N. B. H.

THOMPSON, THOMAS (c.1755-1828), British layman, was born near HULL, Yorkshire, England, the son of a farmer. Employed at first in the household of WILLIAM WILBERFORCE, he became a wealthy banker and also a Member of Parliament, where he used his influence to defend the interests and promote the aims of Methodism. In 1795 he presided over the meeting of Methodist trustees named to draw up the PLAN OF PACIFICATION. He was also chairman of the public meeting at LEEDS in 1813 that led to the founding of the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Association, of which he became the first lay treasurer in 1815. He was the author of French Philosophy, a work of Christian apologetic. He died in Paris on Sept. 14, 1828.

G. E. LONG

WILLIAM THOMPSON

THOMPSON, WILLIAM (1733-1799), first President of the British CONFERENCE after the death of JOHN WESLEY in 1791, was born at Fermanagh in IRELAND and became a Methodist preacher in 1757.

He went to England prior to 1765 and entered the itinerancy there, being appointed to DUBLIN. He underwent persecution in common with many other Methodists of the period and on one occasion was imprisoned and several of his hearers were impressed into the King's navy; their release was secured by the COUNTESS OF HUNTINGDON.

For more than thirty years Thompson served circuits in the British Conference. In 1766 he was appointed to Athlone and then recrossed the Channel to serve in succession Edinburgh, Glasgow, Newcastle, LEEDS, YORK, MANCHESTER, Birstal and Halifax. He served six years at Edinburgh, five each at Newcastle, and Leeds, and two each at Manchester, Birstal and Halifax.

On the death of John Wesley, March 2, 1791, Thompson dispatched from his Halifax Circuit a circular (THE HALIFAX CIRCULAR), signed by himself and several others, which was intended to prepare the preachers for the problems that would face them at the approaching Conference. It was proposed that offices be filled according to seniority for one-year terms, that one be designated to preside annually at the Irish Conference, and that committees be set up to direct the affairs of the districts between Conferences. This circular led to various meetings of preachers, at some of which the Halifax proposals were repudiated, but the discussions served to fix the general administrative pattern.

Thompson was elected President at the Conference in 1791, the Conference passing over THOMAS COKE and ALEXANDER MATHER to so elect him. At the same Conference he was assigned to the Wakefield Circuit.

William Thompson was a well-known and successful preacher, fitted to occupy the post. But he was not one of the notables of Methodism such as Thomas Coke, JOSEPH BENSON, Alexander Mather, or JOHN PAWSON. There has been speculation as to why the Conference passed over men like these, and especially Coke and the others who had been ordained by the Founder himself. Perhaps Thompson's leadership in the affair of the Halifax Circular had an influence. Some have thought that an administration less autocratic than that of Wesley was desired. "The chief reason which determined the choice," according to George Smith, "was Thompson's peculiar genius for ecclesiastical polity. Brought up in the north of Ireland, he had closely studied the system of the Presbyterian Church government and was probably far ahead of his compeers in acquaintance with ecclesiastical questions."

Thompson was largely responsible for the preparation of the PLAN OF PACIFICATION of 1795. This prevented the dispute regarding the liberty of Wesleyan itinerants to administer the SACRAMENTS from becoming totally destructive of Methodist Societies.

After his presidential year, Thompson preached three years (1792-94) in LONDON and three in BIRMINGHAM, where he was also Chairman of the District. He died on May 1, 1799, and was buried in St. Mary's Church, Birmingham.

Minutes of the Conference.

W. Myles, Chronological History. 1799.

G. Smith, Wesleyan Methodism. 1857-61.

A. Stevens, History of Religious Movement. 1858-61.

Wesley and His Successors. 1891. ELMER T. CLARK

THOMPSON, WILLIAM ERNEST MORLEY (1894-1969), Irish minister, was born in BELFAST, and entered the ministry in 1917. Much of his early ministry was as a missionary in British Guiana, and he returned to the home work in 1935. From 1941 to 1947 he was Secretary of the Methodist Church in IRELAND, and in 1948 became President of the Church. In 1959 he retired from the active ministry, but continued to play a leading part in the Conference and in connexional affairs generally. His experience as Secretary of the Church during the difficult years of the Second World War has been the foundation of much valuable guidance since. He died in June 1969.

FREDERICK JEFFERY

THOMSON, EDWARD (1810-1870), American educator, editor, and bishop, was born at Portsea, England, on Oct. 12, 1810. His parents emigrated to America when he was about nine. Taking the medical degree at the University of Pennsylvania, he settled in Wooster, Ohio. At nineteen he became infected with skepticism by his teachers. However, while practicing medicine, his agnosticism was shaken by a sermon by Russell Bigelow. He experienced conversion but was bitterly opposed by his Calvinistic father especially as to joining the Methodist Church. However, in 1832 he did join the OHIO CONFERENCE.

EDWARD THOMSON

At his first sermon in a grove meeting, it is said sixty-five penitents came to the altar, and forty-six united with the church. He is said to have combined eloquence and great spiritual power in his sermons. Bishop GILBERT HAVEN refers to Thomson's absorption in thought and concentration. The story is that after his first marriage, his Detroit congregation had a party for him and his new wife. At the party he did not recognize his wife but told her "that he believed he had seen her somewhere but could not recall where."

After filling appointments in OHIO at Norwalk, Sandusky City, CINCINNATI and Wooster, Edward Thomson transferred to the MICHIGAN CONFERENCE, serving in DETROIT. He became principal of the Norwalk Seminary, Ohio, 1838-43; editor of the Ladies' Repository, 1844-46; first president of OHIO WESLEYAN, 1846-60; editor of the Christian Advocate and Journal, New York, 1860-64; and was elected bishop in 1864.

Bishop Thomson traveled extensively as bishop and everywhere elicited the respect and confidence of the people. He made the first episcopal visit to INDIA. Author of several books and published addresses, he was more of an essayist than editor. He said, "A minister's success, so far as salvation is concerned, depends not in part upon literary attainments and in part upon the power of God, but wholly upon the latter."

While en route after attending Conference in CHARLESTON, W. Va., Bishop Thomson died of pneumonia in a hotel in WHEELING, W. Va., on March 22, 1870. He was buried in Delaware, Ohio. Thomson Church in Wheeling was named for Bishop Thomson.

In his day Bishop Edward Thomson was called by some "the most accomplished of all the bishops of the M.E. Church." He was remarkably successful in all the positions he held.

Christian Advocate, Sept. 9, 1926.

F. D. Leete, Methodist Bishops. 1948.

M. Simpson, Cyclopaedia. 1882.

JESSE A. EARL

THOMSON, GEORGE (1698-1782), a leading Anglican evangelical, was "from the first a hearty friend of the Oxford Methodists," says Tyerman. As early as 1732 or 1733 Thomson was preaching evangelical doctrines in his parish of St. Gennys, Cornwall. JOHN WESLEY visited St. Gennys on several occasions, until in 1753 Thomson's insistence on Calvinism caused a separation. On his deathbed, however, Thomson sent for Wesley and received Communion from him.

A. SKEVINGTON WOOD

JOHN F. THOMSON

THOMSON, JOHN FRANCIS (1843-1933), was the first M.E. minister ordained in ARGENTINA and possibly in all Latin America. He was born in SCOTLAND and came to BUENOS AIRES with his parents as a lad of eight in 1851. He learned Spanish and spoke it as fluently as any Argentine.

At the age of thirteen he had a conversion experience at the English-speaking M.E. church, established in Buenos Aires in 1836. The pastor, WILLIAM GOODFELLOW, who "had a special genius for the discovery of men, God's men, for the work of the church," made him study, and afterward sent him to the United States to be trained for the ministry at OHIO WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY. Upon graduation Thomson returned as an ordained minister and a missionary of the church, ready to begin the Spanish-speaking work that Goodfellow and the M.E. Board of Missions had in mind. Thomson married Helen Goodfellow, a niece of William Goodfellow.

Thomson began his regular Spanish work with a SUNDAY SCHOOL in the home of Doña Fermina Leon de Aldeber in the Boca section of Buenos Aires.

Appointed in 1868 to open the Methodist work in MONTEVIDEO, URUGUAY, for a year he commuted so as to preach one Sunday in Montevideo and one in Argentina. The following year he established himself in Montevideo, staying until 1878, when he was again appointed to the Buenos Aires church.

He was charged then with the organization of the Province of Buenos Aires District, and started churches in Mercedes, Chivilcoy, Balcarce, Lomas de Zamora, La Plata, and other cities. His work in Buenos Aires culminated with the formal opening (1896) of the building of the Second Methodist Church (Spanish-speaking).

In 1898 he returned to Montevideo, where, as he said of himself, "the missionary in charge was pastor of both the English and the Spanish speaking churches, superintendent of both Sunday schools, official interpreter to the United States Embassy, chairman of the University Club and editor of its magazine." This public work was a great asset for Thomson's work among students and unchurched people. It was a time of controversy in all the fields of thinking. Thomson excelled in polemics and debate with the Roman Catholic clergy—debate which was natural, given the circumstances of the country's religious life.

He died in Buenos Aires on Feb. 2, 1933.

Juan C. Varetto, El Apostol del Plata, Juan F. Thomson. Buenos Aires, 1943.

DANIEL P. MONTI

THONGER, WILLIAM G. (1889-), minister of the BELGIUM Conference of The Methodist Church and long-time leader in Belgian Methodism, was born in Paris, on Oct. 27, 1889. He studied and graduated in the French State Colleges, Sorbonne University, and the Protestant Theological Seminary in Paris. In 1926 he received the honorary D.D. degree from RANDOLPH-MACON COLLEGE in Ashland, Va.

After serving a pastorate at Les Ollieres (Southern France) from 1914-19, Thonger entered the service of Methodist Relief in Belgium in 1920. He married Renee Brunnarius in Paris on Jan. 17, 1920. In 1922 the Thongers were appointed missionaries of the M.E. Church, South, in the Belgian Methodist Mission as it was then. After withdrawal of American support in consequence of the depression of 1929-34, Thonger was left in charge of the Belgium Conference, as it had become in 1932. Appointed as superintendent he served as such until his retirement in 1961.

Besides the acknowledged leadership he has given to Methodism in Belgium, Thonger has served many general Protestant enterprises. He has been in the Belgian Federation of Protestant Churches—of which he was president for a number of years—and the Belgian Bible Society, where he served as president from its origin in 1946 until 1963. He remains the honorary president of this organization. Thonger has been a clerical delegate to eight GENERAL CONFERENCES of his church and is a member of the executive committee of the CENTRAL CONFERENCE of CENTRAL and SOUTHERN EUROPE. He has taken a part in a great many other world-wide and European religious gatherings. He has three daughters and three grandchildren. He resides in BRUSSELS where he has served so long and continues to act in many helpful capacities. He is the editor of the Belgium section of the Encyclopedia of World Methodism.

N. B. H.

THORNBURG, AMOS ADDISON (1900-1967), American pastor, district superintendent and lecturer, was born in Huntington, W. Va., Nov. 11, 1900, the son of Joseph Soule Thornburg, a minister in the M.E. Church.

Amos Thornburg graduated from WEST VIRGINIA WESLEYAN COLLEGE, 1921, A.B.; GARRETT SEMINARY, 1925, B.D.; NORTHWESTERN, 1926, A.M.; and later received the honorary D.D. and L.H.D. He married Alice Elizabeth Sutherland on Sept. 2, 1926, and they had three children. Both Amos Thornburg and his son Richard were delegates to the GENERAL CONFERENCE in 1964.

Thornburg was admitted to the WEST VIRGINIA CONFERENCE in 1919 on trial. After serving as assistant pastor, and pastor of the Belington, W. Va., Circuit, he received the following appointments: Normal Park, CHICAGO, 1926-29; Sterling, 1929-32; Aurora, 1932-34; Wilmette Parish, 1934-38 (all in ILLINOIS); Mathewson Street, PROVIDENCE, R. I., 1934-44; Grace Church, ST. LOUIS, Mo., 1944-48; First Church, Hollywood, Calif., 1948-56; Trinity, Chicago, 1956-61; superintendent Chicago Northern District, 1963-65; Arlington Heights Church, Arlington Heights, Ill., 1965-67.

At Wilmette Thornburg's Sunday school and youth work attracted national attention and missionary activity reached new prominence at First Church, Hollywood. He succeeded GLENN R. PHILLIPS when the latter became a bishop.

Thornburg was a member of the COMMISSION ON WORSHIP, 1944-64, and Hymnal Commission, 1960-67, and lectured on these subjects. He was also a trustee of Northwestern University. In June 1967, he was electrocuted in a tragic accident in the flooded cellar of his parsonage.

Christian Education Bulletin, January 1949.

Who's Who in The Methodist Church, 1966. JESSE A. EARL.

THORNE, JAMES (1795-1872), British BIBLE CHRISTIAN minister, was born near Shebbear, North Devon, Sept. 21, 1795. In 1816 he became WILLIAM O'BRYAN's first itinerant, and many revivals marked his ministry. In 1821 Thorne evangelized Kent. He succeeded O'Bryan as virtual leader of the connection in 1829, and was five times president of Conference. He ably edited the connectional magazine for thirty-eight years and governed the connectional school for twenty. Wise and humane, with extraordinarily broad sympathies, he supported Catholic emancipation, the Evangelical Alliance, total abstinence and—invariably—Liberalism and free trade, and promoted Methodist union. He died on Jan. 28, 1872, and was buried at Lake.

F. W. Bourne, James Thorne. 1895.

GLYN COURT

THORNE, MARY EVANS, who is reputed to be the first female Methodist CLASS LEADER in PHILADELPHIA, if not in America, was born of Welsh parents in Bristol, Bucks County, Pa. Her maiden name was Evans. Later her family settled in Newbern, N. C., where she was converted, joined the Baptists and married a Mr. Thorne. After the death of her husband, she with her parents and their family returned to Philadelphia. She united with the Baptists in Philadelphia, but feeling they were not sufficiently spiritual she prayed for guidance, and walking through the streets of Philadelphia, came upon the Methodists who were holding a meeting led by JOSEPH PILMORE. She felt that in the Methodists she had found what she wanted, and she joined the Methodist Society, retaining also for the time being her Baptist membership. Pilmore quickly recognized her gifts and appointed her as the first female class leader in the city.

Her mother and brother attended some of the Methodist meetings with her, but they were unimpressed. Her parents decided to return to Newbern to get away from the Methodist influence. Mary Thorne, however, remained in Philadelphia, making her living as a school teacher.

In letters in the archives of Old St. GEORGE'S, Philadelphia, she describes how during the British occupation of Philadelphia in the Revolutionary War, the British Army commandeered St. George's building for a cavalry school, and how the Methodist Society met for a time in her home. She also states that when she was leader of three Methodist Classes she was jeered at in the streets, called "Mother Confessor," stoned in effigy and finally dismissed from the Baptist Church.

Before the close of the Revolution she married a Captain Parker and the couple returned to England in 1778 on the same ship as THOMAS RANKIN. They landed at Cork, and here she met JOHN WESLEY through RICHARD BOARDMAN whom she had known in Philadelphia. She and her husband were soon on terms of particular intimacy with John Wesley, who appointed Captain Parker a steward of the Gravel Lane Chapel, LONDON. Captain Parker had a large interest in several ships, but these were lost at sea, and, in their old age, the couple was reduced to poverty. They had one son who helped them greatly. They also appealed to the British Methodists for assistance.

The dates of Mary Thorne's birth and death are not known, but Lednum, the Philadelphia Methodist historian, says that her son taught for a time at Woodhouse Grove among the Wesleys of England, later emigrating to Philadelphia where he died leaving a widow and a daughter.

She had corresponded with both Joseph Pilmore and Richard Boardman and was a close friend of FRANCIS ASBURY. Many of her letters are in the archives of Old St. George's Church, Philadelphia.

J. Atkinson, Wesleyan Movement in America. 1896.

J. Lednum, Rise of Methodism. 1859. FREDERICK E. MASER

THORNE, SAMUEL THOMAS (1860-1891), was born on Oct. 15, 1860, at Norton Barton, Launcells, Cornwall. He was educated at SHEBBEAR COLLEGE where he was also converted, and at Bradford Gammar School in Yorkshire. Elected a CIRCUIT STEWARD at eighteen, he entered the BIBLE CHRISTIAN ministry and in 1886, with THOMAS VANSTONE opened the Yunnan mission in CHINA. Settling at Chaotong Fu, he traveled extensively, preaching and curing cases of opium poisoning; he was helped by his wife, Lois Malpas. His labors, recurrent fevers, privations and journals broke even his robust physique, and he died at Chaotong Fu on Sept. 23, 1891.

T. Ruddle, Samuel Thomas Thorne. 1893.

GLYN COURT

THRALL, HOMER S. (1819-1894), American minister and author, was born in Underhill, Vt., Dec. 19, 1819.

He was trained for the ministry at OHIO WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, which school conferred on him a M.A. degree in 1850. SOUTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY at Georgetown, Texas, conferred a D.D. degree in 1884. After being received on trial in the OHIO ANNUAL CONFERENCE in 1840, he spent fifty-four years in the itinerant ministry, a period which, in many respects, was eventful and interesting in the world's history. It was a period of great inventions and developments, social, political, and religious, all of which influenced him to write important volumes on the history of Texas and of Texas Methodism.

His pastoral charge was Little Kanawha, Ohio, in 1840; then Summerville, Ohio, in 1841. The next year he was admitted into full connection in the Conference and was transferred to Texas as a missionary. All of the later years were spent in Texas.

After the Battle of San Jacinto in 1836, when DAVID AYERS and Miss Lydia McKenry, daughter of a famous KENTUCKY preacher, wrote letters to the New York Christian Advocate concerning the importance of more missionaries being sent to Texas, those letters reached Homer Thrall, who then determined to make Texas his future home. In 1842 the Ohio Conference met, and LITTLETON FOWLER of Texas arrived there and called for volunteers. The Minutes of that conference show that Homer S. Thrall then took up his work as missionary in Texas.

Soon after the War Between the States (1866), Thrall became President of Rutersville College, a school organized from the concept of MARTIN RUTER in 1840, and one which lasted as a Methodist school for about thirty years.

Other appointments of Homer S. Thrall were: Bastrop, Texas (1845); AUSTIN (1846-1847), where he built the first Methodist Church in that city; Washington, Texas (1848); GALVESTON (1849-1850); Victoria and Lavaca (1851-1852); in 1853 he was Bible Agent; Rutersville, Texas (1854); Galveston District (1855-1857); Austin District (1858); Columbus District (1860-1861); Victoria District (1862-1864). Later he went to SAN ANTONIO, Texas, at which place he was superannuated in 1891, and resided there until his death Oct. 12, 1894.

Thrall was twice married, first to Miss Amanda J. Kerr, June 27, 1847, who lived but a few years. Later he married Mrs. Amelia L. West, July 21, 1852. He was sent to Texas when the state was comparatively a wilderness, the people few and scattered. He knew the fathers of the Republic of Texas, Generals Houston, Rusk, President Mirabeau Lamar, and others, including every Governor of the state. He was on intimate terms of friendship with them all.

His books included: A History of Methodism in Texas (1872); History of Texas (1876); A Pictorial History of Texas (1879); The People's Illustrated Almanac, Texas Handbook (1880); Brief History of Methodism in Texas (1889).

MRS. JOHN H. WARNICK

THRAPP, JOEL SMITH (1820-1896), American M.P. minister and editor, was a member of the Muskingum Conference in OHIO, and was active in the work of the GENERAL CONFERENCE and Conventions of the M.P. CHURCH. He was also actively associated with ADRIAN COLLEGE. He was born on April 9, 1820, the son of Joseph Thrapp (Oct. 16, 1776-May 12, 1866), who was active in early Methodist endeavors in the Muskingum Valley. Two other members of Joel Smith Thrapp's family, his brother, Israel Thrapp, and J. A. Thrapp, were also members of the Muskingum Conference of the M.P. Church.

Joel Smith Thrapp was converted and received into the M.P. Church on Sept. 1, 1839. He was licensed to preach in May 1842, and was received into the traveling connection in September of that year. He was elected a representative to the General Conference of 1858 and was a member of the Free State Conferences held at CINCINNATI in November 1857. He was also a member of the convention held in Springfield, Ohio, in 1858, the convention of 1860 which met in PITTSBURGH, and the Non-Episcopal Convention held in Cleveland in June 1865. He was a member of the sub-committee of the joint Methodist Protestant and Wesleyan Convention held in Union Chapel, Cincinnati, in May 1866; and of the General Conference of 1867 which was held in Cleveland. He served as book agent and publisher of The Western Methodist Protestant (later The Methodist Recorder) from December 1864, until December 1866. He was a member of the General Conference of the Methodist Church in 1871 which met in Pittsburgh. He represented the Muskingum Conference at the famous Uniting Conference of the M.P. Church in 1877. Beginning in 1866 he served for many years as the general agent for Adrian College and traveled extensively among the various annual conferences of his denomination in its interest.

T. H. Colhouer, Sketches of the Founders. 1880.

E. J. Drinkhouse, History of Methodist Reform. 1899.

M. Simpson, Cyclopaedia. 1882. RALPH HARDEE RIVES

WILLIAM THRELFALL

THRELFALL, WILLIAM (1799-1825), South African missionary martyr, was born at Hollowforth, Lancashire, England on June 6, 1799, and entered the WESLEYAN METHODIST ministry in 1821. He was appointed to labor with WILLIAM SHAW among the British settlers in Albany but his strong missionary vocation made him restless and he soon accepted the offer of a passage to Delagoa Bay. However, repeated attacks of malaria compelled him to return to the Cape on a passing whaler. After convalescing with BARNABAS SHAW at Leliefontein (Lily Fountain) he volunteered to establish a mission in Great Namaqualand (now South West Africa). He set out in June 1825 with JACOB LINKS (the first Namaqua received into the Wesleyan ministry) and Johannes Jager. During August 1825 they were murdered by their Bushman guides who coveted their oxen and possessions. Threlfall's concrete achievements were negligible but his heroic endeavors and martyr's death have earned him an honored place in Methodist history.

N. A. Birtwhistle, William Threlfall. London, 1966.

Dictionary of South African Biography.

B. Shaw, South Africa. 1841.

D. G. L. CRAGG

THROCKMORTON, J. RUSSELL. (See JUDICIAL COUNCIL.)

TIFFIN, EDWARD (1766-1829), first governor of OHIO (1803-07), was among prominent Methodists in early Ohio history. Born in Carlisle, England, on June 19, 1766, he was reared in the established Church of England. He came to the United States at eighteen, finished his education in medicine at the University of Pennsylvania at twenty-one and immediately thereafter established a practice in Berkeley County, then in VIRGINIA. There, in 1790, he became a Methodist and two years later was ordained a LOCAL PREACHER by FRANCIS ASBURY.

Tiffin and his brother-in-law, Thomas Worthington, both men of means, freed their slaves when they decided to settle in Ohio territory. They located in Chillicothe, Ohio, in the spring of 1798.

Practicing medicine and preaching to Methodist societies in the valleys of the Scioto River and Paint Creek in Ross County, Tiffin became one of the region's best-known and respected citizens. Ross Countians sent him to the Legislature, where he was elected speaker in 1799. He also became a member of the Constitutional Convention organized Nov. 1, 1802, which established statehood for Ohio. He was the unanimous choice for first governor of Ohio and was reelected without opposition in 1805.

A man with Jeffersonian ideals, Tiffin continued in politics, being elected to the U. S. Senate before the end of his second term as governor, succeeding Thomas Worthington who was to become Ohio's sixth governor. In 1812, President Madison named Tiffin to the new post of Commissioner of the General Land Office.

While others sought safety from the British who were sacking Washington in 1812, Tiffin arranged to move the precious land office records to safety ten miles away. These records were among the few saved from the stampede and fire that engulfed the nation's capitol.

In 1814, at his request, he was named surveyor-general of the Northwest in order that he might return to his beloved Ohio home. He spent the next fifteen years, almost to his death, in that position, with headquarters in Chillicothe, serving under three presidents.

During those last years he also resumed two other of his early professions—the practice of medicine and preaching. He died Aug. 9, 1829. Historians have described Edward Tiffin as a man of "magnetic personality . . . versatile . . . of great ability."

JOHN F. YOUNG

TIGERT, JOHN JAMES, III (1856-1906), American bishop, editor, and teacher, was born in LOUISVILLE, Ky., Nov. 25, 1856. He attended the public schools of his city. In order to make his way, he clerked in the grocery store of Daniel Montz who took great interest in him and helped with his education. He entered VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY Theological Department and graduated in 1877. The same year he joined the LOUISVILLE CONFERENCE of the M.E. Church, South, and was appointed to a small church in his home city. While there he continued his studies under John A. Broadus in the Baptist Seminary. In 1881 he went to Vanderbilt University as an instructor and continued his studies for the M.A. degree, which he received in 1884. On graduation he became Professor of Philosophy in the University. In 1890 he was sent to KANSAS CITY, Mo., for four years as pastor of a large church. At the GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1894 he was elected as BOOK EDITOR of the church and Editor of the Methodist Quarterly Review, and in 1906 was elected to the episcopacy. He married Amelia McTyeire, daughter of Bishop HOLLAND N. MCTYEIRE, in 1878. Their son, John J. Tigert, IV, became Commissioner of Education of the United States and President of the University of Florida. EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE and the University of Missouri conferred upon Bishop Tigert the degrees of D.D. and LL.D.

Bishop Tigert wrote many articles for religious publications and was the author of a number of important books on Methodism. Among them are The Constitutional History of American Episcopal Methodism, which has long been considered authoritative in its field; The Making of Methodism, The Life of Thomas Coke, The Doctrine of the Methodist Church in America, and a volume on theism, A Survey of Paths that Lead to God. He was a member of each General Conference from 1882 to the time of his election to the episcopacy.

Bishop Tigert was privileged to preside over only one annual conference. While at lunch on his way to his next conference in Indian Territory a small bone lodged in his throat, blood poisoning developed and in a few days, on Nov. 21, 1906, he died in Tulsa, Okla. He is buried in Nashville, Tenn.

Louisville Courier Journal, Nov. 22, 1906. HARRY R. SHORT

TILLET, JOHN (1812-1890), American preacher, called in his biography, "The Iron Duke of the Methodist Itinerancy," was born in Camden County, N. C., on Nov. 23, 1812. In 1833 he entered RANDOLPH-MACON COLLEGE in VIRGINIA. There his teachers had a deep influence on his life, and he was converted in a college revival in 1834, changed his vocation from law to the ministry, and was graduated A.B. in 1837 and M.A. in 1840. He served in the NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE from 1839 until 1886. On Oct. 6, 1841, he was married to Elizabeth Jenkins Wyche.

John Tillet was a man of deep spiritual powers and advocated by his life, and by his preaching "not a new doctrine, but a new life." His evangelistic preaching was of unusual power. Of one such revival led by him in Oxford, N. C., it was said that "it revolutionized Oxford; it revolutionized the country around about." He was a man who rigidly enforced the discipline of the Methodist Church, requiring his members to live up to its moral precepts. As their pastor, John Tillet had a vital influence on WASHINGTON DUKE and his sons, "Buck and Ben" (J. B. DUKE and BENJAMIN N. DUKE). He fought fearlessly against alcohol, gambling, and other personal and social sins of his day. Many times he made enemies, but his converts became men and women of great character and faith. When his own son, away at school, signed a note for a dishonest laborer for $85 and the laborer disappeared, John Tillet required the boy to pay the $85 and the interest. This son, Henry Augustus Tillet, became an outstanding lawyer and always emphasized the sacredness of a contract. Another son, W. F. TILLET, noted Dean of VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY, reflected the great strength and moral character of his father.

After twenty-one years of serving with her husband, the first Mrs. Tillett, the mother of his nine children, died in 1862, and he was married again in 1863 to a sister of his first wife, a widow, Mrs. Louisa Yancey Speed. John Tillett died on July 17, 1890 and was laid to rest in Elmwood Cemetery, Charlotte, N. C.

A. W. Plyler, The Iron Duke of the Methodist Itinerancy. Nashville: Cokesbury Press, 1925. R. C. TUTTLE

TILLET, WILBUR FISK (1854-1936), American theologian, author, hymnologist, and dean of the VANDERBILT School of Religion, was born on Aug. 25, 1854, in Henderson, N. C. He was the son of JOHN TILLET, known as the "Iron Duke of American Methodism." Brought up in the severe years in the South following the Civil War, young Tillett managed to pursue studies through books, college and seminary, and to graduate from RANDOLPH-MACON COLLEGE in 1877, and from Princeton Seminary in 1880. He married first in 1888, Kate O. Schoolfield, who died the following year; and he married again on Jan. 25, 1894, Laura McCloud. He became the professor of systematic theology at Vanderbilt University in 1886, and from that date took a leading part in the activities of his conference and in the theological and church work of the entire South. He was elected a member of the GENERAL CONFERENCE (MES) in 1902, 1906, and 1910. At the 1906 Conference, he was one of the leaders calling for a "re-statement of the faith"—a move which was warmly greeted by certain liberal elements of that day, but was frowned upon by the bishops and conservative forces. Tillett's speech carried the conference but opponents managed to attach a proviso that no restatement of faith be made unless the other Methodist Churches (chiefly the Methodist Episcopal) would join in the effort. As they never did, nothing came of this effort.

Heading the Vanderbilt Divinity School in 1886 and later at the time of the "Vanderbilt Controversy," he found himself strangely divided between the opposing forces. Charges that the Theological School was allowing, if not disseminating, heresy among young ministers, impelled the M.E. Church, South, to move to see that the whole institution should fully reflect its own ideals. A lawsuit over University ownership resulted. The decision in the courts went against the Church, and a self-perpetuating Board of Trustees continued to carry on the work of the University. The Church turned then from the Vanderbilt Theological School for a time, building and supporting SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIVERSITY in Texas and EMORY UNIVERSITY in Atlanta, with their divinity schools.

Tillett felt very keenly this whole issue and used to say so in private to those who knew him best. However, he remained in Vanderbilt spending in all fifty-four years of his life there.

Perhaps the crowning work of his life was service upon the Joint Hymnal Commission, which was composed of representatives of the M.E. Church, the M.E. Church, South, and of the M.P. Church. This commission met and compiled a new Methodist Hymnal during the 1930-34 quadrennium. Tillett's vast knowledge in the field of hymnody was of great use to the Commission. He and EARL E. HARPER on the sub-committee of "New Hymns" personally read 8,000 new manuscripts of hymnic material submitted for inclusion in the Hymnal. Tillett's own hymn, "Oh Son of God Incarnate," in the Methodist Hymnal and elsewhere, has come to be in the beloved hymnody of the Church. The tune "Incarnation" was written for this hymn by Alfred Wooler at the request of Dean Tillett himself.

A classicist in his likes and dislikes, he was found by other members of the Hymnal Commission to be on the side of the ancient, time-tested expressions of devotion rather than the newer hymns. His fellows on the Commission never forgot a defense he made of the old classic hymn "Dies Irae," although it was admitted by all that no one ever sang it in a present-day church. The Commission, however, voted against Tillett and excluded the "Dies Irae," following the argument of J. M. M. GRAY that "we are not building a museum for the perpetuation of Christian antiquities, but a hymn-book out of which people can sing." Tillett took his defeats as he took his victories, in his sure, steady way, and never lost the admiration of both friends and those who opposed him. He died in Nashville, Tenn., full of honors and years, at his home on the campus at Vanderbilt on June 4, 1936.

Tennessee Conference Journal, 1936.

C. F. Price, Who's Who in American Methodism. N. B. H.

TILLMAN, SADIE WILSON (1896-), American lay church worker and president of the Woman's Division of Christian Service, was born at Allisona, Tenn., April 30, 1896, daughter of Lemuel Ransom and Janie (Swan) Wilson.

She received the diploma of Harris Teachers College in 1918. She was graduated from Peabody College, B.S., 1923; M.A., New York University, 1924. ILLINOIS WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY conferred upon her the degree of L.H.D. in 1963. She married J. Fount Tillman on Aug. 23, 1934.

She was a teacher in Davidson County, Tenn., 1915-16, 1921, and in St. Louis, 1919-20. She was director of religious education, Laura Haygood Normal, Sockow, China, 1924-27. She then went to the BOARD OF EDUCATION of the M.E. Church, South, where she was associate secretary of missionary education, 1927-34.

Among her other positions of leadership in the church she was president of the Tennessee Conference WOMAN'S SOCIETY OF CHRISTIAN SERVICE, The Methodist Church, 1950-53; national vice-president, Methodist Woman's Division Christian Service, 1952-56, and president, 1956-64; member of the executive committee, WORLD METHODIST COUNCIL, 1956-65; member, General Board of the NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES, 1956-64; member of the administrative committee, United Church Women, 1957-63; member of the executive committee, United States Conference, and of the Central Committee, WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES 1961-68; member of COMMISSION ON STRUCTURE OF METHODISM OVERSEAS, 1964-68; member of Commission on Ecumenical Affairs, 1964-68. She was a delegate to the GENERAL CONFERENCE in 1952, 1960 and 1966.

The chapel of the Church Center at the United Nations plaza was furnished and named "Tillman Chapel" in her honor as the outgoing president of the Woman's Division in 1964.

She was a member of the board of the Marshall County Library, 1950-55. She served as a trustee of MARTIN JUNIOR COLLEGE, 1953-58, and since 1954 has been a trustee of SCARRITT COLLEGE. She was a trustee of NATIONAL COLLEGE, 1956-64, and of BENNETT COLLEGE, 1956-64. She was state president of the National Association American Pen Women, 1938-40. She is the author of What Do You Know About China, 1929, also of children's stories, programs, plays. She resides at Palmetto Farm, Lewisburg, Tenn.

Who's Who in America, Vol. 34.

Who's Who in The Methodist Church, 1966. J. MARVIN RAST

TILLY, EDMUND A. (1864-1916), American preacher and missionary to BRAZIL, was born Sept. 24, 1864, in Bristol, Tenn. After graduation from King College, a Presbyterian school in that city, he spent a year at VANDERBILT school of theology. He joined HOLSTON CONFERENCE in 1885, and was appointed first to Pocohontas, Va. In 1888 he went to Brazil, where he was ordained elder by Bishop J. C. GRANBERY. In November 1890, he married Ella Virginia Porter whose father had freed his slaves in ALABAMA and sailed for Brazil in August 1868. Like several other early missionaries in Brazil, Tilly suffered indignities and opposition. One time, while preaching at Catete Church, Rio, a man threw a large stone at him through an open window. Tilly, who had been an agile baseball player in his youth, caught it and threw it back toward the attacker, much to the latter's surprise and discomfiture. After this, Catete Church protected its windows with heavy screens.

During his service in Brazil, Tilly was pastor, presiding elder, teacher in the theological department of INSTITUTO GRANBERY, and editor for a term of the Methodist weekly organ, Expositor Cristão. He also published a book of sermons on Christian doctrines.

In 1907 he suffered a slight stroke. Returning to the United States, he settled in Ashland, Va., and taught for a while in the theological department of RANDOLPH-MACON COLLEGE. In 1913, after his wife's death, and seemingly completely recovered, Tilly went back to Brazil but was unable to continue work for more than two years. He returned to the United States and died Nov. 27, 1916, in Bristol, Va. He was survived by four daughters—Margaret Carson, Ella, Laura Sale, and Katherine Cole.

J. P. Martin, Holston, 1945.
World Outlook, May 1943.

EULA K. LONG

TILTON, NEW HAMPSHIRE, U.S.A., is situated on the Winnepesaukee River, and is the home of TILTON SCHOOL. Historically it is tied in with neighboring Northfield and Sanbornton since Northfield first included the complete area. Consequently Methodism in Tilton, taking root in interdenominational effort, began as early as 1804 when Lewis Bates and Caleb Dustin, pastors on the Bridgewater Circuit, preached in a barn owned by a Baptist, Deacon Jonathan Clough, located in that part of Sanbornton which is now Northfield. In 1805 a permanent Methodist society was formed with an eight member "Class." That year MARTIN RUTER, one of the most scholarly men of early American Methodism, baptized nine persons in the school house on Bay Hill. When the NEW ENGLAND CONFERENCE met in Canaan, N. H. the following year, Northfield, memtioned for the first time in the minutes, already had thirty-one members. Meetings continued alternately in the Northfield meeting house, on the Tilton Fair Grounds, and in the school house on Bay Hill. In Northfield on Sept. 8, 1828, a new brick church owned by the town was dedicated and made available for worship until it was no longer needed, when it became the "Town House." George Storrs, a member of the NEW HAMPSHIRE CONFERENCE, who located in 1836, was first to occupy the town-owned parsonage by the bridge on the Sanbornton side of the river. The town voted Storrs permission to cut wood on the parsonage lot for his own use "provided he leaves the fences in good order." It was considered necessary to sell part of the parsonage land in order to make the final payment on the minister's home.

East Tilton Methodist Church near Union Bridge was built around 1835 and was last repaired through the exertions of D. W. Davis, 1879. James B. H. Norris appears on the records of Northfield as one of their preachers who in 1834 was residing at Union Bridge. The steward's record commences September 1838, at Union Bridge or East Sanbornton on the Gildford Circuit with L. H. Gordon preacher in charge. Twenty-nine other preachers were appointed here during this church's life.

As a way of avoiding controversy in 1855, a committee from out-of-town was engaged to recommend a location for a new church nearer the rapidly expanding Conference-owned seminary in what is now the town of Tilton. Thereupon the First Methodist Church was built, where it now stands on the Main Street at a cost of $10,000, in spite of financial depression. It was dedicated Feb. 4, 1857 by Bishop OSMAN C. BAKER, who preached the dedicatory sermon, John Currier, pastor, assisting.

Since 1884 many improvements have been made resulting in an attractive, well-equipped church, and a parsonage on Main Street was bought in 1916. The New Hampshire Conference was held here in 1888, 1910, and 1918. Faced with the need for additional space, the church voted in 1967 to build a new church, to buy nearly five acres of land near the Tilton-Franklin line, and to sell the present church building and land.

Cole and Baketel, New Hampshire Conference, 1929.
Lucy R. H. Cross, History of Northfield, Concord, N. H.: Rumford Printing Co., 1905.

Journals of the New England and New Hampshire Conferences.

M. T. Rannels, History of the Town of Sanbornton, Vol. I. Boston: Alfred Mudge & Son, 1882. WILLIAM J. DAVIS

TILTON SCHOOL, Tilton, New Hampshire, now a boys' boarding and day school, was founded in 1845 as the New Hampshire Conference Seminary. Originally co-educational, in 1939 it limited admission to boys. From 1852 to 1903 it operated as a college. In 1859 the name was changed to New Hampshire Conference Seminary and Female College. After 1903, when college work was discontinued, the name was changed to Tilton Seminary. The present name was adopted in 1923. The governing board has twenty-six members; five elected by the NEW HAMPSHIRE CONFERENCE, five by the alumni, fifteen by the board, and the headmaster ex officio.

JOHN O. GROSS

TIME CAPSULE. During the BICENTENNIAL celebrations of The Methodist Church in 1966 a Time Capsule was buried on April 24, at 4:30 p.m., in Mount Olivet Cemetery in BALTIMORE. It is proposed to be raised during the Tercentenary Celebration of American Methodism.

TIME CAPSULE MARKER

The cylindrical shaped stainless steel receptacle, three and one-half feet long and ten inches wide with tapered ends was designed by H. Stanley Coates of Belmont, Mass., and was manufactured by Louis Sack Company, Somerville, Mass., under the guidance of the Chairman of the Committee, Ernest R. Case, then pastor of Belmont Church, Belmont, Mass.

Eight categories of items were placed in the capsule containing in all fifty-six items.

1. A bound historical notebook of documents, letters, clippings etc.

2. Audio-visual materials including taped messages to Methodists in 2066 from 57 Bishops, 18 General Secretaries, and one sister church (AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL ZION), and a filmstrip "Live or Die, I Must Ride."

3. Books and Pamphlets including the Revised Standard Version of the Holy Bible (presented by AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY on this its 150th Anniversary); Young Reader's Bible; Discipline, 1964; Hymnal; Report of Hymnal Committee, 1964; Book of Worship; General Minutes, 1964; Decisions of the Judicial Council, 1960-1964; Fact Book, 1964; History of American Methodism (3 Volumes) Emory S. Bucke, Editor; The Dramatic Story of American Methodism by Frederick E. Maser; Methodist Evangel; Endless Line of Splendor by H. Luccock and Paul Hutchinson; Methodist Story Book; Church Related Vocations and Service Projects, 1966; Tourist Guidebook by George Jones.

4. Magazine and Journals: Christian Advocate (4/7/66); Christian Home (3/66); Methodist History (1/66); Together (11/59 and 5/66); Upper Room (Mar to April, 1966); Zions Herald (1/66).

5. Church School Literature: Learners and Literature;

Methodist Student (Spring 1966); Methodist Teacher (Spring 1966); Methodist Student (1-11); Methodist Teacher (1-11); Adult Student (Mar. 1966); Adult Teacher (Mar. 1966); Studies in Christian Living (Spring 1966); Class Mate (Mar. 1966).

6. Stamps: 1 special album containing 24 U.S.A. postage stamps relating to Methodists or Methodist influence.

7. Coins and Medals: Mint Sets: Philadelphia and Denver 1964; "Clad" Quarter—1965; Carver-Washington Commemorative Half Dollar; Medal received from Pope Paul VI commemorating the closing of the Vatican Council, Dec. 8, 1965; Bicentennial Medal.

8. Miscellaneous Items: World Methodist Flag; Pencil (Commemorating the World Methodist Conference, Aug. 18-26, 1966, London, England); "Rubbing" of bronze plaque noting the burial place of the capsule.

ERNEST R. CASE

TIME LIMIT is a term constantly used by American Methodists with reference to the number of years a pastor or DISTRICT SUPERINTENDENT may be allowed to stay in one appointment. At the beginning of the Methodist movement, changes in appointments made both by JOHN WESLEY in England, and by FRANCIS ASBURY in America were quite frequent. It was not uncommon for men to be changed annually, or even after a few months, in certain instances, or whenever a move seemed needed. On the other hand, Bishop Asbury felt competent to continue appointing a person to the same church, or to a nearby church, as he did with JOHN DICKINS whom he wished to keep in PHILADELPHIA to manage the BOOK CONCERN, and so continued to move Dickens about in the Philadelphia churches to keep him where he could run the publishing business. This caused much criticism among the other brethren who were usually moved much more sweepingly, and it is said that the Philadelphia preachers, and perhaps some of the other Methodists there, in order to force Dickens to itinerate as they were forced to do, asked that the Book Concern be moved from Philadelphia. So it went to NEW YORK.

The fixing of the time limit by the GENERAL CONFERENCE came about in 1804. There was in Albany in 1800 a pastor by the name of Stebbins, who was very popular with the people but whose reappointment for that special place, Asbury felt, would be a mistake. The Bishop, however, yielded to local pressure and reappointed Stebbins, causing discussion among the other preachers. AARON HUNT suggested to Asbury that in order to take care of this situation the General Conference should pass a measure forbidding the reappointment of any minister for a term longer than two years. Asbury saw at once that this would compromise his power. "So then you would restrict the appointive power?", he asked, but not unpleasantly. "Nay, sir," was Hunt's reply, "we would aid in its execution for in the present instance it seems deficient." (Harmon, p. 28.)

Asbury's failure to object encouraged Hunt, and he with TOTTEN of the PHILADELPHIA CONFERENCE presented the resolution asking for a three-year time limit and it was passed in the 1804 General Conference. Thus, when 1808 came and the delegated General Conference was set up and given all powers not denied it, but forbidden to do anything to destroy "our plan of itinerant general superintendency," in that plan already was the time limit fixed by General Conference action and respected by Asbury.

Subsequent General Conferences from time to time have changed the time limit. Through the greater part of the nineteenth century the time limit held, but with longer and longer terms (1836 made it two; 1864 changed it to three years; 1888 made it five). Later on, first in the M.E. Church and then in the M.E. Church, South, the time limit, after being much modified, was eventually removed entirely. (See Sherman, pp. 184-85.) For a time in the latter years of the M.E. Church, South, a bishop could not reappoint a man to his same station after four years had passed without the consent of a majority of the presiding elders, as they were then. (The M.E. Church, South changed the two year limit of 1836 to four years in 1866.) In The Methodist Church, however, all restrictions had been removed by the time of union and there are none now in The United Methodist Church (except district superintendents). However the influence of the four-year term which was standard in the South is still felt psychologically in many conferences though a bishop may now reappoint a man continuously to one position.

District Superintendents. Until well in the twentieth century, bishops could reappoint presiding elders or district superintendents (as they became), to the superintendency of successive districts, though the four-year time limit, as it was then, prevented the presiding elder from being given charge of any one district for longer than four years. It was possible, however, to keep a man in the district superintendency by moving him from district to district at the end of each four year term, and thus the "self-perpetuating cabinet," as it was called, with the cabinet members themselves heavily influential in seeing that each other were kept in cabinet positions, came to be known over both Episcopal Methodisms. In order to obviate this, the General Conference first in the M.E. Church, then in the M.E. Church, South, passed a measure which after union in 1939 held that "within the Jurisdictional Conferences of the United States" no bishop could appoint a minister as district superintendent "for more than six consecutive years nor for more than six years in any consecutive nine years" (Discipline, 1964, Paragraph 432.3). This regulation is continued in The United Methodist Church (Discipline 1968, Paragraph 391.3). Thus there is a six-year time limit in The United Methodist Church in re the district superintendency.

N. B. Harmon, Organization. 1962.

P. A. Peterson, Revisions of the Discipline. 1889.

D. Sherman, Revisions of the Discipline. 1874. N. B. H.

TINDALL, JOSEPH (1807-1861), pioneer Wesleyan Methodist missionary in Great Namaqualand (later South West Africa) was born at Gringley-on-the-Hill, Nottingham, England, on June 15, 1807, and married Sarah Goodyer on April 18, 1830. Under the influence of T. L. Hodgson he sold his business and emigrated to the Cape Colony, arriving in Cape Town on Jan. 16, 1836. He re-established himself in business in Cape Town and engaged actively in religious work. In 1839 he went to Great Namaqualand as catechist-assistant to EDWARD B. COOK and in 1843 was accepted for the ministry. Until 1855 he continued to minister at isolated mission stations in Great Namaqualand and Damaraland. Tribal warfare resulted in constant insecurity, while recurring fever and harsh conditions undermined his health. He was subsequently transferred to the relatively settled circuit of Somerset West. But the privations of earlier years carried both him and his wife to an early grave. Mrs. Tindall died in 1860 and he on Nov. 25, 1861, at the age of fifty-four.

B. A. Tindall: The Journal of Joseph Tindall, Missionary in South West Africa. Van Riebeeck Society No. 40, Cape Town 1959. G. MEARS

TINDLEY, CHARLES ALBERT (1851-1933), founder of Tindley Temple in PHILADELPHIA, was born about July 7, 1851 in Berlin, Md., to Charles and Esther Tindley. His mother died during his infancy, and he, a Negro boy, was bound out into virtual slavery and treated with such unkindness and cruelty that "he often vied with the dogs for crumbs that fell from his master's table." A friend taught him to read after he had discovered some scraps of printed pages and inquired as to their meaning. He developed an unquenchable thirst for knowledge and continued his self-education through private study and later correspondence courses. Coming to Philadelphia, he was for a time a hod carrier, then became sexton of the church of which he later became pastor.

In 1885 he joined the DELAWARE CONFERENCE, serving several churches and eventually becoming the DISTRICT SUPERINTENDENT of the Wilmington District. In 1902 he was appointed to the church which today bears his name. Originally located on Bainbridge Street, the church at the time of his appointment had 130 members and a property valued at $10,000. During his ministry of thirty-one years the church was moved to its present site, its name being changed to Tindley Temple. At one point it numbered more than 12,000 members and was the largest Methodist church in the world, and at his death in 1933 numbered 7,109 members, 2,666 preparatory members, and owned a property valued at $400,000. Tindley was elected seven times to the GENERAL CONFERENCE, leading the delegation four times. An honorary D.D. degree was conferred upon him by BENNETT COLLEGE and an honorary Ph.D. by the Brandywine School. He was twice married and had six children by his first wife.

As an orator he was without peer in his day. "His towering physique, his commanding voice, his majestic eloquence, his cogent reasoning, and his inimitable style combined to render him the most popular preacher of his time." One of his most successful sermons was "Heaven's Christmas Tree." The first time he preached this sermon, which he repeated many times, over 100 persons professed conversion.

He died July 26, 1933, and his death was as dramatic as his life. Three times he whispered to his wife, "I have told you I was going to Heaven." Then, with his last breath he added, "I am going now."

Journal of the Delaware Conference, 1934.

FREDERICK E. MASER

TIPLADY, THOMAS (1882-1967), British Methodist, was born of Methodist parents in Wensleydale and early dedicated to Christian service. After training at RICHMOND COLLEGE for the Wesleyan Methodist ministry he served as an army chaplain during the first World War. The books and a lengthy lecture tour describing his experiences brought him to attention in the United States. In 1922 he began a noteworthy ministry in Lambeth, where in face of much criticism he transformed the Methodist church into a cinema known as "The Ideal." This work he supported by the writing of some 250 hymns, several of which became widely known in the U.S.A. and CANADA. Dr. Erik Routley thus assesses his hymns: "His language was never very original and the thought forms were wholly traditional, but he managed always to avoid awkward or recidive images, and at his best he is very good indeed." (Hymns Today and Tomorrow, Nashville, Abingdon Press, 1964, p. 157.) The Lambeth Mission was destroyed by bombing in 1945, but was rebuilt, and Tiplady maintained an interest in the work throughout many years of retirement.

Thomas Tiplady's hymn "Above the Hills of Time the Cross is Gleaming" became very popular in America when set to the Londonderry air and published in the Methodist Hymnal of 1934. It was however omitted from the Methodist Hymnal of 1964 due to the great opposition of the musicians on the Hymnal Commission to the use of the Londonderry air in a hymnal.

Tiplady, following the second World War, sent his entire collection of hymns and poetry in manuscript form to the Book Editor of The Methodist Church in America requesting that the collection be kept in the United States and that it should be opened for use by those who might desire any of the material with no copyright charge to be made. NOLAN B. HARMON, who was then Book Editor, put the collection in the library of the METHODIST PUBLISHING HOUSE in NASHVILLE, Tenn., where it remains.

Thomas Tiplady died on Jan. 7, 1967.

FRANK BAKER
N. B. H.

TIPPETT, CHARLES B. (1801-1867), American minister, was born in Prince Georges County, Md., Dec. 19, 1801. At the age of eighteen he began a long and useful career in the BALTIMORE CONFERENCE, including sixteen years as a presiding elder and a quadrennium as assistant book AGENT at New York, besides a nineteen-year membership on the general book committee.

He led the EAST BALTIMORE CONFERENCE delegation in 1860 and was also a member of the 1832, '44, '52, and '64 GENERAL CONFERENCES. A soul winner, he also "possessed many elements of true greatness and power," together with the wisdom of honest purpose and intuitive discernment in both ministerial and family life. Suddenly stricken, he died Feb. 25, 1867 and was buried at Mt. Olivet Cemetery, BALTIMORE.

J. E. Armstrong, Old Baltimore Conference. 1907.

EDWIN SCHELL

TIPPETT, DONALD HARVEY (1896-), American bishop, was born in Central City, Colo., on March 15, 1896, the son of William and Louise Eugenia (Magor) Tippett. He received the A.B. (1920) and the D.D. (1930) degrees from the University of Colorado; the B.D. degree from the ILIFF SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY in 1924; the M.A. from New York University in 1932; L.H.D. from the UNIVERSITY OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA in 1943; the LL.D. from the College of Surgeons and Physicians in 1944, and the UNIVERSITY OF THE PACIFIC, 1949; Litt.D. from Samuel Houston College, 1944; S.T.D. from WESTMINSTER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, 1956; D. Sacred Litt. from ILLINOIS WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY, 1959; D.D. from the Pacific School of Religion, 1962; and Arts D. from WILLAMETTE UNIVERSITY, 1963. In 1922 he and Ruth Underwood were married and she and Bishop Tippett have two sons, Donald Mead and Philip Auman.

Donald Harvey Tippett was admitted on trial at the COLORADO CONFERENCE, 1919, ordained DEACON, 1921, full connection and ELDER in 1922. His pastorates have included: Longmont (1919); Johnstown (1920-22); Christ Church, DENVER (1922-25); and Gunnison (1926-27)—all in Colorado; The Church of All Nations, NEW YORK CITY (1928-31); Bexley Methodist Church, COLUMBUS, Ohio (1931-40); First Church, LOS ANGELES (1940-48). It was while serving the Church of All Nations that he suffered a "brass knuckles" attack from members of the notorious Jack "Legs" Diamond gang and sustained permanent damage to one eye.

In Seattle in 1948 Donald H. Tippett was elected bishop at the WESTERN JURISDICTIONAL CONFERENCE and assigned to the SAN FRANCISCO AREA, which included presidential supervision of the CALIFORNIA-NEVADA, the PACIFIC JAPANESE PROVISIONAL, and the CALIFORNIA ORIENTAL PROVISIONAL CONFERENCES.

During these pastoral years he was a member of the Jurisdictional Conferences of 1940, '44, and '48, and the GENERAL CONFERENCES of 1944 and '48. These were also teaching years when he was instructor at the University of Colorado, Western State College of Colorado, Teachers' College of Columbia University, and lecturer in homiletics at the University of Southern California and Visiting Professor of Homiletics at Iliff in Denver.

He has been president of the TELEVISION, RADIO AND FILM COMMISSION (1948-64); chairman of the Commission on CHAPLAINS (1952-64); and chairman of the Department of Ministerial Education (1952-64); and 1964-68 chairman of the Commission on Promotion and Cultivation; president of the Northern California-Nevada Council of Churches (1966-67); and president of the COUNCIL OF BISHOPS OF The Methodist Church, 1967-68.

Bishop Tippett is trustee of the Iliff School of Theology (since 1945), and was a trustee of the Pacific School of Religion (1948-58); and has been on the Board of Regents of the University of the Pacific since 1948. He is the recipient of the Norlin medal, University of Colorado (1949); Distinguished Citizen Award, City and County of Denver (1958); and received a citation for distinguished service in the U. S. Air Force (1958). He received the Rock Award (Youth for Service) in 1966; and an Award of Honor from Iliff in 1967. He is the author of Desires of a Religious Man (1942).

Bishop Tippett delivered the following lectures and learned papers: For the GLIDE FOUNDATION in 1956, The Doctrine of Suffering; The Fendren lectures at SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIVERSITY in 1960, Toward a Responsible Ministry; Willson lectures at Vanderbilt in 1961, The Role of the Church in Educating for Christian Citizenship; Jarrell lectures at EMORY UNIVERSITY, 1962, The Church in the Life of Yesterday and of Today; the Danforth Associates, 1962, The Place of the Christian Educator in a Democratic Society; Fendren lectures at SCARRITT COLLEGE, 1968, Evangelism: Anachronism or Challenge?

In 1950 Bishop Tippett was assigned to travel to South East Asia, Malaya, and Sarawak. He and Mrs. Tippett returned via the Holy Land and Western Europe. The trip was climaxed by a preaching mission in England and in the American Church in Paris. Two years later the bishop and his wife took their four-month missionary tour as an African safari, penetrating that continent deeply to visit mission stations, and to lecture and preside at annual conferences. Bishop Tippet was one of three bishops to represent the Church at the Centennial of Methodism in HAWAII, and one of a delegation to represent the United States in Jerusalem for the seventh anniversary of Israel's statehood. In 1957 Bishop Tippet was assigned to visit KOREA, JAPAN, OKINAWA, TAIWAN, and HONG KONG. It was at the United States government's request that they returned to Okinawa, for Bishop Tippet to serve as Protestant chaplain for the Armed Forces there during the Christmas season. The next year the Bishop was invited by the Secretary of the Navy and the State Department to go on a good will tour of duty to South America, a part of President Eisenhower's "People to People" program. Bishop Tippet retired at the Western Jurisdictional Conference, July 1968.

Who's Who in America, Vol. 34.

Who's Who in The Methodist Church, 1966.

N. B. H.

TIPPLE, BERTRAND MARTIN (1868- ?), American minister and missionary to ITALY, was born at Camden, N. Y., on Dec. 1, 1868, the son of Martin and Sarah Elizabeth (Squier) Tipple. He was educated at Cazenovia Seminary and at SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY where he received the A.B. degree in 1894, and the D.D. in 1904; he also attended DREW THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, receiving the B.D. there in 1897. On June 2, 1897, he married Jane Baldwin Downs and their children were Silva, Elizabeth and Bertrand S. He joined the NEW YORK EAST CONFERENCE and was appointed to Epworth, at New Haven, Conn., in 1897; to Embury Memorial, BROOKLYN, 1900; First Church, Stamford, Conn., 1906. From that point he was transferred to the Italy Conference in 1909, and was at the American Church in Rome. He was there made the president of Reeder College Seminary in 1910; the Methodist College in Rome in 1911; and soon obtained recognition as an outstanding Protestant leader. He was one of the officers of the Seventh World's SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION Convocation in SWITZERLAND in 1913; a member of the Edinburgh Missionary Conference of 1910; the ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE of 1911. He was received by the Queen of Italy in 1910.

Tipple wrote several books dealing with Italian Methodism. Among them Italy of the Italians, published by the Methodist Publishing House in Rome in 1911; Methodism in Italy, by the same publisher in 1912. He translated in 1910 Papal and Italian Rome, done by Ernesto Nathan, the mayor of Rome. Tipple also contributed to the Forum Methodist Review and other church periodicals.

C. F. Price, Who's Who in American Methodism. 1916.

N. B. H.

TIPPLE, EZRA SQUIER (1861-1936), American historian and seminary president, was born in Camden, N. J., on Jan. 23, 1861, the son of Bertrand Martin and Sarah E. (Squier) Tipple. He was educated at SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY, receiving an A.B. in 1884 and A.M. in 1885, a Ph.D. in 1886, a D.D. in 1899, and an LL.D. in 1913. He also attended DREW THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, receiving the B.D. in 1887. He married Edna E. White on June 24, 1897. He served pastorates as follows: St. Luke's, Grace Church, and St. James, NEW YORK CITY, and in 1905 went to Drew Theological Seminary as a Professor of Practical Theology. He became president of Drew Seminary in 1912-28; president of DREW UNIVERSITY, 1928-29; honorary president, 1929-36. Tipple was a member of every M.E. GENERAL CONFERENCE, 1904-36; a trustee of Syracuse University, and of Drew Seminary for Young Women. He made quite a contribution to Methodist history with his Life of Freeborn Garrettson, published by the Methodist Book Concern in 1910; and even more by Francis Asbury: the Prophet of the Long Road, 1916; and The Drew Theological Seminary, 1867-1917. He was also the editor of The Heart of Asbury's Journal, Methodist Book Concern, 1905. He died Oct. 17, 1936.

Minutes of the New York Conference, 1937.

C. F. Price, Who's Who in American Methodism. 1916.

N. B. H.

TIPPY, WORTH MARION (1866-1961), American preacher, was born near Walkerton, Ind., Nov. 8, 1866. He was a graduate student and Sage scholar at the Sage School of Philosophy at Cornell University 1891-1893. He received the D.D. degree from both DePAUW and Baldwin Universities in 1907. He served churches in INDIANA, OHIO, and NEW YORK. From 1917 to 1937 he was the Executive Secretary of the Church and Social Service Commission of the FEDERAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES of Christ in America. He founded the Methodist Church Conference on Social Work in 1929. He served as its Executive Secretary for eight years and then became its President. He organized the selection and nomination of CHAPLAINS for the U. S. Army and Navy in 1917, worked for the religious care of interned aliens and prisoners of war, and for the cooperation of churches nationally with the Public Health Service. He was married to Zella B. Ward, May 16, 1895. She preceded him in death in 1948.

Tippy was the founder and first director of the DePauw Archives (now the Joint Archives of DePauw University and Indiana Methodism). He was the author of The Church, A Community Force, 1914; A Methodist Church and Its Work, 1919; The Church and the Great War and Pioneer Bishop (the biography of Bishop ROBERT RICHFORD ROBERTS).

He died Oct. 2, 1961, at Laurel, Miss., and was buried at Vevay, Ind.

C. F. Price, Who's Who in American Methodism. 1916.

ROBERT S. CHAFFEE

TITTLE, ERNEST FREMONT (1885-1949), American preacher, author and church leader, was born on Oct. 21, 1885, in Springfield, Ohio. He was the son of Clayton Darius and Elizabeth (Henry) Tittle. He received his A.B. from OHIO WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY in 1906, the B.D. from DREW THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY in 1908. Honorary doctorates were later conferred upon him by Ohio Wesleyan, GARRETT BIBLICAL INSTITUTE, Wittenberg College and Yale University.

He was ordained in 1908 and on June 11 married Glenna Myers. The Tittles became the parents of three children: John Myers, Elizabeth Ann (Mrs. David Poston) and William Myers.

After two years in a rural OHIO charge, Ernest F. Tittle became greatly taken by Walter Rauschenbusch and his "social gospel." It was this emphasis which he brought to his preaching in later Ohio pastorates at Riverdale in DAYTON (1910-13); University Church in Delaware (1913-16); and Broad Street Church in Columbus (1916-18).

In 1918 at the age of thirty-three he was called to the FIRST Church of EVANSTON, Ill., where he remained until his death. Toward the close of World War I, between his Columbus and Evanston pastorates, he served for eight months with the Y.M.C.A.—two months in the United States and six months in the front lines in France. These experiences led him to become a firm pacifist, and he never wavered from this point of view. War seemed to him a defiance of God's will and the consummation of unreason. It was an appeal to reason which colored much of his preaching in his early years in Evanston.

In a poll taken by The Christian Century six years after his coming to that city and while he was still under forty, Tittle was named one of Protestantism's twenty-five outstanding preachers. His distinguished preaching, dedicated pastoral ministry, keen intelligence and appealing personality attracted increasing numbers to his congregation. At the same time his pacifist views and liberal attitudes toward race relations and international affairs evoked violent opposition from local veterans' organizations and several Chicago newspapers. Though criticism of his progressive views was never completely stilled during his lifetime, it was rendered largely ineffective by the support he received from leading laymen in his church. On March 6, 1933, thirty-seven of them issued a ringing declaration of a "free pulpit." This not only assured Tittle of the support of his own congregation, but helped historically to insure the liberty of preachers everywhere to speak according to their consciences.

Tittle lectured annually at numerous colleges and universities. Named lectureships included: The Lyman Beecher at Yale; Earl at the Pacific School of Religion; Ayer at Colgate-Rochester; Merrick at OHIO WESLEYAN; Gates at Grinnell; Russell at Auburn; Wilkin at Illinois; Mendenhall at DePaul; and Shaffer at NORTHWESTERN.

